The Occupation of Cracow by the Austrians. Lord Beaumont drew attention to the late insurrection in Gallicia, and the subsequent occupation of Cracow by the Austrian forces, contrary to the treaty of Vienna, and which he believed might have been prevented if this country had had a consulate in the free city of Cracow. The noble Lord moved for certain papers connected with these transactions, and urged on the Government the necessity of making representations respecting them to the Government of Austria. The Marquis of Lansdowne admitted that it was for the interests of Europe that the Republic of Cracow, the last vestige of Polish independence, should be maintained in its integrity, under the guarantees of the treaty of Vienna. But the disturbances, of which Cracow was the centre, menaced the peace and order of all Germany, and it was with the assent of the three Powers that the Austrian troops took possession of Cracow, though he was unable to account for the fact why they were not withdrawn on the termination of the disturbances. Communications had already passed upon the subject, and he believed the three great powers—Prussia, Russia, and Austria—were contemplating restoring it to its former position as soon as it could be done with safety to the peace of the three surrounding territories, although he believed that no formal representation had as yet been made to the Court of Austria on the subject.—The Duke of Wellington said there could be no doubt but the occupation of the city of Cracow was a violation of the treaty, and the matter had been under consideration, and explanations of a satisfactory character had been given. In point of fact, if ever the breach of a treaty was justifiable, this was that one, as far as regarded the temporary occupation of the city. After some observations from Lord Kinnaird, the motion was agreed to, and the House adjourned till Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

The Irish Arms Bill. Mr. B. Escott gave notice that on Monday next, on the motion to go into Committee on the Irish Arms Bill, he would move that the House go into Committee on the bill that day three months.

The Late Court-Martial at Cork. Mr. Ward, in reply to a question, stated that the law officers having determined that the Court-martial held at Cork, which lately sentenced a marine to be hanged, was illegally constituted, the proceedings had been declared null, and the offender had been sent back to his company.

Railway Speculation.—Lord John Russell, in answer to Mr. Williams, stated that the Government would frame some measure for the regulation and examination, in future sessions, of Railway Bills, and would make some proposal relative to the formation of a Railway Board; but they had found that it would be both undesirable and impracticable to inerfere with the application of capital to railway enterprise, and that, therefore, they would not meddle with that part of the subject.

The Deodands Abolition Bill, and the Death by Accidents Compensation Bill, were read a third time and passed.

The Lords' amendments to the Art-Unions Bill were agreed to.

The House, which had met at twelve o'clock, adjourned from three to five o'clock. On its resumption, a few petitions were presented, and then a count out took place.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

A good deal of miscellaneous business was disposed of to-day.

Mr. Mackinnon withdrew his Smoke Prohibition Bill, on an assurance from Lord Morpeth that the subject will be taken into consideration by the Government.

The Religious Opinions Bill went through Committee, after considerable discussion, and a division on an amendment proposed by Mr. B. Escott, which was rejected by 53 to 10.

Mr. Muntz, on the third reading of the Gauge of Railways Bill, proposed the addition of a clause, rendering it imperative that the Birmingham and Oxford line should be laid down on the broad as well as the narrow gauge. After some debate, this was negatived by 46 to 15, and the bill was read a third time and passed.

The Wreck and Salvage Bill was read a third time, but the question that it do pass was postponed, in order to consider some objections raised against it by Captain Pechell and Mr. G. Palmer,

The British Possessions' Bill was read a second time.

Several official Bills were promoted, and some returns ordered, and at 6 o'clock the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

Royal Assent.—The Royal Assent was given, by commission, to the Consolidated Fund Bill, the Arts Union Bill, and several Railway Bills.

Lord Brougham complained of the treatment which a gentleman named Ouvrard had received, in consequence of a person, calling himself an engineer, having sworn that he owed him £1050, and that he was about to leave the country. On that statement Mr. Ouvrard was arrested, and committed to a lock-up in Chancery-lane, where he remained from Wednesday until Monday, when the affidavits were filed, denying the charge against him. Mr. Ouvrard was then remanded until Wednesday, in order to allow the other party to file affidavits in answer, and, after the case had been heard by the Lord Chief Baron, Mr. Ouvrard was at once discharged. His Lordship thought the case a very hard one, and that the law, in this respect, required some explanation, for, if affidavits were to be filed in this manner, a man might be confined for twelve months.

Sugar Duties Bill.—On the motion for the second reading of this bill the Bishop of Oxford strenuously opposed the measure, and moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day three months. After a brief discussion their Lordships divided, when the numbers were—

For the second reading	28
For the amendment	10
Majority for the second reading	—10

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

The House met again this day at twelve o'clock.

Arms (Ireland) Bill.—Mr. T. S. Duncombe asked what course of proceeding it was intended to adopt on Monday next, in respect to the Irish Arms Bill. He suggested, if alterations were to be made in various clauses, it would be better to go into Committee pro formâ, have the bill printed, and take the Committee on Tuesday next.—Lord John Russell said there was some very important business fixed for Monday, and therefore he had no objection to the proposition of the hon. member for Finsbury. He hoped, however, that on Tuesday he would allow the bill to go on regularly, and hon. members would not press their notices of motion until it had gone through Committee.—The arrangement was agreed to.

The Wreck and Salvage Bill was read a third time, and passed.

On the motion of Lord J. Russell, the Religious Opinions Bill was read a third time, and passed.

The British Possessions Bill went through Committee.

The Ejectments (Ireland) Bill was reported, and the bill ordered to be read a third time.

The House adjourned at twenty minutes past three o'clock, until five o'clock.

The Speaker resumed the chair at five o'clock.

FLOGGING IN THE ARMY.

Mr. Escott moved for a return of persons flogged in the army in Great Britain and Ireland, in the years 1845 and 1846, to the end of July; specifying—1. The offence. 2. The regiment, the place of station, the time. 3. The sentence. 4. The order for its execution. 5. Whether the trials were open to the public, or only open to the regiment, or with closed doors. 6. The number of lashes inflicted, and the day. 7. How soon after punishment the man was able to return to his duty, and at what place he was then quartered. 8. Whether death has followed within twelve months of the flogging, and the date of such death. 9. Whether the punishment was inflicted, if in cavalry regiments, by the trumpeter or farriers; if in infantry regiments, by the privates or drummers, and with what instrument. 10. Copies of the surgeon's minutes of all such punishments, and subsequent observations on their consequences.—He believed these returns were necessary for the full consideration of the subject

Mr. Fox Maule said, he had trusted that the hon. member would have felt satisfied with the statements of his noble friend, he honestly had made to the House in relation to corporal punishment. He could not consent to the whole of the return, as he considered it would be interfering with the discipline of the army, and confidence ought to be given to the Commander-in-Chief. He felt bound to oppose the motion after the first three heads, but to part of them he agreed, and was willing to consent to a return.

After a discussion the return, as suggested by the Government, was agreed to, and the House adjourned at seven o'clock.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Repairing the Streets of London.—A notice has been issued by the Commissioners of Sewers that some of the great thoroughfares will be impassable to every description of vehicle. The carriage-way is to be repaired in Old Fish-street, Long-lane, Upper Thames-street, and Fleet-street. The latter is closed, and will remain closed for six weeks or two months, owing to the great length of time required to make a new bottom of concrete, in which the stone is to be laid, the present bed having been cut up and partially destroyed by the formation of the new sewer, and the laying down of gas and water-pipes. The carriage-way is to be relaid with the three-inch cube granite, similar to that which was laid down last year in Ludgate-hill, Holborn-hill, and Snow-hill. At present there exists great difficulty in getting good workmen, as well as stone from the quarries in consequence of the demand for the railways. When finished, it is alleged that Fleet-street will not require any great repairs for the next twenty years, the three inch cube Aberdeen granite being estimated to last for forty years in places where only an ordinary traffic takes place. All large thoroughfares are in future to be paved with this stone, as soon as the existing contracts for wood-pavement expire. The following places are to have new sewers:—Laurence Pountney-lane, and Laurence Pountney-hill, Ducksfoot-lane, Cloak-lane, Bell-yard, Gracechurch-street, Little Bush-lane, Bride-lane, Poppin's-court, Hosier-lane, the north end of Shoe-lane, Bouverie-street, and the precinct of Whitefriars; the whole of which are to be commenced within the next month.

Enlargement of Smithfield Market.—Smithfield Market is to be further enlarged. It is intended to remove about twenty houses on the north side, which will give an additional space of nearly an acre of ground

Shipowners' Society. On Wednesday, the annual meeting of this society was held at the Hall of Commerce, Threadneedle-street. Shortly after one o'clock Lord George Bentinck entered the room, and was received with many marks of respect. Among the principal shipowners present there were Mr. G. F. Young, Mr. William Buckle, and Mr. A. Chapman. The chair was taken by Mr. George Fred. Young. Mr. Symonds read the report. Mr. A. Chapman, M.P., moved that the report read be received and adopted. Lord George Bentinck, M.P., seconded the motion, which was unanimously adopted. Some subordinate resolutions were then proposed and carried.

Births and Deaths in the Metropolis. The deaths registered in the Metropolis, in the week ending August 8, amounted to 1135, being 237 above the average of five summers, and 157 above the average of five years. The excess arose principally from zymotic diseases, of which diarrhœa is the most prominent; the deaths from that in the week being 162 above the average of five summers. The temperature of the week was 3 deg. 6 min. above the average. The births in this week were 1265.

POLICE.

ROBBERY OF THE LORD MAYOR'S WATCH.

On Tuesday, James Fitzsimmons, the man charged with having robbed the Lord Mayor of a gold watch and appendages, on Monday week, at the Blackwall Railway Station, was re-examined at the Mansion-house. Considerable curiosity was excited, which was increased from its being known that the prisoner has been for some time distinguished as a prominent member of the swell mob, and that he had been brought before the Lord Mayor himself a few months ago, in the custody of Daniel Forrester, from Masterman's bank, where he had been watching for victims

The prisoner, who was defended by Mr. Hobler, walked into the bar with great confidence.

Mr. James Hartley, of Bridge-street, Blackfriars, solicitor, stated that he was standing with the Lord Mayor, when the prisoner and the smaller man, who was described by the other witnesses, were together, close to his Lordship. Witness fixed his eyes upon the two men the moment they came out of the carriage on the railway.

The prisoner (to the witness): Come, come, speak up so that every one may hear you.

The witness: They came suddenly in front of his Lordship. In a moment the shorter man disappeared, when the Lord Mayor cried out that he was robbed. From the manner in which they both acted it was quite evident to me that they were acting in concert, and I at once judged from their appearance that they were bad characters.

The prisoner: Oh, dear! so you know a thief by his looks, do you?

Alderman Gibbs: Did you observe them in conversation. Witness: Certainly.

Mr. John Hall, of Bishopsgate Without, warehouseman, confirmed the statement made by the other witnesses, in which the prisoner and the shorter man were described as being in concert. The witness was behind the Lord Mayor when he saw the prisoner and his companion close to his Lordship. When the Lord Mayor called the police, the prisoner slunk back.

Here the prisoner, at the desire of Alderman Gibbs, put on his hat.

Alderman Gibbs: Put it more completely on your head. The prisoner: I can't. My head's too big. The hat is just as I wear it always. What more can be wanted?

Alderman Gibbs: Is there any one else here who has anything to say against the prisoner?

Mr. John James Harris, watch-manufacturer, of East Smithfield, here stepped forward, and said that he had a charge to make against the prisoner. He then stated that, on last Friday week, at half-past eight o'clock in the evening, a person of gentlemanlike appearance, and taller than the prisoner, walked into the shop, and asked to see some patent gold levers. Witness showed him three, and he wished to see still better, and spoke about not taking any Geneva watch, or any watch not of English make. Witness then handed down a fourth watch, with a heavy gold chain. There was a lady in the shop at the time, who was known to the witness, and who was looking at ear-rings; and at that moment the prisoner entered, and pushed roughly by the lady to reach the party who was looking at the watches. In an instant, by a wonderful sleight of hand, the watch and chain disappeared, and the prisoner too, followed by his companion.

Alderman Gibbs: What did the prisoner say upon entering the shop?—Witness: When he squeezed by the lady to get to the place where the party was looking at the watches, he said to me, "Mr. Harris, what do you charge for cleaning a patent lever?" I replied 4s., and the prisoner went out, and after him went the other party, and so rapidly was the thing done that they were both out of the shop before I discovered that the watch was off.

Mr. Hobler: Was the prisoner the person who took the watch?—Witness: One of them had it.

Mr. Hobler: Did you see the prisoner touch the watch at all?—Witness: I say there was extraordinary sleight of hand made use of, and one of them certainly took the watch.

Alderman Gibbs: Should you know the tall man?—Witness: Directly.

The Prisoner: I am entirely innocent of both of these charges

Miss Susannah Harris said she was in the shop when the prisoner entered and asked her father what he would charge for cleaning a patent gold lever. She was positive the prisoner was the man, and she was confident that she saw the other man hand the prisoner something.

Alderman Gibbs: Is there any one else here who has anything to say against the prisoner?

Here a lady in deep mourning stepped forward, and said, I should not like to swear, but I am almost convinced that that is the countenance of the man who robbed me of £42 at a banking-house in Pall-mall East, on Monday week. I was at the time in a state of great agitation, having just left my husband on his death-bed. I think three of them followed me into the banking-house. I had two distinct views of the prisoner. He had pushed the door open for me as I entered, and he also pushed it open for me as I retired.

Alderman Gibbs: Can you swear to his identity?—The Lady: I should not like to swear to him. I think I can swear to him. The face is exactly that face.

Alderman Gibbs remanded the prisoner till Thursday next.

It is reported that the Lord Mayor's watch was broken up immediately after it disappeared from his Lordship's fob, as in the absence of the prisoner it fell into the hands of some of the juniors of the fraternity, who got rid of it with all possible expedition. It is supposed by some that if the prisoner had escaped at the time of the robbery, the watch would have found its way back to his Lordship by as rapid a mode of communication as that of which Mr. Harris complained when speaking of the magical departure of his property.

The prisoner was again examined on Thursday, and again considerable curiosity prevailed. Miss Harris spoke positively to the prisoner, as the man who had come into her father's shop; and Mr. Alderman Challis, who presided, said he should commit the prisoner upon the charge of stealing the gold watch and chain in Mr. Harris's shop. The prisoner, as before, conducted himself with great flippancy, and said the charges had been trumped up against him. He protested that he was never in Mr. Harris's shop in his life.

Accident at the Paul's Wharf Regatta.—While the competitors for the prize of a purse of sovereigns, given by the inhabitants of the Castle Baynard, Queenhithe, and Vintry Ward, were struggling for the priority of place on the commencement of the second heat, on Monday, one of the crew of the four-oared cutter (blue), named John Hawkins, was drowned by the boat capsizing.

Lamentable Accident at the South-Western Railway.—A dreadful accident occurred on Tuesday evening, at the terminus of the South-Western Railway. A plate-layer, James Begally, of Woking, ran down the line to be in time to go by the half-past six o'clock train to Woking, when, the Mercury engine backing, the tender knocked him down, and the wheels passing over his body, completely cut him in two.

OUR MAGAZINE COLUMN FOR AUGUST.

SYMPATHY FOR CRIMINALS.

The form in which sympathy with criminals gets manifested is often disgusting enough. There is nothing to be said of pic-nic parties to the scene of a horrid murder; to the relics of hanged scoundrels being sought and paid for at a higher price than the relics of saints and martyrs were in old times; nor to irreverent, almost blasphemous exhibitions of the "happy death" and "hopeful end" of miscreants, at whose crimes we feel a horror. All that sort of thing is an unutterable abomination; still, there must be a cause; it could not exist, except in right of being a genuine sentiment, a protest of the deep sympathy between man and man—the voice of the universal brotherhood, which makes us all one nature. It is the beginning of a better spirit. Formerly, when judicial torture was part of the administration of justice, criminals were not regarded as human beings; they were only an impersonation of evil deeds to be expiated in their person. It was in accordance with the secret desire of seeing vengeance taken on a [illegible] deed, which lies at the bottom in all human hearts, and the natural cowardice, which, even more than moral reprobation, instigates barbarous punishments; each one hoped that thereby the evil might be frightened from his own door; as a farmer nails up a dead kite over his barn, that his poultry may dwell safe under its shadow. Of late, the feeling has been gaining ground that no man, however bad, ought to be put to death. The cowardly, selfish impulse which made men formerly anxious to put away criminals, as the most compendious mode of preventing further danger, in the fear lest their own turn should come next, has given place to a better spirit.—Douglas Jerrold's Shilling Magazine.

IMPROVEMENT OF PARIS

The achievement which will be remembered in connexion with the reign of Louis Philippe, with the most grateful feelings by the philanthrophist, is, undoubtedly, the example he has afforded even to the advanced civilization of Great Britain in his efforts for the repression of gambling and prostitution He has accomplished what the English authorities have not even thought of attempting. There are now no public gambling tables in Paris, and even private play is subject to so many restraints that it has been stripped of half its evils The purest female may now walk the public thoroughfares of the city by day or by night, without the risk of having her sight outraged or her ears polluted by the indecencies which are still suffered to prevail in the most frequented streets of the metropolis of Britain. The theatres and other places of public resort are equally purified Even the Palais Royale—that temple of vice—has been thoroughly reformed; and it is due to the present King to add, that this reformation has been effected by a large sacrifice of his private revenue; a considerable portion of the rental of the Palais Royale having arisen from the extensive and long-established gambling-rooms by which it was occupied, and by the employment of the loftier stories for still more impure, and not less profitable purposes. It is well known that the Palais Royale is the private property of Louis Philippe.—Dublin University Magazine.

A SHAKSPEARE COLUMN.

We have a Nelson Pillar, and a Wellington Arch; it is high time we should possess a Shakspeare Column. The site of sites for its erection is, in our judgment, either of the gardens in the New-road, which would bring it into a right line with Portland-place, south, and the Broad Walk, Regent's Park, north; thus placing it to the eye, midway between two vistas, on a length of way, which we calculate, by rough measurement, to be a full mile in extent. The statue of the Duke of Kent, at the top of Portland-place, is lost in a sort of Jack-in-the-green diminutiveness; just as Charles the Second, beneath the Nelson Pillar, looks like a Tom Thumb mounted on a steed of Lilliput.—Hood's Magazine.

WHAT ARE THE SURVEYORS OF PAVEMENTS ABOUT?

This very necessary question we would meet with another: What are the Masters of these Surveyors—the general public—the particular parish boards, authorities, and vestries—about, that there is any necessity to make any inquiries after the doings, or the non-doings, of their appointed, and well-paid servants? In the sphere of our own peregrinations, we know of hundreds of "buck-traps"—thousands of "horse-holes"—numberless kerbs, atilt, or aslope, waiting the opportunity to fracture knee pans, arms, legs, ribs, or thighs, as the event may prescribe—sundry coalhole-pans, looking out for a fat incumbent, to carry as much of him as his own ponderosity shall force through, into the cellars below—hosts of gratings, string-tied, nail-propped, or wire-bound, ripe for some equal mischief—and all coolly and publicly lying in wait to wound, and bruise, and injure, and destroy, without the least cognizance of them on the part of those whose occupation it ought to be, and who are paid to have them noted down, remedied, and set to rights!—Hood's Magazine.

FOREIGN NOBILITY.

The Chevalier F. de Taples, in his recent work, "La France et l'Angleterre," states that, "in Russia there are 500,000 nobles; that Austria numbers 239,000; that Spain, in 1780, reckoned 470,000; and that France, before 1790, had 360,000, of whom 4120 were of the ancienne noblesse; and that, in England, Scotland, and Ireland, on the contrary, we have only 1631 persons, from Dukes to Baronets, who possess transmissible titles." There are, however, in the United Kingdom some two to three hundred thousand persons who are nobles in the Continental sense of the term.—The Patrician

SCOTT, THE NOVELIST.

Of all novelists, Scott, perhaps, most happily attains the mean between amusement and instruction. Without pandering to the follies and vices of humanity, he stimulates curiosity, and makes reflection a delight. He deals with human machinery in such a way as to invest his tales with the stateliness and probability of history herself. You are not wandering in the clouds of Germanic mysteries—you hold no converse with sentimental demons or talented imps; the ruddy face of England, and the flaxen locks of the Northern Sister, are not more faithfully represented than the manly independence of the one, or the impulsive energy of the other. On such an arena, he gives the reins to a fancy tempered by the overmastering power of reason, and rendered solid by historic lore. With a genius only inferior to Shakspeare, in the creation or reproduction of human society, he invests his characters with the true air of poetic illusion. They are men who breathe like ourselves, whose existence seems not improbable to us, but are, at the same time, infinitely superior in their attributes to the common run of men. They are, in fact, true poetic characters. Scott seldom violates the rule which makes the principal subject of a tale a hero, and all his attendants heroic. The attention of mankind must be won by something rich and strange before it can be instructed.—Union Magazine.

LAMMAS DAY.

Lammas Day is celebrated in London by a rowing match on the river Thames, instituted by Thomas Dogget, an old actor of celebrity, who, in the year after George I. came to the throne (1714), gave a waterman's coat and a silver badge, to be rowed for by six young watermen, whose apprenticeship had expired the year before. The claimants set out at a given signal, when the current is strongest against them, and row from the Old Swan, near London-bridge, to the White Swan, at Chelsea. At Exeter, the day is signalized by a fair, the charter of which is perpetuated by a glove of immense size, stuffed, and carried through the city on a very long pole, decorated with flowers and ribands, and attended with music, parish beadles, and "the mobility." It is afterwards placed on the top of the Guildhall, and then the fair begins; on the removal of the glove the fair terminates.—Sharpe's London Magazine.

LACK OF NOVELS.

We are labouring under a woful dearth of novels. Fashionable novels we get, it is true; the admirable Mrs. Gore produces half a dozen or so in a season; but we can't live upon fashionable novels alone, and the mind wearies rather with perpetual descriptions of balls at D——— House, of fashionable doings at White's or Crocky's, of ladies' toilettes, of Gunter's suppers, of déjeûners, Almack's French cookery, French phrases, and the like, which have been, time out of mind, the main ingredient of the genteel novel with us. As for historical novelists, they are, or seem to be, asleep among us. What have we had from a great and celebrated author, since he gave us the "Last of the Barons"? Nothing, but a pamphlet about the Water-cure, which, although it contained many novel and surprising incidents, still is far from being sufficient for a ravenous public. Again, where is Mr. James? Where is that teeming parent of romance? No tales have been advertised by him for time out of mind from him who used to father a dozen volumes a year. Where, finally, is the famous author, upon the monthly efforts of whose genius all the country was dependent? Where is the writer of the "Tower of London," "St. James's," "Old St. Paul's," &c. What has become of the "Revelations of London"?—Fraser's Magazine.

THE END OF THE SEASON

The London season was in a confirmed state of rapid decline; so far gone, indeed, that immediate change of air to a more congenial climate was universally agreed upon by everybody. The carriages sensibly diminished in numbers in the Parks and at the West End; Opera orders were abundant, and sometimes people [illegible] box who had never been in one before, and displaying their innocence thereof by buying a bill and hanging it over the edge, pinned to the amber satin, and mistaking Mario for Allen, and Balfe for Mr. Lumley. The Concerts were all over, and the light halls of Willis and Hanover-square, and the dirty—we had well-nigh said "grubby" oven of Her Majesty's Theatre, no longer bottled up well-meaning people, who had been guilty of no offence, and therefore did not deserve such treatment, from noon till dewy eve. Fashionable entertainments, too, diminished. Thès dansantes and déjeûners à pied—from lack of seats—were no longer chronicled. St[illegible] were promised more grouse, by Highland marauders, than all the moors could furnish; coloured shirts, of wild and wondrous patterns, hitherto christened "Regatta," were suddenly converted into "Shooting;" and "Gent.'s Joinvilles" retired into private life, to make room in the windows for "Bonnie Heather [illegible]," as worn by the superior classes at Perth and other game pitches There were no more fêtes champ(aign)êtres, no more marvellous exhibitions. Indeed, it became a question difficult to answer, where the wonders went to,—the mannikins and Boshiesmen, the oxen, horses, and iceberg dogs,—the living statues and waxen celebrities, that collectively drew the shillings from the popular pocket, as the loadstone rock of the "Arabian Nights" whilom did the nails from the argosies that came within the sphere of its attraction. Everything was getting dried up and dusty. Plants outside windows turned brown, and mignionette went very wild, and was not replaced; for the long flower-laden barrows ceased to come round, the people having found out that their contents always died two days after purchase, in spite of every care. Even ladies and gentlemen appeared parched up for want of water, and betook themselves accordingly to aquatic districts; and shutters closed, and servants were put upon board wages, and nobody was at home any more for several months.—Albert Smith, in Bentley's Miscellany.

THE LORD MAYOR'S VIEW of the THAMES

Right Hon. JOHN JOHNSON,

Lord Mayor.

1. Oxford.
2. River Cherwell.
3. Sandford Lock and Weir.
4. Drayton.
5. Abingdon.
6. Appleford.
7. Wallingford.
8. Shillingford Bridge.
9. Goring.
10. Basildon Park.
11. Pangbourne Bridge.
12. Whitchurch.
13. Reading.
14. Henley.
15. Great Marlow.
16. Maidenhead.
17. Monkey Island.
18. Windsor Castle and Bridge.
19. Egham.
20. Eton College.
21. Colne River.
22. Staines and Bridge
23. Lalcham.
24. Chertsey.
25. Walton and Bridge.
26. Hampton Wick.
27. Twickenham.
28. Hampton Court.
29. Teddington and Lock.
30. Kingston.
31. Richmond.
32. Kew.
33. Brentford.

FIRST DAY.—AUGUST 6th, 1846.

Places.	Distances—	Miles.
Oxford ..	.. to Abindgdon	.. 8
Abingdon	to Junction of Thame & Isis	9½
Thame and Isis Junction	to Shillingford	.. 1½
Shillingford	.. to Wallingford	.. 2¼
Wallingford	.. to Goring	.. 7
Goring ..	.. to Whitchurch	.. 3½
Whitchurch	.. to Caversham	.. 6
Caversham	.. to Reading	.. 2½

SECOND DAY.—AUGUST 7th, 1846.

Places.	Distances	Miles.
Reading ..	.. to .. Henley	.. 8½
Henley ..	.. to .. Hambledon	2½
Hambledon	.. to .. Hurley	.. 3½
Hurley ..	.. to .. Temple	.. 1
Temple ..	.. to .. Marlow	.. 2
Marlow ..	.. to .. Cliefden	.. 5
Cliefden ..	.. to .. Maidenhead	2
Maidenhead	.. to .. Romney	.. 7
Romney ..	.. to .. Windsor	.. 1

THIRD DAY.—AUGUST 8th, 1846.

Places.	Distances	Miles
Windsor ..	.. to .. Runnymead	5
Boundary Stone, Staines ..	.. ..	.. 1
Staines ..	.. to .. Chertsey	.. 4
Chertsey	.. to .. Shepperton	.. 2
Shepperton	.. to .. Sunbury	.. 3¼
Sunbury	.. to .. Hampton	.. 3½
Hampton	.. to .. Kingston	.. 4
Kingston	.. to .. Teddington	.. 2½
Teddington	.. to .. Richmond	.. 2
Richmond	.. to .. Kew ..	.. 3

The official year of the Chief Magistrate of the Metropolis presents several scenes worthy of commemoration in our illustrative pages—a position, of which each volume of our Journal bears ample evidence. Heretofore, we have engraved the pageant, incidents, and the great official acts of each Mayoralty; and very gratifying memorials are they of a stage of honour to be achieved with well-directed energies in this great commercial country. To the chronicles of the present Mayoralty, however, pertains the record of a ceremonial of somewhat rare enactment—the Lord Mayor's public renewal of a claim to the jurisdiction of certain districts of the Thames lying west of Richmond, or, as it is technically termed, "the Lord Mayor's View of the River."

The Conservancy of the Thames, partly by prescription and partly by charter, forms a portion of the multifarious duties of the Lord Mayor. The charter of 3 Jac. I. recites, that the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens have immemorially had the office of Bailiff and Conservator of the Thames; and the Mayor was considered to represent the Corporation. But many of the functions attached to the Conservancy have fallen into the hands of the Common Council, which acts through the Thames and Navigation Committee. The Water Jurisdiction is, however, still asserted by the Lord Mayor, who gives a deputation to the Water Bailiff, holds in person eight Courts of Conservancy during the year, and is attended by the Water Bailiff and other officers, for the proper regulation of the Navigation of the River, the Preservation of the Fish, &c.

We learn, also, that by various Acts of Parliament, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen are Commissioners of the Upper District, for the improvement of the Navigation of the River, from the City of London to the town of Cricklade, Wilts.

Although Courts of Conservancy are held in every Mayoralty, the claim of the Western Jurisdiction has only been made at comparatively late dates, by the following Mayors: —In 1781, by Sir Watkin Lewes; 1812, by Sir Claudius Stephen Hunter, who extended his Visit to Oxford, at the cost of £404; in 1826, by Alderman Venables, who, also, went to Oxford, at the expense of £680; and in 1839, by Alderman Wilson, who went to Henley, at £1000. The party consists of the Lord Mayor and such of the Aldermen as accept his invitation to accompany him; besides, the Officers of the Navigation Committee; the Water Bailiff, Barge-master, and other Officers of the Lord Mayor's aquatic state.

On the Visit of 1826, observations were made of ballasting being requisite in several places, the State Barge having frequently grounded for want of water; weirs, and other important improvements were also found to be required in many parts. Of this Visit, too, the Chaplain to the Mayoralty, "at the desire of the party," chronicled the Proceedings in a volume of some 160 pages, which is now a bibliographical curiosity, to be purchased only at a very high price.

Upon the proposal of the Visit which has just terminated, the Ceremonial was loudly objected to on the score of the great expense. In 1826, each Alderman invited two ladies; in 1839, the same authority also invited two ladies, and the Lord Mayor an unlimited number of guests; besides giving a dinner and ball at Windsor, items sufficient to explain the great increase of expenditure over that of preceding Views.

Various modifications were proposed during the recent debates on the propriety of the Visit Sir Peter Laurie moved that the expenses be limited to £150; contending that the authorities had no business beyond the Boundary-stone at Staines, and that any assertion beyond that point would unreasonably increase the expense; though Sir Peter was one of the party who visited Oxford in 1826. Again, Alderman Musgrove moved that only Aldermen and Sheriffs should make the excursion. Both motions were negatived; the latter, however, by one vote only!

The discussions on the projected View are too fresh in the recollection of the reader to need repetition here. Suffice it to say, that the requisite motion having been passed, the Lord Mayor fixed the ceremonial for August 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th. Of its most attractive scenes we shall now present to our readers a series of picturesque Illustrations, accompanied by the details of the Journey; for the facilities in obtaining which we are indebted to the courtesy of the Lord Mayor, in promptly affording our Artist access to the State Barge, so as to enable him to furnish a faithful picture of the Proceedings.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 5.

The Civic Party left London by a special train on the Great Western Railway, on Wednesday morning, and reached Oxford within three hours. During the day, the Lord Mayor made a few calls, and invited the Mayor of Oxford, and certain authorities of the Colleges, to dine with his Lordship at the Star Inn. The Party also inspected a few of the magnificent public buildings with which Oxford abounds; though they strove to make their Visit a private one

In the evening, the Lord Mayor gave a Banquet in the large room at the Star Hotel. His Lordship presided, supported by the Mayor of Oxford; the President of Trinity College; Admiral Ross; &c. &c.

The Grace-Cup (engraved at page 101) was passed round in due form, and the usual loyal toasts given.

The Lord Mayor next gave, "The Health of the President of Trinity College, (the Rev. Dr. Ingram), and Prosperity to the University of Oxford."

The Rev. Dr. Ingram returned thanks, and alluded to the visit of the Lord Mayor of London on a similar occasion twenty years ago, when he had the gratification of spending a very delightful day with his Lordship and party. As a member of that ancient and loyal University to which they had just paid so much honour, it afforded him much delight to receive within its walls the citizens of London, the merchant princes of England, headed by that Lord Mayor, whose goodness of heart and integrity of character they all knew and appreciated. (Loud cheers.)

The Lord Mayor then proposed, "Dr. Ogle, and the Professors of the University of Oxford."

Dr. Ogle acknowledged the honour, and remarked that the patronage which the Lord Mayor had given to literature and science was highly gratifying to all who felt an interest or were engaged in them. (Cheers.)

The Rev. Dr. Ingram proposed the health of the Lord Mayor, and spoke of the connection which had subsisted between the cities of London and Oxford, which he dated as far back as the year 904. These two important cities, on the banks of the Thames, had, in days gone by, been associated in many ways, and that association, he doubted not, had been beneficial to both. The still closer communication by railway and the advancement of art would unite them still more, so that the connection between Oxford and London might be important to the whole world. He hoped that the stream which ran through the two cities would continue to flow as peacefully as it did a thousand years ago, and that happiness and greatness might be the lot of all who dwelt upon its banks. (Cheers.) In conclusion, he would give "The Health of the Lord Mayor of London, and Prosperity to the First City of the World." (Loud cheers.)

THE LORD MAYOR'S VISIT TO OXFORD, AND VIEW OF THE THAMES.

The Lord Mayor, who was enthusiastically cheered, said he rejoiced to find that his journey to Oxford had renewed those old associations and awakened those kindly feelings which, from the last speaker, he was glad to hear had subsisted between the two cities almost from time immemorial. As the Conservator of the liberties of a great city, it was his duty, as well as the duty of all who hold similar posts of honour, whether in Oxford, London, or elsewhere, to see that the rights and privileges entrusted to their keeping were not impeded or interfered with. (Cheers.) He was pleased that the Court of Aldermen had required him to take the View of the river Thames: he had done so with pleasure and delight, and a better opportunity had never been afforded for so doing. He was sure that his fellow-citizens would not be angry with him for the course he had taken, especially after receiving a report which he intended to make, and which, he doubted not, would be equally satisfactory to them and to their friends at Oxford. In conclusion, he sincerely hoped that the connection of time and the bond of unity would long exist between the two cities that flourished on the peaceful banks of the fruitful Thames. (Loud Cheers.)

The Lord Mayor then gave "the Health of the unpaid Magistracy of London who had passed the Chair," and of "the Aldermen below the Chair;" these toasts being responded to,

The Lord Mayor proposed "The Health of the Mayor of Oxford," and mentioned that that gentleman's brother served the same office last year, and that both brothers had so earned the good opinions of their fellow citizens that he believed if there was a third brother the city of Oxford would select him for Mayor next year. (Laughter and cheers.)

The Mayor of Oxford said he thanked the Lord Mayor and the company for the honour they had conferred on him and the Corporation of Oxford. He assured them that, considering how closely the two Corporations were connected by charters, customs, and associations, in that particular office, it was a feature in his Mayoralty that he should pride himself on, in having the pleasure of seeing the Lord Mayor within the walls of this ancient and loyal city. (Cheers.)

After the toast of "the Sheriffs" had been drunk with cheers, and responded to,

"THE GRACE CUP," AT OXFORD.

Sir Chapman Marshall observed, with respect to the cause and necessity for the Lord Mayor's taking the View of the Thames, that, although his Lordship's jurisdiction did not extend beyond Staines, still they were deeply interested in the state of every part of the river. Twenty years ago, the Commissioners of the lower district complained that the Corporation neglected their duty and caused them to expend £15,000 in improving their locks and embankments; and unless the Lord Mayor did make the View, it would be impossible to know whether others did their duty, and made such repairs as were absolutely necessary for the general interest of the Commissioners. (Cheers.)

The toasts that followed were "The Lady Mayoress and the Ladies," "The Chairman of the Navigation Committee," "Mr. Deputy Brown and the Common Council of London," "The Lord Mayor's Chaplain," "The Town Clerk and Deputy Town Clerk of London," "The Town Clerk of Oxford," &c.

The Lord Mayor then left the chair, and the company withdrew to take coffee.

[We now proceed to detail the journey, which the reader will find illustrated in the annexed map-like picture of the Route, from Oxford to Kew.]

THURSDAY, AUGUST 6.

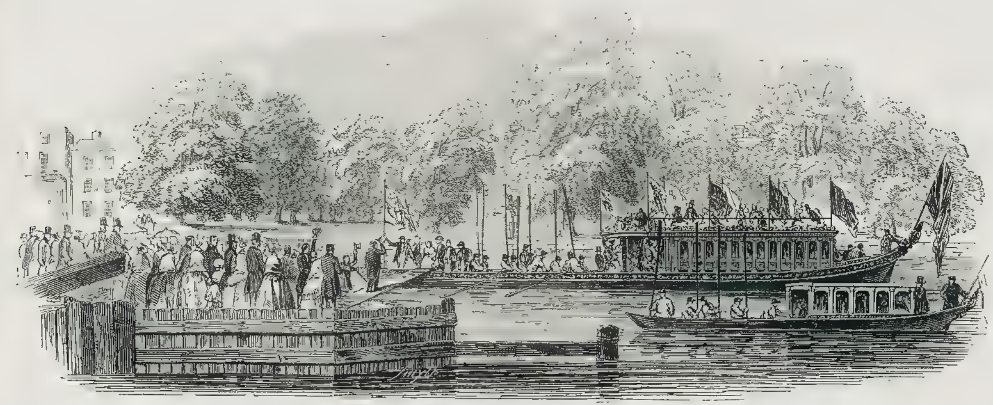
The Civic Party at the Star rose early, and having breakfasted, proceeded to the point of embarkation, at Folly Bridge, which crosses the Isis, at the southern entrance into the city. The banks of Christ Church Meadow, and every spot from which the embarkation could best be seen, was crowded with spectators, who loudly cheered the visitors.

The morning was bright, and the State Barge, with its splendidly emblazoned scarlet silk banners, waving in the sunbeams, had a most brilliant effect; whilst the official import of the occasion was denoted by the City Marshal bearing his mace, and the Royal standard waving at the bow of the richly carved and gilded craft. The great barge was followed by the shallop of the Water Bailiff, rowed by eight watermen. In another boat, provided with an awning, was the military band of the West Essex Yeomanry; and, in a third boat, was the Yeoman of the Lord Mayor's Household, who had charge of the provisions for the Civic Party; and a goodly freight it was of cases of wines, delicious fruits, &c.

At a quarter past eight, the entire Party having embarked, the gay flotilla departed amidst loud cheering, firing of salutes, and the enlivening music of the band.

Oxford, viewed from this point, is a beautiful and affecting scene; presenting, as it does, "a mass of towers, pinnacles, and spires, rising in the bosom of a valley from groves which hide all buildings but such as are consecrated to some wise and holy purpose," and each of which

With more than language, spirit-like appeals
To the high sense impassion'd nature feels.



THE EMBARKATION AT OXFORD.

Nor was this train of reflection broken by the first object on the river-bank—the venerable tower of Iffley Church, opposite Iffley Pound Lock. The former is, perhaps, the finest relic of Norman church architecture in the kingdom.

The banks of the river are flat from Iffley. At a short distance on the left, the Cherwell enters the Isis, to the left of which lies Shotover Hill, whence there is a charming view over the city of learning and the rich adjacent country.

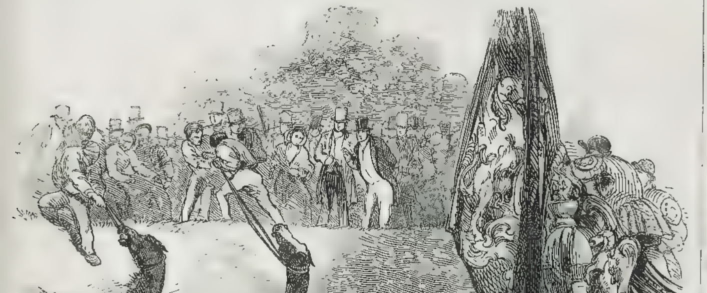
Next were passed Sandford Lock and Weir; after which, the water falls seven feet, and the picturesqueness of Nuneham Courtney, with its embosoming woods, are seen to great advantage, by the river, taking a bold sweep to the right, and showing the noble mansion of the Archbishop of York.

The Civic Party next passed Culham Bridge and the town of Abingdon, "in ancient times a famous city, goodly to behold, full of riches, encompassed with very fruitful fields, green meadows, and spacious pastures:" the latter remain in all their glory; and the bridge, built in the reign of Henry V., is a picturesque relief to the structures of the same class built in our times.

The river-banks, however, soon lose their picturesqueness: the village of Appleford has little to attract notice. Soon after this, the river makes a sudden northern bend towards Clifton Ferry; from which place the Thames was made navigable to Oxford, by Act of Parliament, in the twenty-first year of James I.

At these several points, the Civic Party were warmly cheered by the crowds of all ages, whom the glittering spectacle had attracted to the river side, where groups of rosy children harmonized with a delicious profusion of wild flowers, and a scene of luxuriant nature such as few painters can depict. Nor were bells, "the poor man's only music," as Coleridge called them, silent amidst the gaiety but they pealed forth their welcome from the several church towers, and alike heightened the festivity on bank and barge.

Just before reaching Shillingford Bridge, the right bank of the river, overhung with ash, beech, and oaks, their gnarled roots reaching to the water's edge, and the sedgy verdure variegated with the foxglove, the convolvulus, the wild-rose, and water-lily—and these, again, backed by ripe corn in golden heaps—all made up a scene of indescribable richness. At the opposite bank, almost immediately



ACCIDENT AT BENSON LOCK.

CULHAM BRIDGE, ABINGDON.

[illegible] Bridge [illegible] the Thame with the Thames [illegible] being [illegible]

[illegible] Party next passed [illegible] Lock [illegible] the fourth district of the Thames. Here an accident happened, which occasioned some delay. One of the horses slipped from the towing-path into the river, and in his struggle to extricate himself, pulled in his companion horse: the driver jumped into the stream to their rescue, and great anxiety for the result was manifested among the crowd at the Lock, as well as among the Civic Company. At length, several men succeeded in getting out the horses, and the Lord Mayor generously rewarded the rescuers by giving them a sovereign.

Wallingford Bridge was next reached; and, from this point, the country is charmingly undulated. The bridge is a handsome stone structure of nineteen arches; and here, and at Wallingford Lock, were crowds in holiday clothes, who cheered the Civic Party most lustily. Wallingford is a town of the ancient Britons, and is, probably, as old as London itself: close to the river-side are the ruins of its fine old Castle, famous for the sieges it underwent in the civil wars between Stephen and Matilda.

[illegible] the Lock the left shore has [illegible] like [illegible] wooded [illegible] Mongewell, the seat of the late Bishop [illegible] About three miles from Wallingford, the river is crossed by the Great Western Railway [illegible] was passing at the time the water pageant reached the bridge, and threw its cumbrous magnificence into contrast with the speed of the locomotive wonder!

The river thence glides through some fine country, backed by hills, past the village of Goring, on the left, and that of Streatley on the opposite bank. Here the Civic Party landed at Sanders's Wharf, where Mr. Kipling, formerly a member of the Corporation of London, had made arrangements for the Lord Mayor's reception. On examining the locks and works in this district, they were found to be in [illegible]

At [illegible] were in waiting for the party, [illegible] after [illegible] the newly-built lodge of Basildon Park, the seat of James Morrison, Esq., M.P., who had hospitably invited his fellow-citizens to dinner. On reaching the mansion, they were received by Mr. and Mrs. Morrison, to whom the Civic Party were severally introduced by the Lord Mayor. The mansion was designed by Carr of York, for Mr. [illegible] Sir Francis Sykes [illegible] purchased by Mr. Morrison. [illegible] a centre [illegible] two wings [illegible] style, and ornamented with four [illegible] columns, supporting a pediment with a bold cornice. The interior is spacious and elegant; the Grand Saloon is painted by T. de Bruyn, in imitation of bas-relief.

The Party were, unfortunately, an hour behind the time expected. Upon entering the Drawing-room, they found assembled a large number who had been invited to meet the Lord Mayor. The Lady Mayoress had come direct from the Mansion House, attended by the Chaplain, and Admiral and Mrs. Ross; there were, also, Sir Claudius and Lady Hunter; Aldermen Humphery and Farncomb; Mr Dillon; the Mayors of Oxford and Reading; several county Magistrates; the Clergy [illegible]

The [illegible] accommodation of the visitors [illegible] and modern artists, besides sculpture, costly mosaic tables, [illegible], &c.

The Banquet was served in the splendid Dining-room in truly magnificent style: it comprised turtle and venison, and every delicacy; the fruits were of the finest varieties, and had been supplied from the forcing-houses at Fonthill Abbey, which is, also, Mr. Morrison's property. The table appointments were much admired: the massive ormolu candelabra, bearing wax-lights, alternating with baskets of the most exquisite flowers, had an enchanting effect; whilst the gold [illegible] sideboards presented a most gorgeous display of [illegible] taste. After the Banquet, the entire party rose, and drank "The [illegible] Her Majesty." The other loyal toasts having been drunk,

Mr. Morrison said, that in rising to propose "The Health of the Lord Mayor, [illegible] his own and Mrs. Morrison's [illegible] City of London, connected with it in a mercantile point of view, and [illegible] his own industry, obtained everything he could desire; associated as he had been with the merchants of London and its Corporation, having repeatedly partaken of the civic hospitalities, not only in the Mansion House and the halls of the Livery Companies, but at the splendid banquets given in the Guildhall of the City of London, it gave him the greatest possible pleasure to have the opportunity, in his humble way, of showing some mark of respect to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, the Corporation of London, and the merchant princes by whom he was surrounded, and to convince them that he had not forgotten their kind attentions on the spot in which he had spent the principal years of his life; and, although at present his time was occupied in other pursuits of a public nature, [illegible] City of London, and hoped he should ever continue [illegible]

The Lord Mayor, in returning thanks, [illegible] the respect and esteem [illegible] City of London was the first mercantile city in the world, and it was by the industry [illegible] such men as Mr Morrison, that England, above all nations, had arrived at its present mercantile greatness.

Mr. Morrison next proposed "The Health of the Aldermen of London," whom he welcomed most heartily to Basildon.

The toast was replied to by Sir S. C. Hunter, who stated this to be the third View he had attended since he had been a Member of the Court of Aldermen.

The Lord Mayor [illegible] "The Health of Mr. and Mrs. Morrison," adding [illegible] of their [illegible]

Mr. Morrison [illegible] expressed his gratification in entertaining [illegible]

"The Health of the Lady Mayoress" was then drunk.

The ladies then retired, and were soon followed by the gentlemen, to a superb ball. The Civic Party, however, having eight miles to go to their hotel—the Bear, at Reading—left comparatively early, but the festivities were kept up to a late hour.

By this arrangement, the portion of the river between Streatley and Reading was not surveyed by the entire party. It may be briefly stated that, in the route, Goring corresponds to Streatley, as Whitchurch does to Pangbourne, and Moulsford does to South Stoke, on the Oxfordshire bank of the river. Between Pangbourne and Whitchurch is a [illegible] the river, of many straggling arches. Purley Hall was next passed; it was once the seat of Warren Hastings, but not of Horne Tooke, as generally supposed. There are locks at Mapledurham and Caversham, [illegible] place. The Great Western Railway crosses the river at Moulsford, by two noble bridges, of similar design; and the line thence runs, at a short distance from the Berkshire bank of the Thames, to Reading. In the variety of its scenery, and the interest of the villages with which it is studded—some of them of the Norman age—this portion of the route [illegible] scarcely a parallel.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 7.

This morning, shortly after eight o'clock, the Civic Party assembled at the High-bridge, Reading, where they were greeted by a large company, who were stationed in a barge on the Kennet, gaily decorated with flags and garlands of [illegible] A salute of maroons was also fired; [illegible] accompanied by the Mayor of Reading and his family. The morning was, unfortunately, hazy, and [illegible] rain.

The Civic Party now proceeded past the pretty village of Sunning, with its ivy-mantled tower, from which bells pealed forth their primitive music. On the opposite bank, in Oxfordshire, the church of Shiplake has a very pleasing effect: at the Lock here, the children of the Wargrave Charity Schools greeted the Lord Mayor with cheers long and loud; and his Lordship gave the little folks a sovereign [illegible] day.

[illegible] towards Wargrave, near which the Loddon slow "empties itself into the Thames, according to Drayton,

> Contributing her store,
> As still we see the much runs to more.

From the high ground, near this village, we obtain a fine view of the Thames towards Reading; with the groves of Shiplake on one side, Sunning Hill and the green heights around on the other, and a pleasant ait in front of Sunning Bridge. To the right lies Park Place, the beautiful seat of E. F. Fuller Maitland, Esq.; [illegible] the water's edge is a picturesque [illegible] Mr. M[illegible] Mr. M[illegible] steward, who [illegible] the Lord Mayor, and invited his Lordship to inspect [illegible]

[illegible] bend, and discovers a fine view of Henley Bridge, a handsome balustrated stone structure. Henley, with its finely-proportioned church tower, and its town backed by an amphitheatre of woody hills, merits all the admiration it has received from Thames tourists. The river here recals Denham's eloquently descriptive lines:—

> Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull;
> Strong, without rage; without o'erflowing, full.

We should here mention, that the first Lock from Reading was under repair and the Commissioners had just completed an extensive new bridge and high towing-path above Henley.

On leaving Henley and near the entrance of the county of Buckingham, Fawley Court, built by Inigo Jones, is seen on the left; and in the middle of the River, opposite this fine domain, lies the most beautiful island on the Thames, shaded with trees of noble growth.

The Berkshire side of the River, after passing Henley, has but little scenery that can be compared with the woody amphitheatres of the opposite county, till [illegible] Abbey, a band was stationed on the lawn, [illegible] came to the water's edge to witness the Lord Mayor's progress; but, on the barge making towards the shore, the spectators hastily retired, as if to take care of their provisions; the Party did not, however, land, the gipseyers were relieved from their apprehension, and returned to the river-side.

[illegible] it was once a Cell to the Cistercian Monks of Woburn, and, in the middle of the last century, the seat of a "mock monastery." Throughout this part of the district, Mr. Barker, the Chairman of the Commissioners, accompanied the Lord Mayor, and pointed out the various locks and works, explaining to his Lordship the course [illegible] of the Navigation [illegible] and,

[illegible] ated at Harleyford and the adjoining ponds. At Marlow, the quarry woods on the Berkshire side are seen in their bold beauty, hanging over the river, which here divides in two channels, and one being reserved for Marlow Poundlock, occ[illegible] a fine fall. Hedsor and Cookham were next reached; the barges passed [illegible] the "hanging woods" of Cliefden and Taplow—

> With their beechen wreaths the king of rivers crowning.

The mansion at Cliefden has an imposing façade; but the magnificence of its woods soon carries the spectator from its artificial beauties: its luxuriant heights and undulations, the variety of its oaks, beeches, firs, and maples; its vast and verdant lawns; and its chalky steeps, chequered with foliage—combine to render the whole scene a fine treat for the lover of the picturesque. At Cliefden Spring, [illegible] ripples down a gentle declivity into the river, is an octagonal temple, for [illegible] would consider this fail as the [illegible] and the gay [illegible] of the Civic Flotilla, presented a scene of gorgeous beauty, to depict which would almost exhaust even the magic pencil of Turner himself:

> Here earth and water seem to strive again;
> Not, chaos-like, together crushed and bruised
> But, as the world, harmoniously confused

At Cliefden Spring, where the Civic Party landed for a short time, the Vintners' Company were dining; it being their annual excursion-day to mark their cygnets; the Royalty of the swans in the river belonging exclusively to her Majesty, and the V[illegible] Swan [illegible] who take "up" the cygnets, wore swan's feathers in their hats, to denote their occupation. (See an account of the custom in No. 116 of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.)

[illegible] place [illegible] Buckingham kept his [illegible]

[illegible]

The property afterwards fell into better hands: the mansion was greatly improved by Frederick, Prince of Wales, and George III. passed some of his early years in this delightful retirement. The centre of the house was destroyed by fire some fifty years since. The view from the terrace commands the river

> Flowing,
> To Windsor-ward again.

But, neither poetry nor sentiment is the staple of life; and, at Cliefden, the Civic Party withdrew to the saloon of the State Barge, to partake of an elegant [illegible] beneath the awning [illegible] Mr. Graham, the Secretary to [illegible]

The Lord Mayor entertained, in addition to the Civic Party, the Chairman and Commissioners of the Navigation; and dinner being over, and the usual loyal toasts drunk, his Lordship cordially expressed the gratification he felt at seeing at his table the Chairman of the Commission which had done so much to improve the Navigation of the Thames, and thereby increase the facilities so necessary to the conservancy of the river of that great city over which he had the honour to preside. His Lordship then referred to the very valuable and interesting information he had received on the View, and proposed "The Health of Mr. Barker, the Chairman of the upper district of the Navigation, and might he live many years to continue his valuable assistance to the Commission."

Mr. Barker then returned thanks in an able address, and referred to "the approbation expressed of the improvements made since the last visitation in the works upon the canal," adding that since Alderman Wilson's survey "many valuable suggestions then made by the Court and their officers, had been carried into effect." Mr. Barker then adverted to the necessity for reducing the tolls along the whole line of canal, in conformity with the wishes of the Lord Mayor; stating that no pains had been spared to convince the private lock-holders of the necessity of assenting to "one unanimous scale of reduced tolls," lest they should drive all the traffic to the railways. Whenever one of these locks came into the market, the Commissioners endeavoured to purchase it and gave it up to the public. Mr. Barker then proposed "The Health of the Lord Mayor."

The Lord Mayor returned thanks, and expressed his readiness, and that of his brethren of the Court of Aldermen, to attend whenever the Commissioners of the upper district thought that their attendance, advice, or assistance would in any way tend to promote the interest of the navigation of a river from which the Corporation [illegible] The Lord Mayor then [illegible] Mayor of Reading [illegible] Mayor of that important town."

The Mayor expressed [illegible] of Reading, in his person, [illegible] the Lord Mayor. It was now just forty years since he formed one of four hundred boys, who were drawn up in order by their schoolmaster, to do honour to the then Lord Mayor of the City of London (Sir Claudius Hunter). He well remembered the impression it made upon his mind. He little thought at that time he should one day be honoured by such an invitation as he had then received. He was authorised by the Corporation of Reading to express their regret that his Lordship's time would [illegible] of their testifying, in the manner [illegible] London [illegible] Mayoress."

The Lord Mayor, [illegible] the Lady Mayoress was so bad a sailor that he could not persuade her to come upon the water. Her Ladyship followed them en route as near as she could by land; he expected to find her at Windsor, where he should be happy to introduce his guests, as well as at the Mansion House on the 13th instant, when he hoped to [illegible] then proposed, "The Health of Mr. Graham, the Secretary to the Commission."

Mr. Graham, in returning thanks, stated that he had kept the Commissioners clear of litigation; and explained that the mistake of a lock-keeper having that day demanded and taken toll from the Civic Party arose from the keeper being a new man. Mr. Graham [illegible] three Commissioners to the monthly board, and the whole meeting quarterly to confirm the proceedings. The Lord Mayor and Aldermen, together with all the Mayors of the towns through which the canal passed, were Commissioners appointed by Act of Parliament."

The Lord Mayor then proposed "The Aldermen of London," for which Alderman Farebrother returned thanks.

The next toast was, "The Chairman of the Navigation Committee of the City of London." Mr. Hall, after thanking the company, stated that the Commissioners had lately attended them at Reading, upon the subject of reducing the tolls, when suggestions were thrown out by each board of various improvements that might be made in both districts, for mutual advantage.

Alderman Wilson then addressed the company, and prefaced "The Health of the Absent Commissioners," by remarking that the alterations made since he was up the river, the improvements in the mode of constructing the locks, and the very excellent state of repair in which they found the works generally, showed the great zeal and activity of the Commissioners. The Corporation of London were at the present moment performing a most important work near Penton Hook Lock, which would materially benefit both districts, and to which the Commissioners of the upper district had most readily and most liberally contributed £500. Who would say after this that these visits were useless and a waste of the City funds? He thought it was a great pity that those who were so anxious to find fault with the Aldermen did not not take the trouble to make themselves [illegible] He was glad to think [illegible] fully expected that next time it was taken he would [illegible] one of the party, and give them the benefit of his knowledge and experience in matters relating to river navigation.

Sir C. Marshall said he was sure that any one who had doubts or scruples upon the propriety of this survey, would immediately have had them all removed had he been present that day.

The Lord Mayor then gave "The Health of Mr. Leach, the Corporation Surveyor."

Here the ringing of bells, the shouts of the multitudes that lined the banks, and [illegible] the party had safely arrived at Windsor, [illegible] proceeded to the White Hart Inn, where [illegible]

[illegible] to Windsor, the weather was fairly [illegible] After leaving this beautiful seat, the [illegible] crossed, at Maidenhead, by the [illegible] of the Great Western Railway [illegible] time captive here.

We next pass Dorney, a fine old "Court" house; nearly opposite lies Monkey Island and its fishing temple; Bray, immortalised by its vicar of vicissitude; lower lies Down Place; and then Clewer,

> Where Thames and Isis' heir
> By lowly Eton glides, and Windsor proudly fair.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 8.

The Civic Party, having breakfasted at Windsor, embarked on board the State Barge, at Windsor Bridge, at nine o'clock, under a salute of maroons, and a company of Life Guards on the river bank.

On reaching Datchet Bridge, Alderman Lucas and [illegible] the barge, in one of the Vintners' Company's boats. Runnymead, Magna Charta Island, and Ankerwyke were next passed. "The Thames here," says Mr. Mackay, "flowing at our feet, shines in the sunlight like a ribbon of gold upon a cloth of green velvet: and every steeple upon which the eye rests, every knoll, [illegible]

[illegible] we reach the point at which the Colne flows into the Thames, and a little [illegible] Staines Bridge is the CITY BOUNDARY STONE, where an olden ceremony [illegible]

The State Barge being moored close to the edge of the meadow, the Civic Office-bearers embarked, and, with the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs, grouped around the Stone [illegible] "God bless the Queen, and Prosperity to the City of London." Three cheers were given; the band played "God save the Queen;" cake and wine were distributed among the Party, and small coin was thrown among the crowd.

There is an old custom of bumping at the Stone the Sheriffs and Aldermen who [illegible] Watermen [illegible] Sheriff Laurie, and while they were bumping the [illegible] Sheriff [illegible] Alderman Hughes [illegible] when [illegible] Alderman Moon descending from the stone, he was instantly bumped. Those who had been so served then paid certain fees, and were declared Free Watermen of the River Thames. The whole party then re-embarked; the Lord Mayor having given the usual direction that his name, as a record of his visit, should be painted on the Stone.

We have engraved this singular scene of immunity. The entire party, with the superb City banner placed on the Stone, and surrounded by other colours, had a very striking effect. The stone is ancient; it is sculptured with the City Arms, and is raised upon a square pediment, which bears the inscriptions, and is ascended by steps. On a moulding around the upper part is inscribed "GOD PRESERVE THE CITY OF LONDON, A.D. 1280."

Nearly opposite Staines, and at a short distance from Egham, lies Cooper's Hill, or, as Pope sings:—

> [illegible]
> [illegible]
> [illegible]
> [illegible]
> [illegible] flow!
> Here his first lays majestic Denham sung

Laleham has few attractions, save for anglers. Opposite, stretches Chertsey Mead, with its farms and villas; and its neat town and church, not forgetting the Porch House, where—

> The last accents flowed from Cowley's tongue.

[illegible] we next reach Shepperton, with its little church [illegible] the river Wey [illegible] Walton, and its [illegible] at the village favouring the opinion that here the Romans crossed the river.

The Thames is now narrowed by thick banks of [illegible], but the tower of Sunbury Church, its Lock, and Weir are soon seen. Lower down [illegible] Hampton, with [illegible] the Mole, with the [illegible] terminated [illegible] the State Barge, to partake of a banquet prepared for [illegible] the Maria Wood, moored off Hampton Court Palace, after which they left for town in carriages.

THE NAVIGATION.

To return to Penton Hook, between Sunbury and Hampton. On arriving here, the Water Bailiff pointed out to the Lord Mayor the situation which his Lordship had directed to be staked for the preservation and increase of the fishery without interfering with the navigation of the river.

The works in progress near Penton Hook, for facilitating the navigation between Bell Weir and Penton Hook Locks, are [illegible] being carried on [illegible] the Navigation [illegible] Mr. Leach, the Clerk of the Works, [illegible] the Lord Mayor by Mr. Hall, the Chairman, who [illegible] measures adopted by the Committee for improving the City District. [illegible]

[illegible] page 104.)

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, August 16.—Tenth Sunday after Trinity—Bonaparte born, 1769.
MONDAY, 17.—Duchess of Kent born, 1786.
TUESDAY, 18.—Beattie died, 1803—Twilight nearly ending.
WEDNESDAY, 19.—Royal George sunk off Spithead, 1782.
THURSDAY, 20.—Bloomfield died, 1823—Bernadotte crowned, 1810.
FRIDAY, 21.—Battle of Bosworth Field, 1485.
SATURDAY, 22.—Pompeii and Herculaneum buried by volcano, 63.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge for the Week ending August 22.

Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday.		Saturday
M	A	M	A	M.	A.	M.	A.	M	A	M	A
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
[illegible] 25	[illegible]	11 42	0 0	0 15	0 40	1 4	1 27	1 48	2 [illegible]	2 2[illegible]	2 [illegible]

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"D. B. F."—We do not believe a person can obtain a commission in the army after the age of twenty-one or two.

"L. M. [illegible]"—[illegible] Wilberforce [illegible] Bishop of Oxford, was, previous to his consecration, [illegible] of Surrey and [illegible] of Winchester. He is third son of the late eminent philanthropist, Wm. Wilberforce. The Bishop's address, in [illegible], Cuddesdon Palace, Wheatley, Oxfordshire.

"A. V.," Chatham. Our Correspondent's reasoning satisfies us that no person, whatever may be his or her rank in society, is entitled to be designated "Right Honourable," excepting Peers and their Wives, and those Commoners who are Members of the Privy Council.

"Kettering."—The Countess Vitzthum XIV. is one of the Ladies of the Palace (Dames du Palais) to the Queen of B[illegible]. The numerals attached to her title [illegible] the [illegible] Countess of the name.

"An [illegible] Subscriber."—Sir James E. Tennent, Colonial Secretary, Ceylon.

"A C[illegible] Subscriber," Leamington, should write to some Dealer in Second-hand Books.

"Philo-Linneus."—Next week.

"Jessy," Malta.—The Registrar of the Charter House will give the required information.

"A Yearly Subscriber," Cork, may receive the Number by ordering it through his Bookseller.

"[illegible]," Toronto.—The Views shall appear as soon as the interest of the subject justifies their publication.

"S. S.," Chelsea, is thanked for the information.

"Theodosius."—We have not room for the Lines on Lime-jar.

"A Subscriber."—We do not know of any redress to be obtained in the transaction between A. and B.

"W. D. B.," Reepham, should apply to Mr. Webster, Coin Dealer, [illegible] street, Covent-garden.

"A Subscriber," Reading, should obtain the interest of a Railway Director.

"Le Solitaire" should write to the Nobleman.

"J. R.," Ulverstone, is thanked, but we have not room for the Sketch.

"A Novice." "Palmyra" is an historical romance; but the principal characters—as Zenobia—are not fictitious.

"A Continued Subscriber, A. K.," may obtain any Numbers of our Journal at 6d. each, through any Bookseller, who will also bind the Volumes at 5s. 6d. each and upwards.

"H. L.," Ramsgate.—Apply to the Secretary to the Canada Company, 13, St. Helen's-place.

"A Subscriber," Newport.—The President steam-ship sailed from New York for England, on her fourth voyage, in March, 1841: her precise fate remains, to this hour, a melancholy mystery.

"Angelo" should complain to the Secretary to the General Post Office.

"A. P.," Liverpool.—The settlement will be legal, provided the husband be solvent.

"J. A. P.," Manchester.—From 2s. to 3s.

"A Constant Reader," King's Cross.—We have not heard of any intended reduction of the Coast Guard in Ireland.

"An Artist," Stockwell, is thanked.

"[illegible]"—"[illegible] Folly" is a name sometimes given to an [illegible] rather than the [illegible] of the [illegible].

"A Subscriber," Liverpool.—It is etiquette to address a letter to the Private Secretary to the Prince.

"A Subscriber in the North."—Mr. S. Beazley is the author of "The Roué."

"K. M. B." should address a letter to the Secretary of the Society.

"Poor Pat."—Warts may be removed by caustic, or acetic acid: soft warts by Gowland's Lotion.

"C. D. C." is thanked for his intention, though we cannot adopt his hint.

"[illegible]"—J. S. [illegible]

"A[illegible]," Weymouth.—[illegible] published in Paris and London. [illegible] Works on Painting may be worth our Correspondent's attention.

"An Amateur [illegible]" should apply to the Messrs. [illegible]

"J. C. I.," [illegible] the impression of the Woodcock of Haydon's [illegible] Mr. Harvey, the draftsman, and engraver of that [illegible]

"A Wild Flower," Bury.—We have not room.

"Exeter."—Mr. Waterton is now at Walton Hall, Yorkshire.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 15, 1846.

THE new Ministry appears to have made its first false step, on difficult ground, it must be granted, but it is one that few were prepared for. That the Government which ousted its predecessors on an Irish Coercion Bill, should, within—almost within—"a little month," embarrass itself with the least efficacious and most unpopular of coercive enactments, does seem strange. It must be set down to that mysterious influence of office, which acts like those hardening and petrifying springs, that transmute the softest substances into matter of flint-like rigidity. The kindest intentions in Opposition become converted into harshness by contact with the Treasury Bench.

When the interval between the gentle declarations and the severe practice is unusually short, the contrast becomes most unfavourable to the party making them. What may really be the result of necessity, is liable to be ascribed to want of principle; we do not think it is altogether a laxity of political morals. It is rather carelessness of speech, and want of foresight. Generous sentiments easily overflow; and the temptation to place oneself in favourable contrast to an opponent is irresistible, when it costs nothing but words. This was the error of the Whigs in opposing the Irish Arms Act: in 1843 they had but a remote prospect of office, Peel was in the fulness of his strength; the new Tariff had awakened but a slight alarm in his followers—the Corn-Laws stood apparently the firmer for their modification; their repeal was among the remotest of Parliamentary contingencies. The Whigs seemed condemned for some years to the cold shade of Opposition. In that situation they indulged largely in that very safe species of philanthropy which runs no risk of being tested by deeds. Like Chaucer's Prioress, they were "all conscience and tender heart;" and we doubt not that they were in a measure sincere; they believed that they would act as they spoke; they only forgot the trammels and practical necessities of office and its responsibilities. Considering that many of them had been holders of office, the oversight was rather culpable; they should have recollected that their return to the place of power might come again, and that they would have to deal with the same dangers; if they had not discovered any new mode of meeting them, it was imprudent to indulge in such strong denunciations of the old. It is only justice to Lord John Russell to say that he is less chargeable in this respect than most of his colleagues; he received the Arms Bill a legacy from his predecessors, the heir-loom of all the rulers of Ireland for two generations, and his opposition was mostly confined to the new powers introduced into it; but his regrets of the necessity of such a policy were so strong that no one could suppose he was prepared to continue it. After his speech on the Coercion Bill, it appears almost unaccountable; after the acknowledgment by the late Government that in practice the Arms Bill was altogether a failure, it seems astounding; after declaring himself that he is ready to strike out its most stringent enactments, to "draw its teeth," as it has been expressively termed, the persisting in an useless but offensive measure seems an absolute infatuation. And again we are thrown back on the influences of office as the only explanation of the phenomenon.

It is on those of the Ministry who are less broken in to the duties of Downing-street, that this step will prove the most damaging; they were more generous and unreserved in their declarations than their more experienced colleagues, and have, in supporting such a direct piece of garrison government, to make a wider departure from former speeches; Hansard is awfully against them. They will probably repent that, like the player-queen in "Hamlet," they "did protest too much," finding that they now cannot "keep their word." The debate on this question has had a chilling, discouraging, and, we may add, lowering effect. After all the professions of equality, justice, conciliation, are these to be mere words? Can nothing be thought of but the old and confessedly worn-out expedients of arbitrary powers, degrading enactments, domiciliary visits—all, in fact, that makes Irish policy the reverse of English? It is a pity that Lord John Russell did not boldly break and throw aside the weapons of the gloomy times of Pitt and Castlereagh, especially as they are useless. Every one must have remarked that, in the trials and examinations of men arrested for the crime of agrarian outrages in Ireland, no provision of the Arms Bill ever appears to have led to the apprehension of the criminal, to have impeded him in the commission of the act, or to have prevented him from gaining possession of weapons to do it with. No Minister has yet explained the exact mode in which the Bill effects what is supposed to be its object. No doubt, the Government, by its means, knows who has registered fire-arms; but they are the very persons who would not use them unlawfully; it is the men who would evade still more stringent laws than this, who are the guilty. For these exceptional cases, the whole country is vexed and irritated, by what is done under the Act, and still more, perhaps, by the knowledge of what may be done, wherever ill-will or private feeling may exist. Like the Continental Passport system, which is kept up, it is said, to facilitate the arrest of criminals, it subjects the whole of society to endless annoyance and trouble, on account of the few desperate characters who set law at defiance. There are thieves and murderers in all countries; but it is monstrous to treat every man as if he was a thief and murderer, or would become so. And in both cases the huge network of precaution is useless; it merely creates a vast amount of annoyance to the honest part of the community, and does not render the commission of crime or the escape of the criminal impossible; if it did, it might be better submitted to. Pursuing the analogy, we find it hold good in both systems. Every man who travels on the Continent bears with him a document of suspicion; he is described, measured, designated, tracked from place to place, and has to submit himself perpetually to the surveillance of a political police, as if he were really—

A fellow by the hand of nature marked,
Quoted and signed to do a deed of shame.

Of what use is it? Murders and robberies are committed under all this, and assassins and thieves often escape; we would back our Forresters and the Detective Force, without such assistance, against any of the police of France or Germany. So with the Arms Bill; the bulk of the community are subjected to restrictions that do not check the desperate men who break through them. A freer and healthier state of things would be much safer and a good deal better.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

The Court at Osborne House.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal [illegible]ly are at Osborne House. It is not probable that her Majesty will return to town before the prorogation of Parliament

The Queen Dowager. Wednesday was the anniversary of the birthday of her Majesty the Queen Dowager Adelaide, who completed her fifty-fourth year.

Departure of the King and Queen of the Belgians.—Their Majesties the [illegible] and Queen of the Belgians, left Osborne House on Wednesday morning. [illegible] and his Royal Highness Prince Albert accompanied them into [illegible]mouth Harbour, and Prince Albert escorted them in the Royal barge to the [illegible]ing at the Clarence Yard, and from thence to the railway carriages, and immedi[illegible]ly afterwards returned to her Majesty, who had remained on board the yacht, which was moored off the buoy near the King's Stairs. On their arrival in town by the South Western Railway, the King and Queen of the Belgians departed [illegible] Woolwich, where they embarked in the afternoon on board the Garland for Ostend.

[illegible], Thu[illegible] Evening.—(From ou[illegible]) [illegible] of her Majesty, the Queen Dowager, who has completed her 54th year, was celebrated to-day with the usual rejoicings and demonstrations of respect. The bells of St. George's Chapel and the Parish Church of St. John rang merry peals in honour of th[illegible] event, and at noon, royal salutes were fired from the Belvidere at Virginia Water, and the Corporation Ordnance, in the Bachelor's Acre, under the superintendence of Mr. Pond, the town gunner.

The Lord Mayor's Dinner to the Ministers.—On Wednesday next the Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress will entertain her Majesty's Ministers and their ladies, and a large party of the Nobility, at dinner. About 180 will sit down to a most splendid entertainment.

Aristocratic Marriage.—On Wednesday morning, the marriage of the Right Hon Sidney Herbert, M.P., eldest son of the late Earl of Pembroke, to Miss A'Court, daughter of General A'Court, was solemnised at St George's Church, Hanover-square. The Right Rev the Bishop of Salisbury officiated at the ceremony, in the presence of a select family circle.

The Duke of Devonshire.—The Duke of Devonshire, on Wednesday, left Devonshire House on a Continental tour of some months' duration. His Grace [illegible] and then proceed to Italy and Con[illegible] on his return to this country will go to St. Petersburgh to visit the Emperor of Russia.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS FRIDAY

Railway Bills. Lord Lyttelton presented a petition from the retail booksellers of the city of Worcester, complaining of the efforts of the Railway Companies to introduce clauses into their bills, authorising them to break open parcels to ascertain whether they contain more than one enclosure.—The Earl of Clarendon said the practice was not general, and he thought it a very hard and improper one. He had no hesitation in saying that he thought such a power ought not to be allowed. He would take care the subject should be attended to, and thought it desirable to pass a standing order to prevent the insertion of such clauses (Hear)

It was stated by the Earl of Auckland, in reply to Lord Brougham, that the Earl Dundonald's invention would be put to the test

The Australian Waste Lands Bill, on the motion of Earl Grey, was read a second tim[illegible]

The Sugar Bill passed through Committee, and was ordered to be read a third time on Monday. The House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS FRIDAY.

The House met at twelve o'clock, but the business in the early part of the day was not important

The Wexford and Waterford Railway Bill was read a third time and passed

Milbank Prison. In answer to a question from Mr. W. Williams, Sir G. Grey said he had appointed a Commission to inquire into the alleged malpractices at the Milbank Prison. The Commissioners were the Earl of Chichester, Lord Seymour, and Mr. Bickham Escott

Opening of Public Institutions on Sundays.—Mr. Hume moved that, with the view of lessening the temptations to drunkenness and immorality, and of promoting thereby the welfare of the working classes especially, and also of society generally, it is the duty of a Christian Legislature to open the British Museum, the National Gallery, and all similar public places calculated to afford [illegible]nocent amusement and instructive recreation, for the reception of visitors on Sundays and on holidays, at such hours after morning service as gin-shops and public-houses are open. The hon. member contended that it would be beneficial to the morals of the public to allow the British Museum and the National Gallery to be open on Sundays.—Lord J. Russell said he was in favour of the proposition, and in that opinion he was borne out by the Commissioners of Police, who felt satisfied that the more innocent amusements were open to the public on [illegible], the more drunkenness decreased He did not, however, think that the [illegible]ght to adopt any resolution on the subject.—Mr. Hume said he was [illegible]d in having drawn attention to the subject, and would not press his motion to a division.

SUPPLY.

The House then went into a Committee of Supply.

The first vote agreed to, was that a sum not exceeding £132,000 be granted for the purpose of purchasing meal, potatoes, &c., for districts in Ireland in which [illegible] disease existed

[illegible] vote was for a sum of £20,000 towards defraying the expenses of alterations and the enlargement of Buckingham Palace. Mr. Hume objected to the vote; he considered it too large. The Chancellor of the Exchequer justified the vote Her Majesty had been put to very considerable inconvenience from the [illegible]r accommodation for herself in family in Buckingham Palace. And the House should bear in mind that this was the first application her Majesty had [illegible]de for any grant of public money since her accession to the throne. ("Hear, [illegible] hear," from both sides of the House) The total expense of the proposed [illegible]ation was calculated to amount to £150,000, but the sum at present asked [illegible]s only £20,000.—Mr. Williams opposed the vote. It would be much better [illegible]ve the money to the suffering and starving population of this country and [illegible] few words from Lord Lincoln and Mr. Williams, Lord [illegible]y surprised that any hon. gentleman could object to this vote, on th[illegible] ground of excessive expenditure; at the same time recommending the [illegible]tion of a new palace, which could only be done at a much greater expense. The Sovereign was obliged to spend part of the year in London, and, t[illegible]refore, there ought to be a suitable and convenient residence for the Royal Fami[illegible] [illegible]nd the Court. The plans for the proposed alterations in Buckingham Palace were suggested by the late Government, who, had they remained in office, intended to have put them into execution. He trusted next year Buckingham Palace would present a more handsome appearance than at present. (Hear.)

Upon a division, there appeared

For the vote	55
A[illegible]	6
Majority in favour of the vote	—49

The next vote was for a grant of £4500, to make good damages to palaces and public buildings, by the storm of the 1st of August instant

After some other votes had been agreed to, the House resumed, and d[illegible]sed of the orders of the day.

New Zealand.—Mr. Hawes obtained leave to bring in a bill to make better provision for the Government of New Zealand. The House [illegible] after seven o'clo[illegible]

A[illegible]ged Defect in the Corn Bill [illegible] deputation from the Corn Exchange [illegible]upon the Lord Mayor, to rep[illegible]at that, in consequence of an error in the Corn Bill, the duty chargeable upon [illegible]e, meal, and peas, would be much [illegible] than before the passing of the act The Lord Mayor gave his opinion [illegible]ording to the reading of the act, ry[illegible], beans, and peas would be charged an additional duty of 100 per cent. He was sure that the framers of the act never intended this. The Lord Mayor then said he would undertake to make [illegible] to remedy the evil.

Indisposition of the Marquis [illegible] from Dublin [illegible]s that the noble Marquis has bee[illegible] taken dangerously ill at Curraghmore. [illegible]s had arrived for the Surge[illegible]n-General (Sir Philip Crampton), who left immediately for his Lordship's seat, in the county of Waterford.

Sir Charles Wetherell.—We learn that more favourable accounts were received on Thursday as to Sir Charles Wetherell's health; a favourable change had taken place, and Sir Charles had given signs of returning consciousn[illegible] Sir B. Brodie and Dr. Taylor had held a consultation, and it was understood that they considered recovery probable. The learned gentleman, however, is in a very precarious state. He will not be removed from Preston Hall for the pre[illegible]

Death of Mr. Ward Intelligence was received in town yesterd[illegible] of the death of G. H. Ward, Esq, at his residence in Hertford, at an advance[illegible] The deceased gentleman was father of the Honourable Secretary to the Admiralty. He was the author of "Tremaine," and formerly held the office of one of the Lay Lords of the B[illegible]

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES

Serious Accident to Sir Charles Wetherell.—We lament to state that [illegible]cident happened to Sir Charles Wetherell, in the neighbourhood of Maidstone, on Monday morning. The learned gentleman had arrived at Maidstone by train, and was desirous of going on to Rochester, for which purpose he had engaged a one-horse phaeton, with a driver, and proceeded towards the latter place, taking what is called the Lower-road, skirting the river Medway, for the purpose of passing through the village of Wouldham. On arriving near the seat of Charles Milner, Esq., Preston Hall, some trifling circumstance caused the animal slightly to mend his pace; on which Sir Charles, who was sitting on the box with the driver, unhappily caught hold of the reins, and the horse, darting to the side of the road, dashed the carriage against a heap of stones, which caused it to upset, throwing Sir Charles to the ground with great violence. The learned gentleman, on being raised, was found to be most alarmingly injured. The driver and Sir Charles's valet escaped unhurt. Sir Charles was immediately conveyed to Preston Hall, and was attended by Mr. Dennis, of Aylesford, and Dr Taylor, of Maidstone; but so serious did these gentlemen consider the state of their patient, that the valet was soon after dispatched to London, to procure the attendance of an eminent physician. Lady Wetherell has arrived at Preston Hall. The unfortunate gentleman met with every possible attention and kindness at the Hall. The latest accounts from Preston Hall are of a very unfavourable nature. Sir Charles, who is labouring under concussion of the brain, was unable to speak, and the worst results are feared. He was wholly unconscious of everything around him, and unable to recognise Lady Wetherell, or his brother, the Rev. Mr. Wetherell. The learned gentleman had been to [illegible]n, to see an estate he had purchased, and was intending to return to town [illegible]ravesend.

Deaths During the Late Storm.—During the dreadful storm on Wed[illegible], four men were killed by lightning, whilst reaping in a field [illegible]m, between Norwood and Croydon; three of them were struck [illegible]spot, and the fourth was taken away insensible, and died soon after. [illegible]man was killed, at the head of a team of horses, at Chislehurst. Mr. C[illegible]ttar has held an inquest on the body, when the verdict given was, "Died by the visitation of God."

The late Murder of a Policeman at Dagenham.—Two men, named Dennis [illegible]nn, and John Henessey, and a woman named Ellen Rankin, have been examined at Ilford, on suspicion of being concerned in the murder of George Clarke, [illegible]ceman, on the 30th of June last. The circumstances of the murder have [illegible]n mentioned in our journal. The evidence of a boy named Walsh, went to [illegible]ow that the prisoners had been walking in the wheat fields in Kent, and that [illegible] woman was heard to s[illegible] the [illegible] a poli[illegible]an, and [illegible]hat he was found dead in the morning. Sweeney then remarked [illegible] was foolish of her not to keep a secret. The witness, Walsh, stated that he saw Hennessey and Flynn together at the Smith's Arms, Coodham, Kent, on the mornin[illegible] Ellen Rankin made the statement about the murder. A witness named Felix Sweeney, deposed as follows:—"I reside in Bal[illegible]-court, Tooley-street. I was at work on Wednesday last, for Mr. Giddens, at Coodham: and in the afternoon I was sitting round a fire with Rankin and Flynn, who worked on the same farm, when Ellen Rankin said she had no occasio[illegible] only for beating [illegible] policeman, or having a row with a p[illegible] I cannot say which. She th[illegible] something about a policeman being found [illegible] field with his head off, but I did not pay much attention to her words, nor do I [illegible]ything to her in reply. [illegible]e first to wo[illegible] [illegible]e policeman being in the field with h[illegible]ey, m[illegible] foolish to talk of such a thing he o[illegible] he had be[illegible] boy Welch was presen[illegible] at the convers[illegible] not heard of a policeman having been murdered. The prisoner Henessey was not there, and I don't think I ever saw him before." It further appeared, that on searching a bag which was taken from the prisoner Rankin, two odd white gloves were found, [illegible] as are worn by the police. The prisoners protested their innocence. They were remanded for a week.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

It is confidently reported in Winchester that her Majesty intends to honour that city with a visit in the course of next month. Winchester, it will be remembered, was once the metropolis of the kingdom.

Letters from Malta of the 31st ult., state that the French squadron, under the command of the Prince de Joinville, which had been admitted to pra[illegible] the 30th, was to sail on the 1st inst., for Sicily.

A Correspondent of the Liverpool Albion says, that Sir Thomas Wilde, on his elevation to the bench, returned the fees which he had received in causes yet untried—"a departure from precedent," he adds, even more heterodox than his refusal to accept any in the case of O'Connell and the State traversers."

A letter from Rome, of July 26, says:—"A picture of Michael Angelo, and another of Raphael, have just been discovered here: the first, representing the placing of Christ in the tomb, and the other the portrait of the celebrated Cardinal del Monte, similar to the fresco in the Vatican. Both works were purchased amongst a number of old, valueless pictures. One by Mr. M'Call, a young Scotch painter; and the other by Mr. Cardeni, a broker."

Three human skeletons have been found on the road-side between Oxford and Bunbury, in the spot indicated by Biddle the murderer, whose sentence of death was lately commuted.

A Constantinople letter of the 22nd ult., states that Mehemet Ali was treated with every mark of respect by the Sultan. On the 20th Riza Pacha had been appointed Minister of Commerce.

The Constitutionnel states that a letter has been received from a person on board the French ship-of-war, La Brilliante, which confirms the account of an affair having taking place at Huaheine (Otaheite), and adds that the loss of the French was 24 killed and 41 wounded, and that the dead had been abandoned.

An importation of ice has just taken place from Greenland, by a ship named the Edgecumbe, having on board 110 tons weight of this singular article of [illegible]

A Correspondent of the Herald gives some instances of extraordinary speed attained on Tuesday on the Croydon Atmospheric Railway. He says:—"With a train of four carriages, including the piston carriage, which it is to be recollected carries passengers, and weighing about 22 or 23 tons, we reached a velocity of seventy-five miles per hour. This speed was maintained over a distance of a quarter of a mile. Over a similar distance in the same trip, we got a velocity of 69.23 miles per hour; over half a mile, a velocity of 64.28 miles per hour; and for a mile and a quarter, exactly 60 miles per hour"

The failure of the apple crop in Herefordshire has led to a great increase in the price of cyder, the supply of which, in the present season, is expected to be very limited.

According to accounts from Italy, the Pope is becoming the idol of his people. He has just paid from his private purse the debts of all the prisoners detained in the Capitol (prison for debt). The holy father was enabled to perform this act of generosity by reducing the number of the equipages of his predecessor. The sum paid exceeds 18,000 scudi.

The Augsburgh Gazette, of the 1st inst., publishes the following from Vienna:—"It is confidently stated that the ratification of the treaty of commerce [illegible]d between Naples and Austria will not take place at present, in consequence of difficulties having arisen relative to the interpretation of some of the articles. The treaty of navigation between Austria and Russia was signed the day before yesterday; it bears the date of July 20th. The clause relating to the certificates of health to be delivered by the sanatory authorities and the Consuls has been erased, the matter to be hereafter arranged"

In the month of August, 1847, the city of Moscow, founded in 1147, will attain the 700th anniversary of its existence. Brilliant fêtes will take place on the occasion

It appears from the estimates for miscellaneous survices for 1847, that £132,600 will be required to defray the expenses incurred through the Commissariat, under the direction of the Government, for the relief of distress arising from the failure of the potato crop in Ireland. £20,000 for enlarging and improving Buckingham Palace; and £4500 "to make good the damage to palaces and public buildings by the storm on the 1st of August."

The French Government lately desired the Royal Academy of Sciences to ascertain and report on the propriety of publishing a complete edition of the works of Lavoisier, the celebrated chemist: the question was referred by the Academy to a committee of chemists, who, through M. Dumas, have just reported that a complete edition of the works of this distinguished chemist, published at the national expense, would be of great benefit to science; the committee have estimated the expense at about £2400.

We have accounts from Constantinople of the 27th ult. Sir S. Canning, after a visit of ceremony to Mehemet Ali, left Constantinople the day before. It was reported that Mehemet Ali had some intention of visiting France and England.

Letters from Switzerland state, that the snow on the tops of the mountains had melted in consequence of the excessive heat of the weather. The melted snow had augmented the rivers, and caused them in several places to overflow their banks. The summit of Mount Blanc appeared like a naked rock, a circumstance which had not been observed for many years past.

The Marine Palace at Brighton, by her Majesty's consent, is to be sold, and the proceeds applied towards defraying the expense of alterations and improvements in Buckingham Pa[illegible]

According to the Scotch papers, doleful accounts of the potato crops in the South of Scotland have been received; and, bad as things were in 1845, there is, probably, too much reason to fear that they will be ten times worse, season 1846. In late, or field tubers, the disease came not on, or at least was not detected last year, until after the 25th August, by which time the plums were fully formed, and the produce at root of considerable size. This year, it was suspected nearly a month earlier, and is at length manifesting the effects of hereditary taint in seed.

Letters from Bochold, of the 3rd inst., announce the death of the reigning Prince (Florentius Von Salem Salem), in the 61st year of his age, and the 19th of his government.

On Wednesday, grouse shooting legally commenced, at six o'clock; and, at eight o'clock, birds were sold at Newgate and Leadenhall-market. The birds are fine, and sold at 5s and 6s. a brace.

The contributions of the Manchester district (exclusive of those of Liverpool), towards the Cobden testimonial, now exceed £40,000; the aggregate amount of the subscriptions, so far as intimation of them has reached Manchester, is about £61,000. Amongst the recent contributors is the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

M. de Rothschild has paid into the Treasury his twentieth and last payment of 10 millions, for the loan of 1844, for 200 millions.

The differences between the States of Holstein and the King of Denmark, on the subject of the succession to the throne, still continue. The Members of the States have resolved to engage in no business until they have adopted the [illegible]ary measures to protest against the King's letters patent, and as, owing to [illegible]ies thrown in their way by the Danish Government, it was impossible for [illegible] the members have withdrawn altogether, thus bringing the session to an unexpected termination.

A letter from Ostrowa, of the 24th ult., states that a late ukase calls on all Jews in Poland to declare, before August 10, what costume they intend adopting—German, Russian, Polish, or Jewish. If they chose the latter, they were to pay a special tax, divided into several classes; that of merchants being fifty silver roubles a year, and the lowest being three. Whatever costume was selected must be worn from Nov 1.

We have letters from Madrid to the 6th instant, but their contents are not important. The troops on the Portuguese frontier continued to desert in [illegible]t numbers. In the provinces, several incendiary fires had taken place, by which a considerable amount of property had been destroyed

The French Minister of Public Works, accompanied by M. Bamine, head engineer of the Boulogne Railway, has visited the part of the line between Amiens and Abbeville. The Minister appeared well pleased with the state of the works.

The New York Mirror says:—"We learn, from gentlemen who came passengers in the Great Britain, that her trip, though a quick one, was nevertheless a chapter of accidents. She was once in imminent danger of being lost by fire, and three hours aground off Newfoundland; but fortunately rolled off just as orders were given to lower the boats."

On the 3rd inst., as the King of Prussia, the Grand Duke Michael of Russia, and the Prince Augustus of Wurtemberg were proceeding in a carriage to the railroad terminus at Potsdam, whence his Imperial Highness was to start by a special train for Ischl, one of the horses of the Royal carriage became restive, and ran off. Fortunately the traces broke, and the horse got loose from the carriage, and thus prevented danger to the Royal party, who entered another carriage, and proceeded to their destination.

During the week ending the 9th instant, the number of persons passing between England and France at the Boulogne and Calais ports, was—at Boulogne, 2229; at Calais, 540: total, 2769.

An epidemic disorder of a serious character, and which has been fatal in many cases, is at present raging amongst the 7th Hussars, in garrison at Vienne, in the South of France. On the news of this event reaching Lyons, Surgeon-Major Dr. Poulain was dispatched to Vienne, to watch the progress of the malady, and to examine into its causes.

During the week a vessel from St. Malo has brought 40 tons weight of foreign potatoes; the steam-ship John Bull, from Hamburg, 22 baskets; and two vessels from the island of Jersey, collectively, 31 tons weight of this description of vegetable, the production of the places named.

The Bishop of Winchester consecrated a new church, and cemetery adjoining, in the island of Guernsey, on Tuesday last.

The Kent papers mention that last week's fine sunny weather has [illegible]ad a wonderful effect upon the hop plantations. It is reported that in some [illegible]s the disease known as mould has made its appearance. The duty i[illegible] [illegible]here on the advance, and bets in favour of £150,000 are freely made.

Nearly £7400 has been already contributed towards the erection of churches in the four districts formed in Liverpool under Sir Robert Peel's act

A requisition to Mr. Cobden is now in course of preparation in Stockport, requesting him to continue as one of the members for the borough, in the event of an election. The idea seems to have been started in consequence of the requisition to Mr. Cobden, to the same effect, emanating from Manchester.

THE LORD MAYOR'S VIEW OF THE THAMES.

ARRIVAL OF THE CIVIC PARTY AT BASILDON HOUSE.

(Continued from page 102.)

bury, extensive repairs are in progress, which, when completed, will render the navigation of this District perfect.

The Improvements by the Thames Navigation Committee commence from opposite the Boundary-stone and the Towing-path, and are continued down the river to Putney. The Locks and Works were constructed from the designs, and under the superintendence of the late Mr. S Leach, and are now under the care of his son, Mr S. W. Leach

Upon the "View," the Lord Mayor was much gratified in witnessing the greatly-improved condition of the whole Navigation, from the measures adopted by the Commissioners; and his Lordship especially noticed the new Bridge and high Towing-path, which have just been completed above Henley.

The Commission funds are also greatly improved; and much credit is due to the talents and exertions of the several officers.

Throughout the "View" are several objects and localities associated with Civic greatness. Thus, at Oxford, Trinity College was founded in 1555, by Sir Thomas Pope, Lord Mayor of London; and St. John Baptist College was founded in the same year by Sir Thomas White, another Citizen and Alderman of London.

In Wraydisbury Church are monuments to the memory of Aldermen Wright and Gill, who were partners in trade, and both Lord Mayors of London.

All the arrangements and proceedings of the "View," were under the very able direction of Mr. Alderman Wilson, who fills the honourable office of "Queen's Harbinger," in the Royal Household.

The dinners, refreshments, &c., were supplied in the first style, by Mr. Younghusband, of Gerrard's Hall, Basinghall-street.

We subjoin a List of the Company, on each day of the "View:"

WEDNESDAY. OXFORD.

The Lord Mayor's Party—Lord Mayor; Admiral Ross; Ald and Miss Farebrother; Ald. and Mrs Wilson; Sir C Marshall; Ald Humphery, Ald and Mrs. and Miss Hooper; Ald. Farncombe, Ald Hunter and two daughters; Ald., Mrs., and the Misses Hughes, Ald and Mrs. Sidney, Ald. and Mrs Moon and daughter, Mr Sheriff Mrs. and Misses Chaplin, Mr Sheriff and Mrs. Laurie, and Mrs Cattley; Mr Deputy and Mrs. Brown and niece, T. H Hall, Esq and Mrs Hall, Mr Under-Sheriff and Mrs. Wire, Rev. C. Farebrother and Mrs. Farebrother, Mr and Mrs. Firth, N Saunders, Esq., Water Bailiff; Mr T. Theobalds, City Marshal.

Invitations at Oxford.—Rev. Dr Ingram and Lady Rev. Mr Hughes and Lady; Dr. Ogle, Rev J Dixon and Mrs Dixon, the Mayor of Oxford, and Town Clerk of Oxford, &c.

THURSDAY. AT BASILDON PARK.

The Lord Mayor's Party, as above, with the Lady Mayoress, and Mrs. Ross, Sir Claudius Hunter and Lady Hunter and niece.

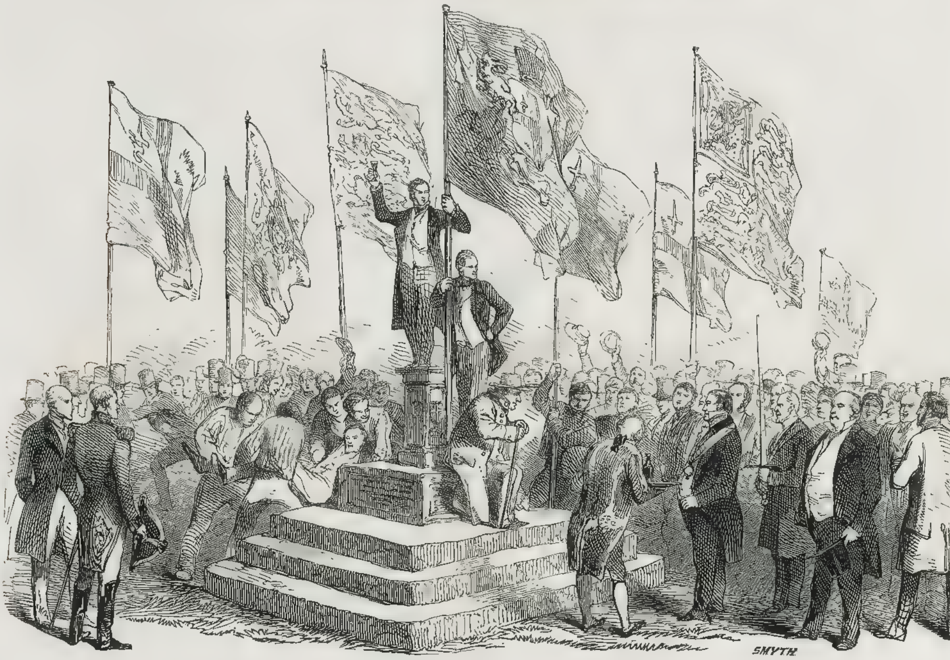
FRIDAY.—READING.

The Lord Mayor's Party, with R. W Kinnaird, Esq., Sheriff Elect, — Alloway, Esq., the Mayor of Reading, and Family, T R. Barker, Esq., the Chairman, and W. Graham, Esq., Clerk to the Commissioners of the Upper Districts, Thames Navigation.

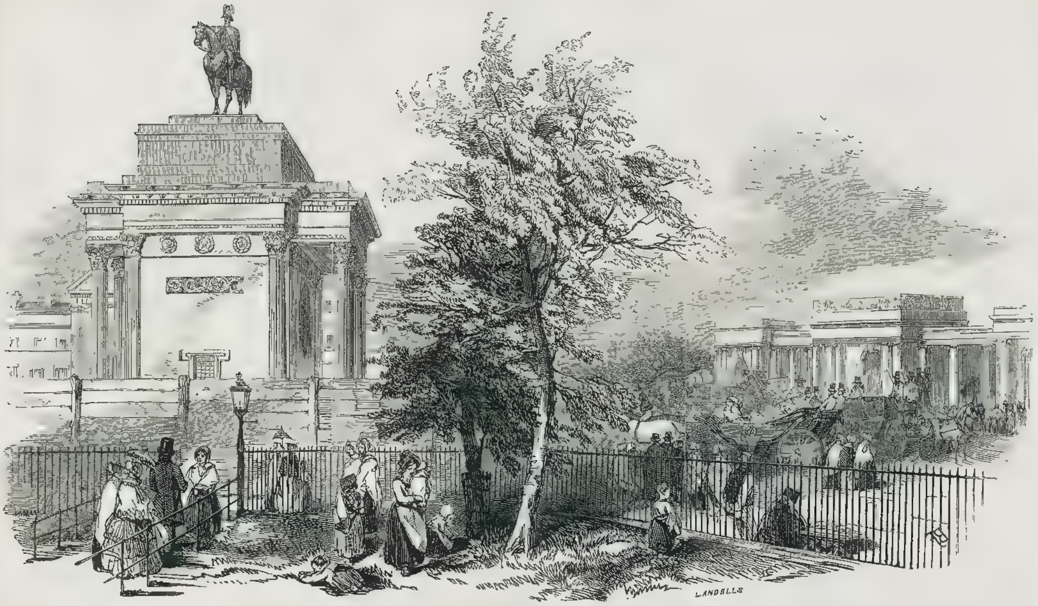
SATURDAY.—WINDSOR.

The Lord Mayor's Party, with Sir Lancelot and Lady Shadwell, Sir Peter Laurie, Mr. Alderman Kelly and Ladies Mrs. Humphery, Alderman and Mrs Wood, Sir James Duke; and several private friends of the Lord Mayor, who joined the party on board the Navigation Barge, at Hampton Court Palace.

MEDMENHAM ABBEY.



THE CEREMONY AT THE BOUNDARY STONE, AT STAINES.



THE GREAT WELLINGTON STATUE AS IT WOULD APPEAR FROM THE GREEN-PARK, PICCADILLY.

THE GREAT WELLINGTON STATUE.

We have, this week, engraved Mr. Wyatt's colossal group placed upon the Arch at Hyde Park Corner, for which position the statue appears to have been expressly designed and executed. One of the Illustrations shows the Statue as it would appear from within the angle of the Green Park, almost immediately adjoining the Arch. The second Engraving shows the great work in profile, as it would appear from the Constitution Hill roadway, just within the Green Park. Through the Arch is seen a portion of the chaste columnar screen and entrance to Hyde Park; and, to the right is shown Apsley House, the handsome mansion of the Great Duke. In both cases, the alterations in the attic of the Arch, which have been suspended by order of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, are represented as completed.

The question between the Government and the Committee as to the placing of the Statue in the above position still remains undecided; and, pendente lite, we have judged these Illustrations to be the best mode of conveying to our readers the merits of the location, as to artistical effect. This we believe to be a means of demonstration which could not be effected by many folios of "Correspondence."

Meanwhile, it may be interesting to glance at the official account of the Proceedings relative to the Placing of the Statue. This we gather from a Parliamentary Paper just printed, containing "a Copy of the Report from the Sub-Committee of the Wellington Military Memorial, enclosed in a Letter from his Grace the Duke of Rutland to Viscount Melbourne, dated 14th of July, 1839." This document was obtained on the application of Sir F. Trench, pending the recent discussion in the House of Commons respecting the site selected. The present document extends to twenty-two pages, containing the Report of the Sub-Committee, with the Appendix. On the 28th of May, 1838, it seems it was resolved, without any dissent or hesitation whatsoever, upon the motion of the Marquis of Londonderry, "that the summit of the triumphal arch at the entrance into the Green Park, on Constitution Hill, going out of Piccadilly, would, in the opinion of the Committee, be an appropriate situation on which to place such Equestrian Statue, provided her Majesty the Queen's permission can be obtained for that purpose." Permission was obtained; but it was afterwards considered that the summit of the arch was inappropriate for the Statue; and the architect, Mr. Burton, urged the Office of Woods and Forests to discountenance the erection. A long correspondence ensued, which resulted in the Committee demanding a fulfilment of the promise, and the arch was reluctantly yielded.

The Sub-Committee then commissioned Mr. Wyatt to prepare for their inspection his designs for the Equestrian Statue, of an adequate height and size, and in the attitude, costume, and position, which he would propose. Mr. Wyatt, accordingly, prepared several models and designs, and the Sub-Committee availed themselves of a model of the Hyde Park Corner Arch to consider, which then did, with the greatest attention, the position and relative size of the Statue to be placed on the summit. Mr. Wyatt then prepared a drawing of the Arch, with the Equestrian Statue; of which the Sub-Committee approved. The Lords of the Treasury, however, objected. We have not space to detail the points.

THE GREAT WELLINGTON STATUE AS IT WOULD APPEAR FROM CONSTITUTION HILL.

There is one part of the Sub-Committee's Report which it is important to quote. They distinctly state, in justice to themselves and to Mr Wyatt, that the wooden figure which was exhibited in August, 1838, on the summit of the Arch, was prepared, set up, and at length removed, without the knowledge or concurrence either of the Sub-Committee, or of Mr. Wyatt, and without any intimation to them of the intention of the Government to make any such exhibition. They add that had they been apprised of the wish of the Government for a model, they would readily have taken measures for supplying one which should have conveyed some idea of their own intentions, and of the artist's design. They, however, believe the proceeding that took place had the effect of creating a general opinion in favour of an adequate work of art in that fine position

In the present document, an account is given of an interview with the Duke of Wellington, at Apsley-house, on Saturday, the 16th of June, 1838, when the Duke of Rutland, in the presence of the Committee, informed his Grace of their intention to erect an equestrian statue, on which the Duke of Wellington made the following reply:—"My Lord Duke, my Lords, and Gentleman—I cannot find words to express to you the satisfaction and gratitude which I feel upon receiving from your Grace these reports of the proceedings of yourself and other distinguished individuals, and of the public at large, with a view to the erection in this part of the metropolis of a memorial of the services in which it has been my lot to be employed. I am aware of the degree to which I am indebted to your Grace's friendship, kindness, and partiality in these proceedings; and it is satisfactory to receive this communication in the presence of my old friends, companions, and comrades, men with whom I have served so long, to whom I am indebted for so much assistance, and who distinguished themselves on every occasion on which any service was performed which could attract public attention, or merit their approbation. I will give my attendance upon the artist fixed by the Committee whenever he may think proper to require it."

MUSIC.

THE BRUSSELS OPERA COMPANY.

On Monday and Wednesday Auber was in the ascendant at Drury Lane Theatre—two of his best operas—"Le Domino Noir," and "Le Philtre"—being given each evening. The audiences on both occasions, we regret to state, were not numerous; but they made up in enthusiasm their deficiency in numbers; and certainly finer operatic performances have been rarely witnessed—certainly not in this country. The fate of the "Domino Noir" has been somewhat singular. An English version, produced at Covent Garden Theatre in 1838, was condemned the first night; another English adaptation, leaving out the greater portion of the music, had a run at the Olympic; the last translation was at the Haymarket, for Madame Thillon, only recently, but mutilated in a manner that provoked the just indignation of all those who had heard the original opera in Paris, with Cinti Damoreau, Roger, &c. Who could have imagined, hearing the magnificent last act of Auber's work on Wednesday, as executed by the Belgian troupe, that any Vandal could be found to have rendered it so peculiarly repulsive and offensive as it was "done" at the Haymarket.

The gay, the gallant, the chivalrous Horace de Masserena was restored to us by Coudere, the original representative of that interesting part in Paris. We were freed from the conventional wit of the low stage Irishman and the lover with his ardent attachment, and his gentlemanlike enthusiasm was embodied by the French comedian with a truthful ease, grace, and animation, impossible to be excelled. True, there was one drawback; the voice of Coudere is not yet in good order, but his tact and taste carried him through, as these qualities will always do with great artists; witness Pasta, the Brambilla, and our own Braham, who have triumphed over all physical defects. There is not a greater vocalist in the world than the contralto Brambilla, and yet her organ has gone. Coudere's acting in the last scene drew down repeated bursts of applause. The effect of he[illegible]ing the voice of Angèle amongst the nuns was splendidly given—his whole frame seemed to tremble with emotion; the fear that his reason has forsaken him, and the touching prayer for protection, were striking points of Coudere's great histrionic powers. The glance of recognition of his inamorata as the supposed Lady Abbess, and the wild rush after her as she escapes through the door of the sanctuary, were much cheered

Mdlle. Charton was the Angèle, and looked the part charmingly. She is improving vastly in her singing. She was encored in the Ronde Aragonaise, "La belle Inès." In the execution of the trying scena, "Ah! quelle nuit," in the last act, some of her divisions might have been improved upon, as regards precision; but it was, on the whole, extremely well sung; and the narrative of Angèle's troubles and escapes tell with unceasing animation, and fascinating naïveté. Mdlle. Charton is yet but young; and will develop, in two or three years, higher qualities than she yet exhibits. The amusing sketch of the English Lord was excellently realised by Delannoy. The red hair, and neatly-trimmed whiskers—the Anglo-French accent—afforded much gratification both to the Gallic and British community present; and the entente cordiale seemed to be increased by the quizzing. The Gil Perez, the convent steward of Barielle, was another very clever delineation. The "Deo Gratias" was called for a second time—the lower notes and shake of the singer being very remarkable. Auber introduces the motif of this bass air, in the last act, with infinite skill. It was delightful to hear his sparkling strains sung without mutilation. In the last act of the "Domino," there is melody enough for half a dozen operas. The concerted pieces of the nuns and novices—the skilful use made of the organ, during the Cantique of Angèle—and the despairing air of the tenor Horace, are evidences of vocal [illegible] [illegible]umental skill of [illegible]

The "Philtre" is the opera which suggested to Donizetti the "Elisir d'Amore." An English version was produced of the former some years since, at Drury Lane Theatre, but with little success. The "Philtre" is, however, a work which will challenge comparison with the "Elisir." We award the preference to the latter; but the former has some charming writing. Auber had not shaken off the Rossinian trammels when he composed the "Philtre;" and striking reminiscences of "La Gazza Ladra," and other operas by the Swan of Pesaro, will be found therein. On the other hand, in Donizetti's "Elisir," themes may be easily traced to the "Philtre."

The Brussels Company play Auber's production with consummate skill. The stage groupings are excellent, and far superior to the automaton action of the chorus at her Majesty's Theatre. On the other hand, there is no Lablache for the Quack Doctor; for Zelger is as ponderous in mind as he is in person. He has no notion of fun or humour, and is a very slow coach. Massol, in the Ser[illegible] [illegible] not rival Tamburini; but the Frenchman sings well, and acts with spiri[illegible] [illegible] martial scena, "Je suis Sergent," was well rendered, and the last coup[illegible] [illegible] encored. Nor is Mdme Laborde's heroine of the "Philtre" at all equal to the captivating impersonation of Adina by Persiani, but it is cleverly vocalized. Boulo's Guillaume, the Nemorino of the Italian version, was deliciously sung, and capitally acted. His "making up" was quite a picture; his wooden shoes, coarse shirt, and loose hanging garments, were an example to our "tender tenor," of stage propriety, that they would do well to imitate. Indeed, the ensemble of the Belgian artists was far superior to anything that has been witnessed in the Italian and English versions of the "Philtre."

On Thursday night, Meyerbeer's "Robert le Diable" was given for the third time; last night, the "Domino Noir" was repeated, with selections from the "Favourite" and the "Muette;" and this evening (Saturday), the campaign closes with Meyerbeer's "Huguenots."

The two amateurs who imported the Company, seceded from the direction on Saturday last, after losing £1,600 by the speculation, or rather their desire to do something for art—for financial profit, from what we can learn, did not enter their heads, in making the contract with the Brussels Company. The directors of the troupe have assumed the management since Monday, but with no better result for the treasury

It is quite evident that they have come too late in the season, but the uncertainty of the arrangements has been a great misfortune. The principal singers have been in turn ill, every night of performance, and the theatre has been opened and closed quite at random.

Admitting all the imperfections and mishaps, and that the band is not so good as that of last year, a portion of the players having been left in Brussels for the German Company now playing there, the Belgian artists have given some superb operatic entertainments. The musical mounting of Meyerbeer's masterpieces—"Les Huguenots" and "Robert le Diable," two of the grandest operas ever written; of Rossini's splendid "Guillaume Tell," of Halévy's imposing "Juive," of Donizetti's passionate "Favorite," of Auber's "Domino Noir," "Philtre," and "Diamans de la Couronne," and of Adams's "Chalet" and "Postillon de Lonjumeau," has been beyond all praise. The "Mousquetaires de la Reine" was a [illegible] failure, despite of its great success at Paris, Brussels, and recently at Berlin. That the Brussels Opera Company will come over again, is much to be desired, but it must be at a period when the town is full of our real musical amateurs. Fashion will do nothing for good music—the appeal must be made to our inte[illegible] [illegible] masses, with their fast increasing knowledge and appreciation of the scie[illegible] of sweet sounds. To the Belgian Directors, we tender, in conclusion, our advi[illegible], that they must study to be exact and punctual in all their arrangements, if they [illegible]ect public support. What is announced and promised, ought to be religiously adhered to

We take our [illegible]ave of the Company with sincere regret, for they have afforded many gratifyin[illegible] entertainments. When we look around us, and see the state of [illegible]r English ope[illegible] and the condition of our Italian opera, where the ensemble is [illegible] destroyed for the [illegible] of hearing three or four stars, we feel, indeed, how vast inferior we are to the French i[illegible] [illegible] lyrical art. Whether the ad[illegible] the Brussels Opera Company [illegible] [illegible]d to reforms and amendments, [illegible] not; but a good standard of ope[illegible] [illegible]ution has, at all events, been witne[illegible], and audiences will not forget it, whatever managers may think of the matter.

MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

[illegible] Wilson has left London for Edinburgh, to be presen[illegible] [illegible] the Sir Walter Scott Monument, after which he commences a month's tour in [illegible]

Mr H. Phillips and Miss Hawes are giving concerts in the north of England.

Balfe has been engaged to write an opera to the libretto of the "Mousquetaires de la Reine" for Drury Lane Theatre. This is not a very decent proceeding towards Halévy, whose "Reine de Chypre" story was used by Balfe for his "[illegible]ughter of St. Mark."

[illegible] at a rehearsal of a MS. comic opera, composed [illegible] the Brussels Company, at Erard's Room[illegible]. A [illegible]at number of celebrated artists and amateurs were present. We perceive t[illegible] criticisms have been given of this work, which is called "Le Demon de la Nuit," by some of our contemporaries. We regret this course, as it is most inexpedient, ill-advised, and even unjust, to criticise rehearsals, or notice them in any manner; and we do hope that this practice will not be established by our brother journalists. Every English composer who has an opera in readiness is entitled to pursue the same course as M. Godefroid, and to call a rehearsal for the critics; but we conceive that their duty is to wait for the public performance, before they write an opinion.

NEW MUSIC

Hymns and Anthems, the Words chiefly from Holy Scripture and the Writings of Poets. The Music by Eliza Flower. Cramer and Co., and Novello.

Anthems and Services for Church Choirs. J. Burns.

Novello's Cheap Edition of Handel's "Messiah." J. A. Novello.

"Israel in Egypt;" published by the Handel Society. Edited by Mendelssohn Cramer and Co.

We do not expect to find in Miss Flower's sacred compositions the ingenuity and learning of our Cathedral writers—such as Purcell, Gibbons, Greene, Croft, &c.; but her music possesses more than ordinary merit. She has evidently taken for her model the modern German Chorale, and she has evinced a very laudable ambition in striving to revive the setting of hymns and anthems to the modern taste. Her selection of words cannot be too highly praised. With her the word "sacred" is not confined to the conventional acceptation; she seeks for poetical themes, from the writings of all those who seek to elevate the soul—such as Jeremy Taylor, Wordsworth, Mrs. Barbauld, Mrs. Hemans, &c. The pieces are set generally for four voices—treble, contralto, tenor, and bass. For general purposes, perhaps, it would have been more expedient to have adapted several of the hymns for a solo voice. Many of these clever pieces are as much adapted for secular as well as congregational uses, as was proved when they were performed at Crosby Hall, at Miss Flower's concerts. Miss Flower is no relation to the vocalist of that name, but is a daughter of the late editor of the Cambridge Intelligencer.

"The Anthems and Services for Church Choirs" will be a very valuable publication. Singers will thus be saved from the annoyance of MS. voice parts, as the music is in full score. The standard anthems of English and foreign composers may be thus easily and cheaply obtained, and the taste for choral music generally disseminated. Specimens of living composers are also promised. The first four numbers contain works by Gibbons, Rogers, Palestrina, Tallis, Anerio, Farr[illegible], Di Lasso, Creyghton, Allegri, Dyce, Child, Dr. Gauntlett, Batten, Casciolini, &c. The type is clear and well printed, in quarto, and the price of each number varies from sixpence upwards. An instrumental accompaniment is added for the convenience of practice, although it is recommended very properly that the pieces should be sang as much as possible by a full choir of voices. We hail the appearance of this series of choral music, as a good sign of advancement in the improvement so long desired of our Cathedral and Church services.

Mr. Novello's cheap edition of the "Messiah" must command a large sale, for it carries out a national object—that of supplying to the public music at a cheap rate. The shape of the publication is admirably adapted for places where amateurs most do congregate to listen to the Divine strains of Handel. The "Messiah" will be completed in twelve numbers, at sixpence each; and the prospectus is quite right in asserting that, in respect both to quality and quantity, it is the most seasonable "musical publication ever offered to the public." Only a large sale can repay the outlay. Mr. Vincent Novello has added a [illegible] or organ accompaniment, and much pains has been bestowed to insure co[illegible]ness. No. I., for August, contains—the overture; the recitative, "Comfort ye;" the air, "Ev'ry valley;" and the chorus, "And the glory of the Lord."

The Handel Society was formed in 1843, for the production of a superior and standard edition of the works of Handel, the subscription being one guinea per annum. The council to carry out the object of the institution consists of Sir George Smart, Messrs. Bennett, Chappell, Crotch, Davison, Hopkins, Lucas, Macfarren, Moscheles, Mudie, Rembault, and H. Smart. The secretary is Mr. Macfarren, the composer, who has displayed much zeal and talent in his duties. The works already produced by the Society are the "Four Coronation Anthems," edited by Dr Crotch; "L'Allegro, Il Pensieroso, et Il Moderato," edited by Moscheles; and the "Israel in Egypt," edited by Mendelssohn. The Society does not advance with sufficient rapidity, although what it has produced as yet has been superbly executed. But to wait for a completion of the undertaking, at the present speed, will take longer than the time allotted to the life of man.

Mendelssohn's Preface is full of interest; it is, alone, worth the price of the annual subscription. He gives the score as Handel wrote it. Mendelssohn has added, in small notes, an Organ Part, and a Pianoforte arrangement.

[illegible] duty to lay before the Society the score, as Hand[illegible], w[illegible] the least alteration, and without mixing up any remarks of notes of my own with those of Handel. In the next place, as there is no doubt that he himself introduced many things at the performance of his works which were not accurately written down, and which, even now, when [illegible]s music is performed are supplied by a sort of tradition, accor[illegible] to the fancy of the Conductor and the Organist, it becomes my second duty to o[illegible] opinion in all such cases; but I think it of paramount importance that all my remarks should be kept strictly from the original score, and that the latter should be given in its entire purity, in order to afford to every one an opportunity of resorting to Handel himself and not to obtrude any suggestions of mine upon those who may differ from me in opinion." It appears that there were only eight or nine instances in which Handel omitted an accidental, or wrote a different note in one part, from that which he gave to the other. The Editor found the MS of Handel in the Queen's Library more correct than the printed [illegible]. This marvellous work, according to Handel's own writing on the MS [illegible], Oct. 1, completely printed Nov. 1, 1738." The great advantage of this edition is, that the genius of Mendelssohn may be called into play in the execution of the Oratorio at the will of the Conductor or Organist, and that the pianoforte arrangement renders it of value for private purposes.

The Connoisseur. E. Mackenzie.—The Musical Herald. G Biggs

"The Connoisseur" is a monthly record of the Fine Arts, Music, and the Drama, remarkable for the healthy and independent tone of its criticisms. The work has now been in existence upwards of sixteen months; and, although in point of novelty it presents no striking features, still are the interests of art and artists advocated with a degree of truth and boldness, that, when differing from the opinions, it is impossible not to render justice to the honesty of purpose exhibited by the writers.

The "Musical Herald" is a weekly journal of Music and Musical Literature, at the low rate of twopence a number, or tenpence a part. The diffusion of musical works in a cheap form appears to be the leading object, but the literary portion is ably conducted. The dissemination of music at the lowest possible charge, would alone insure this periodical a deserved popularity

Persons who "Know all about it."—When people draw their chairs close to the fender, stir the fire vigorously, rub their hands upon their knees, assume a look of complacent sagacity, and proceed to open up a long story with the confidential remark that they are going to tell us "all about it," they oftentimes remind us—dull companions though they be—of that outrageous and incomprehensible piece of drollery of Foote's, which the wise reader who loves genuine nonsense never forgets:—"So she went into the garden to cut a cabbage to make an apple-pie, and who should be coming down the street but a great she-bear and popp'd her head into the shop. What! no soap?—So he died; and she very imprudently married the barber. And there were present the Joblilies, and the Garruylilies, and the Piccalilies, and the great Panjandrum himself with the little round button at top; and they all fell to playing the game of catch-us-as-catch-can, till the gunpowder ran out at the heels of their boots."—There is only one suitable termination for stories of this simple and lucid character, and it is that which custom always has ready—"and so now you know all about it."—They have [illegible] an exclusive story of their own, which is, like a worn-out shilling, without [illegible] tail to it. Every story, nevertheless, is furnished with two heroes; one is a cock and the other a bull; and these are constantly in one another's way. [We quote this exquisite piece of humour from one of the late Laman Blanchard's "Sketches from Life," which have lately been re-published for the benefit of the lamented Author's family."—Ed. I.L.N.]

The Drinker's Excuses.—The drinker's excuses are innumerable. If it were any use to attempt an enumeration, we should say that they run—1st. That it is ungentlemanly to pass the bottle. 2ndly. That it is the anniversary of his wedding-day, of his marriage with his first wife. 3rdly. That his heart is almost broken. 4thly. That he only drinks at night to enable him to relish his plain glass of porter next day. 5thly. That he has one wife and six children weighing [illegible]ily on his mind. 6thly. That he is writing a volume of poems. 7thly. That [illegible] are not times for a patriot to flinch from supporting the revenue. 8thly. That his heart is quite broken. 9thly. That he cannot tell whether it is to be a girl or a boy. 10thly. That he means to start for America, being sick of the [illegible]ed States in England, &c.—Laman Blanchard.

[illegible] Richard Dunn and Miss Burdett Coutts.—Mr. Richard Dunn has [illegible]rated on bail, and it appears that he meditates further proceedings [illegible] Miss Burdett Coutts. In the course of Wednesday morning the learned gentleman swore an affidavit befo[illegible] [illegible]oner Goulburn. The affidavit [illegible]h that A. Burdett Coutts, of No. 1, Stratt[illegible] street, and 59, Strand, both in [illegible] of Westminster, is just and duly indebted to this deponent in the sum [illegible]red thousand po[illegible] by virtue of a certain authority in writing given to th[illegible] deponent by the s[illegible] B. Coutts, to draw a bill on the bank of Coutts and Co. for such a sum of money as this deponent [illegible]ld think a fair compensation for the injuries and imprisonments done and inflicte[illegible] on this deponent by the said A. B. Coutts, and for the recovery of damages for which this deponent had at that time commenced legal proceedings, and which said bill so drawn by this deponent the said A. B Coutts promised in writing should be [illegible], which said bill was not paid, and still remains justly due and owing to [illegible]onent. Mr Dunn proceeded to the office of Mr. Humphreys, the solicitor to Miss Burdett Coutts, and informed that gentlemen that he (Mr. Dunn) had no intention by his present proceeding to sue out a fiat of bankruptcy; his object being to oblige her to give bail that she would proceed to trial in an action for debt. Mr Humphreys declined interfering, and the learned gentleman left the office for the purpose of causing his notice of debt to be served. The following is a copy of the order for payment which has led to the adoption of the recent proceedings:—"London, March 4, 1846. Gentlemen—Pay myself or order the sum of One Hundred Thousand Pounds. Richard Dunn. By the authority of Miss Burdett Coutts. Messrs. Coutts and Co., 59, Strand.'

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

We are now fast approaching the end of the season, and we listen to the operas performed with the deeper attention and greater interest, that we are hearing them for the last time, at least for several months. It is, above all, to the new works produced this year that we now attach most importance

To obtain a perfectly correct judgment of the value of a work, and of its materials for lasting fame, we must wait till the first blush of novelty has passed off. Gratified curiosity, surprise, prejudice, and many other extraneous causes, may influence the first reception of any work of art: when these have passed away, it must stand or fall by its own merit

In the annals of literature and the drama, it is not uncommon to find works of far inferior merit, on first performance, out[illegible], the greatest chef-d'œuvres of the greatest masters: the latter ultimately [illegible]ity, while the preferred ones are, in a short time, totally forgotten and despised.

There is, no doubt, a class of compositions highly pleasing at first, but whose ephemeral merits will not stand the test of long acquaintance. If we judge by its growing popularity, "I Lombardi" is not one of these; but yet it bears out our remarks; for those portions of the opera which were at first unheeded, have gradually gained ground in public favour, while others have, perhaps, to a certain degree retrograded. This must strike all those who have attended to the performances of this work, and to the effect it produces on the audience. Amongst other instances we could adduce, is the fine and most original aria sung by Grisi in the third act, after she has seen her beloved in a dream. This aria, "Non fu sogno," passed comparatively unnoticed at first; now no morceau in the opera excites greater enthusiasm, and it is well deserved. This composition has nothing in common with the generality of Italian bravuras. It is splendidly dramatic and appropriate to the situation, and we detect nothing in it to remind us of the arias written for a prima donna in one opera, "introduced," if they happen to suit her voice, into another and another; sung at concerts, private and public; and so conveniently devoid of any marked dramatic character as to be quite appropriate, however much the time, place, and situation be changed from that for which it was originally written. We doubt whether "Non fu sogno" could be appropriately introduced into any other opera whatever: it is certainly not a morceau for a concert; therefore it is the more admirable in its proper place. This is, in general, a great characteristic of the music of Verdi, who is what the Italian Opera wants—an eminently dramatic composer. In this respect he resembles the greatest dramatist who ever lived—Shakspeare. It has been observed by a gifted writer of our day, that no skilful reader of the plays of Shakspeare can endure to see what are called the fine things taken out under the name of "Beauties," or of "Elegant Extracts." Fine as the thoughts of the great bard are intrinsically, they yet derive their chief merit from their admirable appropriateness to the character who utters them. Such ought to be likewise the first objects of the dramatic composer; though, of course, the very nature of the lyrical art prevents him from attaining it to so high a degree

"I Lombardi" is, perhaps, the most essentially dramatic composition of Verdi—it is certainly not, in other respects his best. There are morceaux in "Nino" and "Ernani" far surpassing anything in this opera; but "I Lombardi" has the superiority in dramatic power. In this respect, the genius of the composer here stands pre-eminently forward, for the plot on which he was to work is confused and altogether mediocre. He seized upon its redeeming points—its Eastern locality, rich with deeply interesting associations, and the numbers it brought on the stage. Murder, love, revenge, remorse, penitence, zeal—all the passions of the human breast—he has brought into prominence by music eminently calculated to express each in turn, and to contrast them with each other; he threw a rich colouring over the whole, and thus produced a most remarkable work, and one which will no doubt enjoy a continued popularity.

Her Majesty's Theatre will close its portals on Thursday next, when we shall [illegible] for the last time this year the witching strains of Grisi, Castellan, and Mario, and for the last time laugh over the drolleries of Lablache and Fornasari—the "Barbiere" and the "Sonnambula" being the operas selected. After that night, also, we shall, probably, never witness again the combination of three of the greatest dancers who ever lived—Taglioni, Grahn, and Cerito—who will dance in the "Pas des Déesses," and besides, each in the ballet in which she has attained most fame—Taglioni in "La Sylphide," Grahn in "Eoline," Cerito in "Lalla Rookh" and in the "Pas de l'Ombre."

PRINCESS'.

"The Barber B[illegible]" is the name of the farce which we announced as in preparation at the Princess'; and which was produced with success last week. The plot is one of equivoque, and that of the most absurd kind, quite putting all probability at defiance, but the dialogue is so lively, and Mr. Charles Mathews throws such spirit into his character, that, in the laugh of the moment, nobody [illegible] of questioning the likelihood of the incidents.

[illegible] Barber has a recipe for turning red hair into a more popular tint; and this [illegible]ret is coveted by a certain lady of rank, whose husband is very desirous of engaging a bravo to perfect his establishment. It is needless to add that he is the Prince of something or another somewhere in the south of Europe. To constitute the equivoque, of course, Mr. Charles Mathews is mistaken by the Prince for [illegible] Bravo, whilst he is in treaty with the wife respecting his secret; and from this point the fun of the piece arises. We presume that its chief end was to amuse the audience; and, if so, that end was fully attained.

HAYMARKET.

The longest season ever enjoyed at the Haymarket—and, we believe, at any other London theatre—terminated on Friday evening; when, at the conclusion of Mr. Marston's two-act comedy of "Borough Politics," Mr Webster, the lessee, in the character of Nathan Thompson, came forward at the close of the piece, and spoke the following address:—

"Ladies and Gentlemen,—I must beg of you to suppose Nathan Thompson to be Mr. Webster addressing you at the close of the present highly successful season. Were I to drop my character, I might lose (and many would be glad to pick it up), the good one you have been pleased to give me, for the many years devoted to your service. We have now been open 562 consecutive—that's rather a hard word for a countryman—consecutive acting-nights; and the patronage you have so liberally bestowed on the little theatre in the Haymarket, during the longest season of this, or any other theatrical establishment, has given bread to hundreds. I thank you, Ladies and Gentlemen—thank you with all my heart—indeed, my managerial life has been a succession of grateful acknowledgments of your favours: allow me to hope that my efforts to please you hitherto, will hold out good promises for the future. I assure you that no exertion of mine shall be wanting to carry another ensuing season with renewed vigour. I have reason to believe that I shall be enabled to present you with a large supply of sterling comedies of British manufacture; and when I mention the names of Douglas Jerrold, Sheridan Knowles, Bourcicault, Marston, with others as yet unknown to fame, or partially so—dramatically speaking—my assertions are, I trust, not to be considered without foundation. I will, at all events, endeavour my utmost to deserve your approbation; and 'What I says, I sticks to.'

"Ladies and Gentlemen,—In the name of this company, collectively and individually, until the 7th of September next, I respectfully wish you all health and happiness.

We have reason to believe that the promises made by Mr. Webster, in this speech, will be carried out to the fullest extent.

FRENCH PLAYS.

As we announced, Mdlle. Rachel appeared on Friday evening, at the St. James's Theatre, in "Jeanne d'Arc," a tragedy written by M Soumet for the Odéon, and produced there some twenty years ago, if our memory serves us correctly. After its early representations, it remained almost forgotten until Mdlle. Rachel's perception discovered points in the chief character capable of making great effects, and she most judiciously selected it to add to her repertoire. Her reception was enthusiastic; and this is the greater compliment to her genius, inasmuch as nothing can be more ineffective than the general construction of the tragedy, viewed in a common-place, acting point of view. The writing is always poetical, and the language always polished; but, there is a want of situation and sustaining interest, which, in the absence of an actress so gifted as Rachel, would render it, despite its literary beauties, the most wearying, ineffective affair imaginable. It can scarcely be called an attempt to draw the character of Jeanne, such as it might be portrayed in a five-act play, inasmuch as it does not relate to any portion of her early life. The action of the play begins after her capture; and it may readily be conceived that little incident can be brought in to relieve the monotony of the five acts, which terminate at the stake, in the market-place of Rouen. Her imprisonment, her political temptations, and her examinations, and martyrdom, form the chief incidents upon which the play is written. Hence, for the actress, there is a less chance of making what is commonly called a "hit" in the part. She has few varieties of emotion to portray; the same sentiments are constantly recurring; and there is litt[illegible] action to assist her portrayal, and prevent it, even with all its beauties, from flagging—at least, as regards the feelings of an audience. Mdlle. Rachel, however, triumphed over all these disadvantages; and in those parts of the tragedy in which bursts of faith and enthusiasm were called for, she was especially successful. It becomes somewhat difficult for the dramatic critic to find fresh phrases in which he can commend the excellences of this great actress; for the same keen perception of the rôle she has to play—the same inimitable power of interpreting its most delicate nuances of character, or more marked phases—the same marvellous identification of herself with the part—are equally to be admired in everything she undertakes. The enthusiasm of the audience seems to increa[illegible] with each representation: possibly it is so in reality, as they become more cap[illegible]ble of appreciating her every excellence. Throughout the Jeanne d'Arc the applause was continuous, and Mdlle Rachel was loudly called for at the fall of the curtain, to be greeted [illegible]

[illegible]E ETHIOPIAN [illegible]

[illegible] of melod[illegible] made their last appearance in London on [illegible] their own benefit. On this occasion they introduced [illegible] of which promise to become as popular [illegible] "Lucy Neal" and "Old Dan Tucker." It is in the last air that we especially admire "Bones." He evidently believes in Dan Tucker—has a great notion of his abilities—and is at all times anxious to proclaim his name admiringly, although so few connected incidents of his life are handed to the common world in the song extant. The terror of Bones in the "Sonnambula" chorus is also a great thing to [illegible]

The en[illegible]tainment altogether is a very good one; and we doubt not but that the "Sere[illegible]aders" will do well in the provinces, to which they are now bound.

GOSSIP OF THE WEEK.

The Great Annual Migration of the Metropolitan Tribes has now fairly commenced. London adopts one of the late Lord Castlereagh's metaphors, and turns its back upon itself. Go where you will, you hear of nothing but tours and rumours of tours. Call in your favourite Square, at the house where for months past you have been welcomed by so pleasant and social a family circle, and inquire for your friends; you are told "Master's up the Nile," or "The young ladies are gone among the Pyramids." You shudder at the thought of

> The one fair face you dearly prize,
> The one fair form that haunts you still,
> Remember'd 'mid your smiles and sighs,
> 'Mid ev'ry change of good and ill,

being exposed to the glare of Egyptian suns and the stare of Arab eye-balls. How you wish that you had been a little bolder, and had tried by one soft interrogatory to detain the fugitive fair one, or, at least, to become the companion of her wanderings. But regrets are vain. You turn away, filled with horribly jealous visions of Ibrahim Pacha being your rival; you upbraid your own procrastinating pusillanimity, and mentally vow, that if you have the good luck to fall in love again next year, you will speak your mind in season, that is to say, before the London season is over. However, never despair, if the fair one whom you liked best is off; there is one in the next Crescent whom you liked nearly as well. Try if Laura Jones's dark eyes cannot console you for the absence of Wilhelmina Smythe's blue ones. What is the response to your inquiries respecting the locality of the Jones's? "Please, Sir, the family 's in the Pyrenees." So is it with all your charmers.

> Ah, all are gone. Remains not one
> Now to inspire your rhyme,
> Capacious-hearted youth, who lov'd
> So many at a time!

It is equally difficult to get up a flirtation as it is to organise a white-bait dinner. For friends and ladye-loves are alike dispersed. Dick Demurrer has quitted Gray's Inn for the Tyrol. Some of your sporting acquaintances are ominously reported to be voyaging to the Levant. Some are yachting, some are salmon-fishing; but all have quitted, or are about to quit, or wish to be thought to be about to quit, the precincts of the London District Post.

Not that all are transmarine in their migrations.

> The haunts of some are British earth;
> In their own isle they roam
> By beach, by cliff, by hill, by vale,
> So that they get from home.

The Twelfth of August, as it draws near, brings grouse-shooting projects into practice, and summons the chivalry of England, like their feudal ancestors, to a fresh Crusade upon the Moors!

No where is the holiday season more cordially welcomed than in the receptacles of "The Collective Wisdom of the Country, at Westminster." The commencement of grouse shooting is synonymous with the conclusion of Legislation. Members who have been cooped up in Committee-rooms, week after week, to listen to the hopes and fears of stags, rush eagerly off to recompense themselves by a little deer-stalking in the Highlands. How the grouse will pack is more talked of than how the lines will be grouped; and the messages of the Ministerial whipper-in are disregarded for conferences with the Yorkshire dog-breaker.

An epistle from an M.P. to a friend in the country, with a copy of which we have been favoured, will best explain the agitating influences of the season.

LETTER FROM LYCURGUS RAMROD, ESQ., M.P., TO JOHN HEATHER, ESQ., YORKSHIRE.

> At length, my dear friend, the blest season's arriving
> Of rest from our long Parliamentary striving,
> Our desperate battles, from evening till morn,
> Over Slavery, Sugar, Coercion, and Corn;
> And the part of my work which deserved most your pity
> My labour by day in the Railway Committee.
> Oh! long were my sufferings, and fearful my doom,
> In the Cloisters pent up in that close little room,
> To hear till I wished I was void of all hearing
> Dull tables of traffic, and proofs engineering;
> While barristers wrangled, and urged, and objected,
> As to what should be asked, and what questions corrected.
> And I'm sure that they made such a queer rigmarole of it,
> That we might just as well have rejected the whole of it.
> Then with sections and gradients, embankments and funnels,
> New pipes atmospheric, and steam-engine tunnels,
> Calculations of gauges, transhipments of trains,
> They completely bewilder a gentleman's brains.
> And in fact Dillon Brown, when he told us that he
> Of skill and of science was totally free,
> And wrote himself down a complete ignoramus,
> Told a general truth that perhaps ought to shame us,
> And certainly proves 'tis a sin and a pity
> To make country gentlemen serve on Committee.
>
> So imagine my joy at the turn of the year,
> When the bright Twelfth of August and freedom draw near.
> Oh what is an eloquent speech in the House
> Compared to the eloquent whirr of the grouse?
> I fly from each dull Metropolitan bore,
> And, like Desdemona, run off to my moor;
> My breath may be short, but I'll joyously pant on,
> My foot on the heath, and my hand on my Manton.
> With my dog that is stauch, and my friend that is true,
> And that friend I am certain to meet with in you.

The foreign intelligence most gratifying to our national feelings is the announcement of the surrender to our Indian army of the fort of Kote Kangra, which threatened us with its uncompromising hostility, notwithstanding our conquest of Lahore; much in the same spirit as if the landlord of Jack Straw's Castle, at Hampstead, were to set at defiance a force in possession of London. However, the gallant Killedar, as the Kote Kangra potentate was designated, though he talked very furiously for a time, changed his tone when we were prepared not only to talk but to use great guns, and placed himself at our disposal. We often hear of men of worth being men of hidden treasures; and in this sense certainly this Killedar must have been a worthy man, as nearly 80,000 rupees were found buried in his fortress.

Across the Atlantic the American army seems taking it easy near Matamoras, and Yankee settlers are busily pouring into California, there, no doubt, to act over again the same drama of temporary independence and final annexation that was so successfully practised in Texas.

Some curious intended State documents have been published. In one of them President Polk desired to give Queen Victoria a personal notice to quit the Oregon territory. It was to be somewhat to this effect—"I, James Polk, tell you, Queen Victoria, to move off." A courteous and dignified departure, truly, this would have made from usual diplomatic forms. We suppose the Yankee President had read or been told of Bonaparte's autograph letter to George the Third, proposing peace before the campaign of 1800. But Napoleon never wrote to crowned head in the style in which a constable desires an intruder to quit a man's premises. This piece of refinement was reserved for Transatlantic imagination to propose.

British Archæological Association.—Last week, this Society held its Annual Congress in the fine old city of Gloucester: Mr. Pettigrew presiding, in the absence of Lord Albert Conyngham, who was absent through illness. The most attractive feature of Monday's proceedings was Mr. Britton's admirable paper on Ancient Hostels and Pilgrims' Inns, to which he imparted much local interest; illustrating his subject from the New Inn, Gloucester. The great feature of Tuesday was Mr. Cresy's able paper on the Cathedral, to the condition of which, by the way, Mr. Godwin subsequently called attention for timely repair, well observing that "the magnificent Cathedral hardly belonged to Gloucester, or to England, but to all the world; and it was, therefore, the duty of all to take care of it." A paper by Mr. Pettigrew, on "The Gloucestershire Peg Tankard," proved very popular. Wednesday was devoted to excursions to Woodchester and Cirencester, to inspect their fine Roman remains, the results of which were reported at the Evening Meeting. On Thursday, Sir Samuel Meyrick read a very interesting paper on the Ancient Pagan Religion of this country. A large party then made a railway excursion to inspect Tewkesbury Abbey Church. On Friday, by special invitation of Sir. R. Meyrick, a visit was paid to Goodrich Court; and, after the inspection of this fine castellated residence, about 60 members sat down to a sumptuous banquet; at which Welsh minstrels entertained the company with their national melodies. At the Evening Meeting, some papers of considerable research were read. The Congress was, altogether, well attended; and some of the meetings were graced by the presence of ladies. Nevertheless, many places in the neighbourhood were left unvisited. Of the whole proceedings a very elaborate and judicious report, written in the right spirit, will be found in the Gloucestershire Chronicle of Saturday last.

Accident to the "Prince of Wales" Margate Steamer.—The Prince of Wales steamer-packet met with a serious accident at Margate Pier, on Tuesday afternoon. Coming into the harbour at speed, she struck against the pier-head, and carried away a great part of her stern-bows and paddle-box, on the leeward side. Fortunately, no person was injured.

COUNTRY NEWS.

Presentation of New Colours to the 13th (Prince Albert's) Regiment of Light Infantry.—This interesting and imposing ceremony took place on Thursday afternoon, on Southsea Common, in the presence of a vast concourse of spectators. His Royal Highness Prince Albert was in a field-marshal's uniform, and was attended by Colonel Wylde, Lord A. Paget, and the Hon. [illegible] Gordon, all in uniform. The cortége, attended by Major-General [illegible] and staff, and by a number of colonels and field officers in uniform, [illegible] front of the line of the regiment, and were received by a general [illegible] square platform had been erected in the centre of the common, to [illegible] Prince Albert proceeded, and the troops were formed in hollow square [illegible]lours being opened, the ceremony of the consecration was performed by the Rev. R. Gleig, chaplain-general to the forces, in a most impressive manner. The colours were then delivered to the Prince, who addressed Colonel Squire, and the officers and soldiers, in a neat and appropriate speech. The colours were now delivered to the two senior ensigns, who, with the colour-sergeants and grenadier company, took their station in the centre, the regiment having again formed into line. The regiment now formed into companies and marched past the Prince in slow and quick time, and after another general salute the Prince took his departure, and was soon on board the Fairy steaming back to Cowes. Her Majesty the Queen came across the Solent in the Fairy, but did not accompany the Prince to the common.

Chester Election.—On Saturday last the vacancy occasioned in the representation of Chester, by Lord Robert Grosvenor's appointment to the office of Treasurer of her Majesty's Household, was filled up by the noble Lord's re-election, without opposition.

St Albans' Election—Return of Mr. Bond Cabbell.—On Monday there was a nomination of a member for supplying the vacancy in the representation of St. Albans, consequent upon the acceptance of office of the Earl of Listowel. Mr Kinder proposed the noble Earl. Mr T Richardson seconded the nomination. Mr J. S. S Storey nominated Benjamin Bond Cabbell, Esq. Mr. J. T. Lipscombe seconded the nomination of Mr Cabbell. Speeches were made by the two candidates, and a very warm altercation then took place, the partisans of the respective candidates taking a prominent part. It ended, however, in an amicable shaking of hands and mutual apologies. The Mayor then came forward and called for a show of hands, which was declared to be in favour of Mr Cabbell, whereupon his Lordship demanded a poll. The polling took place on Tuesday. At the close of the poll the numbers were

For Mr Cabbell	255
For Lord Listowel	150
Majority		105

The New Docks at Liverpool.—The New North Docks at Liverpool are proceeding with great rapidity. Five out of the seven to be formed are apparently more than three-fourths excavated; the greater portion of their walls is built up, and the formation of the two other docks at the extreme north has been commenced. Not only is the sea-wall in front of these docks nearly completed, but the greater portion, as far north as the site of the intended battery, is in a forward state, and the embankment will in a few months entirely prevent the influx of the tide upon the sands at this spot. Liverpool will then have a sea-wall of nearly five miles in length, broken only by the entrances to the tidal basins of its docks.

Thunder Storm and Loss of Life near Nottingham.—The country for [illegible] around Nottingham was visited on Friday last, for several hours, with an alarming storm of thunder, lightning, hail, and rain. The electric fluid descended [illegible] outside the town, and killed a cow in a field belonging to Mr. James, residing in Hockley, split the trunk of a tree three yards thick, in Long Hedge-lane, knocked down a person while in his garden, where he lay in a state of insensibility for three hours, and at the same moment threw upon their knees a dozen other persons, in gardens a short distance from him. Near to Belvoir Castle, Mr. Wakerley, of Granby, was riding in his gig, and his horse was struck down upon its knees, and was seriously injured. Sight has not yet been restored to the poor animal. At Denby, in the same neighbourhood, five men were reaping in a field, and three of them were struck dead.

Fire at St Peter's, Kent.—On Tuesday afternoon, smoke was discovered to issue from the barn of the farm at Sole-street, St. Peter's, in the occupation of Mr Hodgman, of Broadstairs Mills. The men in his employ being at dinner, sufficient assistance could not be procured in time to arrest the fire, or save any of the premises, which were entirely consumed, with their valuable contents—having lately been filled with corn. In the course of an hour, the flames, fanned by a strong south west wind, extended in all directions, and communicated to Mr. Wall's granary, on the left of the barn; the old farm-house on the right, in the occupation of a poor man, named Ancell (whose few articles of furniture were entirely destroyed), and also to two hay-mows and a barley-mow, at the back of the premises. Had the wind continued in the same quarter, the whole of the line of stacks, together with the whole of the village, must have been destroyed; but, fortunately, at about half-past one, the wind changed to the north-west, and the Ramsgate engine arriving, prevented further damage. It is pretty well authenticated that the fire originated from some children making a bonfire, with the aid of lucifer matches, in the field, at the back of the barn.

Accident at Bristol.—A serious accident took place in Bristol on Saturday night, at the works in progress for widening the entrance-lock of Cumberland basin. The spring tide, when at its highest point, burst through the great coffer dam that had been constructed, and carried everything before it with a degree of violence that caused the utmost consternation. Several persons had a narrow escape with their lives, and some of them suffered slight bruises and other injuries, but the works were entirely destroyed.

A Woman Killed by a Windmill.—On Saturday afternoon, a frightful accident happened to Elizabeth Cole, wife of a labourer in Chatham Dockyard. During the last few days she had been gleaning in the corn-fields in the neighbourhood; and having prepared the gathered wheat, she sent one of her daughters to ascertain if it was ground; the girl returned and told her it was, but that the bran was not separated. The woman then went herself to desire the miller to remove the bran from the flour. Just as she reached the spot, the mill being in operation at the same time, one of the swifts struck her with such force, that she was felled to the ground, her neck at the same time coming in contact with a sharp projecting piece of flint. Assistance was promptly tendered, but the principal artery was found to be divided, and life was almost instantly extinct. She was forty-six years of age, and has left two children.

Murder in Warwickshire.—William Cave, a farmer at Hornton, Warwickshire, has been apprehended on suspicion of having shot a woman named Hannah Treadwell, a resident at that village. The prisoner is a farmer well known in the parish of Hornton. He had for some years cultivated a small farm, his own property. He is between forty and fifty years of age. He is a married man, and has a family of children, besides his wife and mother, who reside with him. The deceased, Hannah Treadwell, was about forty years of age, and had several children. It is well known that she made repeated demands upon Cave for pecuniary assistance, and, when refused, she applied to the Board of Guardians for relief, but, when offered admission, with her family, into the Union Workhouse, she declined going. The deceased and the prisoner had frequent quarrels, owing to the woman's importunities for aid, and their threats against each other were notorious. On the morning of the murder, it seems that the deceased had been waiting outside Cave's house, in the hope of getting money from him. A person who was passing overheard high words, and, soon after, the report of a gun, but took no further notice of it. About eight o'clock that morning, Cave, on returning home, confessed to his wife and mother that he had done for "Hannah," meaning the deceased. The women did not pay much regard to this at first; but two persons coming back from the farm, assured them that they had discovered the body of the woman at the place which he had described. The fact soon spread about the village, and a number of persons hastened to the spot. The body was found lying in a pathway, cut through a hill, with a stone wall on one side, and a cart way beneath. There was a quantity of loose stones in the pathway, and it seems probable that the deceased was in the act of throwing one of these stones at Cave, who was then some feet above her, when he fired the shot. He attempted no concealment, for he not only disclosed the fact to his family, but he returned to the village with the gun under his arm. Cave denies that he fired at the deceased. He says that they had a struggle in which the gun went off by accident; but, he has subsequently admitted, that when she attacked him he attempted to strike her, but that the bank being too steep to reach her, he fired in the heat of passion; and, he says, that when he saw the woman fall, he reloaded the gun, with an intention of shooting himself, but had not the resolution to do so. The Coroner's Jury have returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder" against Cave, and he has been committed to Oxford gaol for trial.

IRELAND.

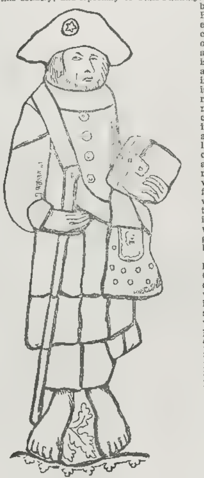
The Repeal Association.—Conciliation Hall, on Monday last, presented a dreary appearance, in consequence of the secession of so many members of the Young Ireland party. In Mr. O'Connell's speech, he expressed his regret that Government had introduced a renewed Arms Bill, although he said this bill differed from the last, and if the Government intended to pass it, he would obtain an immense number of petitions against it. After deprecating some demonstrations of the Catholics in Cavan, Mr. O'Connell hinted that he already saw signs of differences of opinion on the subject of "Justice to Ireland," and then detailed several measures which, in his opinion, the Government ought to adopt. A report of the Committee was read, declaring that the Repeal Association would not in any way concur in patronising the Nation newspaper.

Failure of the Potato Crop.—A letter from Dublin, dated August 11, says, "In various letters, received this morning, there is melancholy confirmation of the previous accounts of the spread of the destructive blight in the potato crop. A[illegible] the western coast, in Mayo, the ravages of the disease have been terrible, and all classes have been struck with dismay. Already, oatmeal is advancing in price. Potato fields, that had been green and healthy in appearance on Saturday, presented a mass of rottenness on Sunday. There will be great distress and suffering, and, during the winter and spring, unless more extensive measures of relief even than those of the late Government shall be adopted, we shall have the country in a frightful condition, and a large proportion of the population in a st[illegible]."

Thunder Storm and Loss of Life at Belfast.—About half-past ten o'clock on Saturday morning a thunder-storm commenced in Belfast, and raged with violence for upwards of three hours. The streets and low grounds about the town were inundated with the rain. Two men in the employment of Mr. Ferguson, an extensive [illegible], were killed by lightning. Two other men were severely injured by the electric fluid, which passed through the drying loft in which they were at work.

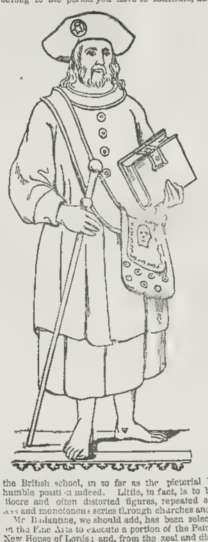
PAINTED GLASS.

A great impulse has, unquestionably, been given of late to the Decorative Arts in this country, and especially to Glass Painting. This is abundantly proved by the general introduction of Painted Glass in our newly-erected churches and its application to private dwellings of ornamental character. In this, and in other revived arts, there is, however, a tendency to copy, and to imitate, rather than to invent and improve; and, what is worse, to copy most laboriously, the defective drawing, meagre design, and unskilful composition, of the old artists in glass, rather than strive to amend them. Mr. James Ballantine, of Edinburgh, has become so impressed with the absurdity of glass manufacturers servilely transcribing "old windows of these stereotyped figures," that he has lately written and published a Treatise "to show that Glass Painting is a medium for expression worthy of the energies of genius," and that it is applicable to every style of architecture.



Mr. Ballantine commences his applications with Painted Glass of Norman architecture, one of the leading forms of which he shows to be a clumsy imitation of the Grecian honeysuckle ornament. He then advances through the various periods of Early English, Decorated, Perpendicular, and Elizabethan periods, showing how the glass-painters of each neglected or advanced their art. Mr Ballantine then gives practical instructions for the choice and incorporation of colours, their arrangement, and use, in certain elemental forms, the explanations of which appear at once sound and ingenious.

With respect to improved drawing, our author gives the annexed illustration, of which he says, "never imitate such a figure as A, even although it may be a genuine antique. Should the costume belong to the period you have to illustrate, adopt it, but improve the drawing and proportions of the figure, and this will sufficiently represent the period, while, as a work of art, your design will be free from deformity." B will give an idea of the change which can be effected by such treatment. The figure is that of Henry, Lord Beaumont, from the east window of St. Peter's, Barton-upon-Humber.



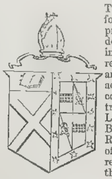
This instance is well chosen for the illustration of Mr. Ballantine's position. It is followed by several pages of valuable practical information on the art. The following, on choice of events or personages for commemoration, is excellent:—

"Whatever is calculated to suggest thought, or which has a tendency to instruct or amuse, is, if æsthetically correct, always to be preferred to that which is merely ornamental. However much the fragments of antique ornament preserved in the museum of the Vatican are to be admired, they cannot produce such an effect on the mind as results from the contemplation of the Elgin Marbles. On the same principle as that here alluded to, would a fragment of a glass window painted by Albert Durer be infinitely more interesting than the most beautiful specimen of merely ornamental detail that ever was dug out of a ruin, or disentombed from the bowels of the earth. It would therefore be well if historical painters would turn their attention to this branch of art—a branch which presents an endless field for the exercise of the highest order of inventive genius. The want of the application of high art to glass painting is at this moment painfully apparent, exhibiting the British school, in so far as the pictorial branch is concerned, in a very humble position indeed. Little, in fact, is to be seen but servile copies of mediocre and often distorted figures, repeated again and again, running in endless and monotonous series through churches and public buildings."

Mr Ballantine, we should add, has been selected by the Royal Commissioners on the Fine Arts to execute a portion of the Painted Glass for the Windows of the New House of Lords; and, from the zeal and discrimination evinced throughout the Treatise before us, the choice of the Commissioners we take to be highly judicious, as well as indicative of their desire to foster native art.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE BISHOP OF KILDARE.



The Hon. Charles Dalrymple Lindsay, D.D., who, for the lengthened period of forty-two years, presided over the See of Kildare, died at his residence, Glassnevin House, near Dublin, on the 8th inst., in his 86th year. This venerable Prelate received his education at Baliol College, Oxford, and took his Master's degree in 1786. In 1801 he accompanied Lord Hardwicke to Ireland, was consecrated Bishop of Killaloe in 1803, and was translated to the Diocese of Kildare in 1804. His Lordship was sixth son of James, fifth Earl of Balcarres, by Anne, his wife, daughter of Sir Robert Dalrymple, of Castleton; and grandson of Colin, third Earl of Balcarres, a devoted adherent of the Stuarts, who joined the standard of the Chevalier in 1715, and owed his safety to the intercession of his friend the Duke of Marlborough. The noble house of Balcarres derives, in common with the Earls of Crawford, from Sir David Lindsay, of Crawford and Glenesk, who acted the principal part in the celebrated tournament at London-bridge, in May, 1390, wherein he unhorsed Lord Wiles.

The Bishop of Kildare married, first, in 1790, Elizabeth, only daughter of Thomas Fydell, Esq., of Boston; and, secondly, Catherine, daughter of the late Evert George Coussmaker, Esq. By the latter, he had two sons; and, by the former, one daughter, Elizabeth Frances, married to Compton Domvile, Esq.; and three sons, Charles, Archdeacon of Kildare; Thomas, killed at Vittoria; and Philip-Yorke, who died in 1833. It is reported that his Lordship amassed a very considerable fortune. By his death, the Bishopric becomes extinct as a separate See, and will henceforth be united to that of Dublin, the revenues passing to the use of the Ecclesiastical Commission.

Solar Spots.—One large [illegible] 25,000 miles in diameter, and [illegible] smaller, are now approaching the sun's western limb. Besides [illegible], another spot, about 16,000 miles in diameter, is already half-way between the sun's eastern limb and his centre. The former have undergone several remarkable changes during their passage westward across the sun's disc. Another large one [illegible] between the two former, but much further north, thus showing changes of solar weather, corresponding to that now experienced in our northern climate on the surface of the earth.

Considerable quantities of window-glass have been recently imported from Belgium, to help to repair the loss occasioned by the late storm.

KILWINNING PAPINGO.

This line may, to the English reader, appear so assorted as to need some elucidation Kilwinning, we should, therefore, premise, is a pretty little town, lying about twenty-six miles from Glasgow, on the line of railway to Ayr. It is famed as the cradle of Freemasonry in Scotland; and as an ancient seat of archery, a company of archers having been organised here in 1488, when archery was a military art, and holidays were ordered by statute to be passed in the exercise of the bow. One of the customs of the Company has been, for ages, to shoot annually for a prize, at the Papingo, Popinjay, or artificial parrot, a practice described in the tale of "Old Mortality." The ancient Kilwinning Society flourishes to this day, as the Archery's Club, under the patronage of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, in whose native country, by the way, shooting at the Popinjay is a popular custom.

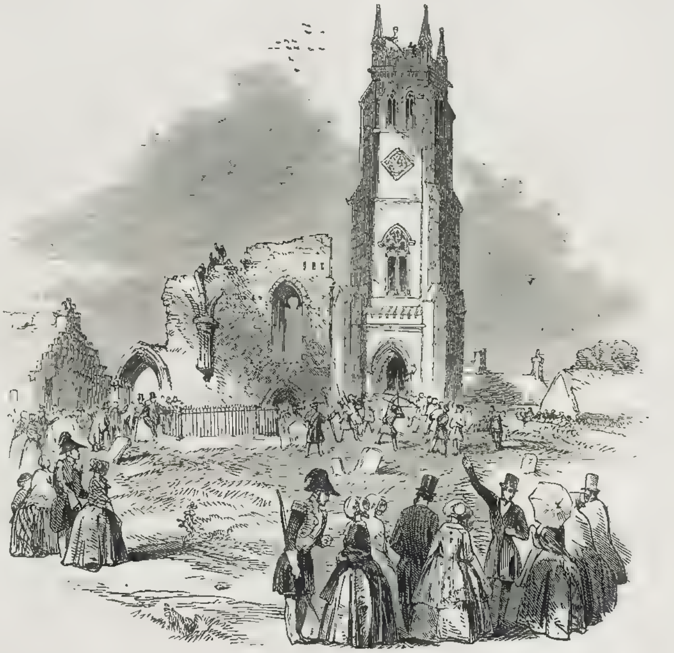
The Kilwinning Club held their 364th anniversary on Wednesday, the 29th ult.; and, by the courtesy of a Subscriber, we are enabled to illustrate the most attractive scenes of the Festival. The day was splendid, and the influx of company from Glasgow and the surrounding districts, was very numerous. The archers engaged during the day were members of the Kilwinning Society, of the Glasgow Archers, the Mungo Archers, the Irvine Toxophilites, the Patrick Archers, the Dalry Archers, &c. A large body of archers came from Glasgow by the morning railway trains, and, in their ancient costume, presented a striking association of the past with the present. A fine band of music was waiting at the Kilwinning Station, and they marched into the town headed by the CaptainGeneral, and playing appropriate airs.

We should also mention that the new Society styled "the County Archery and Rifle Club for the West of Scotland," (several of whose officers were present in their very handsome uniforms,) had empowered their Captain-General, (B. W. Dods, Esq, of Glasgow,) to offer two silver medals to be shot for by the inhabitants of Kilwinning on this Anniversary—viz., one to be competed for by men, and the other by boys.

Four targets were erected in a field convenient to the town, wherein the archers, twenty in number, after being drafted into two companies, commenced Butt-shooting. The sport was exceedingly good; and, after a keen contest, the prize—a handsome silver jug, presented by Robert Rankin, Esq, of Muirhouse, the oldest member of the Society—was gained by Mr. Tennent, of the Glasgow Club. Mr. John Gibson, of the St. Mungo Club, scored the same number of points (19); but, having gained the Butts' prize at a former meeting, a fourth was deducted from his marking, agreeably to usage. The members of the Society retired after the Butt-shooting, to the Inn, for the transaction of business, and re-assembled at the Tower, at two o'clock, for the purpose of shooting at the Papingo. The shooting here was not so good, although some of the most skilful marksmen in Scotland took part in the sport. Here the real powers of the marksmen are tested; the great object being to strike the Papingo—a bird formed of wood, displayed, with expanded wings, from the end of a pole, and stuck out from the top of the Tower, about 150 feet from the ground, in "the auld kirk-yard." The archers were all stationed at the bottom of the tower, and they shot straight up.

After two hours' practice—many narrow escapes being made by the people present, from the falling of the arrows amongst them, but which they seemed to be used to—the company, at four o'clock, accompanied by the ladies, retired to the Masons' Hall to an excellent dinner, furnished by Mr. Blair, of the Eglinton Arms Inn. Captain-General Dods occupied the chair, and was supported, right and left, by fair damsels and gallant men. George Johnston, Esq., of Redburn, Captain Richmond, of the St. Mungo Archers, and J. A. Rankin, Esq., of the Irvine Toxopholites, acted as Croupiers. The Rev. Dr. Campbell, of Kilwinning, asked the blessing, and returned thanks. The Hall was elegantly decorated with laurel. Under a handsome crown, composed of flowers, over the chair, was the motto, "Kilwinning Royal Archers."

During the course of the entertainment, a portion of the business of the Society was transacted; and, while all the ladies had their names enrolled in the books, several new members were admitted.



KILWINNING PAPINGO.—SHOOTING AT THE TOWER.

Meanwhile, the contest for the County West of Scotland Club's Medals was going on. The first was shot for and won by Mr. John Allan, and the second by Master David Muir, the son-in-law and son of Mr. David Muir, the venerable archer and bow-maker of Kilwinning. The medals were presented to the victors by Captain-General Dods, amidst the loud cheers of a large concourse of visitors and inhabitants assembled in front of the old Tower.

After the dinner proceedings, the gentlemen, preceded by the band of music, adjourned to the Cross, where, according to ancient usage, they had a dance with a few of the female portion of the villagers. They then set off for the Tower again, to compete for the Captaincy of next year. After two hours' keen shooting, the bird being touched on two or three occasions, but not knocked down, an arrow, shot by the skilful hand of Mr. Gibson (Gibson, Service, and Co., of Glasgow), in behalf of Hugh Montgomerie, Esq, of Bourtree Hill, cousin to the noble Earl of Eglinton, brought down the bird in an instant; Mr. Montgomerie being declared Captain-General for the next year, amidst much applause, and the ringing of the Tower bell. While the Captaincy was shooting for, some of the lady archers were practising within the Tower; and, as an incident, it is not unworthy of note that three arrows were left in the roof, as trophies of the sport.

At ten o'clock commenced a ball, given by Captain Dods; it was kept up with great spirit till half-past one when the company parted after one of the most spirited meetings ever held at Kilwinning Soon after twelve, the Glasgow portion of the company left in a special train, provided for them by the Glagow and Ayr Railway Company.

"During the shooting, and at the dinner and ball," says the Glasgow Citizen, "we have seldom seen such a display of elegant and beautiful women. As an old Irvine archer observed, 'he was quite feared to look at them, they were a' sae bonny.'"

Our Illustrations show the Butt-shooting in the Field; and the Papingo sport in the "auld kirk-yard," where a church and tower are the only remains of the magnificent abbey of St. Winning.

Kilwinning is fortunate in its chivalric displays; for, at the distance of about a mile from the town, stands Eglinton Castle, in the grounds of which was held a grand tournament in September, 1839—one of those splendid reflections of the feudal times, which have become fashionable even in this utilitarian age.

WORLD TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

When Man came forth from his Maker's hand,
And bore His image in the Soul,
Which never dies, through every land
Reigned Temperance. Her mild control,
Like Music, sooth'd the savage breast—
Refin'd the passions—left the brain
Unclouded, to perceive the best
And blessed path o'er Life's domain.

Man follow'd in that path; but soon
The direful foe to human kind
Proffer'd the burning cup—a boon
To demonise the godlike mind.
Quaff'd to the dregs that cup hath been;
Then up sprang homicidal strife:
Horror usurp'd the sickening scene,
And Mercy fled from mortal life.

God's image was defaced and broken!
All ruthless passions were let loose.
The tongue of truth, which erst had spoken,
Was drowned in drunkenness. The juice
Of the red grape became the bane,
And not the cordial balm of man.
More nations by that plague were slain
Than ever conqu'ror over-ran.

Thank Heaven! Weak man at last awakes;
Flies from the filth of Circe's stye.
Through his base thrall the drunkard breaks,
And looks to Heaven with alter'd eye.
His home, which lately was a hell,
Hath now become a Paradise;
Around him joys domestic dwell,
And guard him from disgusting vice,

Hence, on their blessed mission, here,
Assembled 'neath the Muses' dome,
The friends of Temperance appear,
From their far, Transatlantic home.
They come to speed the holy cause,
To make man worthy of his name—
Friend to himself, his land, and laws;
Foe to the fiends of Sin and Shame.
And God upon the good work smiles;
Crime and its fruits are waxing rare;
Few madden'd monsters, in our Isles,
Will now the deeds of demons dare
To perpetrate. The human world
Joins in the mission. In "The Sun
Of Righteousness," the Flag's unfurl'd,
And Temperance her cause hath won.

A Grand demonstration of the advocates of total abstinence was held in Covent Garden Theatre on Friday night (last week), and was attended by nearly the whole of the delegates at present forming the Convention sitting in London. The house was quite filled, including a great number of ladies. At a quarter to KILWINNING PAPINGO.—THE TARGET FIELD.

PORTRAITS FROM THE WORLD TEMPERANCE CONVENTION, AT COVENT GARDEN THEATRE.

7 o'clock the chair was taken by Mr. G. W. Alexander, who was enthusiastically received.

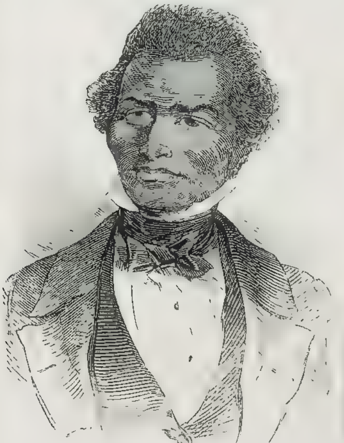
The Chairman opened the proceedings by observing that he had no doubt the glorious cause of total abstinence would receive a great impulse from the labours of the Convention. He was happy to say that many, many confirmed drunkards had been reclaimed from the ranks of intemperance, and there was scarcely a town in the kingdom which did not possess a total abstinence society. (Hear).

Mr. J. Rutter, of Shaftesbury, congratulated the meeting upon the improved position of their principles since it was first formed by a few zealous working men in Preston. He had seen an instance in which a gentleman of birth and attainments, married to a lady of equal worth, was reduced to the greatest misery and the wife to death in consequence of indulging in moderate drink. (Hear). Surely such an example was sufficient to induce all Christians to avoid the temptations of drinking, and also to persuade their friends to do so.

Dr. Beecher (introduced as the father of the movement in the United States) said many good men had asserted the impossibility and unlawfulness of seeking to put down drinking by associations, and that religion was the best means of reforming the drunkard. But there were two reasons why religion would not do so. first, the Gospel would not improve drunkards, because they would not go to hear it. (Hear.) The second reason was because the Holy Ghost would not regenerate and sanctify a man who was dealing in his cups. A man half tipsy had better stop at home. A system of abstinence would elevate and improve the intellect; it would also increase health, enterprise, and the products of labour.

Mr. F. Hopwood, of York, was the next speaker. He hoped to see the day when no Government would be found to license the sale of intoxicating drinks, and the call upon the industrious portion of the community to pay the expenses produced by them. (Cheers.)

The Rev. E. N. Kirk, from Boston, United States, suggested that each one should seek to reform his neighbours.



FREDERICK DOUGLAS, OF MARYLAND

The Rev. J. Marsh, of New York, said that it was dreadful to see 60,000 in England, and 30,000 in America, annually destroyed in the agonies of drunkenness and despair, and know that there was an easy cure within their reach. There was an anecdote current in America, shortly after our youthful Sovereign's accession, which had given the Americans a good opinion of her, and that good opinion still existed. (Cheers.) It was said that the Minister requested her Majesty's assent to a particular measure, which he said was expedient; but the Queen replied, "Talk not to me of expediency, is it right?" (Applause.)

The Rev. W. Reid, of Edinburgh, spoke of the perfect competence of children to decide upon the propriety of adopting total abstinence.

Mr. F. Douglas, a coloured man, formerly a Virginian slave.—He appeared not as a delegate from any association, for unfortunately those who would have sent him were themselves in the chains of slavery. In America, 3,000,000 of his brethren were excluded from all participation in abstinence societies, merely on account of their colour. (Shame.) In 1842, his coloured brethren, seeing the success of the cause among the whites, considered that the same instrumentality would apply to them, and organized schools, and imitated the processions of the Anglo-Saxons, in order to set an example to the weak and wavering, but no sooner did they appear than they were driven back with stones. (Shame.) The speaker proceeded to urge the necessity of meeting the evils of drunkenness by resorting to Christian charity, joined with, when deserved, severe rebuke.

STATUE OF FATHER MATHEW

Other speeches were delivered by Mr. Kendrick, of Westbromwich; Professor Caldwell; Dr. Cox; and Dr. Patten, of America; and Mr. Andrews, of Scarborough. Mr. J. S. Buckingham next delivered a short address, which concluded the proceedings. The meeting then separated.

We have engraved a group of Portraits of the most distinguished speakers. To the right of the Chairman, Mr. Alexander, is Dr. Beecher, U.S., and next are Mr. Hopwood, of York; a Professor of Theology in an American College; Frederick Douglas; Dr. Beaumont, of Bradford; and Dr. Allen, of Dublin. Immediately below the Chairman is the Rev. Mr. Kirk, U.S.; next him, Mr. Biggs, the Secretary; Dr. Cox, U.S.; Mr. Clapp, U.S.; and the Rev. Mr. Reid, of Edinburgh. To the right of the Chairman are Dr. Campbell, of London; and the Rev. Mr. Marsh, U.S.

Our Artist has also engraved a separate Portrait of Frederick Douglas, the man of colour, from Maryland.

In the adjoining column is represented a colossal stone statue of Father Mathew, by Vaughan and Son, of Southwark; and to be shortly raised in the city of Cork; a scene of "the Temperance Apostle's" great triumph.

GOLD; OR, THE HALF-BROTHERS.

BY CAMILLA TOULMIN.

CHAPTER IV.

And soon we feel the want of one kind heart
To love what's well, and to forgive what's ill
In us.
FESTUS.

"I AM going to prove your regard for me" said Catherine Joyce to her friend, responding to the affectionate solicitude the other had evinced, "you will not fail me in the hour of trouble I am sure."

"Tell me how I can comfort and be of use to you" replied Margaret, pressing her hand, "and I will do it."

"You promise!"

Margaret Clifford was startled by the manner in which this exclamation was uttered, and she said,

"You would not abuse such a promise and ask me to do wrong."

"There it is," cried Catherine, releasing Margaret's hand and moving a little way off. "There it is. I do not want advice or remonstrance, yet I can see you are ready to offer me both instead of doing what I would ask you."

"Blind obedience is rather the office of a slave than of a friend," said Margaret gently.

"I possess neither one nor the other I believe," returned Catherine with bitterness.

"Miss Joyce!"

"Miss Joyce! Well the truth is this. I am engaged to Mr. Drayton; Papa will not give his consent; and has forbade him the house, and has bribed the servants to intercept letters to or from him. Will you put one in the post for me as you go home?" and as she spoke she drew a sealed letter from her apron pocket. Although Margaret waived it back, saying "I wish you had not asked this of me," she could not avoid seeing the full direction.

"Have you too been bribed!" exclaimed the other, too proud to let the tears flow, although her lip quivered with the effort she made to restrain them.

"Catherine, you are not yourself to-day, or you would not give utterance to such cruel suspicions."

"I don't know—I can't tell," continued Miss Joyce, without heeding the interruption. "I have heard it said that every one has his price; and sometimes I think it may be true."

"Catherine!"

"That I did not think this of you, I can prove. Yes, I can. I wanted our friendship to be disinterested, and pure, and devoted; but this, I suppose, is what Papa calls 'stuff and romance.' You are poor, and I am rich—tolerably rich, as the world goes—yet I never made you a present, did I?'

Margaret Clifford was silent for a moment; she knew not what to say that could calm so strange a temper.

"But I should have liked to make you presents," resumed Catherine; "I bought them for you long ago, but I know that I should have been suspicious of you ever afterwards. You might not have deserved it, but directly it was your interest to seem my friend, I should have doubted you. Look here," she continued, opening a box that was near her, and taking a small packet from it, "I bought this for you."

It was a locket of beautiful workmanship, containing hair in the centre, and set round with fine pearls.

"To see you in this mood," said Margaret, averting her head, "makes me very glad you did not present it to me."

At the same moment, Catherine Joyce returned the trinket to the box, which was confusedly crowded with a variety of nic-nacs, and, with a sort of wilful carelessness, she violently pressed down the lid. The locket came in contact with some hard substance—there was a crash, two or three pearls rolled upon the table, and, thoroughly ashamed of her childish demonstration of temper, Catherine permitted her friend to examine what mischief was done. The trinket was quite spoilt, the setting being bent and broken, and the crystal in the centre being reduced to atoms. Margaret removed the glossy curl which this had enclosed, and, twining it round her finger, she exclaimed,

"I may keep the lock of your hair, Catherine, as a souvenir, without awakening your jealous fears."

The tone in which she spoke was sad, not angry—sad, without the mingling of one particle of self-laudation at her own more reasonable demeanour, or of reproach at the other's irritability. Their eyes met, and the petulant, self-willed Catherine, burst into a passion of tears, and, flinging herself on her knees, buried herself in Margaret's lap, exclaiming, "Do with me as you like; I am most wretched."

Subdued to something like a reasonable mood, she listened with tolerable patience to Margaret's entreaties—entreaties that she would pause, and at least refrain from active disobedience.

The gentleman in question, Mr. Drayton, had not made a very favourable impression on Margaret; her quick appreciation of character had enabled her to read him for the butterfly that he was; and besides, she had a wholesome horror of "idle men." As the nursery rhyme hath it, "Satan finds some mischief still" for such as him to do. She felt, by instinct rather than knowledge, that it was Catherine's fortune which attracted him.

It was a delicate matter to hint, and gently and carefully as she approached the subject, it awoke all the morbid sensitiveness of the other.

"You think, then," she exclaimed, "that I have not qualities to make me loved for myself?"

"I think," replied Margaret, very gravely, "that to-day you are so possessed by a spirit of contradiction and suspicion, that I had better leave you."

"No, stay! I want to know why you think Frederick is a fortune-hunter."

"Because a man who is content to live a useless life, and devote his time to pleasure-seeking and self-indulgence, must be incapable of entertaining a generous and ennobling sentiment."

"And is love so ennobling?"

"I believe that which deserves the name is so ennobling, that it makes the good, better—the wise, wiser—the dull, shrewd—and even the angry, gentle."

"I did not think you were so romantic!" exclaimed Catherine, with evident surprise.

"No! romantic enough," she replied, with a smile, and endeavouring to give the conversation a livelier tone; "not romantic enough to wish your love story carried out, although it really has some of the popular elements which are supposed to interest; for instance, a relentless father, who intercepts letters"—

"And a step-mother," said Catherine, with bitterness—"it is all her doing."

"You are unjust to Mrs. Joyce; but, if this opposition be her doing, I think you have a great deal to thank her for."

"The oddest part of my love story, I think, is my choice of a confidante. Really, a listener would expect to find you either a matronly dame, who talks unreservedly of the time when 'she was a girl,' or an ancient spinster, who is careful to avoid allusions to early reminiscences and personal experiences, but dearly loves the part of an adviser, nevertheless. One might fancy you anything rather than a girl of twenty."

"And do you know, I feel as if I could not be so young. I have experienced and witnessed so many sorts of suffering, that I seem to understand all. And women who have to struggle in the world after the fashion of the sterner sex learn to comprehend man's nature as well as their own. These experiences makes one old, before Time chisels the wrinkles or blanches the hair."

"Poor Margaret."

"Nay, do not pity me. My strange knowledge is a rich treasure, and the pain it may sometimes bring me is a slight tax on its possession."

"And your experience tells you that you had better not post my letter," resumed Catherine.

"My heart tells me that you should not act precipitately."

But it is not necessary to pursue every rejoinder of that lengthened interview. As Margaret descended the stairs, she was intercepted by Mrs. Joyce.

"Excuse me, Miss Clifford," she exclaimed, "but I must speak to you."

Margaret of course surmised the questions that would be asked, and was painfully conscious of her trying situation. Had not her judgment entirely approved of the line of conduct she had adopted, no doubt she would have felt angry as well as pained, at the cross-questioning which awaited her, for nothing stirs the temper like the conviction that one has done a foolish thing. But the reverse was the case; and while she positively declined to act the spy on her friend, or to betray confidences past, present, or to come, she unhesitatingly promised to use her influence to prevent any clandestine correspondence between Mr. Drayton and Catherine Joyce.

When we look calmly and dispassionately at the actions of others, it seems so easy for them to follow the straight and simple path of Right; and we are often more inclined to wonder how they could miss their way than to commend their constancy, as we should. But many are the mazes to lead astray, which the looker-on never sees.

Margaret had maintained her own self-respect on this somewhat trying occasion, and won the confidence and respect of Mr. and Mrs. Joyce; and, it might be fancy, but really she felt from that day forward that her affectionate and docile little pupils were yet more fond and obedient—that the heads of the household treated her with more than ordinary courtesy—that the servants were more respectful than before—and that even Catherine loved her better. So much for a tone and manner which may be felt rather than described. Truly the Daily Governess was becoming a person of consideration among them!

She was one of right little consideration, however, apparently in her Home. That holy word, whose meaning is so often perverted; which ought to be expressive of an ark of refuge from the storms of life, and a haven of peace and affection. Alas, to what myriads the martyrs of domestic misery are such associations but the gilded dreams of youth, never to be realised!

Margaret Clifford returned home to be scolded, imprimis, for having kept the dinner waiting—though her mother had by no means allowed it to be spoilt by any lengthened courtesy of this kind—and the poor girl might have been thought by some to expiate her fault by hastily swallowing an inadequate meal in that appetising condition known as "neither hot nor cold." Secondly, for having, in the excitement of far other thoughts, forgotten a millinery commission for Mrs. Clifford, who was going with a chosen friend to a private box, to witness Susan's appearance in a new character. And scolding third and faintest, was for having splashed her dress, Mrs. Clifford sagely remarking that it would have been cheaper to have got into an omnibus when the rain came on, than to have walked through it. Margaret feebly alluded to her dislike of those noisy, nerve-shattering, inconvenient conveniences, but wisely allowed her mother to have the last thousand words.

All these are terribly unheroic admissions, only allowable because they are—true; Fancy a Heroine, with a splashed gown, dining off half-cold greasy hashed mutton. Reader, if you can realize such a thing, let me shake hands with you in spirit. It is hard to do I know. Heroines have been for so long a time attired in white muslin that never grows dirty; with auburn or raven ringlets which never drop out of curl, that the pattern has become a sort of stereotype. Then again, of old, they were endowed with supernatural powers of abstinence, a fortunate circumstance, as they were in constant apprehension of being poisoned by jealous husbands, avaricious guardians, or unrelenting gaolers. What wonderful feats, too, physically considered, they were enabled to perform. Midnight rides (undertaken at a moment's notice), over hill and dale, fording rapid rivers by the way, and threading their path by a miracle through mazy forests by the glimmering light of a waning moon, were quite common events, for which no further equipment than a "mantle" thrown over the aforesaid white muslin, was ever necessary. And still the hair remained in curl, and colds were never caught, to rob the voice of its silvery tones, which were always ready to accompany the omnipresent lute or harp.

Thank heaven, "we have changed all that," and people are beginning to believe there may be heroines in sombre garments; with pallid cheeks, and toil-stained hands. The world don't quite understand, or take in the full measure of your true heroes and heroines yet; but it is beginning to believe there may be such, and this is a great point gained.

(To be Continued.)

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"C. J. R.," Woburn-place.—Your ingenious variation of Damians's Problem shall appear.

"Juvenis."—You will find some beautiful specimens of their skill in the current Number of the "Chess Player's Chronicle," and a four-move Problem by M. Kling, which is worthy to rank with the celebrated Indian one on the wrapper.

"W. J. F.," Hull. You may get the Leipsic "SCHACH-ALMANACH" at Williams and Norgate's, the Foreign Booksellers.

"G. S."—In the position you refer to, if White had taken the Bishop, Black would have retaken with his Queen's Rook, and, upon the adverse Rook moving to Rook's third, he might have taken the King's Pawn, leaving his Queen, since White would be mated if she were taken. Nothing, therefore, you perceive, would have been gained by the course of play suggested.

"K. L." The Games shall be examined, but we wish always to give the names of the players.

"Senex."—We have not time to examine solutions expressed in a notation we are unaccustomed to.

"G. B. S."—You will find the technical terms used in Chess are explained in "Tomlinson's Amusements of Chess," and in "Check's Guide to the Game of Chess," and, quite as well as in either, in Cleave's threepenny pamphlet, called "The Whole Art of Chess."

"True Blue."—Your solution of Mr. Bolton's unrivalled six-move Problem, which appeared in our Notices to Correspondents is the only correct one we have yet received. We purposely withhold the key to it for a few days.

"A Rambler."—Mr Kieseritzkij departs for Paris immediately. Every encouragement and facility have been afforded him for playing his long talked-of match with Mr. Staunton, the latter offering to wager £200 to £100 on the result, but Mr. K. declines for the present encountering him. We believe, however, Mr. Kieseritzkij will be tempted to pay us another visit next summer, and we trust then his avocations will permit him to make a longer sojourn, and enable him to test his great skill fairly with all our leading players.

"R. S." We have no means at hand for referring to the back positions; but if you will send them, we shall have much pleasure in giving solutions.

"W. P. F." and "N. G. S." The "Cinquante Parties" of Mr. Kieseritzkij are accompanied by very copious and highly instructive notes, and they form altogether one of the cheapest and best got up Chess Books of the season.

"Alderman."—We have in reserve the whole of the admirable games played without board and men by Messrs. Harrwitz and Kieseritzkij at the great Chess Meeting of the London Chess Club on the 3rd, as well as those previously played by them under the same circumstances, and shall give them as opportunities occur.

"Young Player" and "Mabel."—We cannot undertake to procure Chess Books. The works named may all be got at the Office of "The Chess-Player's Chronicle," or of Hastings in Carey-street, Lincoln's-inn.

"J. H. B.," Bradford. You may obtain any of the Chess Works mentioned in our last number but one, either of Mr. Hurst, Publisher, King William street, Strand, or of Williams and Norgate, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden. The price of M. Kieseritzkij's "Cinquante Parties" is only half-a-crown.

"E. S.," Lisbon. The Problem sent shall receive immediate attention.

"R. F. D.," Lisbon.—A communication has been forwarded through the channel mentioned.

"J. A. H.," Cerne Abbas.—Your solution is wrong. Mate cannot possibly be given in less than four moves.

"Χολος."—You cannot remove out of check by Castling.

"F. M. S."—You are in error as to the Law in question, and should immediately make yourself acquainted with the Rules of the Game. You will find the only correct version of them in Lewis's valuable Treatise, in Tomlinson, and in the "Chess-Player's Chronicle."

"J. G." Worcester.—If you will send the position alluded to, we will give the solution in our next.

"Subscriber," Brighton, complains that some newsvendors of this place are in the habit of demanding an extra halfpenny for our paper on the score of expense of carriage.—We beg to say emphatically that such extra charge is a flagrant imposition, and ought not to be submitted to, as the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS is procurable at the published price from John O'Groat's to the Land's End.

Solutions by "W. J. F.," Hull; "R. W. B.," Dublin; "Alpha," "Marazion," "Philo," "T. M.," "C. O.," "Sigma," "P. S.," and "Muff," are correct. Those by "B. C.," "Citizen F.," and "Major," are wrong.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM, No. 133.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R takes Q B P (ch)	R takes R (best)
2. Q to her R's 4th (ch)	K to Q 4th (best)
3. Kt takes K Kt P (dis ch)	Q takes B or *
4. Q to K 4th—mate

* 3. K to K 4th

4. Q to K B 4th—mate

PROBLEM NO. 134

By E. KOSSAK. (From the Berlin Chess Journal.)

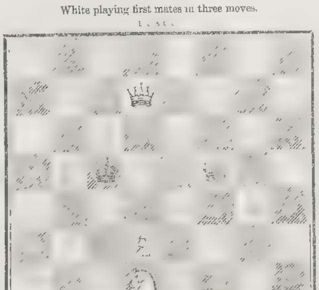
White playing first mates in three moves.



MATCH OF CHESS BETWEEN MM. KIESERITZKIJ AND HORWITZ.

This match, from which so much amusement was anticipated, and that has been looked forward to so anxiously by all acquainted with the prowess of the combatants, has turned out, we regret to say, a most vexatious failure. At starting Mr. Horwitz was the general favourite, but long before the termination of the opening game the distressingly nervous irritability of his manner showed all was not right, and, as the contest proceeded, it became painfully manifest that his recent indisposition had rendered him utterly incompetent to bear the mental labour of a hard chess fight even for a single hour. Under these circumstances it would have been prudent to adopt the advice of his medical friends and have postponed the conflict for a few weeks; but, the limited stay of his opponent rendering any delay impracticable, it was decided to play out the match, and the result is M. Kieseritzkij has walked over the course and achieved a victory, which, however satisfactory to his friends, leaves the question as to which is the better player precisely where it was when the match began.

The terms of play were that the party winning seven games should be declared the victor. Of the first six games Mr. Horwitz permitted his opponent to gain five off hand; and, although he subsequently roused himself, and contrived to add three more games to his meagre score, the head-way given his competitor was not to be recovered, and the final numbers were—

Kieseritzkij, 7; Horwitz, 4; Drawn, 0.

GAME THE FIRST. (Played July 28th, 1846.)

WHITE. (Mr. K.)	BLACK. (Mr. H.)	WHITE. (Mr. K.)	BLACK. (Mr. H.)
1. K P two	K P two	27. Kt to Q R 4th	Q to K Kt 5th
2. K Kt to B 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	28. Q takes Q	Kt takes Q
3. K B to Q B 4th	Q P one	29. K R P one	Kt to K 4th
4. Q P two	Q B to K Kt's 5th	30. B to K 3rd	Q B to K 5th (d)
5. Q B P one	P takes P	31. Kt to Q B 3rd	Q B to K Kt 3rd
6. Q to her Kt 3d	Q to her 2d	32. B to Q 4th	Q B to K B 4th (e)
7. B takes K B P (ch)	Q takes B	33. K R to K sq	Q R to K sq
8. Q takes Q Kt P	K to Q 2d	34. K R to K 3rd	Kt to K Kt 3rd (f)
9. Kt takes P (a)	Kt takes Kt	35. K Kt P two	R takes R
10. P takes Kt	Q to her R 5th	36. P takes R	Q B to Q 2nd
11. Q Kt to B 3d	Q to her B 3d (b)	37. B takes K Kt P	K R to K Kt sq
12. Q to her Kt 3d	B to K R 4th (c)	38. B to K R 6th	K B to K 4th
13. Q B to K 3rd	K Kt to B 3rd	39. Q R to Q B sq	Kt to K R 5th
14. Castles on King's side	K B to K 2nd	40. Kt to K 4th	K to Q Kt 3d (g)
15. K P one	Q R to Q Kt sq	41. Kt to Q B 5th	Q B to his sq
16. Q to her B 2nd	B to K Kt 3rd	42. Kt to Q 3d	K B to Q 3d
17. Q to K 2nd	Kt to Q 4th	43. K to B 2d	B to K Kt 6th (ch) (h)
18. Q to K Kt 4th (ch)	K to Q sq	44. K takes B	Kt to B 4th (ch)
19. Q to K B 3rd	Kt to Q Kt 5th	45. K to B 4th	Kt takes B
20. Q P one	Q to Q R 3rd	46. R to Q B 6th (ch)	K to Kt 4th
21. P takes Q P	B takes P	47. R takes Kt	R to B sq (ch)
22. B to K Kt 5th (ch)	K to Q B sq	48. K to his 4th	R to K B 2d
23. Q to K Kt 4th (ch)	K to Kt 2nd	49. K to Q 4th	K to R 5th
24. Q R P one	Kt to Q 6th	50. Kt to K 5th	R to Kt 2d
25. Q Kt P two	Kt to K 4th	51. Kt to Q B 4th	R to Q 2d
26. Q to K R 3rd	Q to her B 5th	52. R to Q B 6th

And wins in a few moves.

(a) It is curious enough that in this position White cannot take the Rook without perilling his game, for suppose

WHITE.	BLACK.
9. Q takes R	B takes Kt
10. P takes B	Q takes K B P
11. R to K B sq	P to Q 6th and how can the first player avert the threatened mate?

(b) Black has now gained sufficient advantage, with ordinary care, to ensure him the victory.

(c) To prevent the check at K B 2nd. (d) Lost time.

(e) Why not have taken this square at once? (f) Kt to Q B 5th, we should have preferred.

(g) Fearing the Knight's check at Q B 5th.

(h) This fantastic, ad captandum sort of move (utterly inexcusable in a match game) loses Black a piece and the partie.

GAME THE SECOND.

WHITE (Mr. H.)	BLACK (Mr. K.)	WHITE (Mr. H.)	BLACK (Mr. K.)
1. K P two	K P two	22. P takes B (c)	Kt to Kt 6th (ch)
2. K Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	23. K to R 2nd	Q takes K Kt P
3. K B to Q B 4th	K B to Q B 4th	24. Q R takes K B P	Kt takes K R (ch)
4. Q B P one	K Kt to B 3rd	25. R takes Kt	R takes R
5. Q P one	Q P one	26. Q takes R	Q to R 5th (ch)
6. Castles	Castles	27. Kt to R 3rd	R to K 8th (d)
7. Q Kt P two	B to Q Kt 3rd	28. Q to her B 4th (ch)	K to B sq
8. Q R P two	Q R P two	29. Q B to K B 4th	R takes Kt
9. Q Kt P one	Q Kt to K 2nd	30. B takes Q P (ch)	P takes B
10. Q to Q Kt 3rd	Q Kt to K Kt 3rd	31. Q to Q B 8th (ch)	K to K 2nd
11. K to R sq	K R P one	32. Q takes Kt P (ch)	K to his 3rd
12. Q R to his 2nd	Q B to K Kt 5th	33. Q to Q B 8th (ch) (e)	K to B 3rd
13. K Kt to his sq	Q to her 2nd	34. Q to K B 8th (ch)	K to Kt 3rd
14. K B P two	P takes P	35. Q takes Q P (ch)	Q to K B 3rd
15. Q B takes P	K Kt to K R 4th	36. Q to K Kt 3rd (ch)	K to R 2nd
16. Q B to his sq	Q Kt to K 4th	37. Q to her 3rd (ch)	Q to K Kt 3rd
17. Q P one	Kt takes B	38. Q takes Q	K takes Q, and wins.
18. Q takes Kt	Q R to K sq (a)
19. Q to her 3rd	K B P two
20. Q R to K B 2nd	Q R takes K P
21. K R P one	K B P one (b)

(a) Black's pieces are all well out in play, and have much greater command of the field than those of his antagonist.

(b) This and the next few moves of Black are extremely well played by Mr. Kieseritzkij.

(c) He would obviously have lost his Queen on taking the Rook.

(d) In this situation White's game appears irretrievable, but Mr. Horwitz, with a touch of his former self, extricates himself and come out of the melée with an almost equal game.

(e) Here White relapses again. He should have taken the Bishop, and then, looking to the exposed position of the adverse King and the strength of White's Pawns on the Queen's side, it would be difficult to say which party had the better game.

GAME THE THIRD.

WHITE (Mr. K.)	BLACK (Mr. H.)	WHITE (Mr. K.)	BLACK (Mr. H.)
1. K P two	K P two	15. K Kt to K 4th	K B P two
2. K B to Q B 4th	K Kt to B 3rd	16. K Kt to Q B 3rd	K B P one
3. Q Kt to B 3rd	K B to Q B 4th	17. Q B to Q 2nd	K B P one
4. Q P one	Q Kt to B 3rd	18. K R to K sq	Castles on K side
5. Q B to K 3rd	K B to Q Kt 5th	19. K Kt to Q 5th	P takes K Kt P
6. K Kt to B 3rd	Q P two	20. K R to K 4th	Q Kt to Q 5th
7. K P takes P	K Kt takes P	21. K R takes K P	Q Kt to B 6th (ch)
8. B takes Kt	Q takes B	22. K takes P	Kt takes Q B
9. Castles	K B takes Kt	23. K B P two	B to B 6th (ch)
10. Kt P takes B	Q B to K Kt 5th	24. K to B 2nd	B takes Kt
11. Q B P one	Q to K 3rd	25. Q R to K Kt sq	B to Q Kt 2nd
12. K Kt to his 5th	Q to her 2nd	26. K R to K 6th	K R takes P (ch)
13. Q to Q Kt sq	Q Kt P one		And White resigns.
14. Q to Kt 2nd	K R P one

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 37.—By MENDHEIM.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q B sq Q at her 8th Kt at Q B's 6th	K at Q R 8th Q at K Kt 6th P's at Q 3rd Q B's 5th Q Kt 4th and 5th

White to move and win.

No. 38. By SCHMIDT

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q's 4th B at K Kt 4th P's at Q's 5th Q Kt 2nd and Q R's 3rd	K at Q Kt 4th P's at Q's 3rd Q Kt 3rd and Q R's 4th

White plays and mates in three moves.

No. 39.—By HERR S. of Breslau.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his B's 5th Q at her B's 2nd R at K B's 8th Kts at K 5th and 8th	K at Q 4th Q at K 7th R's at K R 5th and Q R's 5th	P at K B's 2nd	B at Q Kt 2nd Kt at Q R's 4th P at Q's 3rd

White to play and mate in four moves

MATCH AT CHESS BETWEEN MR. STAUNTON AND MR. HARRWITZ.—We have much pleasure in announcing the settlement of preliminaries for a match, to be commenced immediately, between these gentlemen, upon terms which are calculated to give a very high degree of interest to the contest. It is finally arranged that twenty-one games shall be played. In seven of these the English player undertakes to give the odds of a Pawn and two moves; in seven the Pawn and one move; and the remaining seven are to be played even. Drawn games are not to be reckoned, and the winner of the majority on the twenty-one games is to be declared the victor.

DIPLOMATIC CHANGES.—It is stated that Lord Ponsonby, who was so long Ambassador at Constantinople, will succeed Sir R. Gordon, as Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at the Court of Vienna. It is also said that Lord Elgin, the late Governor of Jamaica, will shortly proceed to Canada, as Governor-General.

THE MAYOR OF LIVERPOOL AND THE HONOUR OF KNIGHTHOOD.—The Mayor of Liverpool recently received a communication from Lord J. Russell, stating that he had her Majesty's commands to offer to his acceptance the dignity of knighthood, and requesting to know if it would be agreeable to him to have it conferred upon him. The Mayor went up to London, where he had business, the same evening, and having waited upon the Premier, and expressed his sense of her Majesty's kindness in making him the offer of such an honour—at the same time his worship intimated to Lord John that if it could be done, without impeaching his own loyalty and that of the town, or offending her Majesty, it would be more agreeable to himself to remain in his private station. Her Majesty has since signified to the Mayor, through Lord John, her pleasure, under the circumstances, to waive pressing the offer.

WILL OF LOUIS BONAPARTE, EX-KING OF HOLLAND.—The will of Louis Bonaparte, ex-King of Holland, was opened at Florence, on the 26th of July, the day after his demise. After recommending his soul to the Almighty, he expresses the wish that his remains should be sent to St. Leu, near Paris, to be near those of his father, Charles Bonaparte, and of his eldest son, who died in Holland in 1807. He wishes the remains of his second son, who died in Italy in 1831, to be also brought to the same place, and he appropriates a sum of £2400 to the erection of a monument. "I have," says he, "borne the name of that village for forty years, and I liked it better than any other place." He makes a present to the municipal body of Amsterdam of all the property he formerly possessed in Holland, that the income arising from it may relieve the misfortunes occasioned every year by inundation. He bequeaths to the poor of Florence a rather considerable sum. To his Imperial Highness the Grand Duke of Tuscany the colossal bust, representing the Emperor Napoleon, by the celebrated Canova. He desires the Grand Duke to accept it as a token of gratitude for the hospitality he has received in his States. To the Grand Duchess he bequeaths a beautiful vase of Porcelain de Sèvres. To his brother, Jerome Bonaparte, Prince of Montfort, his box at the theatre of Florence, a property valued at £2400. To his nephew, Napoleon, son of Prince de Montfort, a beautiful diamond. To his second nephew, Jerome, a souvenir of a similar kind. To Princess Mathilde Demidoff, a parure in rubies and diamonds, left to him by his mother. To his nephew, Don Louis, son to Prince Canino, his beautiful Villa de Montughi, with furniture and adjacent lands, valued at £8000. To his ward, Francesco Castelvecchio, a sum of £6000. After making a few other legacies of less importance, to all his servants and executors, he adds: "I bequeath the remainder of my property (my palace at Florence, the great estate of Civita Nova, all real property), furniture, claims and in short all that will form my property at the time of my death (except what has been bequeathed by me as above stated), to my heir, Napoleon Louis, my only surviving son, to whom I bequeath also, as a particular token of my paternal affection, my Dunkerque, placed in my library, with all the decorations and souvenirs it contains; and as a still more particular mark of affection, I bequeath to him the different objects sent to me from St. Helena, which have belonged to the Emperor Napoleon, and which are placed in a box made for that purpose."—Florence, December 1, 1845.

EVERY BODY'S COLUMN.

EVENING MELODIES. — NO. XIX.

"The Dreams of Future Years."

Oh! we shall both recall this night,
When youth no longer cheers,
And every present glance shall light
The Dreams of Future Years!
When youthful Hope is most inclin'd
To picture coming bliss,
She cannot, dare not, think to find
A frequent joy like this.

The Arab stretched beside the spring
Is loath to leave its brim;
For days and weeks may pass, and bring
No second draught for him;
And thus, though now 'tis time to part,
Yet here we still remain;
For who can tell when human heart
Shall taste the like again?

We could not fancy realms above,
Had no such moments birth,
And were they oftener born, our love
Would all be giv'n to earth
Ah! yes, in yon celestial sphere,
Are joys unmix'd with care;
And Heav'n wafts some in mercy here,
To make us seek them there! R. B. S.

NEW PROCESS OF DYEING

The Courrier de Lyons announces an important discovery in the art of dyeing. A dyer of Vienna, but resident in Lyons, has found out a process for obtaining a superior yellow orange colour, by the employment of quercitron, and with a single dip. This process dispenses with the use of fustic, cochineal, cream of tartar, and compound of tin, which upon the common method are necessary. It is stated that a considerable saving, both of time and expense, results from this invention, with a superior product.

THE "LETTER PADLOCK" AN ANTIQUE.

Amongst a number of small artices of the Roman period, discovered near Gloucester, and exhibited by Mr. Purnell to the Archæological Association, at their recent meeting there, was a letter padlock, hitherto supposed to be a modern invention. The Builder.

AVERAGE OF LIFE.

M. Lombard found that the age of the stone-cutter averaged 34 years, the miller 42, the painter 44, the joiner 49, the butcher 53, the lawyer 51, the surgeon 54, the mason 55, the gardener 60, the merchant 62, the Protestant clergyman 63, the magistrate 69. Hastings on Consumption.

HENRY VIII. TO ANNE BOLEYN.

"Darling, I heartily recommend me to you, ascertaining you that I am not a little perplexed with such things as your brother shall on my part declare unto you, to whom I pray you give full credence, for it were too long to write. In my last letters I writ to you that I trusted shortly to see you, which is better known in London than with any that is about me, whereof I not a little marvel, but lack of discreet handling must needs be the cause thereof. No more to you at this time, but that I trust shortly our meetings shall not depend upon other men's handlings, but upon our own. Written with the hand that longeth to be yours. H. R."—Halliwell's Letters.

ALLIGATOR OIL.

A letter from St. Augustine says: An alligator is found to be as valuable in his way as a spermaceti whale. An expedition has left this place for the river of St. John's, and the dark tributary stream of Black Creek, swarming with these hideous creatures, with the view of killing them to obtain their oil. The oil of the alligator is said to be better for lamps than even whale oil, and it is extracted from the animal in considerable quantity and without any great difficulty For this discovery we are indebted to the Indians, who have been in the habit of extracting the oil of the alligator and using it for various purposes. It makes a fine transparent fluid and burns admirably.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S EMPIRE.

The Queen of England is now Sovereign over one continent, a hundred peninsulas, five hundred promontories, a thousand lakes, two thousand rivers, and ten thousand islands. She waves her hand, and five hundred thousand warriors march to battle, to conquer or to die. She bends her head, and at the signal a thousand ships of war and a hundred thousand sailors perform her bidding on the ocean. She walks upon the earth, and one hundred and twenty millions of human beings feel the slightest pressure of her footstep. Come, all ye conquerors, and kneel before the Queen of England, and acknowledge the superior extent of her dependent provinces, her subjugated kingdoms, and her vanquished empires. The Assyrian Empire was not so wealthy. The Roman empire was not so populous. The Persian empire was not so extensive. The Arabian empire was not so powerful. The Carthaginian empire was not so much dreaded. The Spanish empire was not so widely diffused. We have overrun a greater extent of country than Atilla ever ruled! We have subdued more empires, and dethroned more kings than Alexander of Macedon! We have conquered more nations than Napoleon in the plenitude of his power ever subdued We have acquired a larger extent of territory than Tamerlane the Tartar ever spurred his horse's hoof across.—Finch, Boundaries of Empires.

ORIGINAL MELODIES.

The Time I Best Love Thee.

I'll tell thee when I love thee best;—
And is it, when in splendour drest,
I pace the dance along with thee,
Or whirl the waltz with mirthful glee?
[illegible] such thou beauty show'st,
It is not then I love thee most.

I'll tell thee when I love thee best
And is it when, in habit dress,
Upon my steed I lightly amble,
And we together gaily ramble?
Oh no! although thou beauty show'st,
It is not then I love thee most.

I'll tell thee when I love thee best.
'Tis when in simple white you're drest;
'Tis when upon a starry night,
With eye so blue and heart so light,
You haste to meet me, and a song
Is warbled as you skip along;
'Tis when you cast on me a smile
Which shows your heart is free from guile
Supremely then thou beauty show'st,
And THEN it is I love thee most.

M. S.

LORD AND LADY.

Lord and Lady are words of Saxon origin. Lord is from La-ford (loaf-giver), and he was so called from maintaining at his own expense a number of retainers or dependants. Lady is called Laf-dian (loaf-server), because she cut and served round the bread to the guests.

A GAMBLING STATESMAN.

Charles Fox was so skilful a player at whist and picquet, that, had he restricted himself to those games, he might, it is said, have derived a clear income of four thousand a year from his card-purse. But he delighted in games of chance, from which he rose almost invariably a loser. On one occasion, he had the luck to win five thousand pounds at a sitting, part of which he paid to his creditors, and soon lost the remainder in the company of those from whom he had received it.—The Age of Pitt and Fox.

THE MARCH OF IMPROVEMENT.

Prior to the year 1760, no stage-coach came nearer to Liverpool than Warrington. In that year, however, one was established, for the first time, to run between Liverpool and London; the journey was performed once a week, and it took no less than four days to accomplish the distance. Carriages, indeed, were then very rare; and it is mentioned as a singular fact, that at the period in question there was but one gentleman's carriage in the town of Liverpool, and that carriage was kept by a lady of the name of Clayton.—Addey's Picturesque Handbook of Liverpool.

TRADITION ABOUT SPAIN.

The Spaniards have a story, that when Ferdinand III., after his death at Seville, which he had conquered from the Infidels, was brought into communion with St. Jago, he forthwith proceeded to ask favours for Spain. "Fine climate," says the King. "Granted," says the Saint. "Fertile soil, corn, wine, oil," &c. "Granted" "Brave sons and beautiful daughters." "Granted." "Good government." "No, no, no—three times, nine times, no. Give Spain good government, and every one of the angels would leave heaven to live in it."

VEGETABLE PAPERS

At the paper works of Messrs. Kuenemann Brothers, established about three years ago at Aspach le Point (Haut Rhin), vegetable substances of all kinds, particularly burweed, hay, dried potato stems, &c., are advantageously employed in place of rags in the manufacture of paper. The papers of this firm are remarkable for their tenacity, and particularly well adapted for packing purposes.

A RUN UPON BUTTER.

A good dame, who was conveying a basket of butter, among other things, to Canterbury market, in a donkey cart, on Saturday last, when the heat of the sun was particularly intense, intent upon the duties of driving the [illegible] ma., neglected to observe what was going on behind her. The butter melted with the heat of the sun, became entirely liquified, and dropped gradually away through the crevices of the cart, until, at the termination of the journey, out of seventeen pounds, scarcely an ounce remained.

CURE FOR THE CATERPILLAR.

A gentleman at Galashiels (Scotland), has discovered that exhausted bark spread on the surface round the roots of gooseberry bushes, is an effectual remedy for caterpillar. A more simple and cheap remedy could scarcely be wished for. A cart-load of the bark, which costs about sixpence, is amply sufficient for the largest garden.

EXPENSIVE AMUSEMENT.

Captain Pechell, in allusion to the expenses of proceedings in the Admiralty Courts, said, the other day, in the House of Commons, that the counsel there would not open their mouths for less than ten guineas, and it cost nine pounds only to look at them.

EDWARD II. AT GLOUCESTER.

It is recorded of Edward the Second, says Mr. Britton, in his interesting paper on the "New Inn," at Gloucester, lately read to the Archæological Meeting assembled there, "that, coming to Gloucester about the year 1319, he was honourably received by Abbot Thokey and the Convent; and, being present at an entertainment given in the Abbot's Hall, observed the pictures of his predecessors, and jocosely inquired if his own was among them. The Abbot, in something of a prophetic spirit, answered, that he hoped he should have him in a more honourable place. This actually occurred; for, when the King was murdered, the Monasteries of Bristol, Kingswood, and Malmesbury refused to receive the Royal corpse, through fear of Mortimer and the Queen; but Abbot Thokey brought the dead body from Berkeley Castle in his own carriage to the Monastery of Gloucester, where it was received by the members of the convent in procession, and buried on the north side of the choir, near the great altar.—The Builder.

LUXURIOUS TRAVELLING.

The travellers on the Dutch railroads being much annoyed by the dust during the hot weather, an expedient has been devised for the purpose of preventing annoyance by attaching a car pierced with holes behind the tender. The car is filled with ice, which being melted during the journey effectually lays the dust.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE ROYAL REGATTA AT THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

Cowes, Monday, August 10.

Contrary to the usual custom, by which the sailing in the Solent has for time immemorial been done, either in a storm or stark calm, on Monday morning, as soon as the flood began to make, there was a delicious whole-sail breeze. Southampton Water was vacated for Cowes Roads, and, at least, so far as the supply of yachts went, there was promise of a gallant day's racing.

Her Majesty having decided upon visiting Ventnor, and the back of the island, it was known that the opening of the Regatta would not be honoured by the Royal presence; but the Queen, it was stated, intimated her gracious intention of being present at the Royal Victoria Yacht Club matches.

The pleasure fleet in the harbour and roadstead was very strong; and yet, as will presently be seen, but a brace of most moderate craft had the energy to sail round the island, on a zephyry summer-day, for a hundred pounds' worth of plate. The fact is, the usual time of entry for this prize was altered from twelve at midnight of the day preceding to twelve at noon, and the consequence was that some goodly vessels, that would have otherwise gone, had not the chance. The skippers growled, but why couldn't they have foreseen the probability of the change? It was, indeed, impossible they should see it, to any effect, as they did not land upon the island till time had been called. How cavalierly your cavaliers do business.

At ten A.M. the following cutters sailed for the £100 Plate, for yachts of that class belonging to the Royal Yacht Squadron, of 30 tons and not exceeding 50 course, round the island: The Frisk, of 47 tons, old measurement; the Medina, of 44 tons, ditto. The former was built two or three years ago, for the Hon. Mr. Hare, at Lymington; the latter a long time ago, for somebody at Cork. They set away with the flood, for the eastward; as aforesaid, with a most pleasant breeze—which no doubt was a brisk wind outside but if a pair of bumboats had started, there could not have been less manifestation. The race did not excite the shadow of a shade of interest; the "tameness was shocking," as Alexander Selkirk says, in his Ode to Solitude. In the mean-while people enjoyed themselves as they best might—"and hopefully thought on the morrow." Some went to White's yard to see the magnificent schooner which that great artist has launched for the Emperor of Russia. What a beauty it is, only 250 tons; yet, as Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence declared, with infinitely a more roomy and befitting state cabin than the Royal Yacht of England! What do you say to that, my Lords of the Admiralty? At dinner hour in the evening the wager vessels returned from their long and solitary cruise—the Frisk winning by some twenty minutes.

Tuesday, the opening day of the sports at Ryde, was the sort of thing the committee would have ordered for the occasion—if weather could be bespoken. It was indeed a glorious mixture of sunlight and fresh breeze, and the lovely town of Ryde was put on the scene like some bright pictorial fête. The main street was waving with streamers and festooned with flowers and evergreens. A company, in all the bravery of holiday attire, covered the pier: the roads were occupied by a fleet of peerless barques, and all gave note of an occasion of account. The appearance of the Royal Yacht off East Cowes, gave strength to the belief that her Majesty would honour the sports with her presence—but it was not so. The Queen did not go afloat at all. The list being a very full one on the first race, was started about eleven A. M. It was for the Grand National Regatta Prize Cup, and was won, in a field of four, by the Gauntlet. Then followed the race for the Royal Victoria Purse of 100 Guineas, which, of course, the invincible Heroine carried off—with Mr. Jekyl's Alarm, however, very handy. The third match—for schooners of all Royal Yacht Clubs—was the crack affair of the day. It brought to the starting post a gallant squadron of five of which, in a very close shave, the Anaconda was the victor. As it was a time race, however, she would have been entitled to twelve minutes from the Gem, that was second, even had she been first. There was other sailing and rowing, and a series of capital sport occupied all interest till close upon eight o'clock—an hour beyond which the human stomach should not be kept from the dinner table.

At an early hour on Wednesday morning, the Queen took their Majesties the King and Queen of the Belgians to Portsmouth; and, having taken leave of her august guests, proceeded to cruise to the westward of Cowes, in the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert. Presently her tender, the Fairy, arrived at the mouth of the Medina, from repairing at Southampton, and incontinently ran into a disabled barque, and carried her mizen mast clean out of her. Surely these imperious craft are imperfectly handled. This was the second and last day of the Ryde Regatta, and drew a goodly company to the issue, occupying the three quarters of a mile of pier with "fair women and brave men." The wind had shifted from west to east, with brilliant weather. Soon after noon, however, it fell stark calm, and there was heavy fear that a drifting match was to be the result. But Fortune was more kind: anon, a fine whole-sail breeze sprung up, and ye saw the winged craft cleaving their paths—haply to fame, surely to deserve it.

The second day of the Ryde Regatta was certainly inferior to the first, but it was good nevertheless. Towards four P.M. the breeze became good, and the sailing terminated in the Heroine winning the Tradesmen's Grand Prize, the Ranger carrying off the Piece of Plate, value £50, for yachts under 15 tons; and the Belvidere putting in her maiden race for the Piece of Plate, value £50, for yachts not more than 31 tons She had once before, indeed, received for being second—but this was her first victory outright.

On Thursday, the scene once more opened at Cowes. The morning set in with a strong wind from the westward, accompanied by flying showers. It was for a prize of £100 that four schooners of this rate started, precisely at ten, A.M.:—

	Tons.	Owners.
The Flirt	132	Sir Bellingham Graham, Bart.
Fair Rosamond	122	Marquis of Blandford
The Maud	1.9	P. Leigh, Esq.
The Gem	125	T. W. Fleming, Esq.

Soon after the vessels had started, the breeze freshened to a whole gale, and, as the course lay round the island, it was over, to sea-ward, a wicked lee-shore. All manner of disasters befel them. The Maud, before making the Nab, carried away her foremast by the board, and ran for Portsmouth. The Flirt had a topmast blown out of her—in short, it was as perilous a pleasure-party as many a navigator has had to encounter in doubling the Horn.

After a long chapter of "moving accidents by flood," of the four that sailed in in the morning so gallantly, two returned in the evening—namely, the Fair Rosamond and Flirt; the former winning by five minutes.

TATTERSALL'S.

Monday.—The departures of the "swells," as our friend "Harry" designates the aristocrats of the Turf, for the moors, is beginning to tell upon business at the Corner; and until they meet the operatives at Doncaster, the transactions are likely to be on a small scale. Nevertheless, we are enabled to subjoin a full list of market prices.

ST. LEGER.

5 to 1 agst Pyrrhus the First (taken)
11 to 2 —— Sir Tatton Sykes (taken)
8 to 1 —— Grimston (taken, afterwards offered)
9 to 1 —— Iago (take 10 to 1)
10 to 1 agst Traverser (taken, afterwards offered)
10 to 1 —— Fancy Boy (take 11 to 1)
16 to 1 —— Brocardo (taken, afterwards offered)
20 to 1 —— Sting (t)
25 to 1 agst Erin-go-Bragh (t, afterwards offered
27 to 1 —— Free Lance (taken, afterwards offered
33 to 1 —— Poynton (taken, afterwards offered)
40 to 1 —— Cranebrook (t)
1000 to 30 agst Mount Callan (t)

DERBY.

12 to 1 agst Van Tromp
22 to 1 —— Epirote
33 to 1 agst Old Port (t)
40 to 1 —— Bingham (t)
60 to 1 agst The Field

EBOR HANDICAP.

6 to 1 agst Bourton
10 to 1 agst Druid

WOLVERHAMPTON STAKES.

3 to 1 agst Dulcet.

Thursday.—A thinly-attended room, and betting on too small a scale to have any effect upon the prices:—

EBOR HANDICAP.

9 to 2 agst Bourton (t)
15 to 2 agst The Druid

ST. LEGER

11 to 2 agst Pyrrhus the First (t)
11 to 2 —— Sir Tatton Sykes (t)
8 to 1 —— Grimston
10 to 1 agst Iago
10 to 1 —— The Traverser
10 to 1 —— Fancy Boy (t)
15 to 1 —— Brocardo
20 to 1 —— Sting
25 to 1 agst Erin-go-bragh
30 to 1 —— Cranebrook
33 to 1 —— Poynton (t)
33 to 1 —— Mount Callan (t afterwards offd)

DERBY.

50 to 1 agst Red Hart

WOLVERHAMPTON RACES.—Tuesday.

The Produce Stakes of 10 sovs each.
Mr. J. Skerratt's Romance .. 1
Mr. Bristow's Marietta .. 2

The Wolverhampton Stakes of 25 sovs each, and 100 added.
Mr. Meiklam's Inheritress .. 1
Mr. Parr's Dulcet .. 2

The Ladies' Purse of £50 was won in three heats by Mr. Godson's Susannah. The Trial Stakes did not fill.

WEDNESDAY.

The Patshull Handicap of 15 sovs each, with 30 added.
Mr. Johnstone's Fair Helen .. (Ryder) 1
Mr. Irwin's Connaught Ranger .. 2

The Chillington Stakes of 10 sovs each, and 50 added.
Colonel Anson's Treacle .. (Duffie) 1
Lord Warwick's Aligwor .. 2

The Cleveland Cup, with £50 added, by subs of 10 sovs each.
Sir C. Monck's Glossy .. walked over

THURSDAY.

The Wrottesley Stake of 10 sovs. each, with 20 added
Mr. Mytton's Auricula, 3 yrs .. (G. Whitehouse) 1
Lord Wrottesley ns Princess Royal, 4 yrs .. 2

The New Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 30 added.
Mr. Foster's f by Jereed, dam by Priam, 2 yrs .. (Sharpe) 1
Mr. Critchley's Atalanta, 2 yrs .. 2

The Holyoake Stakes of 20 sovs each, with 50 added.
Mr. Bell's Fiddlestring, 3 yrs, 5st 8lb .. (Tasker) 1
Mr. G. Ongley's Roderick, aged, 7st 4lb .. 2

The Innkeepers' Plate of £50, added to a Sweepstakes of 5 sovs each. Heats.
Mr. Mostyn's Black Strap, 4 yrs .. (Whitehouse) 1
Captain Peyton's Magnet, 4 yrs .. 2

READING RACES.—Tuesday.

Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each, and 25 added; for hunters.
Mr. P. P. Rolt's Stittenham .. walked over

The Town Plate of £25, added to a sweepstakes of 2 sovs each. Heats.
Mr. Osbaldeston's Secutor .. (Wakefield) 1
Mr. Scott's Flatfish .. 2

The Berkshire Stakes of 20 sovs. each, with 50 added.
Mr. Drinkald's Mongrel .. (Ford) 1
Mr. Scott's Musque, aged .. 2

The Innkeeper's Plate of £30, added to a Sweepstakes of five sovereigns each, was won, in three heats, by Mr. Leigh's Correct Card (Parsons), beating Mr. Sadler's Messenger, and three others.

The weather was fine, and the company numerous and respectable.

WEDNESDAY.

The Ladies' Purse of 20 sovs, added to a Sweepstakes of 3 sovs each. Heats.
Mr. Nicoll's Cameleopard .. (Parr) 1
Mr. Treen's Wild Roe .. 2

The Reading Stakes of 15 sovs each, 5 ft, with 30 added
Mr. Fuller's Tartar .. (T. Day) 1
Mr. Holloway's Baronet .. 2

Sweepstakes of 3 sovs each, and 25 added, was won by Mr. Osbaldeston's Secutor (Wakefield), beating Mr. Holloway's Baronet and two others.

CHELMSFORD RACES.—Tuesday.

The Chelmsford Stakes of 25 sovs each, 10 ft, with 50 added.
Lord Exeter's Sis to Pergularia .. (Gilson) 1
Lord Exeter's Wee Pet .. 2

The Hyland's Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 50 added.
Mr. Coape's b f by Cardinal Puff .. (Mann) 1
Hon. G. Ongley's Maid of Athens .. 2

The Cup Stakes of 10 sovs each.
Mr. Hawkes's Red Leg .. (Crouch) 1
Mr. Ongley's Fama .. 2

WEDNESDAY.

The Marks Hall Handicap, of 5 sovs each, and 50 added.
Mr. Arber's Caroline .. (Pettit) 1
Mr. G. Hobson's Binnacle .. 2

The Town Plate of 50 sovs. Heats.
Mr. G. Hobson's Chatham .. (Crouch) 1
Mr. G. Dodson's Libation .. 2

Her Majesty's Plate of 100 guineas. Heats.
Lord Lonsdale's Jericho .. (Bartholomew) 1
Mr. Marson's Rufus .. 2

PLYMOUTH, DEVONPORT AND CORNWALL RACES.—Tuesday.

The Saltram Stakes of 25 sovs each, &c
Captain Crofton's Zuleika, 3 yrs, 7st .. (C. Moon) 1
Mr. J. King's c by Glaucus, out of Dick's dam, 4 yrs, 7st 5lb .. 2

The Ladies' Purse of £50. Heats, once round.
Mr Shipley's Brunette, aged, 9st 3lb .. 1
Mr. King's Flash of Lightning, 3 yrs, 7st 7lb .. 2

The United Service Plate of 50 sovs. Heats, half a mile.
Captain Crofton's Strathspey, 5 yrs, 6st 5lb (10lb over) (Moon) 1
Mr. Waring's Fortune Teller, aged, 8st 5lb .. 2

The Plymouth Plate of 80 sovs, added to a Sweepstakes of 50 sovs each. Heats, two miles.
Captain Crofton's Rosa, 4 yrs, 8st 5lb .. (Stockings) 1
Mr. J. King's c by Glaucus, out of Dick's dam, 4 yrs, 8st 5lb .. 2

LEWES RACES.—Wednesday.

The Member's Plate.
Mr. Roberts's Lady Anne .. (Esling) 1
Lord G. Bentinck's Plenitude .. 2

The Queen's Plate of 100 guineas.
Sir G. Heathcote's b c by Velocipede d by Emilius (Norman) 1
Lord Stradbroke's Lynceus .. 2

The Cup Stakes.
Mr. Jackson's Syntaxina .. (T. Brown, jun.) 1
Lord G. Bentinck's Pug .. 2

Cricket.—On Monday last, Blackheath was the scene of some very good sport. Some time since, the men employed at Messrs. Maudsley's engine-factory, Lambeth, offered to play the men at any other similar factory, within ten miles of London The challenge was immediately accepted by the men employed at Messrs. Penn and Son's engine-factory, Greenwich, and Monday last was the day fixed. There was a very respectable assembly to witness the proceedings. The wickets were pitched about eleven o'clock. Messrs. Maudsley's men commenced, and scored 41 in their first innings. Messrs. Penn and Son's men then scored 69 in their innings, during which there was some most excellent playing. Messrs. Maudsley's men then scored 65 for their second innings. The Greenwich men then won the game with ease, leaving nine wickets to go down

The Gentlemen of Kent v. the Gentlemen of England.—This match was not brought to a conclusion until late lastSaturday afternoon. The final score was as follows:—England, 324; Kent, 231.

Sussex v. Marylebone. This match terminated at Brighton on Wednesday afternoon, in favour of Marylebone, by 21 runs. The Marylebone Club made, in the second innings, 89; and Sussex, 115 but, the Club having made 47 runs more than Sussex in the first innings, the superiority of the latter in the second only, served to diminish the number by which they were defeated.

The Championship of the Thames. The contest for this honour, and £200, between Campbell and Coombes, excites much interest in the aquatic world. A boat has been built for Coombes which does not exceed 36 lb. weight. The match will be decided on Wednesday next, from Putney to Mortlake.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange (Friday).—The present week's arrivals of English wheat have been on a very limited scale consequently, the show of samples of that article here to-day was small. Although the amount of business actually transacted was by no means important, the demand may be considered firm, at very full prices. There was more doing in foreign wheat, at, in some instances, an advance in the quotations of 1s per quarter A few floating cargoes were sold for export to Holland and Belgium, but at very low prices No new barley at market—grinding and other qualities unaltered Superfine seasoned-made malt went off steadily at full prices. In other kinds very little was doing Owing to the unfavourable accounts received from Ireland, respecting the potato crops, the oat trade was active at an advance of 1s per quarter. All other articles as last advised.

Arrivals.—English wheat, 2050, barley, 400; oats, 770. Irish: Wheat, ——; barley, —, oats 11,210. Foreign: wheat, 5550; barley, 2940; oats, 9060. Flour, 1440 sacks; malt 2260 quarters

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 40s to 50s ditto white, 46s to 58s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 39s to 47s; ditto white, 43s to 52s; rye, 32s to 34s; grinding barley, 24s to 27s; distilling 26s to 28s; malting ditto, 30s to 33s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 56s to 62s; brown ditto, 5[illegible]s to 53s; Kingston and Ware, 62s to 63s; Chevalier, 63s to 64s, Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 22s to 24s, potato ditto, 27s to 28s, Youghal and Cork black, 20s to 21s ditto, white, 22s to 26s tick beans, new, 36s to 37s; ditto old, 37s to 39s; grey peas, 35s to 37s, maple, 33s to 36s; white, 36s to 40s, boilers, 40s to 43s per quarter Town-made flour, 42s to 46s; Suffolk, 35s to 38s, Stockton and Yorkshire, 35s to 37s, per 280 lbs. Foreign. Free wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, —s to —s; white, —s to —s

Seed Market.—This market is generally inactive, at unaltered quotations.

Linseed, English, sowing, 38s to 45s Baltic, crushing, 38s to 48s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 43s Hempseed, 35s to 37s per quarter. Coriander 11s to 14s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 9s to 11s, white ditto, 7s to 9s. Tares, 3s 0d to 5s 0d per bushel. English Rapeseed £20 to £23 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £10 15s to £11 0s; ditto, foreign, £7 10s to £8 0s per 1000, Rapeseed cakes, £5 0s to £5 5s per ton Canary, 48s to 52s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, 45s to 50s; extra 52s to 55s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign, red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s, extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis, are from 7½d to 8d; of household ditto, 5½d to 7d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat 45s [illegible]; barley, 26s 9d; oats, 24s 0d; rye, 29s 8d, beans, 39s 8d; peas, 35s 3d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 49s 9d; barley, 27s 4d; oats, 23s 8d; rye, 31s 10d; beans, 38s 9d, peas, 35s 10d

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 8s 0d; barley, 4s, oats, 1s 6d; rye, 4s, beans, 4s 0d, peas, 4s 0d

Tea.—Common Congou is rather cheaper, the value of sound being 9d per lb. Public sales of about 25,000 packages will take place on the 28th instant.

Sugar.—Most kinds of raw sugar have been in steady request at full prices; while refined goods have been purchased with more freedom, brown grocery selling at 63s, and standard lumps 64s per cwt. The supply on offer is good.

Coffee.—Ceylon is firm, and the turn higher. In all other kinds of Coffee very little is doing

Provisions.—The best parcels of Dutch butter are in fair request, at full prices, but other kinds command very little attention. The best qualities are producing 84s to 90s; and the inferior sorts, 70s to 80s per cwt. In Irish butter, very little is doing Cork landed, 82s to 84s, Carrick, 84s to 85s; Carlow, 86s to 87s; Waterford, 82s to 86s, and Limerick, 79s to 82s per cwt. The supply of English being large, that article has fallen in value 1s to 2s per cwt. Dorset, 90s to 94s; Devon, 86s to 90s per cwt; and fresh, 8s to 12s per dozen. The market for Bacon is very active, at a further advance in value of from 1s to 2s per cwt. Prime mild hams are steady but all other kinds of provisions command very little attention.

Hay and Straw.—Old meadow hay, £3 5s to £4 0s, new ditto, £2 5s to £3 15s; old clover, £4 5s to £5 16s; new ditto, £3 5s to £5 0s; oat straw, £1 12s to £1 14s; wheat straw, £1 15s to £1 18s per load.

Potatoes.—The supply of potatoes is good, yet the demand is firm, at from £8 to £12 per ton.

Hops (Friday).—Our market still continues in a very inactive state for all kinds of hops, and last week's prices are with difficulty supported. [illegible] owing to which the duty is backed at £155,000. Sussex pockets, £5 0s to £6 0s, Kent ditto, £5 5s to £6 10s; Mid and East Kent ditto, £6 6s to £8 15s per cwt.

Coals (Friday).—Hotspur 14s; Braddyll's Hetton, 15s 3d; Wylam, 14s 9d; East Hetton, 14s 3d; Hetton 15s 3d Lambton, 15s; and Kelloe, 15s 3d per ton.

Smithfield (Friday.)—Our market, to-day, was, on the whole, moderately well, but [illegible] to say heavily, supplied with beasts, the demand for which was steady, at fully Monday's quotations. There were on offer about 250 foreign beasts, and 500 do. of sheep and lambs, in middling condition. The supply of sheep was good; yet the mutton trade was somewhat active, at full prices. In lambs, a full average amount of business was doing, at late rates Prime small calves sold readily, other kinds of veal slowly, at our quotations. [illegible] off heavily, and prices were with difficulty supported Milch [illegible] £16 to £19 each, including their small calf.

Per 8lb. to sink the offal.—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 8d to [illegible] 3s 10d to 3s 2d; prime large oxen, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime Scots, [illegible]; inferior sheep, 3s 2d to 3s 0d, second quality ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime [illegible] ditto 3s 0d to 4s 0d; prime South Down ditto, 4s 2d [illegible] 4s 4d, large coarse [illegible] 3s 10d, prime small ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 4d, large hogs 3s 8d to 4s 6d; [illegible], 4s 8d to 4s 10d, lambs, 4s 8d to 5s 8d. Suckling calves, 18s to [illegible]s, and [illegible] pigs 16s to 19s each Beasts, 680, cows, 14[illegible]; sheep and lambs, 12,400, calves, [illegible]

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a very steady sale here to-day [illegible]

Per 8lb. by the carcase.—Inferior beef, 2s 4d to 2s 6d, middling ditto, [illegible]; prime large ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 0d prime small ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d large pork, 3s 4d to 4s 2d, inferior mutton, 2s 8d to 2s 10d, middling ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 6d prime ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 4d, small pork, 4s 4d to 4s 8d; lamb, 4s 8d to 5s 8d. Robt. Herbert.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English Market has been, and continues heavy, under the influence of the supposed future demand for Railway calls. Little temptation to speculate exists, and whatever is done in a speculative view is only to a limited amount. The present situation of the Money Market is rather favourable, or doubtless a decided fall in prices would have resulted ere this. But, although money is certainly more plentiful than it was two months since, the rate is fully maintained. Every thing tends to promise a scarcity at the fall of the present, or beginning of the next year, which induces cautious operations at present, and short dates for loans are preferred. In addition to this, a fair demand, arising from the reaction after the stagnant state of trade, is already displaying itself, and with every probability of extension. Under these circumstances, the present flatness of the Stock Markets is not extraordinary. Although the Consol Market towards the end of the week exhibited a rather improved tone, the list of prices appended shows no tendency to an advance. Exchequer Bills continue extremely flat, from the circumstances described in The Illustrated London News of the 1st of August. No great change for the better can at present be anticipated. Bank Stock is firm at 208½; Three per Cent. Reduced, 9[illegible]; Three per Cent. Consols Annuities, 95⅜; New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cent. Annuities, 97⅞; Long Annuities, expire Jan. 5, 1860, 10 7-16; India Stock, [illegible]; India Bonds, £1000, [illegible]; Ditto, under £1000, 22; South Sea Stock, [illegible]; Ditto, Old Annuities, 95⅛; Consols for Account, 95½; Exchequer Bills, £1000, 12; Ditto, £500, 12; Ditto, Small, 9.

A slight advance in Mexican, on Monday, arising from a letter addressed to the Committee of Bondholders, by Messrs. Manning and Mackintosh, has been the principal occurrence of the week in the Foreign House. The letter alluded to states an intention on the part of the Government to appoint Commissioners to receive the amount of duties allocated to the bondholders, as well as to assist in devising any means for lessening the amount of smuggling, which at present deducts so largely from the revenue. These are good intentions; but, in the present distracted state of the country, little benefit can be anticipated. Such appears to be the feeling of the speculators, for a reaction soon placed them at their former quotation. A report that a large amount of the New Stock had been sold by the agents, at a price below the market price of the day has since been positively denied by Messrs. Schneider and Co., and the New Bonds close at the slight impoovement of 23¼ ⅜, for money, 24 to 23⅞ for account. In Spanish there has been scarcely any business. The Five per Cents have fluctuated between 25⅛ and 2[illegible], the closing price. Portuguese are firmer, but have only partially recovered the fall of last week. The closing quotations are—Five per Cents, 46. Four per Cents, 43⅞ to ⅛. Dutch Four per Cents are, 94¼ to 93¾. Two-and-a-half per Cents, 59¾. Belgian are 98. Brazilian, 90, and Old Mexican, 20⅞, ex div.

The impulse in the Share Market last week has now ceased, and has been succeeded by the customary reaction. As the week advanced, however, some of the old lines improved, particularly Great Western Stock. London and Birmingham, on the contrary, has receded nearly ten pounds a share, from the effect produced by the speech of the Chairman with regard to the future dividends. Midland Stock has also suffered depression. The business of the Share Market at the close of the week was limited, but prices did not show any tendency to further depression. The following are last prices:—Aberdeen, 8½; Birmingham and Gloucester, 130½; Ditto, New (issued at 7½ dis.), 3[illegible]; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 7½; Buckinghamshire, ¼ dis.; Caledonian, 15¾; Cambridge and Oxford, ½; Chester and Holyhead, 2[illegible]; Direct Northern, 1⅛; Eastern Counties, 23⅝; Ditto, New, 7½ p.; Ditto, Perpet., 5 per Cent, ⅛ p.; Ditto, York Extension, 2¼; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 74; Edinburgh and Perth, 3; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), [illegible]½; Great Western, 152; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 23⅛; Hull and Selby, 107; Leeds and Bradford, 68; Leicester and Bedford, ½ dis.; Leicester, Tamworth, &c., ½ dis; London and Birmingham, 225½; Ditto, Thirds, 71; Ditto Quarters, 29½; Ditto Fifths, 25½; London and Blackwall, 8⅞; London and Brighton, 65¼; London and South-Western, 75; Ditto New, 27½; London and York, 2½; Lynn and Ely, 15½; Manchester and Leeds, —; Ditto, Quarters, 9; Ditto, Fifths, 11; Ditto Extension, 2⅞ premium; Manchester and Birmingham, 85; Ditto, Quarter Shares (A), 15½; Ditto, Quarter Shares (B), 15½; Manchester, Buxton, and Matlock, 1 premium; Manchester and Southampton, 1⅞; Midland, 139; Ditto, New, 36⅝; Newcastle and Darlington Junction, 42½; Ditto, New, 11½; Newcastle and Berwick, 2[illegible]½; North British, 38¾; Ditto, Half Shares, 14; Ditto, Fifths, 7½; Ditto, Carlisle Extension, 3¾; North Kent and Direct Dover, 1¼; North Staffordshire, 3⅞ p.; Northampton, Banbury, and Cheltenham, 1½; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 8; Preston and Wyre, 35½; Scottish Central, 18⅞; Scottish Midland, 6⅝; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 3; Shropshire Union, ⅞ dis.; South Midland, ⅛ p.; South Eastern and Dover, 44½; Do., New (do. £15) 3½; South Wales, 4; Swans. and Loughor and Cameron's, 3; Vale of Neath, 1½; Waterford and Kilkenny, 3; Welsh Midland, 1; West Riding Union, 3½ p; York and North Midland Extension, 38½; Ditto East and West Riding Extension, 13½; Boulogne and Amiens, 12⅞; Bordeaux, Toulouse, and Cette (Mackenzie), 1½; Ditto, ditto (Aspelate) 1½; Dutch Rhenish, 6; East Indian, ⅝; Jamaica South Midland Junction, ⅞; Luxembough, 1⅛; Northern of France Constituted 12½; Paris and Lyons Constituted, 5½. Real del Monte, Unregistered, 3½.

Saturday Morning.—Bank Stock was a point worse yesterday, and Consols receded about ⅛ per cent. for time and money. Exchequer Bills did not alter. In the Foreign Market, Spanish Three per Cents were a turn worse.—The Share Market fully supported the prices of the preceding day. Great Western Stock rather improving from the satisfactory nature of future prospects.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

Tuesday, August 11.

CROWN-OFFICE, August 10.

MEMBERS RETURNED TO SERVE IN THIS PRESENT PARLIAMENT.

Borough of Dundalk.—Daniel O'Connell, Jun., Esq., in the room of Thomas Nicholas Redington, Esq., who has accepted the office of Under Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

City of Chester.—The Right Hon. Lord Robert Grosvenor, Treasurer of Her Majesty's Household.

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY THE LORD LIEUTENANT.

Leicestershire [illegible] Militia.—[illegible], Esq., to be Captain. Lord J. Manners to be Lieutenant; H. D. [illegible] to be Lieutenant; J. Knight to be Lieutenant; R. Harrington to be Ensign; A. Lafargue to be Ensign; W. Lafargue to be Ensign.

BANKRUPTCIES ANNULLED.—W. MOLYNEUX, Sandwich, innkeeper. T. REDFORD, Croydon, baker.

BANKRUPTS.—J. TURNER, Ludgate-hill, jeweller. W. TUNLEY and R. S. POTTS, Old 'Change, City, common carriers. H. PARNELL, [illegible]gate-street Chambers, [illegible] auctioneer. W. H. MORTIMER, Lower Harley-street, Marylebone, wood-paviour. J. HAYWARD and D. ADAM, Paternoster-row, booksellers. W. MITCHELL, Westerham, Kent, draper. J. BISHOP, Manchester, painter. A. SMITH and T. IRVINE, Liverpool, merchants.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—W. CLELAND, Edinburgh, stock-broker. T. HISLOP, Alloa, grocer. A. STEWART, Hillside, farmer. P. STIRLING and J. STIRLING, Edinburgh, stablers.

Friday, Aug. 14.

BANKRUPTS.—J. B. BLOOMFIELD, jun., Poole, chemist. F. and J. HOLMES, Southtown, Little Yarmouth, shipbuilders. J. W. STRATTON, Cambridge, tailor. J. M. PRICE, Warminster, Wiltshire, innkeeper. S. PUCKERING and W. T. MAKINS, Kingston-upon-Hull, woollen merchants. J. BIRCH, Kingston-upon-Hull, tailor. T. U. KNIGHT, [illegible]-street, Gravesend, grocer. W. L. OLLARD, Upwell, Cambridgeshire, auctioneer. [illegible] TAYLOR, Birmingham, brush manufacturer. T. CRANE, Kegworth, Leicestershire, brewer. T. BROWNE, East-street, Southampton, hatter. R. OXTOBY, Wansford, and W. C. OXTOBY, Great Driffield, Yorkshire, millers. R. NAYLER, Marlborough, Wilts, licensed victualler. [illegible] ENGLAND, Brinscombe, Minchinhampton, Gloucestershire, and Basinghall-street, City, cloth factor.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—[illegible] EWING, jun., Glasgow, flesher. W. OGG and W. M'MILLAN, Aberdeen, watch and [illegible] instrument makers. J. BROWN, Glasgow, share-broker. W. HACKNEY, [illegible], merchant. R. BINNIE, Grahamston, Falkirk, merchant. W. CUMMING, Portree, merchant.

BIRTHS.

In Gloucester-road, Hyde-park-gardens, Mrs. Joseph Bowstead, of a son.——At Cosgrove, the Lady Maria Ponsonby, of a son.——At Middelton-square, the lady of Dr. Gol[illegible], of a daughter.——At Enfield Highway, the wife of the Rev. John Fuller Russell, of a son.——At 15, Park-street, Grosvenor-square, the lady of Dr. Manson, of a daughter.——At Hundson, Herts, the lady of Edmond Calvert, Esq., of a daughter.——At Newcastle-on-Tyne, Mrs. Gustavus Coulson, of a daughter.——In Regent-square, Mrs. John Winstanley, of a daughter.——At Brighton, the lady of the Rev. Dr. Morris, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

At Wallasey Church, Cheshire, Simon Yorke, Esq., to Victoria Mary Louisa, second daughter of Colonel the Hon. Sir Edward and Lady Cust.——On the 6th instant, at Southwell, Notts, George, son of James Haydock Hill, Esq., to Georgina Marian, daughter of the Venerable George Wilkins, D.D., Archdeacon of Nottingham.——At Kensington, Arthur Murray, Esq., 62nd Regiment, to Laura Montagu, youngest daughter of J. M. Reynolds, [illegible].——At St. Marylebone Church, the Rev. Watson Buller Pole, to Matilda, daughter of Sir Peter Pole, Bart.——On the 28th ult., at Celbridge, Ireland, Lord Langford, to Louisa Augusta, daughter of the Hon. Colonel Conolly, M.P. His Lordship is a near relative and godson of the Duke of Wellington, and was born at Paris in 1815.——At Brighton, Richard Boulton, Esq., to Caroline Charlotte, eldest daughter of Mr. and the Hon. Mrs. Charles Boulton.——At Freshwater, Isle of Wight, John Duke Coleridge, Esq., eldest son of the Hon. Mr. Justice Coleridge, to Jane Fortescue, third daughter of the Rev. G. T. Seymour.——At Dorking, William James Humphry, Esq., to Charlotte, youngest daughter of the late Heathfield Young, Esq.——At Tunstall, Kent, the Rev. Edward Kaye Burney, M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, to Emily Dulcibella, daughter of the late Rev. George Moore.

DEATHS.

At Tapton-house, Derbyshire, Elizabeth, the wife of George Stephenson, Esq.——At his residence, Guildford-street, Russell-square, William Kirby, Esq., in the 90th year of his age.——On the 7th instant, Major-General Edward Boardman, of the Hon. East India Company's service.——At Nun-green, Peckham-rye, John Wade, Esq., in the 84th year of his age.——At Stockwell, Thomas Harrison, Esq., late of the East India Company's Service.——At Norwood, Surrey, Mrs. Nisbett, in her 75th year.——At Kensington-gore, Thomas Fraser Barclay, Esq.——At Boulogne-sur-Mer, Harriet Arabella, wife of Richard Hereford, and second daughter of the late Sir Robert Mends, R.N.——At Bognor, Elizabeth, relict of the late Sir Bentinck Cavendish Doyle, Knight, Captain R.N.——At Nea House, Hants, Charlotte Maria, eldest daughter of Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon Cameron.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W. BATTY.—Under the patronage of her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Royal.—The Patrons of this Popular Establishment and the Public are respectfully apprised that the present week will terminate the successful career of the Grand Military Spectacle of our Indian Victories. In consequence of the forthcoming novelties. On MONDAY, August 17, and following evenings most positively the Last Six Nights of THE SIKH INVASION, or England's Triumphs of 1846, together with splendid Scenes of the Hippodrome; concluding with an Equestrian Drama, entitled THE NAMELESS.—Box-Office [illegible] 11 to 5. Stage-Director, Mr. [illegible] Thompson.

THE GREAT NASSAU BALLOON from CREMORNE GARDENS, Chelsea, at Half-past Six o'Clock on MONDAY. A Haunch of Venison in the Coffee Room, at, and after Five o'Clock on the same day.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—THE LAST NIGHT. The [illegible] Subscribers, and the Public, are respectfully informed, that there will be a FAREWELL NIGHT, on THURSDAY next, AUGUST 20th, 1846, when will be presented, Rossini's celebrated Opera, entitled IL BARBIERE DI SIVIGLIA. Rosina, Mdme. Grisi; Bertha, Mdme. Be[illegible]; Il Conte d'Almaviva, Sig. Mario; Bartolo, Sig. Lablache; Basilio, Sig. F. Lablache; and Figaro, Sig. Fornasari.

In the course of the evening, the new and original Divertissement, entitled LE JUGEMENT DE PARIS; comprising a new and original Grand Pas, composed expressly for this occasion by M. Perrot, the music by Sig. Pugni, entitled LE PAS DES DEESSES, by Mdlle. Taglioni, Mdlle. L. Grahn, and Mdlle. Cerito, representing the parts of Les Déesses. Mdlle. Louise Taglioni, Mdlle. James, Mdlle. Honore, representing the parts of Les Graces; M. St. Leon, Paris; Mdlle. Lamoureux, L'Amour; Mdlle. Julien, L'Hymen; Mdlles. Cassan and Demelisse, Nymphes; and M. Perrot, Mercure.

After which the LAST SCENE of Bellini's Opera, LA SONNAMBULA. Amina, Madame Castellan; Lisa, [illegible]; Count Rodolfo, Sig. F. Lablache; Alessio, Sig. A. Giubilei; and Elvino, Sig. Corelli.

To be followed by the FIRST TABLEAU from the successful New Grand Ballet, entitled LALLA ROOKH. Pas Symbolique, Mdlle. Cerito; Supported by Mdlles. Demelisse, Cassan, James, and Honore, and Corps de Ballet.

After which, the FIRST TABLEAU of EOLINE; ou, La Dryade. Mazourka D'Extase, Mdlle. Lucile Grahn, and M. Perrot.

A SELECTION from the admired Ballet of ONDINE. Comprising the celebrated Pas de L'Ombre, by Mdlle. Cerito.

To conclude with the SECOND ACT of the admired Ballet, LA SYLPHIDE. La Sylphide, Mdlle. Taglioni; James, M. Perrot.

Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at Seven o'Clock; the Opera to commence at Half-past Seven.

COLOSSEUM.—A Grand Mexican ALOE, or Century Plant, 30 feet high, now in Bloom, has been added to the various splendid Attractions of this matchless Exhibition, without any extra charge. This rare and beautiful Plant is a different species from any before exhibited in Europe. It has some thousand flowering buds upon it, was cultivated between Mexico and Texas, has been brought a distance of 7000 miles, and purchased by the Proprietor of the Colosseum.

The Atmospheric Effects in the marvellous PANORAMA OF LONDON by Night are repeated every [illegible]. Music, 3 till 5; and 8 till half-past 10. The whole projected and designed by Mr. W. [illegible].

VAUXHALL.—On MONDAY and TUESDAY, the 17th and 18th of August, the LICENSED VICTUALLERS' ANNUAL FETE and FANCY FAIR, for the BENEFIT of the SCHOOL; on which occasion, the Children of that Institution will appear in the Gardens, and one of the Boys will speak the Annual Address from the Grand Orchestra. The Gardens, on these days, will be opened at Three o'Clock, with a Royal Salute, and the Entertainments will take place as follows:—

PROGRAMME.

At Four o'Clock, on the Ballet Stage, Mr. Nichols, the celebrated Trampoline Clown, RUNNING UPON NOTHING, and other Athletic Performances, by Benedict Tourniaire, &c. &c. To be followed by PONY RACES on the WATERLOO GROUND.

The First Part of the Grand Concert will take place at Half-past Five o'Clock. Musical Director, Mr. A. Lee; Leader, Mr. R. Hughes. Vocalists, Mrs. Aveling Smith, Mrs. John Roe, Mr. [illegible], Mr. Binge, and Mr. J. W. Sharp, the best comic singer of the day.

After which, at Seven o'Clock, on the Ballet Stage, the AMERICAN BROTHERS (the Rivals of Risley) will go through their wonderful, extraordinary, and classical performances.

At Eight o'Clock the Rotunda Theatre will be thrown open, when TOURNIAIRE'S TROUPE of unrivalled Equestrians will perform some extraordinary feats of HORSEMANSHIP.

At Ten o'Clock the Second Part of the Grand Concert.

At Eleven o'Clock, Gorgeous Chinese Procession and Fireworks.

A Ball Room, 500 feet in length, has been erected in the Italian walk: it will be brilliantly illuminated, and opened at an early part of the evening for dancing. The Grenadier Guards Band [illegible] under the direction of Mr. Creaton. Master of the Ceremonies, [illegible] Majesty's Theatre.—Admission, TWO SHILLINGS.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A CHEMICAL LECTURE, by Dr. RYAN, Daily; and on the Evenings of Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. Professor BACHHOFFNER'S LECTURES on NATURAL PHILOSOPHY, with brilliant experiments, Daily. MACINTOSH'S REVOLVING ENGINE, COLEMAN'S PATENT LOCOMOTIVE ENGINE for ascending and descending Inclined Planes, FARRELL'S ARCHIMEDEAN RAILWAY, the ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, all in action. HALLETTE'S ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY VALVE. The OPAQUE MICROSCOPE. The OXY-HYDROGEN MICROSCOPE, exhibiting a fine Collection of Living Objects. A beautiful Picture of the CHAPEL in the CONVENT of St. CATHERINE, near Jerusalem, by Mr. Charles Smith, is one of the New Series of DISSOLVING VIEWS. Admission, 1s; Schools Half-price.

HISTORY of the ANCIENT ROMAN EMPERORS.—On the 17th inst. will be published a SHORT HISTORY of the SUCCESSION of the ANCIENT ROMAN EMPERORS, with their Dates, the Prices of their Coins, with Portraits, &c. Price 1s.; by Post, 1s. 2d. To be had of any Bookseller; or of PETER WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins, 46, Strand, London.

GERANIUMS.—Just Published, price Threepence,

A COMPLETE TREATISE ON THE CULTURE AND MANAGEMENT OF THE GERANIUM, with a Descriptive List of the Best Flowers. By the EDITOR of the FLORISTS' JOURNAL.  Four Postage Stamps sent to Messrs. GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, Publishers, 5, Paternoster-row, London, will ensure the return of this valuable Treatise, FREE, to any part of the Kingdom.

Now publishing, PART II. of the Penny Illustrated

MATTHEW HENRY'S COMMENTARY. Beautifully printed in a Demy Quarto, and issued in Weekly Numbers at ONE PENNY. Monthly Parts, in Wrapper, 4½d. Number 22 of the DOMESTIC BIBLE, price [illegible], containing the PENTATEUCH, price 3s. 6d. The PENNY PORTABLE COMMENTARY. A [illegible] of this work [illegible] on Saturday last. The entire work costs only 4s. 10d. Prospectuses [illegible] PARTRIDGE and OAKEY, 34, Paternoster-row.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, AND AVOID, addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic.

By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c.

SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; [illegible] CARVALHO, 147, Fleet-street; HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street; MANN, 39, Cornhill, and the Author, 10, Argyll-place, Regent-street.

NEW EDITION OF THE SPORTSMAN'S DIRECTORY.

MAYER'S SPORTSMAN'S DIRECTORY; or, Park and Gamekeeper's Companion. Containing Instructions for Breeding, Feeding, and Breaking Dogs; Hunting, Coursing, and Shooting; Fishing; Preserving Game and Decoys, Breeding Pheasants, Partridges, Pigeons, and Rabbits; Description of all kinds of Poaching; how to detect Poachers' Work. Directions for Destroying Vermin, &c. With an Appendix, containing valuable Receipts, and Abstracts of the Game Laws. By JOHN MAYER, Gamekeeper. Seventh Edition. Comprising the most recent changes in the Theory and Practice of Sporting. 5s. cloth lettered.—London, SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co., Stationers' Hall-court.

Of whom may be had, BLAINE ON THE DISEASES OF DOGS. 8vo., 9s., cloth.

THE JOURNALS of the FINE ARTS on PHOTOGRAPHY.—"A daguerreotype portrait, that could truly be pronounced a flattering likeness, we certainly never expected to see: that phenomenon, however, was presented to us on recently visiting the establishment of Mr. Claudet."—Athenæum, July 4. "We confess we had no idea of the possibility of producing anything so artistic and elegant on a metal plate."—Art Union, July 1. "Mr. Claudet's productions approach more nearly to the highly-finished miniature than anything we have yet seen."—Literary Gazette, July 4.

CLAUDET'S DAGUERREOTYPE PORTRAITS, lately so much eulogised by the leading papers, and particularly by the journals of the fine arts, are all non inverted, and when coloured by Mr. Mansion, an artist of ability, are the most exquisite miniatures. Mr. Claudet operates himself, and never allows an inferior portrait to leave his establishment. Ladies have the attendance of a respectable female. Open from Nine o'Clock. 18, King William-street, near the Adelaide Gallery.

"PHOTOGRAPHY.—The recent improvements made by Mr. BEARD in this magical department of science, certainly place it beyond comparison with other methods of taking portraits. The glaring effect, of which many complained, is now entirely obviated; and the ensemble of Mr. Beard's Portraits now present, in colouring, the appearance of a most exquisitely finished miniature, [illegible] expression and effect which art can never hope to attain."—[illegible] News, May [illegible].

Mr. Beard's Establishments are at 85, King William-street, City (where application for Licenses should be made); 34, Parliament-street, Westminster; and the Royal Polytechnic Institution, Regent-street.

COINS of ANCIENT EGYPT, GREECE, and ROME.—PETER WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins and Medals, 46, Strand, London, has just published a short catalogue of his coins and medals; which can be had post free, by sending six (6) stamps. Assignats of the French Revolution, 1s. N.B. Coins sent by post.

HEAL and SON'S LIST OF BEDDING, containing a full description of weights, sizes, and prices, by which persons are enabled to judge the articles that are best suited to make a good set of Bedding, sent free by post.

HEAL and SON, Feather Dressers and Bedding Manufacturers, [illegible] Tottenham-court-road.

HOT WEATHER. TRAVELLING.—SEA-SIDE.—The REGISTERED PALETOT in London, only at 22, Cornhill, opposite the Royal Exchange, and the chief Llama Cloth Warehouse, 114, Regent-street. Do not be deceived by a similarity of name placed in the windows of a few petty shops in the neighbourhood of the Patentees. Each Paletot is stamped H. J. and D. NICOLL, 114, Regent-street.

SPORTSMEN, who wish to be effectually protected from the weather, are invited to try BERDOE'S WATERPROOF SHOOTING JACKETS, which, without being air-tight, are guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever, equally with his well-known OVER-COATS—more than Seven Years' extensive trial of which has produced the universal admission that they are REALLY completely impervious to the rain, and not so merely in NAME. A large Stock of first-rate Garments of both kinds, kept to select from. Made only by W. Berdoe, Tailor and Over-Coat Maker, 69, Cornhill (North side), and shortly at 96, New Bond-street.—Waterproof Cloaks, Habits, &c., for Ladies.

LONDON AND WESTMINSTER BANK.—The Directors [illegible] GIVE NOTICE that a DIVIDEND of £3 per cent. upon the paid-up Capital of the Company, [illegible] the rate of £6 per cent. per annum, will be PAYABLE on and after the 10th SEPTEMBER NEXT, at the Bank, Lothbury, without deduction for Income-tax, which will be paid by the Bank.

By order of the Board,

Lothbury, 30th July, 1846. JAMES WILLIAM GILBART, General Manager.

The Transfer Books will be closed from the 18th August to 10th September.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, ESTABLISHED 1824.—NOTICE is hereby given that the usual Dividend of Five per Cent. (less Income-Tax), on the paid up Capital on the Shares of the Society, will be payable at this Office, on and after Thursday, the 20th day of August instant. Proprietors living at a distance may obtain their Dividends either by sending an Order to the Secretary, or by applying to any of the Society's Agents.

GEO. H. PINCKARD, Resident Secretary.

78, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, London, August 15th, 1846.

THE PROVIDENT CLERKS' MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION and BENEVOLENT FUND, 42, Moorgate-street.

TRUSTEES.

Thomas Baring, Esq., M.P.
Thomson Hankey, jun., Esq.
W. G. Prescott, Esq.
Baron L. de Rothschild

Treasurer of the Benevolent Fund—John Abel Smith, Esq., M.P.

Forms of proposal for Mutual Life Assurance, to meet every contingency, annuities, endowments, loans, &c., and the fifth annual report, with every [illegible], may be had at the offices, where donations and subscriptions to the Benevolent Fund are received.

Table of Premium payable yearly, half yearly, or quarterly, by a person of the age of 25, to secure the sum of £100 to be paid at death, or on his attaining the respective ages of 50, 55, and 60, whichever event shall first occur.

Age next birthday	Age Fifty.			Age Fifty-five.			Age Sixty.
	Year	Half-Year.	Quarterly.	Year	Half-Year.	Quarterly	Year	Half-Year	Quarterly.
25	3 16 4	1 19 0	0 19 8	3 5 5	1 13 3	0 16 [illegible]	[illegible] 2	1 9 6	0 14 11

Policies may be effected daily.
July 30th, 1846.

By order of the Board,
THOS. MULLINDER, Secretary.

REMOVAL.—DR. CULVERWELL has REMOVED to 10, ARGYLL-PLACE, REGENT-STREET.

TO MILLINERS.—Required immediately, several Improvers to the Millinery Business. A premium expected. Also, a Young Lady who Writes a Good Hand and understands Entering Goods. Apply personally to Madame TREACHER, 57, Regent-street, near Swan and Edgar's.

TONIC ALE.—This splendid new description of Bottled Beer is now in high perfection. It is strongly recommended by the Faculty as possessing peculiar stomachic qualities, promoting appetite, &c. Sold in quart and pint bottles, secured by Betts's Patent Capsule. JOSEPH STOCKTON, Sole Agent, 51, Lamb's Conduit-street.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a Twopenny Stamp.

SIX POUNDS of GOOD TEA, for 15s.—Since it is barely possible that anything can be done about the duties this session, 2s. 6d. a pound is likely to be the quotation at present for useful tea; other sorts at 2s. 10d., 3s. 5d., and 3s. 10d. Coffee, 9d., 1s., and 1s. 3d.—East India Tea Company's Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, Sole Inventress of Teaching the Art of Dress-making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most finished Style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated [illegible] Apprentices and Improvers Wanted. Millinery Rooms.

ELASTIC SURGICAL STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c.—[illegible] a new fabric for varicose veins, weakness, &c., which possesses sufficient elasticity for drawing on, and compression to afford the required support without the trouble of lacing. It has been pronounced by eminent practitioners a very valuable invention, from the convenience of its application, and efficiency in its uniform pressure.

CHEMICAL WONDERS.—Electro-plating Liquid Silver, 1s. and 3s. per bottle, restores and maintains the original beauty of damaged plated articles. GOLD REVIVER, 2s. 6d.; GOLD VARNISH, 1s. 6d., make old tarnished frames equal to the most brilliant new ones.—The GERMAN FLY DESTROYER, 1s., clears the house at once of those pests, flies and beetles, and is warranted innoxious, except to those insects.

Sole Manufacturer SMITH, 281, Strand, opposite Norfolk-street.

FURNISHING IRONMONGERY.—Purchasers of Fenders, Fire-irons, Tea-trays, Table Cutlery, and Kitchen Furniture, &c., may effect a saving of 30 per cent. by purchasing of R. and J. SLACK, 336, Strand, opposite Somerset House, where may be inspected the largest Stock in London. Books of prices, with 200 drawings gratis, or sent post-free. Established 18[illegible]8.

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS AND GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM for STOVE GRATES, kitchen ranges, iron bedsteads, fenders, fire-irons, general furnishing ironmongery, tinned copper, iron and best tin cooking vessels, best Sheffield plate, and table cutlery, japanned trays, tea urns, ornamental iron and wire works, for verandahs, lawns, &c., and flower-stands. Every article is warranted, and marked at the lowest prices in plain figures, for cash.—Adjoining the Royal Bazaar, 58, Baker-street, Portman-sq.

A SCOTCH TWEED GOTHA JACKET FOR 30s.—This Jacket, which is well suited to be worn by Gentlemen when shooting, angling, in the library, or country ramble, is made to measure, in a first-rate style of fit and workmanship, for 30s.; best ditto, ditto, 38s.—At GRAVES'S Fashionable Tailor and Trowsers' Maker, 313, High Holborn.

TROWSERS! TROWSERS!! TROWSERS!!!—A good fit in this garment can seldom be obtained.—R. GRAVES, Fashionable Trowsers' Maker and Tailor, 313, High Holborn, after many years' experience and study, is enabled to assert, without fear of contradiction, that he can fit gentlemen with this garment better than any other person in London. The characteristic of his fitting is a gentlemanly style, with perfect ease for stooping, sitting, walking, or riding. A well-assorted stock of the newest designs to select from.—R. GRAVES, 313, High Holborn.

DAMASK TABLE LINENS, most Elegant and Durable, at very Low Prices for Cash, by JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linen-Drapers to the Queen, at their Family Linen Wareroom, 26, Regent-street, two doors below Piccadilly Circus. Parcels above £5 sent throughout England carriage paid.

John Capper and Son's General Linen-Drapery Business, established for nearly Seventy Years, is continued in Gracechurch-street, without change.

MUSICAL BOXES of high quality, the mechanism beautifully finished, playing upwards of 750 airs, overtures, &c. A Catalogue of the music, with the price of the boxes, is now published, and may be had, gratis, on application, or will be sent, post paid, if applied for by a paid letter.—T. COX SAVORY, and Co., Goldsmiths, &c., 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London.

THE BEST ENGLISH WATCHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Watchmakers, No. 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, request the attention of purchasers to their stock of London-made PATENT LEVER WATCHES, which are manufactured by themselves in their own house. In silver cases, with the detached escapement and jewelled; the prices are four guineas and a half, six, and eight guineas each; or in gold cases, 10, 12, 14, and 16 guineas each. The very large stock offered for selection includes every description, enabling a customer to select that which is more particularly adapted to his own use.

CHOLERA.—It is much to be regretted that the English Cholera is manifesting itself more than usual in the metropolis; the best preventive and most efficacious remedy for its cure is the celebrated GINGER BRANDY, so much patronised by the Faculty and used in the Hospitals. Prepared by W. YOUNG, FELL, and Co., at their Distillery, Waterloo-road, where it can be obtained; also at their Warehouse, 26, Friday-street, at 38s. per dozen; and from all licensed victuallers, at 3s. 6d. per bottle.

THE SUMMER RIDE or PROMENADE.—The peculiar virtues of C. and A. OLDRIDGE'S BALM of COLUMBIA completely removes the difficulty experienced by ladies in preserving their ringlets after exercise. Its use so invigorates the hair, that tresses, previously the straightest and most destitute of curl, rapidly acquire a vigour which maintains in permanent ringlets the head-dress of the most persevering votary of the ball-room, the ride, or the promenade. Its efficacy in preserving, strengthening and renewing the hair has become a matter of notoriety among all civilised nations.—3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle. No other prices. Oldridge's Balm, 1, Wellington-street, the second house from the Strand.

SHIRTS and NEW ALBERT CRAVATS.—WILLIAM WHITELOCK, 166, Strand (Established 22 years), solicits the attention of gentlemen to the SHIRTS he supplies for 6s. 6d. each, including washing. They are made in the corazza and other new styles, from Marsland's patent long cloth, with fine linen fronts, &c., and are superior to those usually sold at 8s. 6d.; also all fine linen, 10s. 6d., usual price 14s. 6d. One sent as sample, post-free, upon receipt of the amount, and 1s. added, as part payment [illegible] measurement requisite is the neck, chest, and wrist tight. His new ALBERT CRAVATS [illegible] of by all who try them. They are registered [illegible].

METCALFE and CO'S. NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—[illegible] cleaning, and true economy, ask all who have used [illegible] Brushes [illegible] brush performs the highly-important office of searching thoroughly into the divisions, and cleaning in the most extraordinary manner; hairs never come loose, 1s. Peculiarly penetrating Hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russia bristles, which will not soften like common hair. Improved Clothes-brush, that cleans harmlessly in one-third the time. The new Velvet Brush, and immense Stock of genuine unbleached Smyrna Sponge, at METCALFE and Co's. only Establishment, 130 B, Oxford-street, one door from Holles-street.

Caution.—Beware of the word "from" Metcalfe's, adopted by some houses.

WHILST MESSRS. BETTS and CO. are studiously desirous to avoid the imputation of unwarrantably increasing the alarm created by the rumoured prevalence in the Metropolis of that fearful disease, the Asiatic Cholera, they deem it consistent with a due regard to the feelings of the public, to direct attention to the subjoined testimonials as to the merits of their Patent Brandy. This pure and wholesome spirit has long been in very general use in the most important hospitals and infirmaries in the kingdom, and is deserving of especial notice at the present time, from its peculiar efficacy in arresting the ravages caused by those epidemics that usually prevail at this season of the year; and the same can be procured in quantities, not less than two gallons, direct from the Distillery at 16s. per gallon, or in single bottles, at 3s. per bottle, from Retailers, in every locality, each bottle being secured by the Metallic Capsule, which Messrs. Betts and Co. have the exclusive right of making, and upon which is embossed the words "Betts's Patent Brandy, 7, Smithfield-bars."

EXTRACTS FROM TESTIMONIALS:—

"58, Aldersgate-street.

"Your Brandy is free from uncombined acid and astringent matter, which exists more or less in most of the Brandies imported from France.

"To Mr. Betts." (Signed) "JOHN THOMAS COOPER, Lecturer on Chemistry.

"Long-acre.

"I am bound to say, and do assert it with confidence, that, for purity of spirit, this cannot be surpassed; and that your Patent Brandy is also quite free from those acids which, though minute in quantity, always contaminate the foreign spirit.

To J. T. Betts, Esq." (Signed) JOSEPH HUME, Chemist to his Majesty.

"38, Upper Gower-street.

"I do not hesitate to express my conviction that it is fully as free from anything injurious to health, and contains as pure a spirit as the best varieties of foreign brandy.—(Signed) EDWARD TURNER, Professor of Chemistry in the University of London.—John T. Betts, Esq."

"Grenadier Guards Hospital.

"The two samples of your Patent Brandy I had an opportunity of laying before the Board [illegible] which sat at the Regimental Hospital last Saturday. [illegible] the Board approved of the Brandy, and have ordered that it shall be used [illegible].

"Messrs. J. T. Betts and Co." "J. HARRISON, Surgeon-Major, Grenadier Guards.

THE NEWLY-OPENED HOUSES.

(A BRIEF OUTLINE.)

The Extensive New Establishment of E. MOSES and SON is now open for the transaction of the various features of its business; and the Proprietors are anxious to state [illegible] upon which it is conducted, and the improvements under which it has opened. Be[illegible] have now devoted to them a spacious range of Show-Rooms entered by a private Waiting Hall, 84, Aldgate. There are also apartments for cutting and measuring, and a select Waistcoat Room. Ladies are informed that a private Habit Room is likewise set apart, and E. MOSES and SON have made other additions, too numerous to name at present. The "Ready-Made" Department is at least four times its former extent, [illegible] will, consequently, be despatched with much greater facility. This department occupies 55 and 56, [illegible]. The Hat Depôt is at 83, Aldgate, and is furnished with every description of Hats and Caps, of the best quality and fashion. The Hosiery Mart, 155, Minories, is equally distinguished for the worth and variety of its articles, from which the most satisfactory purchases are made. The Outfitting and General Clothing Department, 154 and [illegible] Minories, has equal recommendations, and [illegible] important feature in the New Houses of E. MOSES and SON. Let it be remembered that [illegible] at the [illegible] Establishment, as it was at the old, and be it also remembered, that the Proprietors still [illegible] the marking of the articles in plain-figured prices, from which no abatement can be [illegible] it be borne in mind, also, that any articles may be exchanged, or that the price of the article may be returned, without the least hesitation. For particulars of Self-Measurement and other essential information, obtain the new book, entitled "Past, Present, and [illegible]" which may be had gratis, and post-free, of the Proprietors, E. MOSES and SON, 154, 155, 156, 157, Minories, and 83, 84, 85, and 86, Aldgate, City, London.

E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Woollen-drapers, Clothiers, Hatters, Hosiers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen, regret to be obliged to guard the public against imposition, but, having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood of "being connected with them," or it's [illegible] they have [illegible] with any other house in or out of London; and those who desire genuine cheap [illegible] to prevent disappointment, call at or send to the Minories or Aldgate, opposite the Church, City, London.

Notice.—The entrance to the Bespoke Department is at 84, Aldgate.—No business transacted at this Establishment from sunset Friday evening till sunset Saturday evening, when it is resumed till twelve o'clock.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, August 15, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

BEST, LELOIR, SC. A PARIS.

No. 225.—Vol. IX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, AUGUST 22, 1846. [Sixpence.

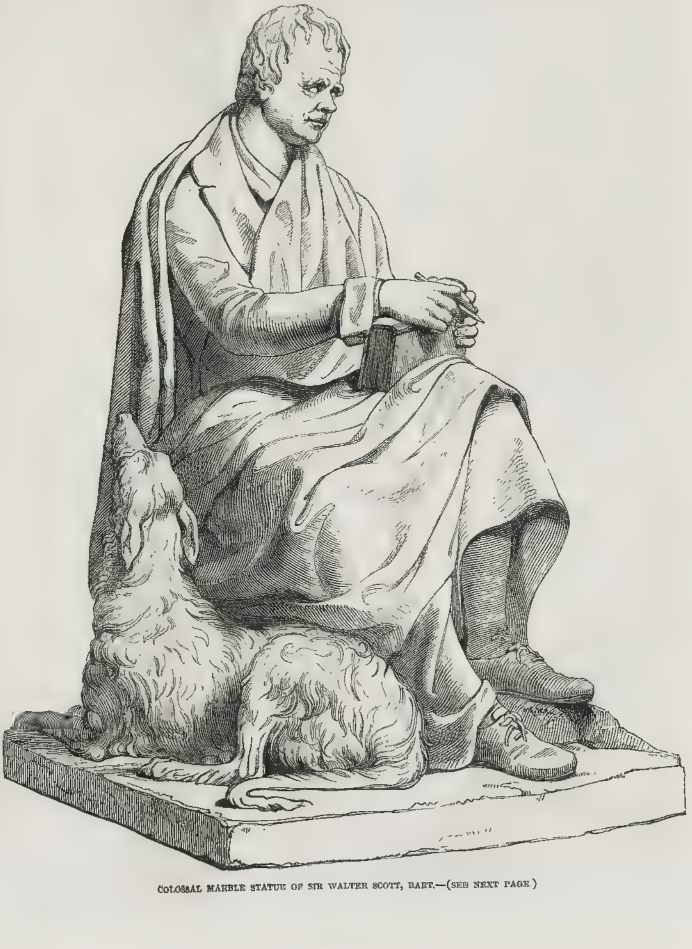
THE RIOT AT COLOGNE.

THE Cabinet of Berlin must have been considerably startled by the telegraph that conveyed to it the intelligence that a riot, which at one time amounted to an insurrection, had taken place at Cologne. The occurrence of such an event in the dominions of Prussia, has more significance than may be at first imagined. That there is deep and general discontent among the population of that kingdom cannot be doubted; the long-promised constitution still withheld, the refusal of requests for the safest and most reasonable improvements in the administration of the Law, the insupportable yoke of the censorship of the Press, the prohibition of all discussion of the state and affairs of the country—all these keep up a continual fermentation, not the less dangerous because it is prevented from displaying itself in action. Add to these the differences that spring from separate religions, Lutheran, Evangelical, Roman Catholic, German Catholic, and the Rationalists, or "Friends of Light;" throw in yet again the elements of confusion drawn from the local animosities between State and State, arising from different laws, and modes of administering them, and we may form a remote idea of what materials for a conflagration are heaped together in Prussia, which, though one kingdom, is by no means one nation. Whence the spark will come that will set in a flame cannot be foreseen; but the eyes of the Prussian rulers are always anxiously directed towards the Provinces of the Rhine, as if, by a kind of instinct, they felt that would be the most inflammable quarter. There is reason for their solicitude; but they look on without effort, in hopes that the old system will still work as heretofore. "After us, the deluge," is a maxim more frequently acted on than avowed. To stave off change till the latest moment, is the policy of all the Continental Governments; their aversion to reforms, is to us, who see a social revolution a-year on the average, and apparently thrive under the change, a terror almost inconceivable. There are some things better given than taken, and political reforms are among them; but the German States cling, one and all, to the theory of negation, the small ones supported in doing so by the great, and the great backing each other, on a principle well understood by the Holy Alliance.

But, whatever the amount of discontent may be, action against it is very rare: the Germans are, naturally, a quiet, easy-going people, fond of what Carlyle contemptuously calls, "peace and provender"; and, as long as the accustomed physical and material means of existence are easily accessible, will bear much without kicking against it. They are under a complete net-work of force and policy, being governed from some thirty centres: three days' fighting in the streets of Paris will decide the fate of France, and change a dynasty; in Germany, it is very different. Some energetic protest against an isolated case of excessive, perhaps accidental provocation, is all that, under ordinary circumstances, can occur. And this more frequently springs from some interference with the ordinary affairs of the people, than anything else. Nothing short of an increase in the tax on Beer can rouse a Municher; but that will do it, as more than one riot has proved. Bread, too, is a great cause of strife and bitterness, as it always has been, where the Governments interfere in the regulation of prices and supply: the late disturbance at Coblenz was a Bread riot; the outbreak at Cologne was caused by an officious interference with the amusements of the people, of which they are often more tenacious than more serious matters. The Roman Emperors knew the popular spirit well, when they kept the masses quiet by the continual recourse to the panem et circenses. Had they increased the cost of the first, and prohibited the last, probably not all their Legions would have saved them from destruction.

In no European State are the people sunk to the degradation of the rabble of Rome. It is no part of the duty of modern Governments to feed and amuse their subjects; but they can, at least, allow the people to feed and amuse themselves, at their own cost and in their own fashion. Non-interference seems very easy; but, where it is the principle of Government to meddle with and control everything, it is a most difficult act of wisdom to refrain. So, out of the veriest trifle, they contrive to excite a serious outbreak; and the prohibition of a few squibs in the market-place of Cologne on a fête day has ended in riot, the loss of life, the forced abandonment of their functions by the military authorities, the formation of a civic committee, who took charge of the town, and acted with an ability, vigour, and moderation that more clearly prove the fitness of the people for self-government than a hundred treatises; and, more than all, a compelled concession on two points by the Government itself. The riot had no political object; there was no previous plan, no concert. Except for the bad feeling it is sure to leave behind, it may have no immediate results. But where so much reliance is placed on the military, such a spectacle as that furnished by this Cologne outbreak should not be shown too often; it were better to avoid the inferences that can be drawn from it.

The Rhenish Provinces, from their proximity to France, are more strongly imbued with a dislike of the Prussian system than the other parts of the Monarchy. They are the neighbours of a freer system, and disposed to enjoy it; they have insisted on retaining the Code Napoleon instead of the German Landrecht, by which criminal prosecutions are conducted in secret and by documentary process. Any one who knows what ruinous delays the same system causes in our own Court of Chancery may form a faint idea of what would be the result if it was applied to the whole criminal procedure of the kingdom. Mutilated as the French Code has been at various times and under various pretexts, it is still far superior to the German system of the rest of Prussia; and the attempts made to supersede it by the eternal schreiberei of the Bureaus have not added to the popularity of the Government. The Rhenish Provinces are, besides, mostly Catholic; and, it will be remembered, Cologne was the theatre of the dispute between the Sovereign and the Church with respect to mixed marriages, that ended in the arrest of the Archbishop: all these things are, doubtless, remembered, and have their influence. The uneasy state of feeling is proved by the large garrisons kept up in these provinces, avowedly because they are the frontier against France, possibly in some degree because they are not unlikely to become French by a movement from within; Governments do not always apprehend the most from their neighbours. Under this complication of circumstances, an outbreak is not to be wondered at; but the spirit with which the citizens met the difficulty, is more surprising, where public affairs present so few opportunities of combination among the people independent of the Government; it is this symptom which will cause far more alarm to the Rulers than the few hours riot, which, with so overwhelming a force at command, they ought to have had little difficulty in suppressing.



COLOSSAL MARBLE STATUE OF SIR WALTER SCOTT, BART.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

INAUGURATION OF THE SCOTT MONUMENT, AT EDINBURGH.

The very impressive ceremony of the Inauguration of the Monument to Sir Walter Scott, just completed, in Princes-street, Edinburgh, took place on Saturday last, August 15, the anniversary of his natal day. The scene was, altogether, a very imposing one, in which the civic functionaries, the original and auxiliary Committees of the Monument, the Masonic and other public bodies, took part, in presence of a large concourse of spectators.

The Memorial, as the majority of our readers, doubtless, know, consists of a fine Gothic structure, beneath which is placed a noble bust of Scott, the uncovering of which was the principal ceremonial of Saturday.

The foundation of the Monument was laid on August 15, 1840, precisely six years ago; and the cost of its construction is £15,650, exclusive of the Statue, though not of the numerous figures which adorn the Monument. It covers an area of nearly 60 feet square, and rises to the height of 130 feet. In its general features, it consists of a magnificent Gothic Tower, or Spire, supported by four fine arches, and richly ornamented with turrets and pinnacles, with niches, containing figures of the most celebrated characters in the writings of Sir Walter Scott. (The Monument will be found engraved in No. 46, and the Statues in No. 154, of The Illustrated London News.)

The weather on Saturday was, unfortunately, rainy, and unfavourable for the ceremony. Notwithstanding this, the streets, from an early hour, were thronged with persons wending their way to the different interesting localities. From twelve o'clock, the day was observed as a holiday, the shops in the principal streets being closed. Throughout the line of the procession, the windows were filled with spectators, and dense masses occupied the streets. The Calton Hill was covered with a multitude, and the more adventurous clustered on the rocky eminences. At the Turf Hotel, in Princes-street, a profusion of flags and banners was displayed; and at St. David's a graceful line of flags was suspended from side to side. The streets through which the procession passed were lined with a detachment of the 3rd Dragoon Guards, who added materially to the splendour of the scene, as well as to the maintenance of order.

At one o'clock, the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Council, with the Magistrates of Easter and Wester Portsburgh, the Magistrates of Canongate and of Leith, assembled in one of the class-rooms of the High School; the Grand Lodge, and most of the Masonic Lodges in Edinburgh, with numerous representatives from the more remote districts of the country, occupying the large hall. At about a quarter past two, the weather having auspiciously cleared up, the procession moved in the following order:—

Mounted Military Band
Auxiliary Scott-Monument Committee, in threes.
Scott Monument Committee in threes
Magistrates of Easter Portsburgh, their Constables, and Suite.
Magistrates of Wester Portsburgh, their Constables, and Suite.
Magistrates of Canongate, with their Constables, those of Calton, and suite.
Magistrates of Leith, with their Constables and Suite
Magistrates of Edinburgh, with their Constables and Suite.
High Constables of the City
Various Lodges of Freemasons.
The Grand Lodge of Scotland, with the Grand Master, and all the Office-bearers.
Detachment of Dragoons.

About 600 brethren of the Masonic bodies were present, amongst whom were the M. W. G. Master Lord Glenlyon, R. W. Sub-Master J. Whyte Melville, Esq.; Samuel Hay, Esq., Grand Treasurer; the Rev. A. Stewart, and the Rev. J. Boyle, B.C.L., Grand Chaplains; the Grand Clerk, Dr. Somerville, &c. The display of insignia, flags, and banners, was very imposing.

The Procession passed from the High School along the London-road, Waterloo-place, and Prince's-street, amidst great applause, and entered the gardens by the west gate, opposite the Royal Institution; when the Lord Provost and Magistrates of the City, with the Magistrates of the other districts of the town, the Magistrates of Leith, and the Members of the Grand Lodge of Scotland, ascended the steps of the Monument on the side of Prince's-street; the High Constables, the Committee, and Freemasons, occupying the space below. The various bodies having taken their positions, a gun was fired from a small battery on the bank on the opposite side of the gardens, and the canvass screens instantly disappearing, the Statue was revealed to the immense multitude in St. David's-street and Prince's-street, in front of the Monument, who greeted it with loud and prolonged plaudits, the bands of the Dragoons and 1st Royals playing the National Anthem

The scene at this period was exceedingly effective; and the romantic and beautiful aspect of the grounds, thronged by the imposing array, had a very interesting appearance; increased by the picturesque irregularity of the houses in the Old Town towering in the background, and overshadowed by the dark and majestic Castle. On the steps of the Monument were the Magistrates and Councillors in their robes, the Grand Master and the other office-bearers of the Grand Lodge, with their splendid jewels; while around were the High Constable, and the numerous Lodges with their varied and elegant insignia; and the galleries were filled with spectators.

After some Masonic ceremonies, the Rev. Mr. Stewart, one of the Grand Chaplains, offered up an impressive prayer. Lord Glenlyon, Grand Master, then briefly addressed the assemblage; and the Lord Provost addressed Lord Glenlyon as follows:

I congratulate you, the Right Worshipful Grand Master, and I congratulate the countrymen of Sir Walter Scott, on now seeing placed on its pedestal, in this magnificent Monument, a statue worthy of its shrine. The tribute of a nation's gratitude to one of the most honoured of her sons, adds a new feature of beauty and of grace to his native city; but the halo of his genius sheds a far brighter lustre over the name of Edinburgh and of Scotland. As one burning torch not only illuminates the sphere of its own brightness, but kindles the latent fire in others, so who can tell how many dormant spirits have been roused to arduous and successful exertion by the honourable example of Scott? Even here we see how the glowing genius of the poet has stirred the soul of the architect, and awakened the talents of the sculptor, whose skilful chisel has moulded the rude block into the all but breathing form and features of Scotland's darling son. (Cheers.) While we lament the untimely fate of the gifted architect, we rejoice in the growing vigour of our own citizen sculptor, who, by this exquisite work of art, has given earnest of future productions that will rival the works of the most celebrated artists of this or other countries. The sister arts of architecture and sculpture here vie with each other in presenting their richest offerings to the genius of poetry, history, and romance, and they are themselves signally honoured in combining to honour him who has contributed so largely to the instruction and enjoyment of the human race. This Monument and Statue, admirable for beauty and durability, I trust will long adorn our city; but, though they crumble into dust, the author of "Waverley" has reared for himself monuments of more surpassing beauty, and more lasting endurance, and more extensive celebrity. (Cheers.) The forked lightning may dash these turrets to the ground, the tooth of time will corrode these marble features; but, over the monuments of his mental creation, the elements have no power—these will continue to be honoured at home, and under distant and more genial skies. (Cheers.) Continents as yet unexplored will be taught by the wisdom of Scott, and enlivened by his wit, and rivers unknown to song will resound with the lays of his minstrelsy; but nowhere will his memory be cherished with fonder attachment and more enduring delight than in the cities and the hamlets of his own beloved Scotland. (Cheers.)

The Rev. Mr. Boyle, Portobello, then expressed the pride and satisfaction with which he participated in the proceedings, and closed the ceremony with a benediction.

The battery next fired a salute of nine guns, and the procession returned to the High School, and dispersed.

THE STATUE,

Of which we annex a fine Engraving, is the production of Mr. John Steell, an eminent Scottish sculptor. It is executed in Carrara marble, and is of colossal dimensions, being more than double the size of life. The expression of the countenance is peculiarly thoughtful, and in it the leading features of Scott's character have all been skilfully delineated. The familiar humour for which the poet's face, in his happy moods, was remarkable, has been happily blended with that dignified repose, so essential in sculpture: and one of the greatest difficulties with which sculptors have to contend, has thus been successfully surmounted. The Minstrel has been engaged in writing, and seems pleased with the result of his labours. The dog, Maida, who has been reposing by his side, appears to have been startled by the shutting of the book in the hand of his master, and seems participating in the pleasure which is spread over his benign countenance. Used thus as an accessory, the figure of the dog, while it forms an important part of the composition, heightens the general interest of the group, while the sympathy evidently subsisting between the parties, brings out an important point in Scott's character, namely, his love for, and kindness to, the inferior animals. Individuality being an essential element in any representation of Scott, every leading characteristic of the dress which he wore has been rigidly adhered to; and this has been done in such a manner, as to set aside that silly affectation, that can see nothing classic or dignified in modern costume. There is a breadth in the folds and general disposition of the drapery, also, which corresponds well with the Gothic edifice with which the figure is connected; and one is reminded of the statues of Night and Morning, by Michael Angelo, in the Medici Chapel, which seem designed to harmonize with, and form a part of the structure that contains them, thus proving, distinctly, that that great master considered Greek statues altogether out of keeping with Gothic architecture.

The Scott Monument, as now completed, is, perhaps, the finest, and certainly the most appropriate, monumental edifice in the kingdom. It is also remarkable for having brought into public notice two men of high talent—the late lamented Kemp, the architect of the structure; and Mr. Steell, the sculptor of the Statue. Both designs were submitted to public competition, and were selected when the names of the artists were unknown. About thirty models for the Statue were forwarded by eminent sculptors from various countries; and Mr. Steell's was preferred not only by a Committee of Taste, appointed to decide on the respective merits of the designs, but by the feeling of the general body of subscribers, when the models were publicly exhibited. At a subsequent period, it was suggested that Sir Francis Chantry, who had produced incomparably the best bust of Sir Walter, was best qualified to do justice to the Statue; and Chantry, we believe, offered to execute it for a sum not exceeding that which Mr. Steell had named, but the subscribers honourably resolved to employ the party whose design had been approved of, and the result has justified their resolution. The Statue is all that could be wished—dignified and familiar, classic and faithful.

In the evening, the event was celebrated by a dinner in the Music Hall, when about five hundred gentlemen assembled. Among the company were the Lord Provost, the Chevalier Albert de Neuwall, Sir A. Ferguson, the Hon. Capt. Jocelyn, Whyte Melville, Esq., Mr. Forbes, M.P., A. Pringle, Esq., Colonel Burns, Colonel M'Niven, Captain Boswell, R.N., A. M'Neill, Esq., D. Milne, Esq., J. T. Gordon, Esq., John Steell, Esq., Archdeacon Williams, Rev. Dr. R. Lee, Rev. Dr. Memes, R. Chambers, Esq., Dr. Schmitz, J. Wilson, Esq., A. Robertson, Esq., Councillor Dick, &c. The Lord Provost occupied the chair; Sir A. Ferguson, and Mr. Pringle, of Whytbank, acting as croupiers.

We regret that we have not room for the entire proceedings. After the customary loyal toasts had been drunk, the Chairman, in a most eloquent address, proposed "The Immortal Memory of Sir Walter Scott;" and, in referring to the heroic submission of the great Author in adversity, observed—"the struggle was too severe for his manly frame; he conquered, but he fell; and, in dying, left behind him a renown which will only perish with the English language."

Dr. Memes proposed "The Health of Mr. Steell," the sculptor of the statue to Sir Walter Scott, remarking that "Mr. Steell has not only the merit of rising into the first rank of one of the most difficult and arduous achievements of genius, but he is the first Scotsman who has added a gem, by the statue of Scott, to Scotland's crown—(applause), for we had no sculptor until Edinburgh sent forth the genius of Steell."

The toast was drunk with great enthusiasm, and Mr. Steell thanked the company, assuring them they had moved every grateful feeling of his nature.

Mr. J. T. Gordon then proposed "The Memory of Burns," to which Colonel Burns briefly replied.

The other toasts were—"The Auxiliary Committee;" "The Lord Provost;" "The Memory of Mr. George Kemp, the Architect of the Monument," proposed by Mr. Robert Chambers in a speech of truthful and touching eloquence. Next were given "The City of Edinburgh;" "The Fine Arts of Scotland;" "British Literature;" "The Dramas in connection with the Writings of Sir Walter Scott;" "The Croupiers;" &c.

Mr. Wilson sang, in his best manner, several national airs; and his health, in connection with the Music of Scotland, was drunk with great enthusiasm. Mr. Wilson returned thanks, and concluded by singing 'Tak' your auld cloak about ye," which was received with rapture.

THE INAUGURATION OF SIR WALTER SCOTT'S MONUMENT AT EDINBURGH.—August, 1846.

> Call it not vain. They do not err
> Who say that when the Poet dies
> Kind Nature mourns her worshipper,
> And celebrates his obsequies
>
> Walter Scott

Fair Scotland honours her immortal son;
Erects his monument upon thy hills,
Edina! Myriads pour their benizon
Upon his memory, whose genius thrills
The universal heart, from Iceland rills
To sacred Ganges. Every [illegible] tongue
Burns with his theme of beauty and romance;
And, until time its latest hour hath rung,
Shall live the sheen of Marmion's Flodden lance.
Rebecca's heroine woes, and Allan's mystic trance.

The Ariosto of the North, whose pen
Fired with a thirst of fame, the dullest breast;—
The Raffael of the lyre, who clad the glen,
The lake and rill, with glories which shall rest
Round them for ever! Raise aloft thy crest
Edina! Let the cannon's joyful roar,
And the exulting shouts of high-soul'd men,
Arouse the echoes of Benlomond hoar!
Raise high thy crest Edina! When, oh when,
Shalt thou behold his like—thy minstrel citizen!

Long ages hence, as sailing up the Forth,
The voyager Scott's Monument espies,
Above the classic City of the North
Towering, a landmark for Devotion's eyes,
Fervently shall he hail the freeborn skies
And genial clime of Him to whom this stone
Is consecrate. Oh! long shall Scotia's child,
Ever for bravery and wisdom known,
Hallow this monument to genius wild
To Scott, of mental worth, and morals undefiled!

COUNTRY NEWS.

British Association.—The sixteenth meeting will be held at Southampton, in the week commencing Thursday, 10th September. The congress is expected to be one of the fullest attended of any meeting, not only from its proximity to the metropolis, but also to France, whence a numerous attendance of members of the French Geological Society is expected. The chief excursions will be to Portsmouth, Gosport, the Isle of Wight; the docks, arsenal, and stores of the former being, as was the case at Plymouth, open to the members, on the production of their tickets. The president for the meeting is Sir R. I. Murchison, who has acted as one of the general secretaries ever since the establishment of the Association.

Dinner to Mr. Bright.—A public dinner was given to John Bright, Esq., M.P., at Durham, on Tuesday. The Mayor (J. Bramwell, Esq.) presided. Mr. Bright, in the course of his speech, dwelt upon the advantages of Free-Trade, and gave his opinion that the example of England would be followed by other countries. Indeed, America had already imitated it in the new Tariff.—Mr Shields proposed the health of the Honourable C. P. Villiers, Mr. Cobden, M. Wilson, and their fellow labourers in the sacred cause of the Corn-Law repeal. (Cheers.) Mr. Crawshay gave "The constituency of the city of Durham, and may it preserve its independence."—Mr. Brockett, in proposing "The health of her Majesty's Ministers," expressed a hope that they would practice in office what they had preached whilst in Opposition (Applause.) Sir R. Peel had, no doubt, done much good, and he, for one, was grateful to him for it; but it was pitiable to find that his opponents could charge him with having violated his pledges. He trusted no supporter of the present Ministry would ever be able to charge them with doing so. (Applause.)

Exeter and Crediton Railway.—The opening of this railway is expected by its promoters to take place the first week in November. The works are proceeding with the greatest dispatch.

The People's Parks at Manchester The three parks at Manchester, just constructed at the public expense, and chiefly for the benefit of the labouring classes residing in that great seat of industry, were to be opened to-day, with a procession and all manner of rejoicings suitable to so interesting an occasion. The Earl of Ellesmere and many other persons of distinction were expected to attend, and the day was to be kept as a holiday, both in Manchester and Salford. Sir Robert Peel was strongly urged to be present, but excused himself on the ground of indifferent health, and want of rest and tranquillity after the fatigues of the session. The three parks are to be named the Queen's Park, the Peel Park, and the Phillips Park.

The Harvest in Kent. The Kentish Gazette says:—"The harvest is nearly finished in Kent: There are, in some places, a few breadths of corn yet uncarried, but arising almost entirely from scarcity of hands. It seldom occurs that the field duties commence in every district so simultaneously as this season, and hence arises the apparently small number of labourers. The crops are all got in well, and, generally speaking, there is an average produce."

Fatal Occurrence on the Great Western Railway.—On Monday night, upon the arrival of the nine o'clock train from Bristol, the train, as usual, was stopped within half a mile of the Paddington terminus, to collect the tickets, when Mr. George Grant, Ann-street, Bermondsey, feeling somewhat unwell, opened the door of the carriage at the moment the train went on, and, by the sudden jerk, Mr. Grant was precipitated from the carriage on to the line, when the wheels of several carriages passed over him. He was picked up as speedily as possible, and carried to St. George's Hospital, where, one of his legs being broken in two places and being injured internally, he expired in a few hours after his admission

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

The triumph of the Government, achieved in the new session just opened, will have but a few days' life; and will serve but to display in a singular manner the multiplication of forms, and the dilatoriness of their adjustment in public affairs, which is a characteristic of official business in France. This arises from the measures Napoleon was obliged to adopt, when amidst the turmoil of the revolution he seized the throne. To satisfy at the same time the pugnacity and the rapacity of the agitated masses of society, on the one hand he raised an immense standing army of soldiers, and on the other another no less permanent army of employés. The latter have been since then so numerous, that on the first of the year, when all officials go to compliment their chiefs in office, all the main streets of every town of France are nearly impassable with the crowds of dignitaries, petty and great, dressed in regimentals of every colour of the rainbow. These two standing armies are the besetting curses of France; and all business is protracted in order to give occupation to the standing army of civilians, for which has been invented a word (now an integral part of the French language) "La Bureaucratie" mercenaries; in the present state of affairs, the unfortunately necessary antidote to the Mobocracy. The session will likewise be protracted, not by debates, but by displays of oratory; all nations young in constitutional government "play at orators," and we have too much vanity in our nature not to do the same.

Amongst the more recent arrivals in Paris is a dilettante of European fame. We see in our days, when the arts of peace prevail, that just as the most distinguished and talented of the remaining members of the family of Bonaparte, Prince Musignano, is exclusively absorbed by the love of zoology, and presides over academies, instead of leading armies, like his uncle—the head of the great warlike house of Poniatowski—once Kings of Poland is an enthusiastic musician and composer. Prince Poniatowski, now in Paris, combining the influence of a man of high fashion with that of an artist, is sought after everywhere; his operas given all over Italy, and even in that hypercritical capital of the arts—Berlin. M. Pillet has lost no time in securing the éclat of his services; he is even now writing an opera on a plot furnished by that Briaræus of French literature, Alexander Dumas. In the meantime, the first acts of the new opera of Rossini have arrived, as also his new arrangement of the "Donna del Lago," for the Académie de Musique. Rossini's alteration of his decision to live quietly upon his past glory, has created universal astonishment, and particularly that after his having refused all the directors of the more flourishing operas of Europe he should write a new work for the Academie de Musique—so deficient in eclat and in artists. I can, on my personal knowledge, explain this decision. Rossini, as young as ever in the poetry of his nature, has long been in love with a well-known French lady, Madame Pelissier, at whose house we have all beheld him, night after night, during our visits to Bologna. Madame Pelissier, as all true French women, is determined to return to her cher Paris. Rossini follows her, and writes an opera, to appear before her in all his present and his renovated glories. I can, at the same time, announce to you, as approaching, another curious visit to London. Salamanca, the banker of Madrid, and the impresario of the Teatro de la Crus, is going to London—on the one hand, sent by a party in the State, to endeavour to effect a marriage betwixt the Queen Isabella and a Coburg; and, on the other, to essay getting up a rival opera in London This is a positive fact, as you will see, however preposterous such undertakings may appear on the part of those who have had sense enough to achieve that wealth whose real benefits are content, independence, and repose.

FRANCE.

OPENING OF THE FRENCH CHAMBERS.

The French Chamber was opened by Louis Philippe, on Monday, in a very short speech, it not being intended to proceed to any discussion, but merely to verify the returns, and to transact routine business.

At one o'clock the cannon of the Invalides announced that the Royal cortege had left the Tuileries, and in about a quarter of an hour afterwards the salute of drums and trumpets intimated the King's arrival. Almost immediately after the grand deputations who had gone to receive his Majesty, entered and led the way to the foot of the platform. Duke Pasquier, as Chancellor of France, headed one, and M. Sapey, as Senior Deputy, the other. The members composing the two deputations, after the King had ascended the steps to the throne, took their seats on the lowest benches of the centre, opposite the Royal seat. The general officers who had accompanied the King, the aides-de-camp, the equerries, the colonels of the National and Municipal Guards, and the officers of the Royal Household, ranged themselves behind the King's seat. They had scarcely taken their places when an usher announced "The King," and at once every person in the Chamber rose to receive him

The King ascended firmly the steps leading to the estrade, and the moment he appeared on the platform, loud cries of "Vive le Roi" greeted him from every part of the Chamber. Again was the loyal exclamation raised and repeated over and over, whilst his Majesty acknowledged the warmth of the reception by repeated salutations. When his Majesty took his seat, another louder cry of "Vive le Roi" burst forth, and again shook the Chamber. It is impossible to conceive a more loyal and enthusiastic reception than was given to the King of the French by his newly-elected Chamber.

His Majesty was, as usual, dressed in the uniform of a colonel of the National Guard, and was followed by the Duke d'Aumale and the Duke de Montpensier, who took their places on each side of the throne. His Majesty, having signified to the Chamber to be seated, read the following speech:

"Messieurs les Pairs, Messieurs les Deputes,

"I experience a lively satisfaction in seeing you re-assembled with so much ardour around me. At the usual period of your labours I shall enter with you upon the interior and exterior affairs of the country. To-day, in immediately convoking the two Chambers, agreeably to the wish of the charter, calling upon the Peers named since the last session, and the deputies whom France has just honoured with its suffrages, to take the oath before me, I have it at heart that you should receive at the same time the expression of my entire and unalterable devotion to our country, and of my confidence in your sentiments for myself and my family. I have learned, from my earliest youth, to love and to serve France. Called to the throne by her wish, and for the safety of her liberties, I have devoted my life to the perfect maintenance of her institutions, and to the pacific development of her prosperity and her grandeur. There is no trial which I am not willing to undergo, and that I am not capable of supporting, in order to attain an object so dear to my heart. Providence will permit, I hope, that, with the concurrence of the Chambers and the national assent, success may be assured to this patriotic work. My children and yours will reap its fruits, and, if France, free and happy, retains an affectionate remembrance of our common efforts, both you and I, gentlemen, shall have received the best and most agreeable recompense."

His Majesty read this short speech with his usual distinct enunciation. Loud cheers responded to the part in which he speaks of the sentiments of the Chamber towards himself and his family, and a similar greeting was given to his Majesty's declaration that there was no trial which he was not willing to undergo to forward the prosperity and grandeur of his country. His Majesty was also cheered when he concluded.

M. Martin (du Nord) then announced in the customary form that the session of 1847 was opened, and the King and the Princes, after saluting the Chamber, retired amidst fresh cries of "Vive le Roi!" The whole sitting occupied about twenty-five minutes

The Queen and the rest of the Royal Family left their seats at the same moment, and were greeted with the same tokens of affection and respect as had marked their entrance.

The Moniteur announces the death of Marshal Count Valée, in the 73rd year of his age.

An angry controversy is carried on in the Paris papers, on the subject of the Queen of Spain. A Paris letter says:—"The Duke of Cadiz, and not Count Trappani, is the candidate for her Majesty's hand now in favour with the French Court."

The new Chamber of Deputies commenced its labours on Tuesday, and its first act shows how much the Ministerial or Conservative party has gained in the late elections. The first thing done by the French Chamber of Deputies, on its meeting, is to divide itself into nine bureaux, and the earliest test of the state of parties is the election of the Presidents and Secretaries of these bureaux. On Tuesday, the bureaux met for this purpose; and the result was that, in the whole of the nine bureaux, the Presidents and Secretaries selected were Conservatives. Already people begin to speak of the conclusion of the session, and it is supposed likely that the prorogation will take place on the 5th or 6th of September. M. Sauzet is the Ministerial candidate for the Presidency of the Chamber. The Opposition has not yet fairly started a candidate.

The Epoque states that the second son of Don Carlos, Prince Juan, was shortly to marry Princess Maria Beatrix, the youngest sister of the reigning Duke of Modena.

An old female, known by the name of the Widow Proche, upwards of 70 years of age, living in a very humble dwelling in the Rue de Tournon, in Paris, died a few days ago. It was found that the cause of her death was a long standing complaint, for which she had never received any advice. On examining the papers of the deceased, documents were found which clearly proved that she had been the wife of the celebrated Talma, from whom she had been divorced

ARRIVAL OF THE OVERLAND MAIL.

The Overland Mail has arrived, with dates from Calcutta of July 3; Madras, July 10; and China, June 25. We have no later papers from Bombay than those last received, the 11th ult.

The most important news brought by this arrival is from Cabool, where it appears an Ambassador from the King of Persia had been received by Dost Mahomed, whose object was to excite the Affghanistans to declare hostilities against the British; but Dost Mahomed refused to accede to the proposal.

Quiet remains at Lahore, and there are now no symptoms of interruption.

The discovery of a new silver mine at Maulmein has been reported to the Government, and some specimens of the ores have reached Calcutta.

[illegible] was raging with great fierceness. The number of [illegible] Europeans alone on the 15th, 16th and 17th of June, is stated to be 255, and upwards of 100 of these cases belong to her Majesty's 86th Regiment. No officer is mentioned as having fallen a victim. The natives were dying by hundreds. Reports were current of the approaching retirement from the Government of Madras of the Marquis of Tweeddale.

Ibrahim Pacha reached Alexandria, on board the Avenger, on the 8th inst. He was in excellent health, and expressed himself delighted with his expedition.

From China, we learn that the British authorities had not given up Chusan according to the terms of the treaty, and a Chinese mob had expelled foreign residents from the city of Foo-chow-foo. Hitherto, the violence of the populace had been confined to the city of Canton; if it extends to the eastern ports, we may again see our commerce thrust out of China, and once more have to recover it by force of arms.

From Calcutta, the commercial intelligence is still very unfavourable. Government securities have experienced a further material decline; and, although but few parties seem disposed to sell out at the present currency, those compelled to do so find considerable difficulty in effecting their purpose—a further reason for which may be found in the circumstance of the Bank of Bengal having again raised its rates one per cent., the interest now charged on deposit of Company's paper being 11 per cent., and on any other security 12!

A Bombay letter of the 2nd of July says the pressure in the Money Market is appalling. Twenty-five per cent. is willingly paid for money; which, even at that ruinous rate, is not to be had to any amount. Government has refused to open the export warehouse, or to advance upon goods, and it is impossible to say what may be the result.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

A Woman Murdered by her Husband at Hull.—Considerable consternation prevailed in the neighbourhood of Blanket-row, Hull, on Wednesday (last week), in consequence of a rumour that Thomas Green, a mariner, had murdered his wife. It seems that the wife was an habitual drunkard, and on that account she and her husband frequently quarrelled. On Tuesday evening his brother invited him to Drypool feast, to which he consented; but previous to leaving home he placed in the hands of his wife about 50s. He returned about two o'clock next morning, and in ascending the staircase he stumbled over his wife, who was dead drunk, and unable to proceed any further. Perceiving the state she was in, he took the door-key from her pocket, and, having obtained admission to the room, he returned to the unfortunate woman. The first inquiry of the husband was with respect to the money, but his wife was unable to answer him, from the combined effects of the drink she had partaken of, and the injury she had sustained, about two hours before the arrival of Green, by falling heavily down stairs. Her husband became enraged; he dashed her head several times against the stairs, and then, seizing her by the hair of the head, dragged her into the room, where he searched for his money, but did not succeed in finding it. He then left hold of her, and she fell on the floor. Whilst in that position the husband got into bed, but after being there about half an hour he darted out of the bed, and again attacked his unfortunate victim, by jumping upon her body. He likewise struck and kicked her, and eventually knocked her head-foremost down stairs, where she lay moaning for a length of time, when the husband carried her up-stairs, laid her on the floor, and then retired to rest. On rising, shortly before six o'clock, he was horror-struck on finding that his brutality had ended in the death of his wife. An inquest was subsequently held, and the Jury returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder against Thomas Green."

Death from Eating Poisonous Berries.—Several persons have been recently taken to the hospitals, labouring under poison, from eating a species of wild berry, hawked about the streets, and called "Bilbury herts." A man named Parker died in the London Hospital on Monday morning, about eighteen hours after he had partaken of a pie made up of bilberries and sweetened with sugar. Parker's wife and child, who partook of the same pie, are lying in the same hospital. The woman has suffered greatly, but some hopes are entertained of her recovery. The child is in a dangerous state. The deceased, Parker, who was about forty years of age, and a man of strong constitution, kept the Veteran, beer shop, at No. 247, Whitechapel road. The berries were purchased of a man in the Whitechapel-road, on Friday evening. Another sufferer named Mary Cox, of No. 4, Collingwood-street, Bethnal-green, after eating similar berries, purchased in the street, was attacked in the same manner as Parker and his wife. Her agonies for several hours were dreadful, and she is not yet out of danger. A child, named Samuel Jones, three years of age, died in the same hospital on Tuesday; and another person is in the same hospital suffering from the same cause, who is going on favourably. It appears that numerous individuals besides those in the hospital have been attacked with severe illness after eating blackberries and other berries, the size of a small sloe, which are of a poisonous nature, and that three men dressed in smock frocks, and having the appearance of countrymen, have been selling heath brooms, blackberries, and a smaller species of wild berry, in the Whitechapel-road. Mr. Bloomfield, a surgeon, residing at No. 125, H[illegible], Wapping, was called upon to attend a family on Saturday afternoon, who were violently affected by eating berries purchased of one of the men in the Whitechapel-road. He administered antidotes immediately, and fortunately they have all recovered. Mr. Bloomfield states, that dangerous results would have followed if he had not been called upon very early after the patients swallowed the berries

Melancholy Steam boat Accidents.—On Saturday afternoon the following dreadful accident occurred on board the Citizen D steam-boat. While that vessel was holding on to the Nine Elms-pier, waiting for the train, Richard Lewis, the engineer, had, it is said, unknown to those in command of the vessel, descended into the larboard paddle-box for the purpose of oiling the bearings of the wheel. He had done this, and was in the act of getting out of the paddle-box, when the captain gave the order to "go on." The engines were set in motion by the stoker, and before the wheels had completed a revolution, an obstruction to the way of the boat was felt by all on board, and several asserted that they heard a shriek. The fact that the engineer was in the paddle-box then flashed upon the crew, and the boat was stopped instantly. Upon looking into the paddle-box, a horrible sight presented itself. There was no sign of the engine-driver, but that he had been instantaneously killed there could not be any doubt, as the top and sides of the paddle-box were splashed all over with his brains. On the same day, about seven o'clock in the morning, John Davis, the mate of Citizen A, which was moored off Chelsea, was employed in washing the decks, when going to the fore sponson for the purpose of trundling a mop, he overbalanced himself and fell into the river. Immediate assistance was rendered, but he sunk before any one could reach him. Both bodies have been discovered, and inquests held, the verdicts in both cases being "Accidental death."

A Woman Killed by Her Husband.—On Tuesday, Mr Wakley resumed and concluded, at the Crown and Anchor, King-street, Seven Dials, an inquest on the body of Mary Williams, whose death was caused by the gross violence of her husband, a labourer, in the employ of Messrs. Combe and Delafield, the brewers. Mr. Edward Sanford, the assistant surgeon at St. Giles's workhouse, said that he had been called to deceased at No. 8, Queen-street, in the above neighbourhood, at twelve o'clock in the day of Friday (last week). She was lying on the bed, and complained of great pain. She was perfectly sensible, and witness noticed marks of violence distinctly in various parts. Returned in the evening of the same day, and found his patient had expired. After a good deal of evidence from several other witnesses, corroborating the fact that the deceased had been subjected to her husband's gross violence on the day previous to her death, and at a time when she was in a comparatively perfect state of health, he having beaten and kicked her about so as to render her unable to move, and then very reluctantly sought medical attendance for her, Mr. Bennett, the house surgeon at St. Giles's workhouse, was called, who stated that he had not seen deceased previous to death, but had since made a post mortem examination. There was a contusion on the right eye, and a superficial wound, about three quarters of an inch in length, on the right eye-brow. A distinct mark above the right collar-bone, one on the left cheek-bone, and a dreadful wound over the right hypochondrian organ. There were other marks of a minor character. Death was produced by the injuries described. The Jury returned a verdict of "Manslaughter against Jeremiah Williams," who was committed on the Coroner's warrant.

Death from Poison.—A respectable woman named Gough, residing at Old Windsor, who was employed as charwoman, at the Stables of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, at Frogmore House, near Windsor, met with her death on Wednesday, in consequence of having taken a large quantity of oxalic acid, in mistake for Epsom salts. It appears that she was engaged on Wednesday, in cleaning the rooms of her Royal Highness's grooms and stablemen; but, finding herself unwell, she left, and returned to her house at Old Windsor, within half a mile of Frogmore, about noon. She told her daughter, who resided with her, to dissolve some salts in water, which would be found in a paper in the cupboard. This was no sooner done than she drank off the draught, when it was unfortunately discovered that the paper, instead of containing salts, enclosed a quantity of oxalic acid. She remained for but a short time in the most excruciating torture, when death put an end to her sufferings.

Report of the Committee on the Andover Union.—The And[illegible] Committee have presented their Report to the House of Common[illegible] part of the Report is on the administration of the law in the Andover [illegible] condemns it as full of irregularity, and marked by harshness. It follows, [illegible] the state of things disclosed in the Andover Union, that the Assistant-Commissioner's inspection has been very ineffective. The Committee say of Mr. Parker, who was Assistant-Commissioner from May, 1842, that they "have received evidence of Mr. Parker's zeal and laboriousness, which renders it impossible for them to attribute his imperfect superintendence of the Andover Union to idleness or intentional neglect." In a third resolution they speak of representations of abuses made by Mr. Parker, which have met with no attention from the Poor-law Commissioners, and add, that "these are not the only circumstances disclosed in the evidence which have led the Committee to the conviction that the Poor-law Commissioners have not given that encouragement to their Assistant-Commissioners, in the detection and removal of abuses, which would have been the best security for the zealous services of their subordinate officers." As regards the inquiry at Andover, the Committee attribute the course taken to "a determination on the part of the Poor-law Commissioners to bring the inquiry, if possible, to a close, and to stop the public criticism and excitement which it provoked." Of Mr. Parker's mode of conducting it, they say there is nothing [illegible] the objections stated by the Poor-law Commissioners which affords a justif[illegible]tion of their conduct in calling on him to resign. The dismissals of Mr. Park[illegible] and Mr Day are condemned in other resolutions. The last is a general resolution [illegible] "That on a review of the proceedings of the Commissioners [illegible] the Andover inquiries, and towards Mr. Parker and Mr. Day, the [illegible] of opinion that their conduct has been irregular and arbitrary, [illegible] to the statute under which they exercise their functions [illegible] The [illegible] resolution was proposed by Mr. D[illegible] and carried by 8 to [illegible]

The Woman Charged with Poisoning her Husband [illegible] Court on Thursday, Hannah Barker, aged 2[illegible], was indicted for [illegible]tering to George Barker, her husband, [illegible] acid, with intent to murder him. They were married in the month of October last, and resided in Holywell-lane, Shoreditch. The facts of the case recently appeared in our paper. They were in great distress, and lived unhappily together. She put the poison in his tea. The [illegible], after a short consultation, found the prisoner guilty on the second count, with a strong recommendation to mercy. Baron Platt, who was affected to tears, sentenced the prisoner to be transported for 10 years.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Standard asserts positively that there will be a dissolution of Parliament in October. The Globe, however, no doubt better informed, treats the rumour as a ruse

A Copenhagen letter of the 10th states that by an order of the 3rd of this month, the use of corporal punishment in the Danish army is prohibited in some cases, and allowed only in certain specified flagrant delinquen[illegible]

Prince Napoleon Louis Bonaparte has left London for Bath, where his Highness intends remaining a few weeks for the restoration of his health.

It is advertised in the Lancaster papers that no less than 33 of the leading firms at Blackburn are about to reduce the working in their mills to four days, and they have given notice to their operatives to that effect.

The Brussels Chamber of Representatives has agreed to the treaty between the Netherlands and Belgium, by a majority of 65 to 6; six members declined voting. Within a short time the commercial relations of Belgium have been regulated with four important Powers. The Zollverein, France, the United States, and the Netherlands.

The total amount now subscribed by Manchester and the surrounding district to the Cobden national tribute fund is £43,563 17s. 3d. The aggregate of the subscriptions throughout the country already reaches £62,000 at the least.

The apples introduced into the London markets during the present season are affected in a manner unknown for many years. The disease shows itself in the speedy decay of the fruit after it is gathered

Some of the Paris papers allude to accounts from Tahiti, according to which, the attempt of the French to land at Wahine proved a failure, they being repulsed with a loss of 110 men. Governor Bruat intended avenging this defeat, and had begun to organise a large expedition; but England is said to have interfered, and not only has the expedition been abandoned, but the fort at Wahine is to be dismantled. France is said to have given up her claims to the island, and a treaty to that effect was to be concluded with the husband of Pomaré, who is king of Wahine.

The German journals announce that the potato disease has broken out, and is now making frightful ravages in Savoy. The Archbishop of Chambery has ordered public prayers in all the churches to avert the calamity with which the country is menaced.

Another claimant to the Earldom of Perth has appeared in the person of Thomas Drummond, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

Such is the competition among the Thames steamers, that passengers are now carried from London-bridge to Richmond and back for eightpence.

A large flight of locusts passed over the town of Sunderland on Monday evening last. They hovered over the neighbourhood of Hendon, and numbers alighted on the hedges there, till, on a crowd beginning to collect, they took flight towards the south. They appeared to conduct their migration in close company. Several of them were caught.

We learn from Athens that, in a division in the Chamber of Representatives, on a proposition by the Committee on the Budget for a reduction of the sum allowed to Ambassadors in foreign countries, the Ministry, notwithstanding a very powerful speech by M. Coletti against the proposition, had only a majority of 48 to 44.

The Augsburg Gazette informs us from Rome, that a general expectation is entertained there that the Pope will follow up his recent important political measures with a decree, giving to the city of Rome a municipal Government, in harmony with what exists in some of the other capitals in Europe.

The Connecticut House of Representatives, by a vote of 111 to 63, have agreed to submit to the people the question of so amending the constitution as to abolish all distinction of colour in respect to the privilege of voting.

It appears from a Parliamentary paper, that the gross receipts of the Post Office during the year 1845, amounted to £1,927,906 4s. 5½d. The charges of management were £1,114,849 2s. 6d. After sundry other deductions were made, there remained, as net profit to the Exchequer, £47,581 17s.

The Augsburg Gazette states that during the last month typhus fever raged with such violence at St. Petersburg as to carry off 900 persons per day. We have heard nothing of this, however, from any other source.

Letters from Frankfort announce that the Diet will at once take into consideration the important question of the laws on the press in Germany. A project is spoken of which, amongst other enactments, is to again subject to the censorship all writings of more than twenty pages of impression; and it is said that the law of September 19, 1819, will continue to govern the periodical press.

Preparations for the extension of the South Western Railway to the vicinity of Waterloo Bridge are actively progressing; a number of houses in the Wandsworth-road and Vauxhall-gate are already demolished, and the occupiers of premises in the Westminster-bridge-road are now vacating them. It is intended to cross this thoroughfare by a viaduct extending in a diagonal direction from the Upper Marsh, near the Old Marsh Gate, towards Waterloo-bridge.

A letter from Gibraltar informs us that the Dutch squadron, under the command of his Royal Highness Prince Henry, had arrived there on the 30th of July.

It appears from an official return that in 1843, 604,318 persons visited the British Museum; 660,529 in 1844; and 763,831 in 1845.

The Cologne Gazette states that the Austrian Government is about contracting a new loan, the late Polish revolt and the construction of railroads having absorbed all the ordinary resources of the state. In order to increase public confidence, it is in contemplation by the Government to publish a budget, which will be accompanied by some modification in the present system of taxation. There is also a report of a reduction being about to be made in the military force of the country.

According to a German paper, the Pope has received an autograph letter from Louis Philippe containing expressions of the highest esteem for his Holiness. A letter from Sinigaglia announced the arrival in that city, from Corfu, of 25 refugees, who had availed themselves of the late amnesty. They were welcomed by the inhabitants with the liveliest joy. The enthusiasm of the people of Rome had even manifested itself in the fashions. The ladies in their dresses, &c., preferred the pontifical colours of white and yellow, and the men also wore cravats of the same colour.

The advices from the River Plate state that Mr. Hamilton, the British Minister at Rio, had had a severe paralytic attack, but he was getting better when the last accounts came away.

The Society for Improving the Condition of the Labouring Classes, with which the Labourers' Friend Society is now united, has just received the munificent legacy of one thousand pounds, bequeathed to it in the will of the late James Tomlin, Esq., of West Malling, Kent.

The Kent papers state that the most surprising improvement has taken place within the last week—grounds that were so much blighted that they did not look as if they would grow one pocket per acre a fortnight ago may now produce six to eight cwt., and the good grounds promise to do as much this year as ever they did. There is fresh burr, and the hops are growing to a much larger size than usual—three grape hops measuring a foot. Picking will be general the first week in September.

We find the following in a letter from Vienna of the 2nd August:—"The Emperor of Austria has issued an ordonnance for the creation of a High Court of Censorship, similar to that in Prussia, to which appeals may be made against the decisions of the censors. It is stated that a similar tribunal will be instituted in each of the States of Germany, thus protecting writers against the arbitrary decisions of the censors, whose scruples sometimes suppress productions which the Government would have an interest in seeing published."

Private letters from Madrid state that the representatives of England and France at Madrid have offered their mediation to arrange the differences between the Spanish and Portuguese Governments; but this important fact is not confirmed by the Madrid papers.

The Admiralty have just issued an order for the distribution of the medals to the officers and men of her Majesty's ships, who served in the late operations on the coast of China. It will be remembered that some months since the Master of the Mint received orders from her Majesty to prepare a die, which was shortly afterwards forwarded to her Majesty, who was pleased to signify her approval previous to the medals being struck.

The privilege of receiving letters from the metropolis daily, per morning mail, has, by an order of the Postmaster General, been just granted to the following additional post towns, viz.:—Congleton, Macclesfield, Nantwich, and Sandbach. Clifton, near Bristol, is now constituted an office for the receipt and payment of money orders.

A few days ago, Baboo Nogendentauth Tagore, the son of the late much-lamented Dwarkanauth Tagore, arrived in Liverpool. Baboo, who dresses like his father, in the costume of his native country, is a fine lad, apparently not more than seventeen years of age.

A day or two ago one of the prisoners confined in Kirkdale gaol set fire to a portion of the building known by the name of the Western Lodge, in which the wardens of the prison usually slept. He did so that he might be transported. He has been fully committed to take his trial at the assizes. He is called Saml. Greathead, and was tried for arson about a year ago, and acquitted on the ground of insanity.

The trial of the persons [illegible]d of being concerned in the forgery of the scrip of the Buckinghamshire Railway, has been postponed till the September Sessions, in consequence of the absence of a material witness.

Letters from Portugal state that a proclamation has been extensively circulated with a view to get up a manifestation in favour of Don Miguel

A trial has taken place at Gloucester, which lasted seve[illegible] object of which was to disturb the will of the late James Wood, the [illegible] and to give the real estate to Mr. John Wood, residing at Brierley Hall, St[illegible]hire. The plaintiff, however, was unsuccessful.

We regret to find from Provincial papers published in various parts o[illegible]y, that the potato disease exists to an alarming extent. In some districts, it is stated that the crop of potatoes will be totally unfit for food. A letter from Birmingham says:—"I fear it may now be fairly stated that the entire crop throughout this and the surrounding country has sustained great injury. I am told that here, as in Ireland, the effluvium arising from the ground is extremely offensive."

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

Benefices Vacant.—The following benefices have become vacant: The rectory of Goldhanger, with the rectory of Little Totham, Essex, in the gift of the Rev. T. Leigh; the vicarage of Shabbington, Bucks, by the death of the Rev. Phipps Long, M.A., in the gift of Mrs Wroughton; the rectory of Chorley, Lancashire, by the death of the Rev. John Whalley Master, M.A., in the gift of the rev. gentleman's executors; the incumbency of Aspall, Suffolk, in the gift of the executors of the Rev. J. Chevallier; the vicarage of Cransford, Sussex, in the gift of Mrs. Chevallier; the vicarage of South Scarls, with Girton and Besthorpe, Nottinghamshire, in the gift of the prebendary thereof; the incumbency of Trinity Church, Swansea, Glamorganshire, by the resignation of the Rev. George Townsend Warner, B.A., who has been appointed one of the masters of Harrow School.

Consecration of a New Church.—The Bishop of Bath and Wells consecrated a new church at Eastover, Bridgwater, on Monday last, in presence of a large number of the clergy. The church is dedicated to St. John, and the Rev. J. C. Collins, M.A., has been appointed to the incumbency.

Mr. Newman.—Mr. Newman is about to pay a long visit to Rome, with the view of completing his preparation for the priesthood.

Secession from the Church.—Dr. Duke, of Hastings, with his lady, and all the members of his family, has, during the last few days, conformed to the Roman Catholic Church.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—DEFEAT OF THE KAFFIRS.

We have received accounts from the Cape to the 16th of June, which give very interesting details of the defeat of the Kaffirs, at Fish River. The attack took place under Colonel Somerset, and the fighting lasted five hours. There was loss on both sides; but the Kaffirs have, without doubt, experienced a severe check.

A supplement to the Cape Town Mail of the 13th of June, gives the full particulars of the engagement:—

"Mail Office, June 15, 1846.

"The Frontier post which arrived this morning brings intelligence of an engagement having taken place near Fort Peddie, in which the Kaffirs have at last felt the weight of the arm they had so long and daringly provoked, and which has been so unwillingly lifted against them.

"The Frontier Times of the 9th inst. contains the following particulars, which we hasten to lay before our readers:—

"DEFEAT OF THE ENEMY, NEAR FORT PEDDIE.

"Tuesday, 6 p.m.

"As we were going to press we received intelligence of a brilliant engagement that took place yesterday between the division under Colonel Somerset and a numerous body of the enemy, near Fort Peddie. The particulars, as they have come to hand in private letters, are as follows. The despatches were brought in to the General by Lieutenant Bisset, Cape Mounted Rifles.

"Fort Peddie, June 8.

"Colonel Somerset has just arrived from the most successful trip against the Kaffirs which he has taken yet. A party of the Burghers and Fingoes were ordered off last night to scour the Fish River Bush, in the direction of Stock's and Umkai's Kraals, and Colonel Somerset himself joined them to-day, early, with the Cape Mounted Rifles and two great guns. Not far from here (I think about the place where the waggons were burned) the Kaffirs were seen in great force, and then commenced the day.

"The smoke of the guns could be distinctly seen from the tower, and from before nine A.M. till about two P.M. the firing from cannon and small arms was kept up without ceasing. At last, Colonel Lindsay sent out Captain Hogg with his troop, and King and his gun, which turned out a most fortunate circumstance, as it seems that Stock, with whose men they were engaged, sent off mounted expresses for Pato to come to his assistance; but, just before they arrived, Somerset had driven Stock from the bush, and met the others under Umhala, with Captain Hogg in their rear; so that they could not retreat, and were thus between two fires. This was somewhere about Mount Somerset—the Dragoons charging through them, forming, and then charging back again. The Kaffirs being so knocked up with running and fighting, they could do nothing, and were cut down by scores. The flats are covered with dead, and all the kraals on fire, and very strong suspicions of Stock himself having fallen. I have not heard the estimated number of slain, but it is thought about 500

"Sir Harry Darell is wounded in the arm and leg by assegais. Bunbury is also wounded in the arm and leg by assegais. Captain Walpole, Royal Engineers, is wounded in the thigh by a ball, and severely wounded in the neck by an assegai, which laid bare the windpipe. None of the officers, however, are dangerously hurt. Five of the 7th wounded; one, I believe, dangerously, the assegai having entered about the small of the back, and coming out opposite in front.

"A Cape Mounted sergeant was killed—the only one—so this is all the casualties on our side.

"Two prisoners have been taken, who say that the Kaffirs were just assembling in the bush to intercept the waggons from Trompetter's to-morrow. All the Burghers, when coming in, had bundles of assegais, and captured guns. A great many good-looking horses were also taken.

"Fort Peddie, June 8.

"Colonel Somerset has been out to-day in the direction of Stock's Kraal. About an hour after he left we heard heavy firing, which lasted for two or three hours. It appears that they were challenged by a lot of Kaffirs in the bush; they went in after them, and gave them a regular mauling, shot a great number of them, and coming out on the flat when they had polished these gentlemen off, they fell in with a body of about 500 to 600, whom they also charged, and shot like so many dogs. I believe, at the lowest computation, 350 were left dead on the field. This last body that they fell in with were Pato's Kaffirs, who heard the firing at Stock's Kraal, and were hastening to his assistance, when, luckily for us, they were caught upon the open flat, and the 7th Dragoons and Cape Corps charged them and literally rode over them. I trust that this affair, coupled with the attack on Peddie, will cool their courage considerably. One corporal of the Cape Mounted Rifles, was shot dead, and Sir Harry Darell, Captain Walpole, Royal Engineers, and L. Bunbury, together with some men of the 7th, are slightly wounded. I think, four of them slightly, and one very dangerously. Colonel Somerset seems the only man that can bring them to their senses. They were all going down to attack supply waggons that were to come up from Trompetter's to-morrow morning, but I fancy, after to-day, they will not attempt it.

"Fort Peddie, June 8.

"I must now give you an account of the slaughter that took place shortly after. We were all very tired, having been on our legs from 9 o'clock last night to mid-day to-day, with hardly any refreshment. We, therefore, hastened to the camp; however, we were disappointed in having refreshment. We saw the Colonel's division a mile or two ahead, marching quietly on. Presently we saw a party ride ahead, and soon after a race. Then firing commenced. I rode up as fast as I could to the ridge; a spectacle was then presented to my view which I shall not forget. A large party of Kaffirs had collected near the Kieskamma, intending to move to-day towards the Fish River to intercept the waggons, and stop the communication. This party heard the firing and thought that the waggons were attacked. They hastened to help, but what was their astonishment when they found a large force in front of them. Fortunately there was no bush to shelter them; they fired one volley and dismounted from their horses—about 300 mounted and 700 foot. The Dragoons then charged them, and killed many; a panic seized them—they ran off, and were shot like sheep, Dragoons, Cape Corps, Boers—all firing at them, following them up full six miles. They became completely exhausted—they could not run. The slaughter was awful! They were followed up to near the Kieskamma. The slaughter was on the Gwanga, near Mr. Tainton's late place. The lowest estimate is, I believe, 300 killed; very few were seen to get away.

"We took three prisoners—one at Umpakati, belonging to Crain. He said the intention of the Kaffirs was to drive the Umlungu into the sea. We asked how it was to day. He said it was all finished to day. Pato has crossed the Kieskamma. Umhala and Seyolo were with this command. How they fared we cannot tell. It is supposed that Stock was this day killed.

"Fort Peddie, June 8.

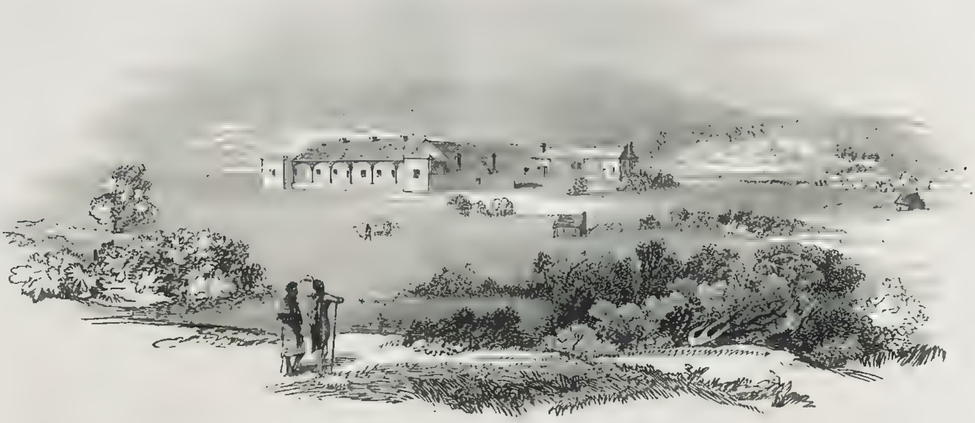
"Colonel Somerset's division left this morning to attack Eno's Kaffirs, and fell in with the enemy in great numbers, who were, however, in the Kloofs. The Infantry, Hottentots, and Fingoes swept the bush, killing an immense number. As the party were returning, they fell in with about 600 Caffres on a flat near Somerset Mount, killing at least 350. The enemy were pursued for four miles, the colonial forces riding within ten paces of them, quietly dismounting and shooting at them. The Kaffirs fought with great determination until turned.

"One of the Cape Mounted Rifles killed. Captain Sir H. Darell, Cornet Bunbury of the 7th, Captain Walpole, Royal Engineers, were wounded—none of them dangerously.

"Sir H. Darrell was wounded with an assegai in the thigh and arm; Captain Walpole by a spent ball, and by an assegai in the neck. Captain Donovan had a narrow escape of being dragged off his horse, but was saved by the bravery of a man named Brown, formerly of the 75th Regiment, who rushed up and killed the Kaffir. One of the 7th Dragoons was badly wounded. Lieutenant J. O'Reilly, Bissett, and Armstrong behaved gallantly, killing many Kaffirs each. One Kaffir killed himself in battle to prevent himself from being killed by the troops. The Chief Stock is reported to have been killed, and there seems reason to believe that Colonel Somerset's success had baulked a preconcerted scheme of attack on Trompetter's Post, so as to cut off all supplies from this place. One Fingo was killed. Upwards of 100 stand of arms (muskets) were taken; also 200 bundles of assegais, and 20 horses, several of them Cape Corps horses."

Another account says:—"Intelligence has been received of the safe arrival of Colonel Somerset at Fort Peddie. It appears from a Kaffir spy who has been [illegible]en that Colonel Somerset had a very narrow escape in conducting his long waggon train through the bush. The Kaffirs had been informed that Colonel Somerset would march by Trompetter's, and it is said that the whole of the immense body of Kaffirs who attacked Fort Peddie was lying in ambush for him in the bush beyond Trompetter's, where they attacked the waggon train under Captain Campbell. Perceiving their mistake a large number of them wh[illegible]led round to Committees, and just reached it as he was passing through. Had [illegible] whole body been in readiness for him, as they intended, the struggle would have been a severe one; indeed, it is very doubtful whether it would have been possible to defend 105 waggons against such a force. The recent attacks on Fort Peddie appear to have been attended with a greater loss of Kaffirs than was supposed. Many bodies have been found near the post, and their loss is now estimated at from 400 to 500 men. The number of Kaffirs who attacked the post has been rather under estimated in the despatch of Colonel Lindsay; it has been accertained that there were at least 9000 men in the field; the loss of cattle has also been understated, the Kaffirs having carried off upwards of 6000. A chief of the Slambie tribes is believed to have fallen in the second attack, as the usual cry of lamentation when any great chief is killed (an unearthly prolonged yell) was heard from the large division, supposed to be Dushani's tribe, as they retreated. Those acquainted with the Kaffirs imagine that Susani, Nonibi's son, the great chief of Dushani's tribe, is the person killed. The Kaffirs attacked the Fingoes' cattle the same night, as it was supposed they would, but were repulsed, the Fingoes killing four of them. We have heard the good conduct of the Fingoes spoken of with approbation; one instance of generous forbearance should not pass unnoticed. Several Kaffirs had been pursued by the Fingoes, until from exhaustion they fell, and endeavoured to creep off on their hands and knees; the Fingoes would not shoot them in this defenceless state."

THE WAR IN KAFFIRLAND.



BEAUFORT COTTAGE (MR. HOWSE'S) AND FRONTIER POST, NEAR FORT BEAUFORT.

An extra edition of the Graham's Town Journal contains the following: "We have the satisfaction of announcing that despatches have just reached town, brought by Lieutenant Bisset, Cape Mounted Rifles, containing particulars of a very spirited engagement with the Kaffirs at the kraal of the Kaffir Chief Stock, and in which the enemy was utterly defeated, with a loss variously estimated from 300 to 500 men. There appears to be no mistake as to the character of this engagement, and which may be considered a fair trial of strength between the combatants, and who appear to have been very equal in number. The vast superiority of our forces was never for an instant doubtful. The Kaffirs, seduced by their recent astonishing successes, appear to have exhibited, at the outset, great daring, not shunning the engagement, but challenging the troops to come on—an invitation which, in this instance, there was no backwardness in accepting. This applies, however, only to Stock's Kaffirs, as in the subsequent and most successful engagement, the enemy was taken entirely by surprise, and appears to have been almost totally destroyed.

The following "summary of the week" is given in the African Journal of June 11. It must be observed that the summary was written before intelligence of Captain Somerset's last success had arrived:—

"The events of the past week have been of a less exciting character than for several weeks that have preceded it. As we intimated in our last journal, the Kaffirs have retired, glutted with the spoil of the colonial farmers, across the border. There are stil a few straggling parties on this side of the border, chiefly infesting the bushy country between the Zuurberg and the Addo, and which keep that district in a state of alarm; but it seems to be pretty certain that these are not in any great force, and that the great body of the invaders have been recalled to concert some new enterprise, and which it will be well for our Government to consider with the most careful attention. The power of the confederated chiefs should be accurately estimated, and arrangements corresponding thereto be at once made to meet it. The following, though a rough calculation of this force, will be quite near enough for all practical purposes:—

Creli's tribes	18,000	warriors.
Sandili, Macomo, and others of the Gaika tribes	10,000	do.
[illegible] and others of the T'Slambie tribes	8000	do.
Pato and the Congo tribes	2000	do.
Mapassa, and part of the Tambu tribes	2000	do.
Total	40,000

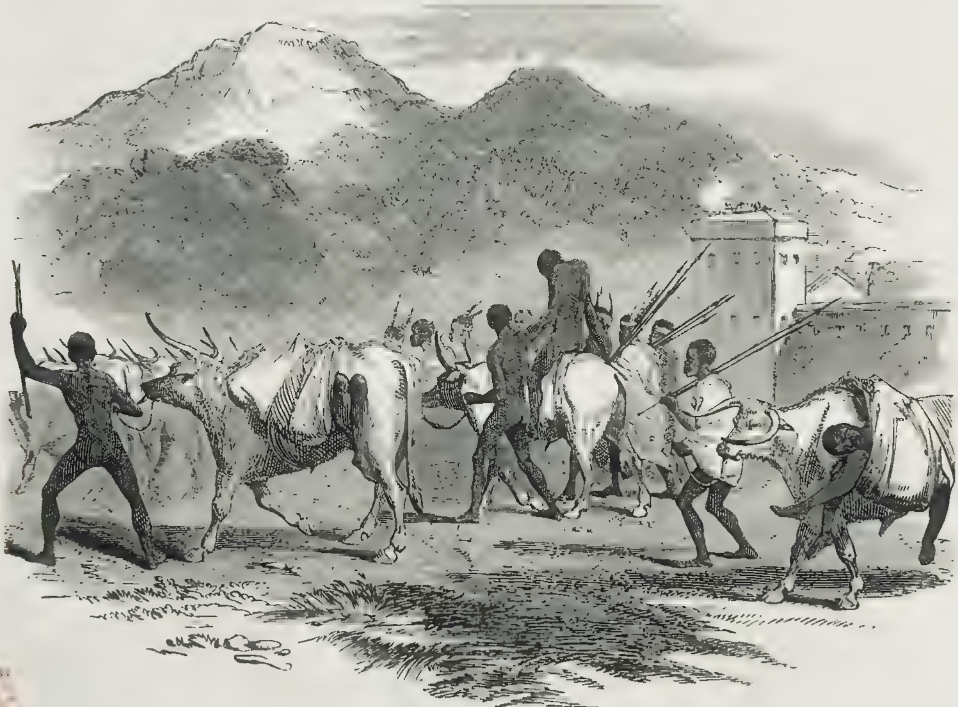
"If we may allow for all who may remain neutral of this host, 2000 men, it is, we apprehend, as far as we can go, thus leaving 38,000 infuriated savages to be resisted, driven back, and, if possible, subjugated by the power of the colony. It should also be borne in mind, that the principal Tambu, or Tambookie Chief, Umterara, is at present doubtful; but should he join in the league, he will throw an additional 12,000 men into the scale against it. To meet this large force, we have, according to the estimates made, say 20,000 men, including 4000 disciplined troops of all arms. But then we have other resources. We have several ships of war upon our coast, and reinforcements of military may be speedily expected. We have a right, too, to expect the co-operation of Faku, the Fetcani, or Amaponda Chief, and who, if he take the field, will at least furnish full employment for Creli, and thus diminishing by 10,000 warriors the estimated force opposed to the colony.

"Besides this, it must be borne in mind that all the warriors in Kaffirland cannot possibly engage, any more than all the men among us, in the active duties of the field. The wealth of the Kaffir is cattle, and these must be tended, an employment in which the women and children are never permitted to engage. Subtracting, therefore, all so employed, it is probable that the total amount of the Kaffir force which may actually take the field will amount to 30,000 men. And when we reflect that these are all practised to the use of arms from their childhood—that their mode of conducting warfare is extremely harassing to disciplined troops; when we estimate their boldness, and the tact displayed in all their enterprises, and then add to all this the difficulties of the country, the result may well make our Government proceed with the most watchful circumspection, as well as awaken a full determination to carry forward whatever measures may be resolved on with that determined courage and perseverance, without which the colony cannot reasonably hope, ultimately, for decided success."

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

The first Engraving shows Beaufort Cottage, on Lieur Fontein, the property of Mr. J. Howse, distant about twelve miles from Fort Beaufort. This is one of the defensible posts on the frontier, which the Kaffirs attacked on May 5; and, after a sharp contest, with a loss of three men on the settlers' side, the enemy succeeded in capturing 330 head of cattle, 7 horses, and 17,000 sheep.

The second scene, sketched on April 26, when immense herds of colonial cattle were driven through the Fish River by large bodies of Kaffirs. They passed close under the guns of the post at Trompetter's Drift, and suffered much loss from the grape and canister shot thrown in amongst them. The dead and wounded were instantly placed on pack bullocks, and carried off.



KAFFIRS DRIVING THEIR SPOIL AND CARRYING THEIR WOUNDED AND SLAIN ACROSS TROMPETTER'S DRIFT.

CAPTURE OF THE FORT OF KOTE KANGRA.

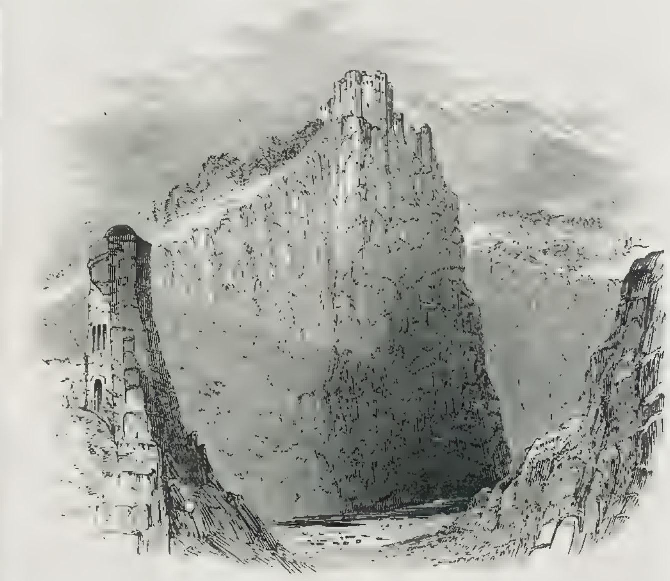
(WITH SKETCHES BY AN OFFICER OF NATIVE INFANTRY.)

The chief item of news received by the last Overland Mail from India, is the surrender to the British troops of the Fort of Kote Kangra, hitherto reputed by the natives to be by far the strongest hill-fort in India. By the courtesy of a Correspondent distinguished in the British service, we are enabled to illustrate this courageous event, from a series of Sketches taken upon the site of the affair.

The Fort was evacuated on the 28th of May, after some laborious operations, which are thus detailed in the Delhi Extra Gazette of June:—

"The guns (heavy) commenced the ascent of the Mulkera Hill, in progress to their respective batteries in the town, on the morning of the 28th. This fact became known for certain to the garrison about ten o'clock. They ceased their fire, and sent a messenger to Deena Nath, to intimate their inclination to surrender if their lives were guaranteed them. The agent to the Governor General declined any other terms but an unconditional submission. An hour was allowed them to come out and lay down their arms. Within this time, about three o'clock, the Killadar (Soondur Singh), accompanied by his Sirdars, came out; they laid down their arms at the gate, and were made over to Captain Goddard, commanding the town, who had previously received all necessary instructions; by him they were immediately conducted to the presence of Major Lawrence, who had arrived to receive them. Even then the garrison were wavering, and brought a gun to bear on the party, suspecting treachery. Soondur Singh, however, proceeded to tender his submission on the part of the garrison; the same having been accepted he and his followers were immediately permitted to return to the fort, and acquaint the inmates that each person would be allowed to bring out one bundle but nothing more. In an hour's time, men, women, children, and bundles in great numbers, made their appearance, the men laying down their arms, as they came out, and giving up their names—Major Lawrence, Mr. John Lawrence, and others, being quietly seated to look on. They then all passed through the town with their bundles, (containing clothes and cooking utensils,) on their heads, protected by extended files of Sepoys, to an appointed place of rendezvous under Fort Mulkera. Captain Goddard, with three companies, then marched in, and the British colours were hoisted upon the highest point. All this was so sudden and unexpected among the native part of the community, that their astonishment is said to have been indescribable. Soondur Singh is represented as rather a fine, but debauched-looking man.

SOONDUR SINGH, KILLADAR OF KANGRA.



FORT OF KOTE KANGRA, FROM THE TOP OF THE SOUTH END OF THE RAMPART.

"The fort was inspected by the political authorities immediately after its surrender, and found to have ten gates—the masonry massive, but dilapidated. It was believed that some guns, and a party of sappers and miners, would be left with the 44th Native Infantry."

One of our Illustrations shows a scene from the extraordinary feat of bringing up the guns, some 56 times, across rivers and over ravines and precipices, a distance of 50 miles in nine days, by the united labour of horses, bullocks, elephants, and men, all scientifically directed, and working day and night.

The second Engraving shows the Fort of Kote Kangra, from the top of the rampart, near the south end of it, looking north. The rock on which, the fort stands is the same as that of the surrounding hills, viz., a conglomerate of large rolled stones, bound together in clay slate, or in sandstone, and, in some places, by lime. The dip of the rock is 18°; its direction N. by E.; and its north and west sides are washed by a river: just above the outer gate is a deep ditch or natural chasm, crossed by a bridge, which was broken down by the garrison. On the highest point of the rock is the citadel, which contains several very curious Hindoo temples, finely sculptured in stone: the whole of the masonry of the fort, too, is of cut stone. Opposite is the chabootra, in front of the town; and, in the distance, is a range of hills, about 15 miles off, and 14,000 feet in height.

The Portrait of Soondur Singh was sketched after he had surrendered himself and his garrison: he is about six feet in height, and square built.

Thus, has another fort been compelled to surrender without bloodshed, to our energetic science and practice of war, and the courageous and indomitable spirit with which all the troops (mostly Native) have been inspired when serving under Brigadier Wheeler. The occupation of this almost impregnable fort has produced a great effect in the north of India, for the British troops are looked upon as invincible. Many of the petty Rajahs were anxious to make peace, and to show their willingness to obey the British by surrendering their heavy guns, &c.

The annexed Illustrations are from sketches by Lieut.-Colonel Alexander Jack, 30th Native Infantry, to whom our special thanks are tendered.

BRINGING UP THE GUNS.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, Aug. 23.—Eleventh Sunday after Trinity.
Monday, 24.—St. Bartholomew.
Tuesday, 25.—Sir W. Herschell died, 1822.
Wednesday, 26.—Prince Albert born, 1819.
Thursday, 27.—Admiral Blake born, 1599; died, 1657.
Friday, 28.—St. Augustine.
Saturday, 29.—St. John Baptist beheaded.

High Water at London-bridge, for the Week ending August 29.

Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M	A	M	A	M.	A	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A
h. m	h. m.	h. m	h. m	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m	h. m.	h. m
3 2[illegible]	3 [illegible]	3 55	4 10	4 26	4 41	4 56	5 13	5 30	5 48	6 8	6 29

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. E. B.," to obtain admission to the Reading-room of the British Museum, should address his application (attested by a respectable householder) to Sir Henry Ellis, at the Museum.

"H. S.," Cork.—The great gallery of the Louvre, in Paris, extends in a line of more than 1400 feet.

"T. R. D."—We do not think the mark would be a disqualification.

"G. W. W.," Cheapside.—The uninjured property will, of course, belong to the insurer; the Fire Office indemnifying him for the portion destroyed or injured.

"Agnes" will find the information required in "The Handbook to Paris." Monteith's "Guide to Foreign Railways" will also be useful.

"G. W. L.," Barnsley.—The public have been, from time to time, tantalised with minute "discoveries" as to the authorship of "Junius's Letters;" but the author is still the depositary of his own secret.

"Vinosus Sutor," Kinsale.—It does not seem necessary that, in a Charade, the word should consist of one or two syllables, according to the definition given in most of our English Dictionaries and Cyclopædias.

"R. A. G.," Lymington, is thanked.

"An Adventurer" should advertise his invention.

"Bartomeas," Edinburgh, must be at the loss of the book, if the bookseller can prove that he duly "posted" it. We cannot furnish estimates of Designs or Engravings.

"Operamus."—We do not know Taglioni's real age. Mario's projected marriage has been abandoned.

"Philo Musicon."—Inquire of Mr. Parker, in the Strand.

"Organistes."—Any Music Publisher will answer the queries: apply to Novello, in Cheapside, or in Dean-street, Soho.

"H. M. L."—Apply to Cocks and Co., Music Publishers.

"A Citizen" and "A Resident in Fleet-street" complain of the three houses on the north side of that thoroughfare between Praed's Banking-house and Clifford's-inn-passage, projecting considerably beyond the line of St. Dunstan's Church.

"Aëronauticus Novus."—We do not know.

"Fawn," Leyton.—Vegetable Marrow; Waits.

"E. S.," Worcester, is thanked.

"A Constant Reader" should apply to one of the Advertising Tailors. We do not chronicle Male Fashions.

"An Ancient Subscriber," Navin.—The Chiltern Hundreds are a portion of the highlands of Bucks, belonging to the Crown; by accepting the stewardship of which, a Member of the House of Commons customarily vacates his seat.

"Tony Lactis," W. Cowes.—We have not room.

"W. D.," Penrith.—Dymock, in his "Bibliotheca Classica," gives the first, second, and third syllables of "Coriolis," short; and the fourth of "Coriolanus," long. John Kemble insisted in making the second syllable long; but we forget the authority for his stage practice.

"H. R." is thanked for the "Nook"; but we cannot promise.

"Montague Smith."—"Bloxam's Architectural Glossary, Abridged," price 8s.; the price of the "Glossary," in 2 vols. 8vo., is 32s.; of the "Companion to the Glossary," 16s., 8vo.

"Wisbeachiensis."—Affectation and silliness are often displayed in pronunciation.

"Locomotive" had better inquire of one of the engine drivers.

We cannot entertain "the Sailors' Home."

"L. P.," Wandsworth Road.—The landlord is not liable.

"Troublesome Tom" verifies his nom de circonstance: we know nothing of the trash in question.

"T. B."—The rate of payment for intelligence of a certain description contributed to a newspaper, is not one penny, but three-halfpence per line.

"A Subscriber," Wales.—The "Custodes Rotulorum" are the "Keepers of the County Records."

"E. M. P."—"The Officers in Waiting," Heralds' Office, Doctors' Commons.

"A. Z."—We think the discharge and pension might be claimed after the service of twenty-one years.

"[illegible]" is thanked, but his Suggestions for Lighting Railway Tunnels are too lengthy for our columns.

"W. D.," Ipswich.—Messrs. Fenn, of Newgate-street, sell all sorts of Wood Engraving Tools. Wood Types are usually cut from pear-tree.

"A Whaler," the Hague.—Mr. Beale's excellent work on the Sperm Whale contains accounts of the Fisheries. Scoresby's "Northern Whale Fishery" describes the Greenland Fishery.

"Omega."—Merimée's "Art of Oil Painting," translated by Taylor, price 12s., is a sound work.

"M. Y." should look into the advertising columns of the newspapers for a vessel about to sail to Port Philip.

"A Reader," Edinburgh, is thanked for the details of the Masonic Ceremony; but we have not room to add them to the already lengthy report of the proceedings.

"G. W. G."—See the first article in our Journal of last week.

"A Constant Reader," Sheffield, if not compellable to serve out his term of apprenticeship by common law or equity, in case of the alteration of the firm, is by custom.

"Φιλο-Οργανον."—The Work on organs has not, we believe, yet appeared.

"Lancewood."—Good Archery Implements may be purchased at No. 4[illegible], Cornhill.

"A Subscriber," Bardley.—The Railway Times, or the Railway Chronicle.

"Stella W."—Rubbing with leather and spirit of wine.

"[illegible] P."—The paragraph in our Journal of last week, erroneously stating the Hon. Sidney Herbert, M.P., to be the eldest son of the late Earl of Pembroke, was copied from an evening paper. The Right Hon. Gentleman is the second son of the late Earl, who, in 1827, was succeeded by his eldest son, the present Earl.

"Omega," Woolwich.—Retailers of tea are obliged to take out a license, which costs 11s. a year.

"Amicus" is thanked.

"A Welsh Subscriber."—"Stable Economy," or "Stable-Talk and Table-Talk."

"An Old Subscriber," Leicester.—A Dyer.

"Mars."—The height of Mr. Wyatt's colossal Wellington Group is about 30 feet; the height of the arch upon which it is to be placed, is about 80 feet.

Ineligible.—"Lines to Florence."

⁂ "Tracts for the Trains," and the continuation of the tale of "Gold," are unavoidably omitted from pressure of News this week.

Our Subscribers and the Public are apprized that from this date, the Numbers comprised in Vols. 1, 2, and 3 of the Illustrated London News, (Nos. 1 to 87, inclusive,) cannot be sold separately, but only in volumes. This alteration, rendered imperative, by the constant demand for back Numbers, will, we trust, suggest to our Subscribers the necessity of keeping their Sets of our Journal perfect, in order to insure its entirety as an unique Illustrated History of Our Own Times.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 22, 1846.

The Government has had courage enough to retrace the "false step" it made in proposing the Arms Bill, an error on which we remarked last week. It was in truth an inconceivable miscalculation or forgetfulness. But it has been withdrawn, to the great joy of all who wish to see a new Government adopt a new, or, at least, a very partially tried policy. The question now is, why did the Ministry propose it all? Of all positions in which a Statesman can place himself, that from which he is compelled to withdraw after it has been deliberately chosen, is the most humiliating. It would be absurd to suppose that such a position is sought; an error of judgment alone could produce it, and that error in the present instance may not improbably have been thus produced; the ministerialists, that is the office-holding or office expecting Whigs, opposed principally the new clauses introduced into the Arms Act in 1843; as the Act in its original form had been passed by every Government, for some half century, they could not very strongly condemn that for which they were quite as responsible as any other party.

In opposing the new details of an old measure, then, Lord John Russell did not declare against the principle of it, thinking, perhaps, that such a time-honoured piece of vexation, a real fragment of the old "garrison" yoke in Ireland, would not be opposed by any one, save the Irish members themselves, who, as far as we have observed, are almost the last persons consulted in any measure affecting their constituents. The extreme speaking against the Arms Bill was confined to them and the Liberal English members beyond the pale of office. It was strongly opposed, but passed; and it might have been renewed, but for the position taken on the Coercion Bill of the present session. On that question the present Premier made declarations totally inconsistent with the principle of coercion: it was the opening of another, and we hope a better, line of policy. The old one had confessedly failed—in no form more signally than that of the Arms Act. It was supposed by all that, unless in some extraordinary circumstances, we had bid a long farewell to such measures as the imprisonment of a whole community from sunset to sunrise. The very Secretary for Ireland himself, Mr. Labouchere, talked, at his election, after taking office, of "making the law beloved." From this happy dream, this bright vision of better days to come, men were awakened by the declaration of the Liberal Ministry, that they meant to renew this most denounced of measures in all its evil integrity.

The effect was most chilling; it was a sudden transition from the tropical climate of hope to the Nova Zembla of disappointment. Could it be possible in those who ousted their rivals on the very question of coercion? Murmurs arose in all quarters—both in Parliament and from the press, and people of both countries. Then only the Government seemed to become conscious of the immense inconsistency; but, their eyes thus opened, they perceived the error; and, to their credit be it said, have lost no time in amending it. It may be that statesmen are, to some extent, unconscious of the effect their own speeches and declarations produce out of doors, and imagine that the interpretation of them should be made according to that "non-natural sense" in favour with some theologians. But the mass of men do not understand such refinements; they take words to be the exponents of thoughts, and the indicators of corresponding actions. They understand them to mean just what they appear to mean; and certainly they never take them to signify less. They will not admit that one language may be held in Opposition and another in office; the people draw sounder conclusions in political ethics than those who rule them imagine. Thus, the first burst of indignation at this unfortunate movement has recalled the Government to its better intentions, and warned them to remove from the "ancient ways" as soon as possible, they being unsafe and untenable, and condemned by the best political surveyors—themselves among the number.

A measure was introduced by the Government on Wednesday, which will prove of signal importance: it is the germ of a department of the Executive specially devoted to Railways and Railway Business. The system has quite outgrown the possibility of dealing with it by such a body as the Board of Trade, having before it enough occupation of its own. The necessity of an independent Railway Board has been long felt, and its establishment foreseen; but the Committee of the House of Commons who had to consider the subject did not make its report till Tuesday evening last. In bringing in the bill constituting the Board the next day, it must be confessed the Government has not lost a moment's time. The rapidity with which it acted denotes, indeed, something of a "foregone conclusion;" as if it had resolved already what to do, and only waited for the report of Mr. Morrison's Committee as the opportunity of doing it. The plan is shortly this; the Board is to consist of five, including the President; that officer will be salaried, as will two of the other members also; the remaining two will be members of the Government for the time being, without any additional salary for their services on the Railway Board; the President will be a removable and ministerial officer; the two non-ministerial members of the Board will always remain, a fixed centre of information amid the changes politics may work among their colleagues. Their executive staff of clerks, &c., will be principally transferred to them from the Railway Department of the Board of Trade, as they are already experienced in the labour required of them. The functions of the Board, as far as they have been stated, are a supervision of Railway Companies, who are to be kept strictly to the terms of their several Acts of Parliament in all their proceedings, such as raising money, executing works, &c. It is to be hoped that the Board will have a more effectual control over lines already in operation, as to their management: in some cases the public require protection against irregularities and mismanagement. General Pasley, when an accident occurs, can only look at the spot and say how it happened: the Board of Trade could not compel a Company to take any positive measures; if it was obeyed, it was from a disposition on the part of the managers to do so. We hope to see this amended; in such matters the public is almost powerless, and requires such a champion as a Government department will furnish. Too extensive powers need not be granted at first; but there must be a positive check somewhere. The decision of what lines are to be laid down remains as before; this question is not yet grappled with; but an independent branch of the Government once established, much may be expected from the "theory of development."

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE LORD MAYOR'S GRAND DINNER TO HER MAJESTY'S MINISTERS.

On Wednesday the Lord Mayor gave a splendid entertainment to her Majesty's Ministers, their ladies, and a very large party. It was one of the most magnificent banquets given even in the present most brilliant and hospitable mayoralty. The present Lord Mayor has in the performance of the duties of the office known no party. The moment the Whigs came into power his Lordship, although the supporter of the Conservatives on all occasions which furnished opportunities of advocating their views, invited Lord John Russell and the rest of the Government to the Mansion House. The invitation was most warmly accepted.

After the cloth was removed, grace having been said by the Lord Mayor's chaplain, and the loving cup having gone round with the usual formalities,

The accustomed toasts to the Queen, the Royal Family, &c. were given.

The Lord Mayor then begged to propose "Prosperity to the Church," and to couple with that toast the name of the Bishop of Oxford. (Cheers.)

The Bishop of Oxford, in returning thanks, observed that so unable did he feel duly to acknowledge the unexpected honour just conferred upon him, that if he consulted his own feelings he would silently acknowledge it; but rather than be guilty of any seeming neglect, after the manifestation of such kindness, he would venture to say thus much: He attributed the magnificence and abundant hospitality this day displayed, the greatness of the country and of its destinies, to the institutions of the country, as connected with the Church. (Cheers.) It was a proof of what that Church was intented to accomplish, and what, with God's blessing, he would venture to say it should accomplish in the world. (Cheers.)

The next toast given by the Lord Mayor, was "Lord John Russell and her Majesty's Ministers." (Great cheering followed the announcement of the toast.)

Lord John Russell rose, and was received with renewed plaudits. His Lordship said—I rise to return thanks in the name of my colleagues, and in my own name, for the honour you have just done us. Your Lordship has rightly said that the office you hold is not a political office, and should not be so used; and confident I am that every one present can bear testimony to the perfect fairness and impartiality with which you have held the reins of authority and power in this great and important city. (Cheers.) It is quite true, as your Lordship has said, that I am not only the First Minister of the Crown, but that I have also the honour to be one of the representatives for this great city, and I believe I am the first person who ever held the office of the First Minister of the Crown and at the same time been intrusted with the representation of the City of London. (Cheers.) The duties which my colleagues and myself have taken upon ourselves are both arduous and anxious, but in the performance of those duties we are encouraged not only by the favour which is shown to those who intend to perform honestly their charge, but we are likewise supported by the aid which in every department of the State is given to the Ministers of the Crown. My noble friend at the head of the Department for Foreign Affairs knows that any representation he may make to foreign powers will be received with that weight which is due to the authority of one who speaks in the name of this great and respected nation. (Cheers.) Those who are intrusted with the commercial concerns of this country, know that they have no slumbering or sluggish energies to rouse. They know that it is only their part to watch the course of the sagacity, enterprise, and power which are displayed by British merchants, and which are added year by year to the wealth, the prosperity, and the strength of this empire. (Loud cheers.) Those of my colleagues who are charged with the naval and military departments, feel confident that those engaged in its army and navy would emulate the example shown in former wars by their predecessors, and that the valour displayed during former wars will, if required, be repeated in every quarter of the globe, under every disadvantage of climate, and every circumstance of privation and peril by those who now serve the Crown in the army and the navy, and who will be ready, at the call of their country, to shed their blood in her defence. So, likewise, with regard to all other departments of the State, our task is lightened by the confidence we have in the good feeling of the people; and I say for myself and those who have to guard the general concerns of this country, that we believe that, in the spirit of this country, in the industry of this country, and in the love of freedom which prevails in this country, there is a security which may make them sleep easy and unconcerned, even with the great task and immense responsibility which attach to them. (Great cheering.) If any part of this empire is suffering distress and privation at the present moment we shall be sure of the sympathy of the other part of the empire to carry their suffering fellow-countrymen through those periods of distress and suffering; and, last of all, I believe there is that sense in the people of this country of the blessings which they, under the signal favour of Providence, enjoy, as will prevent them from lightly hazarding the safety of those institutions under which we live; and whilst we see the episcopal bench adorned by men of learning and eloquence—whilst we see the judicial bench upheld by men of great ability and acknowledged impartiality—all these institutions derive strength and stability from the increased hold they have upon the affections and regard of the people. (Loud cheers.) These are circumstances which make it possible for the Ministers of the Crown to carry on the affairs of this great empire with the hope of success. Having said thus much, I now turn to perform that which I think is my duty to this company—namely, to propose to you the health of the Lord Mayor. We have all heard how well he has performed the severer duties of the high office he holds, and we all know and see how well he discharges the more pleasing task of displaying hospitality. Assured that you will join me heartily in drinking this toast, I beg leave to propose to you, "The Health of the Lord Mayor."

The toast was received with every mark of respect and enthusiasm.

The Lord Mayor said he could assure Lord John Russell and the company, that when he was placed by the choice of his fellow-citizens in the honourable post he held, he undertook it with a determination to discharge its duties to the best of his ability. If he had so far succeeded, nothing could give him greater pleasure than to carry out the same principles to the end of his year of office, when he hoped to restore the trust to his fellow-citizens without having relaxed any of those powers or influence which he hoped would be long continued without being at all disturbed. (Loud cheers). His Lordship next proposed "The Health of the Foreign Ambassadors," coupled with the name of the Prussian Minister, Chevalier Bunsen.

The Chevalier returned thanks in a few words.

The Lord Mayor next proposed "The Marquis of Lansdowne and the House of Lords."

The Marquis of Lansdowne said that by connecting his name with those of the other Peers there present, the Lord Mayor had constituted the representation of a more numerous body than at this period of the session was to be found in the House of Lords itself. He and his noble friends were deeply sensible that the House of Lords were indebted for the strong hold, he hoped the permanent hold, which that house had on the opinion of the public, to the frequent intercourse and social relations which the members of the House of Lords had at all times, and at none more than the present, maintained with all other classes of the community—with none more beneficially than with those great institutions and corporate establishments, which were all, in a greater or less degree, essentially interwoven or connected with the freedom, prosperity, wealth, and happiness of this great country. (Loud cheers.)

The Lord Mayor next proposed "Lord Morpeth, and the House of Commons."

Lord Morpeth: My Lord, I must confess that my name has certainly been coupled rather unexpectedly with so distinguished and important a body in the State as the House of Commons; and, though numerous as are the names of the members of that House here present, as detailed to us previously to pledging the loving cup, I am sure I can venture to speak in behalf of all of them, that they value to the utmost the extending enterprise, the expanding wealth, the developing industry, and the practical benevolence and virtues of that great metropolis, that wonderful city, in the midst of which they meet for the public weal. (Great cheering.) Your Lordship has been pleased to advert to the office which I, by the favour of her Majesty, at this moment fill. I am sorry to find that, in this office, I inherit some little matters of dispute with the august body of which your Lordship is the head; but I trust we shall so consult together in all such matters, and so dispose of them, that we shall find that our differences are of that sort which may be likened to the quarrels of persons tenderly attached to each other; and that it will be found that an arrangement may be made which shall not only detract nothing from, but add something to the Crown's grace, and the City's loyalty. (Loud and universal cheering.)

The Marquis of Lansdowne proposed "The Health of the Lady Mayoress," which was drunk with enthusiasm; and the ladies withdrew.

The company parted at a late hour, evidently delighted with the very great efforts used to make them all happy.

Mr. Harker, the City toast-master, performed the duties of his office to admiration.

Anti-Slavery League.—On Monday evening a numerously-attended public meeting was held at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, Strand, for the purpose of forming a "League" in connection with the American Anti-Slavery Society. The meeting was attended by most of the delegates to the World's Temperance Convention, and the proposed confederacy called the Evangelical Alliance. Mr. Thompson was elected president. Extracts from letters containing invitations to bring dogs to hunt runaway slaves—alias "troublesome neighbours"—were read as were also advertisements to the same effect, against which, it was said, no American Church had dared to lift up its voice. The advertisements were read, and were of a ludicrous character, pledging the animals in some cases to follow the negro upwards of 24 hours. Frederick Douglass, from Maryland; Mr. Parry, the barrister; Dr. Carlisle, and others, addressed the meeting. Some frightful instances of atrocity were mentioned as having occurred in the slave trade, and resolutions strongly deprecatory of the system were unanimously adopted.

Flogging in the Army and Navy.—A numerous meeting was held at Exeter Hall on Wednesday evening, to establish a Society for the Abolition of Flogging in the Army and Navy. Mr. Wakley, M.P., was in the chair. After strong expressions of feeling against flogging, resolutions embodying the same views were agreed to. It was stated by Mr. Wakley, that Mr. Collett, M.P. for Athlone, had sent a cheque for £5 to John Matthewson, the private of the 7th Hussars who had given evidence on the inquest. The principal speakers were the Rev. Dr. Carlisle, Mr. Bridgeman (M.P. for Ennis), Mr. J. Neale (a barrister), Mr. Henry Vincent, the Rev. Mr. Dickenson, Mr. Luke Hansard, Mr. Curteis, M.P., Mr. G. Thompson, and Mr. Cleave.

The Late Hail Storm.—On Monday, a meeting was held at the London Tavern, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge in the chair, for the purpose of raising a subscription for the relief of those florists and horticulturists whose property suffered such serious damage during the late storm. His Royal Highness alluded, in a brief speech, to the extensive character of the catastrophe, to alleviate the effects of which they had been called together. The Lord Mayor arrived shortly afterwards, and resolutions were passed for the immediate commencement of a subscription, to manage which, a committee of gentlemen was appointed, and Mr. Cook, of Mincing-lane, requested to undertake the office of treasurer. A vote of thanks was then moved to the noble chairman and the Lord Mayor, and the subscription list was read, at the head of which was the name of his Royal Highness for twenty guineas, and the Lord Mayor for ten guineas. The subscriptions were announced to amount to between £400 and £500.

City Relics.—The workmen engaged in pulling down seven houses in Milk-street, Cheapside, and what was formerly called Lad-lane, but since the City improvements named Gresham-street, have found some very interesting relics of London. In digging below the foundations of the houses pulled down, they have discovered the remains of some ancient walls and vaults, and amongst the more remarkable is an archway of stone and a flight of stone steps; the archway is carefully finished off, the main wall is composed of fragments of stone, and the other portions of red brick, so strongly combined, that it is difficult, even with an iron wedge and sledge hammer, to dissever it, although it has evidently been for nearly two centuries embedded in the soil. The discovery is likely to lead to an interesting inquiry as to the buildings which stood on the locality.

Camberwell Fair.—On Tuesday, at twelve o'clock, the fair on Camberwell Green commenced, in the usual manner, by beating of gongs, firing of cannon, and an extremely large supply of discordant instruments of every variety, which were brought into active service for the occasion. The opening having been completed, the festivities of the day commenced, and were kept up until six o'clock in the evening, when the company were suddenly put to flight by an unexpected shower of rain, which increased and continued for several hours. The booths, shows, &c., were very numerously filled during the day, and the line of road from the Elephant and Castle to Camberwell was crowded with thousands of fair-going folks. A large body of police officers of the P division were on duty for the purpose of preserving order, and for the detection of the light-fingered gentry, who generally reap a rich harvest at the metropolitan fairs. The fair continued on Wednesday and Thursday.

Births and Deaths in the Metropolis.—The deaths registered in the week ending August 15th were 967, being equal to the average of five years, and 69 above the average of five summers. The deaths from diarrhœa in the week were 149, being fewer than in either of three previous weeks, but were larger than the average of the corresponding week of previous years. The mean temperature of the week was 61 deg. 8 min., being 1 deg. 3 min. less than the mean temperature of the corresponding week for twenty-five years. The number of births in the week was 1363: males, 691; females, 672.

Fall of Three Houses in the Mint.—On Wednesday, three small houses in the Mint, Southwark, which have been built upwards of three hundred years, tumbled down in one mass of ruin. They had been for some time condemned as unfit to be inhabited; but, nevertheless, eight families were housed in them. Fortunately, the greater part of the members were absent at the time; those who were in the houses were warned, and escaped without receiving any injury.

Attempt at Assassination.—On Monday evening, between six and seven o'clock, a deliberate attempt at assassination was made by a man named Michael Downey, an Irish labourer, in Hyde-street, Bloomsbury. John Sullivan, aged thirty, a labourer, who was employed at a public house situate in Hyde-street, kept by a Mr. Swain, was at work in the rear of the premises, when he was abruptly disturbed by the man Downey, whom he had never before seen, and who was somewhat excited by jealousy, considering himself supplanted by Sullivan. Downey gave vent to most offensive expressions, of which Sullivan took no notice, but continued his work; and, as he was in the act of picking up some bricks, Downey, drawing a Spanish knife from his bosom, stabbed him in the right side and inflicted a dreadful wound, from which the blood poured forth in copious streams. The cry of "Murder" soon brought assistance; but, before the fellow could be secured, he again made a thrust at his victim, causing a deep gash. At this time several police-officers were on the spot, and it required the united strength of two or three of them to convey him to the station-house. The injured man was removed to King's College Hospital, when the wounds were examined and pronounced to be of a dangerous character. Downey was examined at Bow-street on the charge on Tuesday, and was remanded for a week.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

The House met at the usual hour, and a vast number of bills were forwarded, with very little discussion. The House adjourned at six o'clock till to-morrow (this day) at two.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

The House met at twelve o'clock, but during the early part of the day the business was of a formal character, several bills being proceeded with a stage, but long discussions arose.

Railway Department. The bill for the establishment of a Railway Board passed through Committee.

EXPLANATION OF LORD GEORGE BENTINCK.

In the course of the evening, Lord G. Bentinck rose and said, that, after the accusation that had been made on his conduct in this transaction elsewhere, he was sure the House would grant him its indulgence, while endeavouring to justify his own conduct, and to defend his character. It had been stated that he could make retraction as unfoundedly as he could make a charge, without investigation. Now, if he had made any unfounded charge, he would be as ready as any one to admit his error. Now, it should be remembered that he made this retractation on an investigation of the Clergy List. But he took leave here to say that the nobleman who had made the charge should have been the last to do so. The Clergy List was no copy of the Ecclesiastical Report. That Ecclesiastical Report was made by a Government of which Sir R. Peel was the head, and the nobleman to whom he alluded was the Lord Chancellor. The noble Lord then proceeded to defend himself from the charge made against him by Lord Lyndhurst, and said that not longer ago than the 10th of July the noble and learned Lord must have held a very different opinion of him whom he had since called selfish and sordid; for, before nine o'clock in the morning of that day, he had sent to him (Lord G. Bentinck) a special messenger to ask him to join the minority of the late Peel Cabinet, to oppose any alteration of the Sugar Duties. This proposition he felt bound to decline.

The Medical Practitioners Bill was withdrawn, on an understanding that the Government would bring in a measure on the same subject.

The Pawnbrokers Bill was read a second time.

The Small Debts Bill went through Committee.

The House adjourned at eleven o'clock.

"THE TIMES" TESTIMONIAL.

On Thursday afternoon, the Lord Mayor, Mr. Masterman, M.P., Mr. Alderman Wilson, and Mr. Alderman Hughes Hughes, a Sub-committee appointed for the purpose, left the Mansion-house, in the private carriage of his Lordship, and proceeded to the New Royal Exchange, to inspect the Tablet erected there by public subscription, with the permission of the Joint Gresham Committee, as a testimonial to the Times newspaper, and to open the monument to the public. On arriving at the grand staircase leading to Lloyd's, his Lordship was received by Mr. Tite, the architect, and Messrs. Piper, the sculptors, and conducted to the vestibule, where the Tablet is fixed, under the clock, by the entrance to the Subscription Room of the Merchants and Underwriters, and opposite to the spot on which the marble statue of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, as having laid the foundation-stone of the Royal Exchange, is to be placed.

By desire of the Lord Mayor the covering was removed in presence of the committee and some of the leading merchants and bankers of the city, when a mural tablet of exquisitely white marble was exposed to view, surmounted with a bold projecting pediment, supported on carved Italian trusses; the block sustaining the whole, being richly ornamented with carvings of classical foliage. The greatest admiration was expressed by all present of the manner in which Messrs. Piper had erected the very handsome and appropriate design of Mr. Tite, and on the suggestion of the Lord Mayor it was resolved that the sculptors' and architects' names should be inscribed on the Tablet. The following is a copy of the inscription:—

THIS TABLET
WAS ERECTED TO COMMEMORATE
THE EXTRAORDINARY EXERTIONS OF
"THE TIMES" NEWSPAPER,
IN THE EXPOSURE OF A REMARKABLE FRAUD UPON THE MERCANTILE PUBLIC,
WHICH EXPOSURE SUBJECTED THE
PROPRIETORS TO A MOST EXPENSIVE LAWSUIT.

The Lord Mayor, Mr. Masterman, Aldermen Wilson and Hughes Hughes, accompanied by Messrs. Tite and Piper, afterwards proceeded to Printing-house-square, to remove the covering from the Tablet bearing the same inscription, erected by order of the subscribers in The Times office. This Tablet is an oblong panel, of beautiful veined marble, introduced over the frontispiece forming the architectural decoration of the principal entrance to The Times office, and has been so introduced as to harmonise with the general façade of the building. The Lord Mayor and the other gentlemen having expressed their unqualified approbation of the manner in which the directions of the committee of subscribers had been carried into effect, were conducted over The Times establishment, and inspected the four printing machines, one of which, recently erected, throws off the almost incredible number of 6000 double sheets per hour. His Lordship and the company left the office expressing their great gratification with all they had witnessed.—Times of yesterday.

Her Majesty will give a dinner party at Osborne House, on Wednesday next, to celebrate the twenty-seventh anniversary of the birth of the Prince Consort.

Banquet to Mr. Cobden at Paris.—A splendid banquet was given in Paris on Tuesday last, by the French Free-Traders, to Mr. Richard Cobden. The chair was taken by the Duke d'Harcourt, Peer of France. Mr. Horace Say, member of the Chamber of Commerce, and of the Common Council, son of the late Jean Baptiste Say, the well-known economist, acted as vice-chairman. The health of Mr. Richard Cobden was proposed by M. Say, who passed a high encomium on the talents and the persevering labours of their illustrious English guest and his fellow-members of the League, after which Mr. Cobden rose, and read a speech in French, in which we find the following passages:—"Gentlemen, It is a source of regret to me that two languages are spoken in this assembly, where, I am sure, there is but one heart. Gentlemen, I beg of you to accept my heartfelt thanks for the cordial manner in which you replied to the too flattering expressions with which your excellent President introduced me to you. Allow me to claim for others a great share of this cordiality. I am but a simple workman among others of greater merit, who have long laboured for the triumph of great and noble principles. Free Trade is another article added to the charter of the liberty of man. It is a new beacon raised on the path of nations to point out the progress of civilisation in the nineteenth century. We have already obtained freedom of conscience, liberty of speech, and of the press, and we are now in possession of the liberty of industry, and I must own that I never considered myself as the citizen of a free country as long as the stigma of slavery, in the shape of monopoly, deprived my fellow-countrymen of the rights and the just reward of their labour and their industry. Gentlemen, I address you as an Englishman, and I speak of English rights. It is not for me to address you in any other capacity. We never sought help from without, nor demanded stipulated conditions with other countries, and I am ready to admit that the interference of foreign elements in enterprises of the sort, tends but to complicate the struggle, and retard and compromise success. After what I have just said, you will not suppose that, when I add a few words as to the League, I mean to hold them up as a model to yourselves. The League was organised to disseminate among the English people those truths which Adam Smith and your Jean Baptiste Say promulgated half a century ago. * * * * Gentlemen, it would not be rendering justice to my own sentiments, nor to the earnest desires of my colleagues in England, if I were to sit down without saying that, from the universal application of our principles, we await results of a far higher order than those to which I have alluded this day. You applauded, this evening, the words of our President when he spoke of peace, and your sentiments in this respect will find an echo in the breasts of the Free-Traders of England. Europe, it is true, rests in peace; but does she reap all its blessings? On every side we see the means of warfare increase. Oh, against this scourge of man, the world needs other pledges than those sought in mighty and ruinous armaments; for experience has unhappily proved that such threatening preparations are more apt to stimulate than quench the thirst for war. To render peace something else than an armed truce, a number of interests must be cast aside, capable of anticipating even the possibility of war. That is the calling of the Free-Traders. If we are of opinion that the free exchange of mutual services between nations is the surest safeguard against war between nations—if we are of opinion that Free Trade confers upon commerce, the best mediator, those international relations so doubtful when placed exclusively in the trembling hands of diplomacy, it is then our duty, each in his own legitimate sphere, to work for the suppression of those barriers which separate man from his fellow-man. Let nations be united by that spirit of harmony which presides at this assembly; let us forget that we are French or English, and remember only that we are men. Gentlemen, I again offer you my thanks for the attention with which you have listened to the feeble expressions of my feelings; and before I sit down allow me to propose, 'The Union of all Nations.'" [illegible] was enthusiastically responded to.

[illegible] Accident in the Strand. Yesterday morning, about twelve [illegible] some bricklayers' labourers were employed in taking down a stack of chimneys on the roof of the pastry cook's shop adjoining the Crown and Anchor Tavern, in the Strand. While so employed, by some carelessness they allowed some bricks to fall over into the street, which struck a lady and a youth on the head, who were unfortunately passing at the time, inflicting serious injuries. The lady and gentleman were immediately carried into the Crown and Anchor, and a medical man sent for, while the labourers were conveyed to the Bow-street police station. The unfortunate lady is so seriously injured, that apprehensions are entertained of her life. The lady's name is Eliza Tomkins, aged 20, and the youth Francis Harvey, an assistant in the office of Mr. Tovey, stationer, Piccadilly. Mr. Skeel, surgeon, of Norfolk-street, was called in, and afforded every assistance to the unfortunate persons. The female is the niece of Mr. Palser, 183, Strand, and had just left home on the way to a friend's house.

Railway Accidents. By a Parliamentary paper printed yesterday, it appears that, from the 1st of January last to the 20th of July, of accidents on railways, 73 persons were killed and 84 injured.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

France. On Tuesday, the Court of Peers assembled immediately after the sitting of the Chambers, to receive the report of M. Laplagne Barris, on the late attempt on the King's life. The decree of the court, declaring itself competent to try the case, was communicated the same evening to the prisoner (Joseph Henri) by the principal officer of the court. The trial will take place on Tuesday next, the 25th inst.

The United States.—By a letter from Liverpool, we learn that the Warehousing Bill has passed the Senate, the division being Yes, 30; No, 20. Majority, 10.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

The Sugar Duties Bill.—The Sugar Duties Bill was read a third time and passed. This was the only important incident of the sitting, which was a very brief one.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

The House met at twelve o'clock at noon, and sat till past midnight. It was occupied with several subjects of interest.

Withdrawal of the Irish Arms Bill.—Lord J. Russell, on the order of the day for the House resolving itself into Committee on the Public Works Bill, announced that the Government had come to the resolution of letting the Irish Arms Bill drop to the ground. He found, he said, that he could not retain the branding, the registration, and the visiting-house clauses, and he, therefore, concluded that it would be better, after the opposition with which it had been threatened, to allow the bill to expire, than to attempt to defend, clause by clause, its provisions, with such amendments as would be necessary. Besides, on consulting the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, his Excellency was of opinion that it was far better to dispense with the bill altogether, than to disturb its principle by any modification, and expressed his readiness to undertake the government of Ireland without the continuance of this measure.—Mr. Escott and Mr. Hume approved of the liberal and excessively generous treatment extended to Ireland by the Government.

The Wellington Statue.—In reply to a question from Mr. C. Berkeley, Lord Morpeth stated that, finding that the Sub-Committee of the Wellington Memorial had declined all the sites which had lately been offered to them, he had consented to allow the statue to be placed upon the arch for three weeks, the Sub-Committee undertaking, in the event of its not being then approved of, to restore the arch site to its original condition. Of course her Majesty's Government would take competent advice upon the subject, and upon that advice the question would ultimately be decided.

Flogging in the Army.—In answer to Dr. Bowring, Lord J. Russell said that, in respect to future floggings in the army, it was the intention of the Commander-in-Chief to carry out his mitigation of punishment in the mildest spirit. It was intended to give the fifty lashes in the same manner as they were formerly given, and instructions would be issued to the military authorities to regulate the size and nature of the instrument by which the punishment was to be inflicted.

THE GOVERNMENT PLAN FOR THE RELIEF OF DISTRESS IN IRELAND.

Lord J. Russell, in moving that the House go into Committee on the Public Works (Ireland) Bill, took a review of the whole question of Irish distress and the failure of the potato crop. He recapitulated the measures adopted by the late Government—the purchase of Indian corn, the donations, the public works executed, the advances, &c., all which amounted to £852,481, of which £357,630 was not to be repaid, and £494,851 to be repaid. These measures he considered as prudent, and well calculated to effect their object under the then existing emergency, though he regarded the principle of the Government buying food for the people, and of advances and grants for public works, to be liable to grave objection. He then proceeded to quote a number of letters from all parts of Ireland, to establish that the potato disease this year was even more alarming than last. It had, therefore, become the duty of the Government to consider in what manner they should propose to Parliament to make provision for some employment for the labouring classes of Ireland, and at the same time leave, as he trusted Parliament would leave, such a discretion in the hands of Government as any emergency might render necessary in their opinion. It had appeared to the Government, that while there should be public works, and those public works should be undertaken under due control, that they should not defray the cost of those works from any Parliamentary grant, but that they should be defrayed from a loan to be repaid by the counties. He proposed, therefore, to introduce a bill to authorise the Lord Lieutenant to summon a barony session, or a county session, for works of relief, the choice of such works as would afford the necessary employment to be left to the session, and the works to be superintended by the Board of Works—advances to be made from the Treasury, to be repaid in ten years, at 3½ per cent. interest. In very poor districts, the works would be undertaken by the Government, but then they should be works of public utility, and a grant of £50,000 would be proposed for that purpose.—He did not propose either to interfere with the general supply of food by merchants, nor the wholesale or retail trade, which must have suffered derangement by the operation consequent on the introduction of Indian corn. With reference to the Relief Committee, the Government would take care to avoid those errors into which the late Government had fallen; and, guided by the experience they had received, he hoped to be able to meet effectively the serious distress of the country, and he hoped to avoid those evils which had arisen from members of the Relief Committee giving tickets to persons who did not require such relief. The officers to be employed would be the commissariat officers, to be paid by the Government, and any others whom it might be found necessary to employ would be also paid by the Government. The noble Lord concluded by moving that a grant of £175,000 be voted to defray the expenses lately incurred, and to make further advances out of the Exchequer; and £50,000 for the promotion of public works in Ireland, for the benefit of very poor districts.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer read a letter, in which it was said that considerable orders for Indian meal had been sent to the United States, with a view to supply the people of Ireland with food, and that such orders must necessarily interfere with the ordinary course of trade.

After some observations from Mr. Villiers,

Mr. Labouchere said it was the duty of the whole community to take care that the people of Ireland did not starve, though care was necessary to guard against mischievous consequences and abuses.

The Earl of Lincoln denied that one tenth of the abuses referred to in the letter read by the Chancellor of the Exchequer had any existence, and insisted on the energy and zeal with which the measures of Parliament had been carried out by the Irish executive.

After considerable discussion, the votes in accordance with the proposition of Lord J. Russell, were agreed to.

The Carrying Trade Between England and the Spanish Colonies. On the motion that the House resolve itself into Committe of Supply, Lord G. Bentinck drew the attention of the House to the state of the carrying trade between this country and the Spanish colonies. The noble Lord entered at great length into the extent of the trade with the Spanish colonies prior to 1833, since which period, owing to the duties imposed in those colonies, the whole carrying trade had fallen into the hands of the Spanish shipowners. At the present moment, there were at Liverpool no less than six Spanish ships loading for the Havannah, while there was, on the other hand, only one British vessel. Instead of trusting that the Spanish Government would be actuated by a feeling of reciprocity, we should have pursued the vigorous course adopted by America, where a threat of retaliation had prevented Spain from placing an additional duty on American shipping, and thus only could we have compelled that country to a more liberal policy.—Lord Palmerston thought retaliation neither a wise nor a prudent course; nor did he think it would prove beneficial. We had no treaty with Spain which could entitle us to require that British ships should be placed on the same footing as those of Spain. There was, however, a treaty between this country and Spain, by which the commerce of the two countries was to be placed on the same footing as that of the most favoured nations. This was a subject which should receive consideration.

No further step was taken in the matter; and the House was next engaged with the subject of the occupation of Cracow, which led to considerable discussion and explanations, similar to those given last week in the House of Lords.

The House then went into Commitee of Supply, and the remainder of the evening was occupied in the discussion of the Estimates.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

The Royal Assent.—The Royal Assent was given to the Sugar Duties Bill, the Religious Opinions Bill, the Railway Gauges Bill, and to several other bills. The House sat for about half an hour, but the other business was merely formal.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

The House met as usual at twelve o'clock.

New Member.—Mr. Bond Cabbell, the new member for St. Albans, took the oaths and his seat.

The Appointment of Chief Justice of Bombay.—Lord G. Bentinck called attention to the circumstances under which Mr. David Pollock was recently appointed Chief Justice of Bombay, and condemned the appointment as a gross job on the part of the late Government. The appointment was made on the 30th of June, three days after the Government had resigned office, the object being to provide for Mr. Charles Phillips and for Mr. David Pollock. It turned out, however, that the appointment of Mr. David Pollock vitiated all the proceedings before the present Chief Justice, and it became necessary to bring in an Act of Parliament to legalise them. The noble Lord concluded by moving for copies of the correspondence upon the subject.—Sir J. C. Hobhouse said that the late Chief Justice of Bombay wished to resign owing to illness; but, as in November, his retiring pension would be £1000 per annum, whereas, now, he would only be entitled to £700 per annum, he deferred his resignation until the former period, communicating, however, his intention to the Government, in order that his successor might have time to reach Bombay by that period. Directions were, consequently, sent to the Colonial Office to have a patent made out, appointing Mr. D. Pollock the successor of Sir Henry Roper. Mr. Pollock's place in the Insolvent Court was to be supplied by Mr. C. Phillips. At the Colonial Office, however, it was discovered that, according to law, the appointment of Mr. D. Pollock at once put an end to the jurisdiction of Sir H. Roper, and from the date of the appointment of Mr. D. Pollock, all proceedings before Sir H. Roper were illegal. It became necessary, therefore, to introduce a bill to remedy the evil. He had to observe, however, that what had taken place in this instance was in accordance with long-established practice.—The subject excited considerable discussion, but it was allowed to drop without a division upon the question for producing the correspondence.

Railway Legislation.—Mr. Morrison moved that the House confirm the resolutions reported from the Select Committee on Railways. He contended that Government control was absolutely essential for the protection of the public against the huge monopolies which railways had created. These resolutions were nine in number, but on the first being put "That it is expedient that a Department of the Executive Government, so constituted as to obtain public confidence, be established for the superintendence of railways" a discussion arose. The Chancellor of the Exchequer said it would be impossible during this session to do more than form such a board. The opinion of the House appearing to be against consenting to all the resolutions, Mr. Morrison said he should be satisfied if the first were agreed to. This was accordingly done.

The Manning of the Navy.—On the bringing up of the report of the Committee of Supply, a discussion took place on the subject of the manning of the navy, and Captain Berkeley adverted to the admirable condition of our commercial marine, and hoped that by next session of Parliament, he should be enabled to lay before the House a plan by which our navy might at all times command as efficient a body of men as any in the world.

About seven o'clock the House had got through the orders of the day, and an adjournment then took place.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

The House met to-day at twelve o'clock, and sat nearly four hours.

New Member.—Mr. R. Smithwick took the oaths and his seat for the county of Kilkenny, in the room of Colonel Butler, deceased.

Lord G. Bentinck's Charges Against the Late Government.—Lord G. Bentinck took the opportunity of correcting a misstatement which he made on the previous evening relative to the living of Knockton. He found that he had been misinformed on this point, and that the living was not in the gift of the Lord Chancellor, and therefore could not have been bartered, as alleged, by Lord Lyndhurst with the Earl of Ripon. Lord George apologised to the two Noble Lords for having fallen into this error.

Claims of the Army and Navy.—Sir De Lacy Evans moved an address to the Queen praying that a comparison be made of the claims of the old officers of the army of various ranks, with the view of giving them the benefit of a measure analogous to that just given to the old officers of the navy.—Lord J. Russell and Mr. F. Maule deprecated a discussion on such a question at this period of the session. After a short discussion, Sir De Lacy Evans withdrew the motion.

Railway Department.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer obtained leave to bring in a bill to authorise the appointment of a railway department. After some conversation, the bill was brought in and read a first time, and the House soon afterwards adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

EXPLANATION OF LORD LYNDHURST.

Lord Lyndhurst said that in consequence of some statements which he had seen in the public papers, he felt it his duty to make an explanation. The late President of the Board of Trade (Earl Ripon) had applied to him early in the spring to recommend certain individuals to fill the office of Chief Justice of Bombay. He named six or seven individuals, among them Mr. David Pollock, whom he considered eminently qualified to fill the office. In consequence of the appointment of Mr. Pollock, a vacancy occurred in the office of the Commissioner of Insolvent Debtors. Mr. Phillips, whom he had appointed Commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy at Liverpool three years before, was most assiduous in his duties, and, therefore, the appointment of Commissioner of Insolvent Debtors was conferred on him. Mr. Perry he knew to be most competent to fill Mr. Phillips's office, and if he had passed over him, he should have committed an act of injustice. In consequence, it was requisite to appoint some one to fill Mr. Phillips's duties during his absence. As to the imputation in regard to Mr. David Pollock, the noble Lord (G. Bentinck) had said this appointment was in consequence of a bargain between him (Lord Lyndhurst) and the Earl of Ripon. This was a grave charge, and was totally groundless. The noble Lord (Bentinck) had since, he was told, abandoned the charge, but he had done so upon a false ground. In fact, the noble Lord (Bentinck) had made charges of a serious nature, without at all considering how they might affect individuals. He gave his word of honour, as one of their Lordships, that there was no ground for the imputations which had been made. He had no doubt that if the noble Earl (Ripon) were present he would make the same statement. The noble and learned Lord proceeded to defend himself from the imputations in regard to the living of Knockton, and read some correspondence on the subject. (This correspondence went to exonerate Lord Lyndhurst from the imputations thrown out in the late speech of Lord G. Bentinck.) After reading some portions of the correspondence, the noble and learned Lord appealed to the House to say whether there was any trace of a foundation for the charge which had been made against him in this respect. He would ask whether this correspondence did not prove that there was not the least foundation for the charge which had been made by the noble Lord in another place. The imputation which had been cast upon himself and his noble friend was most foul and unjust. The charge, for weakness and lowness, was only equalled by its folly and its baseness. (Hear.) He could not see the motive for the attack of the noble Lord, unless it was to be attributed to his early associations and habits, which had led him to suppose that every man in public life was actuated by some base, and selfish, and sordid motive. He left the case with confidence in the hands of their Lordships and the public. (Cheers.)

The House then proceeded to dispose of some routine business, and adjourned at an early hour.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

The House again met at twelve o'clock.

Cork and Waterford Railway.—The Cork and Waterford Railway Bill was read a third time and passed.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne and Carlisle Branch Railway.—A long discussion took place upon the question for agreeing with the Lords' amendments to this bill, but, upon a division, the House consented to these amendments by 35 to 15.

The Customs' Duties Bill (No. 2) was read a third time, and passed.

Small Debts Bill.—A long discussion took place upon this bill, to some clauses of which opposition was manifested, and divisions took place, but clauses up to 15 were agreed to without amendment, and the Chairman then reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again on Friday.

The Public Works (Ireland) Bill went through Committee.

The rest of the evening was devoted to the disposal of the other orders of the day, and about ten o'clock, the House adjourned.

The late Sir Charles Wetherell.—On Wednesday evening, Mr. Dudlow, one of the Coroners for Kent, and a Jury, held an inquest on the body of the late Sir C. Wetherell, which lay at Preston rectory. Several witnesses were examined, and the Jury returned a verdict in accordance with the medical testimony given, which was to the effect that Sir C. Wetherell died from the effects produced by a concussion of the brain, the result of the accident on the 10th inst. The remains were removed from Preston rectory on Thursday afternoon, and arrived at Berkeley-square at nine o'clock.

Alleged Defect in the Corn Bill.—A deputation from the Corn Exchange have waited upon the Lord Mayor, to represent that, in consequence of an error in the Corn Bill, the duty chargeable upon rye, meal, and peas, would be much higher than before the passing of the act. The Lord Mayor gave his opinion that, according to the reading of the act, rye, beans, and peas would be charged an additional duty of 100 per cent. He was sure that the framers of the act never intended this. The Lord Mayor then said he would undertake to make inquiry in influential quarters upon the subject, and he entertained no doubt that some means would be adopted, although the session was almost at its close, to remedy the evil.

The Dagenham Murder.—The three persons arrested on suspicion of being concerned in the murder of the policeman at Dagenham have been liberated, no case whatever having been proved against them at the re-examination; and it appearing that all the statements made by the boy Welch were totally unfounded.

INSURRECTION AT COLOGNE.

In our latest edition of last week's Journal, we gave the substance of a very interesting Letter by a Correspondent of the Times, dated Cologne, August 16, (10?) We requote this extract, with the following additional details:—

"We have very narrowly escaped a serious revolution. It all arose from one of the kirmess', or Saint's-day feasts, and had no political grounds whatever. Last Sunday was St. Martin's kirmess, which is held in that part of the town near the Rhine, and where the market-place is. On the third day of the kirmess (Tuesday), some boys wanted to let off some fireworks, which is not allowed here. The police interfered; and the people, who were already much displeased by finding that piquets of soldiers had been placed about the market, began to murmur. The soldiers were ordered to clear the market-place. This was, of course, resisted, as no cause had been given for such a proceeding, and, in the fray, a gendarme cut down and killed a man, literally hacking him to death. This was the signal for battle. Hundreds stood silent there with faces white with passion, and clenched fists. The battle then began between the soldiery and the people. The former behaved most shamefully, using their bayonets and swords upon every one they could reach. At last the people began to throw down stones from the tops of the houses. At eleven o'clock the Dragoons came over from Deutz, dashing in amongst the people, and cutting them down without discrimination, shouting out, "Cut the Cologne canaille down," "Down with the dogs," &c. This shameful conduct enraged the townspeople still more, but the military being too strong for them they dispersed, and the streets were quiet by two in the morning, but not without bloodshed. Six were mortally wounded (four are since dead) and a very great number wounded more or less.

"The heads of the town called on the Burgomaster to call a meeting. This he did, at which all the first citizens were present, thus making it no longer an affair of the rabble, to assert their rights as citizens of Cologne. The presence of the commanding general, Von de Lundt, was required (I forgot to say it was by his orders that the troops fell on the people); and a severe remonstrance was made to him, and the president of the town. The prisoners were required to be set at liberty, and also a promise demanded that the troops should all be consigned to their barracks, that neither the police nor the soldiery should patrol the town, and that citizens, the heads of the town, should be permitted to form a guard of themselves to patrol the streets, in which case they would ensure the peace of the town. It is impossible to describe the anxiety that prevailed until a favourable answer was given, and well it was for us all that the Government was wise enough to give way; had it been otherwise, Heaven knows what might have happened.

"It has since been ascertained that the working classes had taken their measures secretly, to act in a most decided manner, in case the citizens were not allowed to take charge of the town. All the workmen and boatmen on the Rhine had provided themselves with long knives, and intended to cut off the bridge, and send it floating down the river, so as to prevent the Dragoons from coming near. The common market-people had provided themselves with scythes. Other workmen, armed with their working tools, were to attack and storm the arsenals, so as to provide themselves with arms and ammunition; another party were to attack and burn the barracks, drive the military out, and take possession of the town; in short, a most fearful revolution was planned, and would have been executed most surely, if the Government had not given way.

"On Thursday, the cooper, the man who was first killed, was buried, and the citizens determined to follow him to the grave, not so much on account of the man, as for the purpose of making a demonstration to the Government of the real feelings of the people. Hot as it was (90 deg. in the shade, East Indian heat) everybody was in the streets. Every window on the line of road was filled with women. The procession was more than half an hour passing. The hearse was immediately followed by the friends and fellow workmen. After them came the 'Männer Gesang-verein,' singing as they can only sing, and they were followed by at least 5000 citizens of Cologne, in a triple line, with uncovered heads, and in perfect silence, among whom 3000 were of the most respectable class of the people, as no great house was unrepresented either by the principal himself or some one for him. Those who formed the citizen guard wore a white riband in the button-hole.

THE INSURRECTION IN COLOGNE.

"You may judge what this guard is, when I tell you that Engel, the first merchant here, is one of them, besides bankers, &c. Not a word was spoken amongst the dense crowds of people while the funeral passed, every head was uncovered, and you might have heard a pin drop. After it was over, they all returned quietly to their homes. But, in the evening, there had very nearly been an uproar again, through the folly of the commandant, who had ordered the guard to be doubled at the chief guard-house. The people found this out, and began to assemble in great numbers, threatening to storm it, and getting stones together for that purpose; but the citizen guard came, and persuaded them to disperse, which they promised to do if they would let them sing one song. This they were obliged to do, so they sang a sort of revolutionary song, and went off.

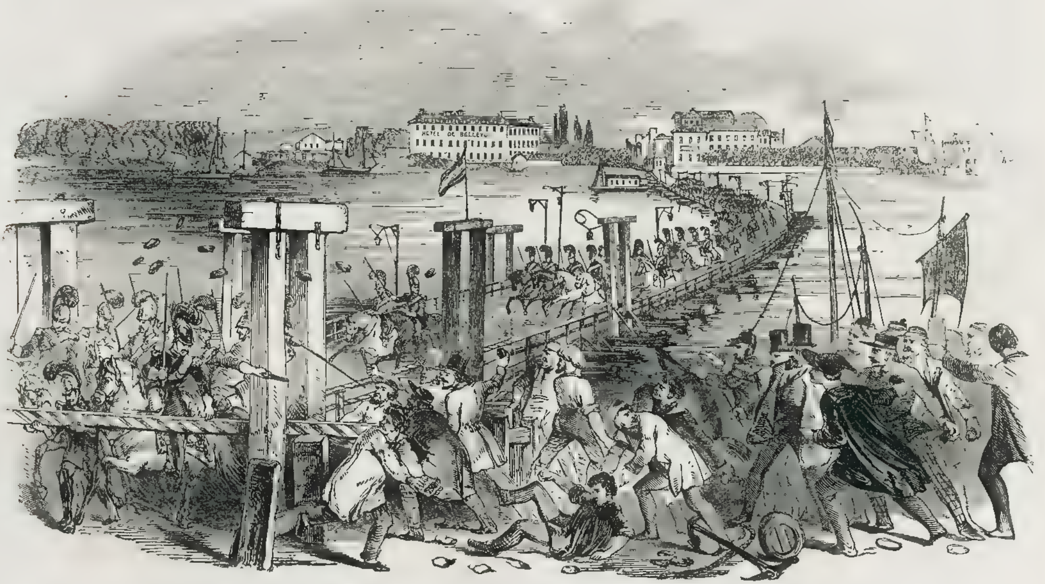
"On Saturday, the citizens held a meeting (which, by-the-by, they had done every day) for the purpose of receiving the reports of all those who were attacked by the military. The Chief Justice, a sort of little Lord Chancellor here, is as eager as any of them in the cause, although he is a Government officer. We were all put in a fright again yesterday, in consequence of a proclamation from the Government having been sent to be inserted in the paper for to-day, in which the guard of citizens were ordered to dissolve, and the military were to keep the streets clear. It contained also, observations on the Tuesday's massacre, tending to rekindle the anger of the people. The Editor of the paper laid it before the committee of citizens, and it was immediately resolved to protest against this proclamation. A deputation waited on the President and General Van de Lundt, and told them what they thought, advising the withdrawal of the obnoxious proclamation, and offering to give up their Sunday's pleasure (a great thing for a Colognois to do), provided they would give them a promise in writing that neither police nor military should interfere with the people to-day (Sunday), but leave the citizen guard to keep order and quiet. If they were refused, and the military allowed to act, then they said the Government must be answerable for any excesses committed by the people, as to-day there is what they call an after-kirmess in the same parish. After obstinately refusing for some time, the heads of the Government at last gave way, the permission for the guard of citizens to continue their functions was granted, and the proclamation withdrawn.

GOVERNMENT TROOPS AND MUNICIPAL GUARD, COLOGNE.

"Monday, August 10.—Thank God, the night has passed over quietly. The streets were, of course, full of people, excited enough, but more with joy at having, for the second time, got the mastery than anything else; and I trust now that everything will subside into its usual quiet. The principal citizens are drawing up a protocol which is to be presented to the King in person, by a deputation of the first people in the town, giving a fair statement of the affair; and also, it is said, they intend complaining of the excessive dearness of everything here, begging for a diminution of the taxes with which Cologne is burdened, on account of its being a fortress.

"There is but one opinion on the subject in all parts of the country, viz., that the conduct of the military was shameful in the extreme, and that the citizens of Cologne have behaved most nobly in doing their best to preserve the peace of the city, and in having left the laws of the land to punish the offenders. Two or

PROCESSION TO ST. MARTIN'S.



THE CHARGE OF CAVALRY ACROSS THE BRIDGE OF BOATS, DURING THE RIOT AT COLOGNE.

YACHTING IN THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

GROUP OF YACHTSMEN.—DRAWN BY PHIZ.

three travelling Englishmen got beaten by the military, being accidentally in the crowd. I forgot to say there were also some disturbances on Thursday, the 3rd which gave rise to the scenes of Tuesday."

We have engraved one of the scenes of the conflict—at the Bridge of Boats; and a group of the prime movers in the conflict. Adjoining is depicted a procession to St. Martin's.

YACHTING AT THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

Last week we chronicled the sports of the annual regatta of the Roya Yacht Squadron, at Cowes; and of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club, at Cowes—the crowning glories of the yachting amusements of the season. We this week present our readers with three of the most stirring scenes of this great national festival.

First is a group of Yachtsmen, most characteristically sketched by Phiz. The companion print is a picture of Ryde Pier, on Wednesday, which we find thus graphically sketched in the Sunday Times:—"The view from the pier, and the scene upon it were exceedingly interesting and animated at this moment, and might have afforded fruitful subjects for the pencils of a Stanfield and a Cruikshank. Before us lies the Solent, covered with craft of every grade, from the stately three-master to the light wherry. Close to the pier lies the Portsmouth steamer, with her sooty funnel throwing forth dark clouds of smoke; and on the platform of the pier is congregated such a heterogeneous assemblage as one only meets with at watering-places. Invalids in Bath chairs; various specimens of the aquatic snob—a sort of hybrid monster in a pea-jacket and kid gloves, forming, as a naturalist would say, an intermediate link between Commodore Napier and Count D'Orsay; a squadron of nursery maids, each with a novel and half-a-dozen beautiful fair-haired rosy children to attend to; elderly gentlemen with telescopes; piles of luggage, and rough porters seated on their odd-looking wheelbarrows, waiting for some of the steamers that are continually arriving and departing; bluff sailors and fishermen, in their red woollen caps and blue Guernsey shirts; old ladies knitting or working under the Pavilion—young ones carrying on quiet flirtations with the aquatic snobs. Imagine nearly all the figures in this scene continually moving about, and forming, as it were, a human kaleidoscope, and you may form a tolerably correct idea of Ryde Pier on last Wednesday morning."

This scene of infinite variety our Artist has attempted to mirror in our page.

The third Illustration, at page 124, shows the last and most interesting event of the week's yachting—the Schooner Yacht Race of the Royal Yacht Squadron at Cowes. In our late Edition of last week, we thus briefly recorded this race:—

On Thursday, the scene once more opened at Cowes. The morning set in with a strong wind from the westward, accompanied by flying showers. It was for a prize of £100 that four schooners of this rate started, precisely at ten, A.M.:—

	Tons.	Owners
The Flirt	132	Sir Bellingham Graham, Bart.
Fair Rosamond	122	Marquis of Blandford
The Maud	119	T. Leigh, Esq
The Gem	126	T. W. Fleming, Esq.

Soon after the vessels had started, the breeze freshened to a whole gale; and, as the course lay round the island, it was over, to sea-ward, a wicked lee-shore. All manner of disasters befel them. The Maud, before making the Nab, carried away her foremast by the board, and ran for Portsmouth. The Flirt had a topmast blown out of her—in short, it was as perilous a pleasure-party as many a navigator has had to encounter in doubling the Horn.

After a long chapter of "moving accidents by flood," of the four that sailed in n the morning so gallantly, two returned in the evening—namely, the Fair Rosamond and Flirt; the former winning by five minutes.

Our Engraving illustrates the heat of the contest, abreast of the east end of the Island; with the mystic form of Culver Cliff, seen through driving mist and spray.

On Thursday evening there was a grand display of fireworks.

On Friday night the Club Ball took place, and was exceedingly well attended; upwards of 450 of the rank and fashion being present, among whom were the Duke of Leeds, Duke of Beaufort, Marquis of Donegal, Marquis of Ely, Marquis of Ormond, Marquis of Blandford, &c.

On Saturday, a Subscription Cup, value £50, was sailed for by the Belvidere, Secret, Champion, and Ino yachts, and won by the Secret in 10¼ minutes.

On Wednesday last, the following vessels started for Prince Albert's Cup. Course, from Cowes Roads to the westward, round a boat off Yarmouth, thence to the Nab, and back to Cowes:—

Naiad,	70 tons	John Quantock, Esq.
Heroine	35 "	J R Carnac, Esq
Intrepid	55 "	Duke of Beaufort.
Spider	33 "	I E. Lacon, Esq
Drift	55 "	James Lyons. Esq.

This was a handicap race, and the allowance of time for difference of tonnage was according to Mr. Ackers's scale. When the gun fired at eleven A.M., there was a strong breeze from the northward and westward, and the yachts proceeded to the westward, the Drift taking the lead, closely followed by the Heroine. On their return from Yarmouth, the Drift had the advantage by three minutes and a half, and in running to the Nab she increased it to nine minutes; but, in beating back, she lost ground, and only came in four minutes and a half before the Heroine; which vessel, being allowed 13 minutes 10 seconds, was declared the winner. The next vessel was the Intrepid, which came in 38½ minutes after the Heroine, and the Spider 22 minutes after her. The Naiad did not round the Nab. Never could there have been a finer day for the match; but the vessels, during the whole of the regatta, do not seem to have been well matched: there was nothing like a neck and neck in it.

RYDE PIER.—ROYAL VICTORIA REGATTA.

East Cowes Regatta took place on Tuesday. The crews of the whole of the sailing boats appeared to have taken too much grog on board, as two of them capsized.

SWEET SHORES OF THE SOLENT!

A BALLAD,

Composed expressly for The Illustrated London News, in celebration of her Majesty's sojourn during the autumn of 1846, in the neighbourhood of the delightful coast scenery to which the Poetry refers. The following words are adapted to an admired air ("the Guaracha,") arranged from Auber's Opera of "Massaniello."

Sweet Shores of the Solent! so varied inclining,
To meet the light wavelets that kiss your gold sands,
How oft has this Heart, since I saw ye, been pining,
Once more to revisit your many lov'd strands.
In dreams still I roam, as of yore, through those Arbours;
So hallow'd by Beauty, Love, Flowers, and Song.
Or steer my frail skiff o'er the swell of your Harbours,
While sailing your green-wooded margin along.
Sweet Shores of the Solent! &c.

Sweet Shores of the Solent! when by your clear waters,
In youth I first stray'd, with Life's prospects as fair
As the blushes and smiles on the cheeks of your Daughters,
I knew not of clouds, or of sorrow, or care
Then brightness, and verdure, and fragrance were round me;
And joyous seem'd Earth upon every side:
Now, alas! darken'd days, and leaves faded surround me:
Hope, mirth, and affections, together have died.
Sweet Shores of the Solent! &c.

But Solent's Sweet Shores! Be the sunshine still o'er ye;
Your roses bloom fresh, and your skies yet beam blue;
And smooth flow the beautiful sea still before ye,
As when its fair vision first broke on my view.
Eyes brilliant and soft, on your scenes now are glancing;
And music and laughter resound in your dells,
And gaily light barques on your deep bays are dancing;
Above, and around all of happiness tells;
Sweet Shores of the Solent! Be sunshine still o'er ye, &c.

Sweet Shores of the Solent! now don all your brightest
And loveliest looks, to bid welcome your Queen
Your Heav'ns be serenest, your Zephyrs the lightest;
And clothe fresh your banks in rich vesture of green.
And peaceful and calm be your every billow,
Beneath the tall galley afloat on your tide;
As the tranquil repose of the child on its pillow,
Or pulse at the heart of the happy young bride.

MUSIC.

The Second Italian Company at Covent Garden Theatre.—Covent Garden Theatre having been leased for three years beginning in 1847, with power to purchase at the expiration of 1849, the capitalists who have embarked in the undertaking, have appointed Mr. Costa Musical Director and Conductor. In a few days the official Prospectus of the Company will be published, and, according to the information we have received, the principal singers will not only comprise leading favourites, now in this country, but the greatest European artists, who had left us, as well as of those who have never visited England at all. The house is to be fitted up and decorated in the most costly and luxuriant style, and the stage arrangements and mounting of the operas will be on an unprecedented scale of expenditure.

The Turner Family.—We laid the flattering unction to our souls, that we had escaped the concert-season, and were fairly startled by a polite invitation to attend a musical performance at the St. James's Theatre on Wednesday, where we found a very fashionable auditory assembled, including the Duchesses of Somerset and Leinster, the Marchioness of Clanricarde, the Countess of Lincoln, the Earl and Countess of Charlemont, Lady Palmerston, Lady Wharncliffe, Lady Lawley, Lady Stewart, the Hon. Colonel and Mrs. Dawson Damer, General Upton, &c. The Turner Family fell under the notice of the Duchess of Somerset, in their native county of Somersetshire; and Mr. Mitchell kindly gave the use of his theatre, to afford their aristocratic patrons some notion of their precocious talents, —for the juvenile artists of whom we write number, respectively, only four (Miss Sophia), six (Miss Rosina), and eight (Miss Caroline) years. Little Sophia is a violinist, and stands scarcely higher than her tiny instrument; but she plays in good time, and with astonishing à plomb. Caroline and Rosina are harpists; but, as they have only one instrument between them, they contrive to play duos in a very curious manner—Rosina taking the bass, whilst Caroline, on the upper strings, plays the subject. The three sisters were much applauded, and will, no doubt, be taken by the hand to complete their studies.

Mendelssohn's "Elijah."—Rehearsals of the new oratorio took place yesterday and Thursday, at the Hanover-square Rooms, under the direction of the great composer, prior to the performance, on Wednesday next, at the Birmingham Festival. The oratorio is in two parts, and there are forty-two pieces. The words have been selected from the 17th and 18th Chapters of the First Book of Kings, and other parts of the Bible. Mr. Bartholomew has done the English version. The characters are Elijah (Staudigl), the Widow, Ahab, Obadiah, and Angel; Choruses of Angels, of the People, and of the Priests of Baal. The choral effects are stated to be colossal, and the instrumentation quite marvellous. The Festival begins on Tuesday next, and will last the week. Dr. Gauntlett will test the powers of the Great Organ, in Handel's "Harmonious Blacksmith," with variations, and in one of Bach's fugues. Mendelssohn and Moscheles perform a pianoforte duo for two instruments, and the latter a solo. Grisi, Mario, and F. Lablache will represent the Italian school of singing; Staudigl, the German style; Mdme. Caradori Allan, Miss Hawes, Braham, Phillips, Machin, the Sacred school; and the Misses Williams, Miss Bassano, Messrs Hobbs and Lockey, have also opportunities for display. The band and chorus comprise upwards of four hundred effective performers.

The Hereford Festival.—This meeting takes place the second week in September. The programme of Mr. Townshend Smith, the conductor, has given great satisfaction to the three counties, whose charities are represented at the gathering.

Salvi.—This great tenor has been in London for three days, but left on Thursday for St. Petersburg, viâ Hamburg. He will appear in London at the ensuing spring.

Death of Gabussi, the Composer.—This clever writer expired on Saturday, after a short illness of some hours, of a long standing liver disease. He was buried on Wednesday at Kensal Green. Gabussi, born in Bologna, was a singing master, and was an especial favourite of Rossini.

Mr. Balfe.—This composer has left town for Vienna. He has contradicted the report mentioned by a contemporary, that £150 had been exacted from him by the manager of Her Majesty's Theatre, for permission to write an opera for Drury Lane Theatre. "Although," writes Mr. Balfe, "from the terms of my written contract, I was debarred from writing for, or making any engagement with theatres or other establishments in England, Mr. Lumley, on my application, granted me the permission as regards Drury Lane." Mr. Balfe adds, that he will receive an increased salary for his services as Conductor next season at Her Majesty's Theatre.

Parisian Musical News.—A [illegible] theatre has [illegible] by the Government. M. Adolph [illegible] Bettini, who was engaged by M. Leon Pillet in Spain, has made his début in "Lucia," at the Académie Royale de Musique, but failed, his strength giving way after the first act.—Costantini, the baritone, for whom Verdi wrote a part in "Attila," has just died in Bologna of consumption. Strauss, the Emperor of Waltzes, has been appointed Director of the Court Balls at Vienna.—Madame Persiani and Ronconi are at Biaritz, a watering-place near Bayonne: they will sing at Bordeaux prior to their arrival in Paris for the opera season.—Madame Rossi Caccia has returned to Paris from Marseilles, where she was prima donna. Tamburini and his son are in St. Petersburgh.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.—RETROSPECT OF THE SEASON.

We have now witnessed the closing of this great establishment, which, during the last nights, was filled by an audience more numerous and more aristocratic than we ever remember to have seen remaining in London so late in the season. "I Puritani," and "Le Jugement de Paris," on Tuesday terminated the subscription nights; and on the last of the long Thursdays, Grisi, Castellan, Lablache, Mario, Fornasari, Taglioni, Grahn, and Cerito, besides the other numerous stars of secondary magnitude, received the enthusiastic parting homage of the Opera votaries. The three latter probably we may never see combined again. The most skilful management can hardly, we should think, continue such feats as those we have witnessed in this respect this year and last; however, we have everything to hope from a government so powerful, so liberal, and enlightened, as that by which the destinies of this theatre have been swayed of late.

The feeling produced on the mind of every sincere lover of art, on looking back at what the past season at this great establishment has brought forth, must be one of unmixed satisfaction. Outward circumstances were not so favourable as in last year's brilliant campaign. The unprecedented liberality of the management, which then had excited surprise and delight, and created a sensation throughout the fashionable and unfashionable world, now came to be regarded as a matter of course; while another more serious disadvantage must have been the general depression which has certainly prevailed throughout the London season, the effects of which at some of the theatres were most severely felt, and which is universally allowed to have had a baneful influence on trade. In spite of these unfavourable circumstances, the management of Her Majesty's Theatre has kept on its brilliant course, steadily advancing the cause of art, and winning the good report of all the unprejudiced.

Notwithstanding the unequalled splendour of the previous season, we doubt whether the lyrical art has not made far more decided progress during that which is just concluded, the doings of which, in our opinion, have been characterised by a more extended and juster view of the great objects of art. In fact, it is quite remarkable how few mistakes have been made, and how seldom any performance has been given which fell below the rank of first-rate excellence. Every one, for example, who has been in the habit of attending Her Majesty's Theatre for several years past, must remember the large proportion of mediocre works—the inferior compositions of Donizetti, Bellini, and their imitators—which were wont to be brought forth, and constantly performed, and were preserved from failure by the talents of the artists engaged in them. No true lover of music could do otherwise than lament this, as most prejudicial to the art; and will be otherwise than gratified by finding, on examination into the performances of the past season, that he can hardly count up three nights on which the operas performed belonged to any but the first class of lyrical works. This will be seen by the following list of the operas given:—Rossini's "Barbiere," "Semiramide," and "Gazza Ladra;" Bellini's "Puritani," "Sonnambula," "Norma," and "Pirata;" Donizetti's "Anna Bolena," "Linda," "Lucia," "Don Pasquale," "Lucrezia Borgia," "Elisir d'Amore," and "Don Gregorio;" Verdi's "Nino," "Ernani," and "Lombardi;" Gnecco's "Prova d'un Opera Seria," Mozart's "Don Giovanni," and Cimarosa's "Matrimonio Segreto."

Before we proceed to notice in detail the performances of the season, we cannot omit a remark on the brilliant renovation of the house, whose appearance is now rendered well worthy of its high standing amongst lyrical theatres, and of the Royal and noble visitors who, night after night, take their stations in their boxes, and render this theatre the rendezvous of aristocracy and fashion. The best moment for judging of the change effected, was that when the audience were standing, while the National Anthem was performed; when the fair forms and elegant costumes of the ladies, framed in by the gold-coloured curtains, gave an effect to the scene hardly to be imagined.

The novelties brought out during the past season have been eminently successful. The first was Verdi's "Nino;" of this opera it is difficult to speak too highly. It is certainly one of the finest works composed for a long time past, nor do we remember a single opera brought out during the last few years which can bear comparison with it, except one by the same master—"Ernani;" but the latter is, perhaps, less likely to please universally. It is a work belonging to the highest order of art, and requires to be heard and studied frequently before its merits are fully appreciated. "Nino," on the other hand, contains a larger number of morceaux which impress at first hearing: charming melodies, effects quite original and unexpected, and combinations displaying the highest degree of musical skill, are to be found in this chef d'œuvre of the great composer of young Italy, which excited among his countrymen a degree of enthusiasm unparalleled even amongst the most excitable people of Europe. "Nino" was succeeded by "I Lombardi"—a work, as we have on previous occasions remarked, inferior, in point of musical inspiration, but compensating for this in a remarkable display of dramatic power, which entitles it to be ranked in that class of French compositions to which belong Weber's "Freischutz," Meyerbeer's "Robert le Diable," "Huguenots," &c. On this fine work, we have lately enlarged so much that we shall not now detain our readers with the consideration of its merits. Suffice it to say, that it is now a confirmed favourite.

The other lyrical novelty of the season is "Don Gregorio," an opera buffa, with a lively libretto, and containing some pretty morceaux; but, on the whole, of a character scarcely elevated enough for production at this great establishment.

One of the most interesting performances of the season was the revival of "Il Matrimonio Segreto," which had not been played for two or three seasons past, and to which the more interest was attached as it afforded an opportunity of comparing one of the finest compositions of an old master—one who was at the head of his art in his day—with the more modern works we are now in the habit of hearing. It is matter of no small interest to contrast the different schools, works from each of which are successively performed on our Anglo-Italian stage. On the one hand, we have Cimarosa and Mozart, who lived at that epoch in which the first great impulse was imparted to the lyrical drama—when concerted pieces and finales, which, more than any other portion of the opera, give scope to dramatic effects, were first introduced. The profound feeling for the art and admirable genius which characterise these works is united to a simplicity which contrasts them strikingly with the light, sweet, and graceful productions of Rossini, the composer, par excellence, for those who follow music as a pastime rather than a passion, as an agreeable amusement rather than a profound science; and with those of Bellini and Donizetti, who, though their muse is more sentimental, yet clearly belong to the school founded by the "Swan of Pesaro;" and then, again, with the massive grandeur, profound science, and dramatic feeling of the most modern of Italian composers—Verdi. The variety thus offered gives both entertainment and instruction to those who desire to dive into the secrets of that art which, in our days, decidedly enjoys prominence above every other.

Let us now turn to the lyrical performers. The commencement of the season witnessed the début of Mdlle. Sanchioli, and the performance of this lady in "Nino," elicited universal admiration. She there displayed a voice of extraordinary power and fulness, united to a remarkable degree of dramatic fire and energy, which gave a splendid effect to the bold, striking music of Verdi, and the fierce passions of the haughty heroine of the opera. Mdlle. Sanchioli is not, as yet, a finished artist. In her performance of other parts, especially, we have sometimes perceived a lack, not certainly of natural musical genius, but of that skill and delicacy of perception which is essential to a perfect singer, and which study alone can give. She has all the materials for a great artist, for to her natural powers she unites the feu sacré, that passionate feeling for music which now occasionally leads her into error, but which, when brought under due control, will prove, even more than her fine voice, a stepping-stone to the highest degree of excellence.

With Mdlle. Sanchioli appeared, for the first time, on this or any other stage, a young singer who offered a singular contrast to the passionate energy of style of the former lady. Mdlle. Corbari, timid and embarrassed, and even awkward in her movements, surprised and charmed the audience by a voice of the sweetest and most touching quality, and an execution so unaffected, so simple, and so fresh, that the very novelty and rarity of such a performance, ensured her general favour, which she has maintained to the end of the season, having made decided progress in ease of manner and in power of execution.

Before we proceed, we must mention Fornasari's performance of Nino, which is, decidedly, one of his finest parts. The admirable pathos of his acting, the exquisite taste and deep feeling for music which his performance evinced, produced a powerful impression, and added greatly to the effect of this fine opera.

The first performance of "Linda di Chamouni" brought forward another débutante, Teresa Brambilla, a young contralto, possessing a full, deep voice, and much natural taste, and who only needs study to become an excellent artist—the more valuable that her class of voices is so unfortunately rare.

Of the other great artists of the theatre, it is almost a work of supererogation to speak: they are as universally admired, as they are well known. One of the most important additions made for some time by Grisi to her repertoire, is the part of Giselda, in "I Lombardi." The new style of Verdi's music rendered her performance of this part an experiment of much interest, from which she came forth with success; while its striking dramatic character adapted it well to this Queen of lyrical tragedy. Fornasari here achieved another triumph, both as an actor and a singer; while the part of Oronte suited admirably Mario's beautiful voice, and roused his too often dormant energies as an actor. The striking improvement of this great tenor, is one of the remarkable features of the season's performances. He has now achieved the highest rank in his art; for to his almost unequalled natural powers, he adds a fire, a depth of expression, and an ar[illegible] feeling, which have been gradually on the increase since his first début, and which give an effect to his performance which must be witnessed to be appreciated.

The Lucia, the Sonnambula, the Linda, the Zerlina, and the Adina of the season, have been represented by Madame Castellan—a prima donna most admirably adapted, in person, manner, voice, and execution, to such parts as these. The sweetness and extraordinary compass of her voice—her exquisite musical feeling—the natural and deep sensibilities, and the playful vivacity of which she is by turns capable—render her performances most attractive and delightful.

Lablache is always the same—unapproached and unapproachable in all the parts he undertakes, whether tragic or comic. In the character of the brutal tyrant Henry VIII., in "Anna Bolena," and in that of the duped old beau, in "Don Pasquale," we are equally convinced that we shall never look upon his like again. We must not omit to mention his son, F. Lablache—an artist who is always zealous, always useful; and who unites to these qualities no small portion of his father's talents, without the addition of that extraordinary physical power, which renders the latter one of the most remarkable artists of this or any other day.

Though much circumscribed in our space, we cannot pass in silence the admirable conduct of the choruses during the past year; and, in fact, the general excellence of the manner in which Mr. Balfe has conducted those parts of the performances which fell to his department. In spite of all prognostics to the contrary, he has not only ably filled the place of Costa, but has done it to the general satisfaction of the Opera votaries.

The glories of the ballet have, however, held at least equal sway with those of the opera, and we have had most brilliant performances of this class during the season.

"Catarina" was the first choregraphic novelty brought out. Excellent scenery, brilliant costumes, and picturesque groupings, with pas, such, for example, as the "Pas Strategique," of an entirely new character, together with the admirable dancing of Lucile Grahn, and the debut of a young and charming danseuse, Louise Taglioni, rendered this ballet a decided favourite; and yet must we give the palm of superiority to "Lalla Rookh," which, in many respects, was entirely a novelty, and which, for splendour of scenery and mise en scène, and the artistic taste which directed its details, has not been equalled for a long time. The "Pas Symbolique," and, above all, the exquisite "Pas des Neuf," at the conclusion, deserve to be classed amongst the highest efforts of the choregraphic art, and displayed to the best advantage the exquisite dancing and the peculiar style of Cerito. Taglioni, in "La Gitana," came to increase the difficulties of the subscribers in awarding the preference. In the "Jugement de Paris," the three great danseuses, appeared together; but so admirably did they all acquit themselves, and so far did they surpass what they had achieved before, that the most enthusiastic were forced to forget their partizanship and join in applauding all and each in turn. Perrot, St. Leon, and the graceful Louise Taglioni, who is now a decided favourite, came in for a full share of the ovations, which certainly have seldom been better or more fully deserved. We have already so often commented on this beautiful pas, and on the performance of each of the danseuses, that we shall content ourselves with saying, that while the exquisite grace and wonderful ease of Taglioni, and the extraordinary power and fascinating joyousness of Cerito, more than maintained their popularity, that of Grahn has been perceptibly on the increase. She has acquired even an increase of vigour and of precision in her motions. The poetry and intellectuality of her style become more and more remarkable, while the species of wild enthusiasm which marks her performance cannot but communicate itself to the spectator. Want of space compels us now to conclude, with this parting wish to the votaries of the two muses who reign predominant at Her Majesty's Theatre, that they and we may long and often enjoy such performances as these within its elegant precincts.

PRINCESS'S.

A little two act piece, evidently taken from the French, entitled "A Curious Case," was produced at this house, with success, on Monday evening. The plot is not remarkable for ingenuity, nor, in its English dress, does it appear very probable; but it is neatly constructed, and the dialogue runs on pleasantly enough. Mrs. Aubrey (Mrs. Stirling) is driven, for an especial purpose, to pawn a set of diamonds; and, in doing so, discovers an old sweetheart in the person of the pawnbroker's foreman, Charles Stanton (Mr. C. Fisher), who has been in better circumstances. The husband of Mrs. Aubrey (Mr. James Vining) chances to follow her to the shop; and, suspecting the object of her visit, determines upon giving a ball, at which she must wear her jewels, in order to confound her. Meanwhile Mrs. Aubrey has parted with the money raised upon the diamonds, and is in a terrible dilemma; but, after much entreaty, relying upon old recollections, she gets Stanton to let her have the brilliants, positively for one night only, promising to return them by day-break the next morning. The company arrive, and Aubrey is astonished to see his wife in her own jewels. Stanton, also, is, by some means or other, amongst the guests. The ball does not break up until morning; and then, Aubrey, seeing the foreman, suspecting his object, privately removes the jewels from where his wife had secreted them, to the intense consternation of Mrs. Aubrey and Stanton. It is, however, discovered at last that Mrs. Aubrey had raised the money to save the honour of her sister, Julia, who has become indebted to some swindling foreign gentleman at play. This is an outline of the plot; but, in addition to the characters named, there is a capital one for Mr. Charles Mathews—that of Twiggleton, the husband of the aforesaid Julia, who is a prying, babbling, mixture of the knave and fool; and, whilst he is involving himself in all the troubles of the other parties, never makes the discovery that his wife is the source of the evil. Mr. Mathews was most amusing, and his rapid delivery and touch-and-go manner of acting generally, kept the audience in high good humour, whenever he was on the stage. The rest of the characters were very well played, and the comedietta promises to become as popular as any other from the repertoire of this establishment.

ADELPHI.

Mr. Charles Selby has taken advantage of the furòre excited by the "Pas de Deesses," at the Opera; and produced a burlesque extravaganza on the subject, at this house, called "The Judgment of Paris; or, the Pas de Pippins."

In a piece de circonstance of this kind, which must of necessity be planned, written, and brought out with high-pressure haste, whilst the prototype is before the public, or fresh in their minds, acute criticism on its merits ought not to be looked for. It is, however, filled with jokes upon passing topics and follies, and plays on words generally, some of which were received with the courtesy due to strangers, and others warmly welcomed as very old acquaintances indeed.

Taking the "sense of the house" as the criterion of its success, we are bound to say that the extravaganza answered all the purposes intended. The "goddesses" are represented by Messrs. Wright, Paul Bedford, and Ryan; and they have, of course, a pas de trois, which is uproariously received. But we must honestly express our distaste for such exhibitions; and the more so in the present case, because both author and actors are so fully competent to make people laugh heartily by legitimate means. Mr. Selby having written some of the most successful pieces ever performed at the Adelphi, whilst the humour of the illustrious comedians is well known. It is, therefore, to be regretted that they should stoop to a display which, to use a mild term, is offensive, even to those who love to scream until their sides ache at the Adelphi; and we are amongst their number.

We miss Miss Woolgar at this house, and regret to find that continued indisposition has for some time kept her name out of the bills: she has gone into the country for change of air.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The Opera's closed for the season,
And Parliament's just on the go;
Old Ireland has ceased to talk treason,
And things are uncommonly "slow."
So, for lack of some better amusement,
(We don't care to cricket or row!)
We'll speculate what the last news meant,
Of Pyrrhus, Sir Tatton, and Co.

This week was a considerable one among the Tykes. Knavesmire was itself again; and the leg, as he turned his face once more towards sympathetic York, felt his bosom's lord sit lightly on its throne. It is known that the county of that ilk is divided into several "ridings," topographical as well as Olympic. With the passage of equestrianism just accomplished adjacent to its capital we are not of purpose to treat—save insomuch as it throws its shadows before; except in cases where the use of its lights may serve to bring out our prospective. As our thesis intimates, our present affair is with the coming St. Leger, or rather with the leading dram. per. of that exciting representation, "Pyrrhus, Sir Tatton, and Co."

Monday last opened at Tattersall's with a decided movement in the market, as regarded the Doncaster horses. The reason for this is not so obvious; save that your public always runs after the money there—and everywhere else. The pair, indeed, named in our posy, are still the lords of the ascendant; but Brocardo and Sting came out with a prestige for which there was no accounting. Perhaps, the announced intention of running Iago for the Great Yorkshire Stakes, had some influence upon the estimation of the former, as in some wise elevating him to the dignity of "Scott's horse"; but, seeing Sting at 13 to 1, "we wondered how the —— he got there." Our speculation in the odds never goes beyond a little quiet theoretical reverie—or gossip at the utmost: shall we make you our audience for the nonce? . . . .

There is a stern old truism to the intent that "you cannot have your cake and eat it." Thus you cannot win your Derby and your Leger with the same animal. Don't ask us why: so it is: as Mathews the elder used to say, "we've tried it, analysed it, and we know it." Q.E.D., Pyrrhus shall not carry us or our fortunes at Doncaster. Sir Tatton the quadruped is as little like Sir Tatton the biped as two living things may be. The latter is in morals what a right line is in mathematics; the former in ditto what the square of the hypothenuse is in ditto; that is to say, a less obvious proposition. We don't understand him, and repudiate the doctrine "omne ignotum pro magnifico." Remember we only promised a gossip, don't expect a philosophical lecture. Brocardo, Iago, The Traverser, Grimston, that has done too much; Fancy Boy, that has done too little; pass we these, and lo! Sting claims comment. Once upon a time he was to have won the Derby, but he did'nt. There he was in Mr. Forth's stable, now he is in Mr. Ford's; "what's in a name?" He ran shocking bad at Epsom (and no wonder, if he had half the "drowsy syrups" in him they said he had); but why should he run better i' th' north? They have never tried him since spring; and, unless Lord Lonsdale gives them a lift, he will go to Doncaster stark "dark" as to his three-year-old form; unless, that is, he goes to Jericho by grace of Lord L. as aforesaid. Let this be a cosmopolite maxim; no one ever yet bought a horse a bargain positive. Chance may so convey such an animal to one's possession, but not if the owner knew his worth. Do you suppose Mr. Forth let Lord Edward Russell have Sting purely out of personal love and affection? Don't: recollect there are such things as commissions de lunatico inquirendo. In venturing your money—if you will essay the forlorn hope—believe, with reference to racing, nothing that you hear and very little that you see. As to the Leger, so soon to be on the tapis, lay 5 to 1 against any market horse between this and the judge's verdict, and you will scarce go wrong.

TATTERSALL'S.

Monday.—A small attendance of members, and very little business transacted, but that little important, inasmuch as the Laura colt, which was not mentioned last week, became first favourite for the Ebor Handicap, to the great dismay of the "ancient order of Druids," their pet having been sent to the right about. Bourton and Satyr were in force. The St. Leger betting was scarcely less interesting. Brocardo and Sting—the "nobbled ones" of the Derby—having sprung about eight points each, with powerful parties. Sir Tatton Sykes was also in great favour. With the other horses the tendency was downwards. Last prices.

EBOR HANDICAP

[illegible] Laura c[illegible]	4 to 1 agst Bourton	10 to 1 agst Satyr (t)

YORKSHIRE STAKES

[illegible] agst Iago (t)	7 to [illegible] agst Mendicant

LEAMINGTON STAKES

5 to 1 agst Mongre[illegible]

ST. LEGER

[illegible]	[illegible]	30 to 1 agst Erin-go-Bragh
8 to 1 —— Pyrrhus the First	12 to 1 —— Grimston	30 to 1 —— Mount Callan
8 to 1 —— Brocardo	13 to 1 —— Fancy Boy (t)	33 to 1 —— Poynton
10 to 1 —— Iago	13 to 1 —— Sting (t)

DERBY

10 to 1 agst Johnny Armstrong	15 to 1 Red Hart

Thursday.—Not three subscribers present, and not a bet laid.

AQUATICS.

Twickenham Regatta.—The Twickenham Regatta, in commemoration of the Queen Dowager's birthday, for a purse of sovereigns, subscribed by the residents of the vicinity, came off on Monday, and was very numerously and respectably attended. Grand Heat: James Hammerton (Pink), 1; Henry Hammerton (Red), 2; James Jordan (Blue), 3. After effecting a capital start, and remaining together for a considerable distance, the winner went out in advance, closely pressed by the second man. A hard race throughout, and won by scarcely more than a length.

Championship of the Thames.—The grand rowing match, between Campbell and Coombes, for £200, and the championship of the Thames, came off on Wednesday morning, amidst a crowd of spectators. The distance rowed was from Putney Bridge to Mortlake. The competitors, both sanguine of success, commenced their task for the object of their ambition, with a full determination to win, and after a smart contest Coombes came in first at the winning post, and obtained the prize. A good deal of money, in the shape of bets, will have to change hands upon the occasion.

YORK RACES. Wednesday.

The Dundas Stakes of 15 sovs. each. Mile and a quarter.

Mr. Gully's The Hero, 3 yrs .. .. .. (A. Day)	1
Mr. Meiklam's Lightning, 5 yrs	2

The Knavesmire Stakes of 200 sovs. each. Mile and three quarters.

Mr. W. Scott's Sir Tatton Sykes, 3 yrs	1
Mr. Lane Fox's Wrestler, 3 yrs	2

The Ebor Handicap of 200 sovs. &c. One mile and three quarters.

Mr. Copeland's Arthur, 4 yrs, 6st 1lb	1
Major Yarburgh's Miss Sarah, 4 yrs, 8st 7lb	2

The Knavesmire was won by half a distance.

The Queen's Plate was won by the Hero, and the Lottery Plate by Snake.

Thursday.

The Chesterfield Handicap of 10 sovs each, and 60 added. One mile. Seventeen subs.

Mr. A. W. Hill's Burlesque, 3 yrs, 6st 12lb	1
Lord Chesterfield's Lady Wildair, 4 yrs, 7st 7lb	2
Lord George Bentinck's Coal Black Rose, 5 yrs, 6st 8lb	3

Seven ran.

The County Cup of £150, added to a Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each. Two miles. Fifteen subs.

Mr. John Day's The Hero, 3 yrs	1
Mr. Bosvile's Brother to Millepede, 3 yrs	2
Major Yarburgh's Red Robin, 4 yrs	3

Cricket.—The County of Sussex with A. Mynn, Esq., v. All England.—At the close of the third day, Sussex having followed their innings by the obtainment of 162 runs, put "All England" in the position of having to go in for 57 runs to win It happened, however, that nearly every one, gentleman or player, who had participated in the match, was engaged on the succeeding day (Thursday), in matches at other and distant parts of the country, and, therefore, it was considered, that, under such a state of circumstances, the only course to be adopted was to draw the match.

The Gentlemen of Surrey v. the Players of Surrey.—This match was brought to a conclusion on Saturday afternoon. The gentlemen, in their second innings, made 60 runs, putting the players in, therefore, for 24 runs, which the players made, having six wickets to go down.

GOSSIP OF THE WEEK.

Westminster having now ceased to afford the Public any amusement from forensic battles in her Courts, and furnishing only the dregs of entertainment from the closing debates in her Houses of Parliament, she only invites our notice at present to the state of her Bridge. This worthy old edifice—the builder of which was, in his time, venerated as a sort of Pontifex Maximus—is now in one of its periodical fits of stoppage; to the great discomfiture of all the sojourners in the West, excepting such as happen to be either Vauxhall or Waterloo Shareholders. This is, however, we are told, to be positively the last time of poor old Westminster's pontial delinquencies. The oft-patched-up fabric is judged and condemned; and next year we are to have a new Bridge, built on the principle of "one down, another come on."

We have been favoured with some information of a very select character, respecting the Select Committee of the House of Commons, which has been at work on the subject. We must say that the animus of our informant seems to betray the influence of some disappointed Contractor, who wanted the job of repairing the old stone work or timbers, and who is indignant at the resolution for their total removal—

> Illum indignanti similem, similem que minanti
> Aspiceres, pontem auderet quòd vellere Cocles.

However, we hasten to lay the document before our readers, with a few explanatory notes:—

THE WESTMINSTER-BRIDGE COMMITTEE.

Air—"The good old days of Adam and Eve."

Have you heard the Report of the great Commission
On poor old Westminster-bridge's condition?
Its stones, they said, like dropped orders were falling,
And its piers for proxies loudly calling.
And, as it seems to be right, in this queer age,
For the House of Commons to deal with the Peerage,
They found a Committee that did not grumble
At sitting on a Bridge that was going to tumble.
And is not it a shame and a pity
That our Bridge should be lost through a Commons' Committee?

From kinder hearts 'twould have met with approval
For its grief at its London friend's removal.*
But they said in these days of amelioration
The Bridge displayed a vicious inclination.†
From the proper line its sad deflection
Might be endured 'neath the reign of Protection;
But now that the Sliding Scale's abolished,
Such a sloping bridge out to be demolished.
And is not it a shame and a pity
That our Bridge should be lost through a Commons' Committee?

McAdam states that Charing-cross is Passed every year by six million horses.‡
If these poor old arches have borne the most of them,
Instead of destroying, we ought to boast of them.
We shall all perceive, in about a year hence
What animals gain by the Commons' interference;
For the fine new Bridge of our governing class, is
Only proposed for the benefit of asses.
And is not it a shame and a pity
That our Bridge should be lost through a Commons' Committee?

I'm sure the old Bridge, on which they heap ill,
Is at least good enough for the neighbouring people;
Is it worth employing masons and sawyers
To prevent the chance of drowning some lawyers?
And as to our statesmen and great politicians,
What matter to them are the Bridges' conditions?
Let them take one side of what you please, sir,
They can shift to the other with perfect ease, sir.
And is not it a shame and a pity,
That our Bridge should be lost through a Commons' Committee?

These great M.P.s who reform the nation
Might at least try their hands at a Bridge's restoration;
Destruction should not be the end meant
By those who are trained to "move an amendment."
There's Hungerford proves to the dullest comprehension
That a bridge, like an order, may be in suspension:
"To this day six months" our traffic may lie still,
But oh! let us "catch the Speaker's eye" still.
For is not it a shame and a pity,
That our Bridge should be lost through a Commons' Committee?

Building—or, rather, unbuilding and rebuilding—projects suit now also the Sovereign will.

> Diruit, ædificat, mutat quadrata rotundis;

and the square apartments of Buckingham Palace are to be enlarged, at the expense of the round cupolas of the Brighton Pavilion. This last-mentioned fanciful specimen of an architectural cruet-stand is doomed to fall; and, in the language often heard on the beach of its own town, is politely requested to "join a party for a sale."

A good many years have passed away since Moore laughed at its then newly-built eccentricities, in his amusing narrative

> Of the Mandarin-Bird, who went out on a visit
> To that palace, or china-shop, Brighton, (which is it?)

And since then it has reared its many-pointed pinnacles and domes, calling itself a "Marine Palace," without having a single window from which a marine view could be obtained, and spreading its lawns over the heart of that most celebrated watering-place, of which an Illustrious Personage is reported to have said "that it gave its visitors country without trees, and a sea without ships." Now, however, George the Fourth's pet retreat, of which Byron wrote—

> Shut up—no, not the King, but the Pavilion,
> Or else 'twill cost us all another million;

is to be not simply shut up, as it has been for years, but is to perish, and feed with its spoils, the glories of its Buckingham and Osborne rivals. The Royal will treats its glories as Medea treated the limbs of Absyrtus—

> Dissipat in multis invenienda locis.

It has been said of Shelley that you cannot find a poem of his that does not contain the word "Pavilion," or some word derived from it; and to many minds, the idea of Brighton without a Pavilion may appear unendurable. We suspect, however, that the place, like the poet, will be found still beautiful and attractive, even when completely "unpavilioned."

Wednesday was a great day for those "Tritons of the minnows" whose aquatic ideas are limited to the river Thames—to those who get up "scratch fours;" who are scientific about "outriggers" and "clinker builds;" who can shoot Battersea-bridge blindfold; who have renown at Searle's and credit at Avis's. The sculling match on that day between Coombes and Campbell was, however, a really beautiful sight; at least, so far as the splendid style of rowing displayed by Coombes went. As for a race, the thing was as hollow as Coroner Wakley's legal information. We had thought of addressing Coombes's wager-boat after the fashion of Catullus:—

> Phaselus iste, quem videtis, hospites,
> Ait fuisse navium celerrimus.

But, on second thoughts, we preferred the style of the legend which Coleridge justly termed—

> The Grand Old Ballad of Sir Patrick Spens.

A stanza or two will suffice. The fragmentary plan has an antique air to the reader, and is also decidedly much easier for the writer.

Bob Coombes came from Newcastle bleak,
Where he'd tamed the pride of the Tyne, oh—
"Now, where shall I find a London sculler
To race this boat of mine, oh?"

Out then spoke a waterman old,
Near Westminster that did ramble—
"There's many a man sculls well on the Thames,
But the best is Charley Campbell."

Charles Campbell has written a braid letter,
And sealed it with his thumb, oh;
He has sent it unto Robert Coombes,
And bade him to Putney come, oh.

"To Mortlake, up to Mortlake,
To Mortlake with the tide, oh,
You must race me up to Mortlake, Coombes,
And see who'll be champion tried, oh."

* * * *

They plied their sculls on a Wednesday at noon,
With all the speed they may, oh;
Bob Coombes he started off with the lead,
And he kept it all the way, oh.

* * * *

Oh, a boat is moored off Mortlake Church,
Where the tide it flows so fleet, oh—
There's Robert Coombes at the winning post,
While Charley Campbell's beat, oh.

Aquatic matters naturally lead the news-seeker across the water for "Foreign and Colonial produce." As for the latter, the British Lion is wagging his tail at the Cape, and using his claws against the Kaffirs pretty effectually. Among foreign nations Germany is, by way of a wonder, the liveliest at present. As a musical nation, Germans have a right to be noisy. They have been re-enacting the Stoke Pogis revolution in grand style at Cologne. The national characteristic of German revolutions is in fact their remarkable innocence. The insurgents always sing, and sometimes unfurl a flag. This last is, however, a very energetic overt act for Teutonic treason. The general plan is to meet and talk sotto voce; to invoke Vaterland, and say that the day will come. At this stage of their proceedings an elderly gentleman re-lights his cigar, and moves away with the remark "Das ist sehr merkwurdig." This is the sign for the meeting to break up.

Germany is noisy in other parts besides Cologne. The Crown Prince of Denmark is without any issue, except that of manifestos; and the question is, what is to become of Holstein and Sleswick at his death. It is the unfortunate Salic law that breeds these doubts. The waters of the Saal seem to have engendered a prejudice against females; for, certainly, the want of gallantry among the Salian Tribes has left its effects to the present day. Like those of Cydnus, the Salic streams seem to have possessed a preternatural coldness, so that those who bathed in them, like the son of Philip, grew cool towards the sex. Such is not, however, the general characteristic of the truly great.

Enumerate your men of worth,
And count each great commander;
There are hundreds like Marc Antony,
For one like Alexander.

'Tis just as well. With all his faults
And all his failings reckon'd,
I'd change the fame of Charles the Twelfth
For the fair of Charles the Second.

Oh, brothers dear of Germany,
Who make such dire commotion,
Lest Queens should rule, don't play the fool,
But look across the ocean.

Give Hanoverians Salic laws,
For them they may be fit ones;
Give us our Queen Victoria
To reign o'er true-born Britons.

JEANNE D'ARC.

HOMMAGE A RACHEL.

The Summer night had reached its mystic noon;
The song, the dance was over; and I stray'd
Through Rouen's silent city as the moon
Shone sadly on the statue of the Maid
Of Orleans. She looked to heaven, her blade
Pointed to earth, the fatal spot where Fire
With thousand tongues hiss'd o'er her, and allay'd
His thirst and gory Moloch's ruthless ire
In one poor woman's blood, on Freedom's phœnix-pyre.

Oh! Love! oh Liberty! oh Mercy! all
Ye Godlike attributes, where fled ye then?
Was superstition deaf to pity's call?
Had tigers left their cubs and desert den
To bear the forms but not the hearts of men?
Where was the Bedford's generous spirit? Where,
Oh France! thy son, Dunois, thy bravest when
She who redeemed thee from disgrace—despair—
Died like a thing accurst—sans shrift—sans tear—sans pray'r;

Yet, Retribution just and never dying,
Here in the Temple of the British Muse,
The soul of Jeanne still lives—her voice is crying
Aloud to our best sympathies. The hues
Of Genius' heavenly pinions can infuse
Into our hearts a portion of their flame.
And vainly would cold prejudice refuseuse
Honour eternal to the Gallic name,
Homage to Thee, Rachel! bright queen of tragic fame!

IRELAND.

There is no political news of consequence this week from Ireland; but we regret to state that the Irish papers contain the most melancholy descriptions of the disease in the potatoes. The disease appears to be general.

The Tralee Chronicle gives a lamentable sketch of the state of the barony of Iveragh. It is furnished on the authority of the Rev. J. B. Tyrwhitt, a benevolent and highly intelligent Englishman, and a clergyman of the Established Church:—"His account of the prospects of the people of this very poor barony, and all along from the river Kenmare, Sneem, Darrynane, to Cahirciveen, and thence towards Killorglin, is harrowing and startling. The whole potato-crop is literally destroyed; while, over a very wide surface, the oat crop presents an unnatural lilac tinge to the eye; at the same time, in too many instances, the head is found flaccid to the touch, and possessing no substance. The barley crop, too, in many places, exhibits the effect of a powerful blight. In some places, also, where turnips have been grown, they present—as, indeed, has been the case in other parts of the county—a healthy exterior in top and skin; but, on being opened, are found deeply impregnated with a taint similar to that which has smitten the potatoe, to such an extent, that one cannot stand in the blackened fields without being overpowered by the offensive effluvia."

A correspondence has been published in the Irish papers, from which it appears that the offer of being restored to the commission of the peace having been made to Mr. O'Connell on the part of the Government, the learned gentleman accepted it. Mr. O'Connell, in his letter upon the subject, says "Residing as I do for a great part of the year in Dublin, I accept the commission of the peace for Kerry, principally because my doing so gives me the opportunity of expressing my respectful gratitude to that eminent Judge, the Lord Chancellor, for terminating the injustice done me by his predecessor in office, Sir E. Sugden. I have also another and most powerful reason for accepting the commission; it is because I feel that the Lord Chancellor has in this, his conduct to me, vindicated the constitutional principle that no man should be made to suffer any penalty or punishment for seeking for the repeal of an Act of Parliament by peaceable and legal means, and none other."

The meeting of the Repeal Association on Monday presented no remarkable feature. A letter was read from Mr. Smith O'Brien, principally devoted to a defence of the Nation newspaper, and regretting its severance from the Repeal Association. Mr. O'Connell, in his speech, held out the olive branch to Mr. S. O'Brien, and said he would sacrifice anything but principle in order to procure his return to the Association.

Magistrates Restored to the Commission.—The Dublin Evening Post of Tuesday gives the following list of the magistrates restored to the commission of the peace by the Lord Chancellor: Lord Ffrench, county of Galway; Daniel O'Connell, M.P., county of Kerry; Sir Michael Dillon Bellew, Bart., county of Galway; H. Bridgeman, M.P., county of Clare; Pierce S. Butler, M.P., county of Kilkenny; Cornelius O'Brien, M.P., county of Clare; R. A. Fitzgerald, M.P., county of Tipperary; Caleb Powell, M.P., county of Limerick; Daniel Clancay, county of Cork; Nicholas Boylan, counties of Meath and Dublin; Francis Comyn, county of Galway; Christopher Nugent, county of Longford; J. M. M'Donnell, M.P., county of Mayo; R. de Verdon, county of Louth; Sir W. Verner, M.P., county of Tyrone. The Evening Post adds "Of these fifteen, fourteen had been superseded by the late Government for being Repealers, or attending Repeal meetings. The fifteenth is a remarkable name. At present we shall only say that we are delighted, on various accounts, at the restoration of Sir William Verner.—Besides the foregoing, Sir Richard Musgrave, Bart., of the county of Waterford, and J. A. O'Neil, Esq., of the county of Galway, who resigned, have been reinstated."

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

LORD BLOOMFIELD.

The family of Bloomfield is one of antiquity in Ireland; and the branch from which his Lordship derived has been long settled in the county of Tipperary. Through his mother, Charlotte, eldest daughter of Samuel Waller, Esq., and niece of Viscount Jocelyn, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, Lord Bloomfield descended from the noble house of Roden.

Lord Bloomfield, whose recent death we record, entered the Royal Artillery as Second Lieutenant, in 1781; and, after passing through the various gradations of rank, became Lieut.-General in the Army in 1830. He also held the distinguished position of Colonel Commandant of the Royal Regiment of Artillery. In 1808, he was appointed Gentleman Attendant on the Prince of Wales; and, during the subsequent Regency, filled the posts of Marshal and Chief Equerry to the Regent. In 1815, he received the honour of Knighthood; and, in 1817, on the resignation of Sir John MacMahon, succeeded that gentleman as Receiver-General of the Duchy of Cornwall, and Private Secretary and Keeper of the Privy Purse to the Prince. In Sept., 1824, he proceeded, as Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary, to the Court of Stockholm; receiving, at the same time, the Grand Cross of the Bath; and, in the May of the following year, on his return from his diplomatic mission, was elevated to the Peerage as Baron Bloomfield.

Some doubt exists as to the date of his Lordship's birth; but the more correct authorities give the year 1762. He married, in 1797, Harriet, daughter of the late Thomas Douglas, Esq., of Grantham, and has left one son, John Arthur Douglas, now Lord Bloomfield, and two daughters, the elder the wife of Thomas Henry Kingscote, Esq., and the younger of Henry Trench, Esq.

ROBERT PLUMER WARD, ESQ.

GIVE THE THEM THAT ARE

This distinguished writer, whose death occurred on Thursday, the 13th instant, received his education at Christ Church, Oxford; and, adopting the legal profession, was called to the Bar, and appointed, in 1805, one of the Welch Judges. He subsequently, however, retired from forensic pursuits, and became Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. From 1807 to 1811, he held office as one of the Lords of the Admiralty; from 1811 to 1823 as Clerk of the Ordnance; and finally as Auditor of the Civil List, until the abolition of that appointment in 1831.

In the literary world Mr. Plumer Ward long had a distinguished place as one of the most attractive and animated novelists of his day. His first work of fiction was "Tremaine," which gained considerable popularity, and was followed by "De Vere," a novel of a more studied order, sketching the career of English ambition, and the life of an English statesman. To these succeeded "Illustrations of Human Life" and "De Clifford." He published also a valuable work on "The History of the Law of Nations."

The branch of the family of Ward, from which he derived, has long borne similar arms to those of the Wards, Viscounts Bangor; but, owing to the fact of John Ward, Esq., (Mr. Plumer Ward's grandfather), having died in the Garrison of Gibraltar, where he had previously served at the taking of that celebrated fortress, nothing positive has been ascertained regarding the line of descent. That gentleman's only son, John Ward, Esq., married a Spanish lady, and left, besides two daughters, two sons—George, of Northwood Park, Isle of Wight, a merchant of great eminence in the City of London; and Robert, the subject of this notice, born 19th March, 1765. Mr. Plumer Ward married, first, Catherine-Julia, daughter of C. J. Maling, Esq., of Hilton, and by her had a daughter, Anne, and a son, Henry-George, the present M.P. for Sheffield, and Secretary of the Admiralty. His second wife was Jane, relict of William Plumer, Esq., of Gilston Park, Herts, and daughter of the Hon. and Rev. George Hamilton; and, through this alliance, he became possessed of the Plumer estates. By her he had no child. His last wife, whom he married in 1833, was Mary Anne, daughter of the Hon. Sir George Anson, G.C.B., and widow of the Rev. C. G. Okeover.

PRESENTATION OF COLOURS TO THE THIRTEENTH LIGHT INFANTRY, BY PRINCE ALBERT.

In our paper last week, we gave a brief account of the ceremony of the Presentation of New Colours to the 13th Light Infantry, by Prince Albert, on the previous Thursday; we now subjoin a detailed description of this interesting ceremony.

Southsea Common was the site chosen for the brilliant display, the "pomp and circumstance" attendant upon which attracted an immense multitude of all ranks, especially the higher, anxious to witness so interesting and national a spectacle.

The 13th was first embodied on the 20th of June, 1665, under the command of Thomas, Earl of Huntingdon. They left England for Flanders in 1742, and returned in 1745. In 1747, they again embarked for Flanders, and served in the wars of the Low Countries under Marlborough, returning in 1762. They were also engaged in the siege of Limerick. In 1768, they were sent to Ireland; thence to Minorca, in 1769; returning to England in 1776, in which year they were present at Culloden, under the command of his Royal Highness William, Duke of Cumberland, K.G., where, as a mark of distinction for their gallant conduct, the sashes of the officers and sergeants were ordered to be tied on the right side. In 1781, they were sent to the Leeward Islands, returning in 1782. In 1790, they embarked for the West Indies, and were engaged in the defence of the Island of St. Domingo, and returned to England in 1796. In 1798, they served in Ireland, during the rebellion. In 1800, they embarked for Egypt, where they served under Abercrombie against the French, and obtained the honour of bearing the Sphinx on their colours and appointments. In 1802, they proceeded from Alexandria to Malta; thence to Gibraltar (1803); and returned home in 1806.

In 1808 they embarked for Bermuda, and afterwards joined the expedition against Martinique in the same year, for which they were permitted by the Prince Regent to bear on their colours and appointments the word "Martinique," in consideration of their distinguished gallantry and services at the attack and reduction of that place. In 1813 they left Martinique for Halifax, and whilst there a detachment was sent to hold a post called La Cole Mill, where it most nobly performed its duty in repulsing the enemy, 6,000 strong, on which occasion the detachment had 13 men killed, and one captain, one subaltern, two sergeants, and 46 men wounded, and gained the thanks of General Provost, K.G., commanding the forces, for their gallantry. In July, 1815, they returned to England, and in the following month were sent to Jersey. In June, 1819, the regiment returned home, and in the September following embarked for Scotland, and thence, in November of the following year, for Ireland.

In 1822 they were ordered from Dublin to Liverpool, and thence to Edinburgh, to do duty during the visit of George IV. to that city. After the departure of his Majesty they embarked at Leith, for Chatham, prior to sailing for the East Indies. The regiment was denominated "Light Infantry," on Christmas Day, 1822, by order of George IV. In May, 1823, they arrived at Calcutta, and in April following embarked for Rangoon, in the Burmese empire, under the immediate command of Sir Robert Sale, the senior Lieutenant-Colonel being placed on the staff, and continued to be under the leadership of that distinguished officer in nearly all the principal engagements which took place in that country, and repeatedly received the thanks of the Governor-General of India in Council and the general officer commanding, and were permitted to bear on their colours and appointments the word "Ava," as a reward for their distinguished services in that empire. They returned to Calcutta in April, 1835

In November, 1838, the regiment moved from Kurnaul to Ferozepore, and formed part of the Army of the Indus, under the late Lieutenant-General Lord Keane, G.C.B., and on the breaking up of that army were ordered to remain in Affghanistan, which they did until 1842, when they returned to the Company's provinces, where they were received with the most marked honours by the Governor-General of India, in consequence of their distinguished services; and as a further reward for their continual gallant conduct her Majesty was pleased to

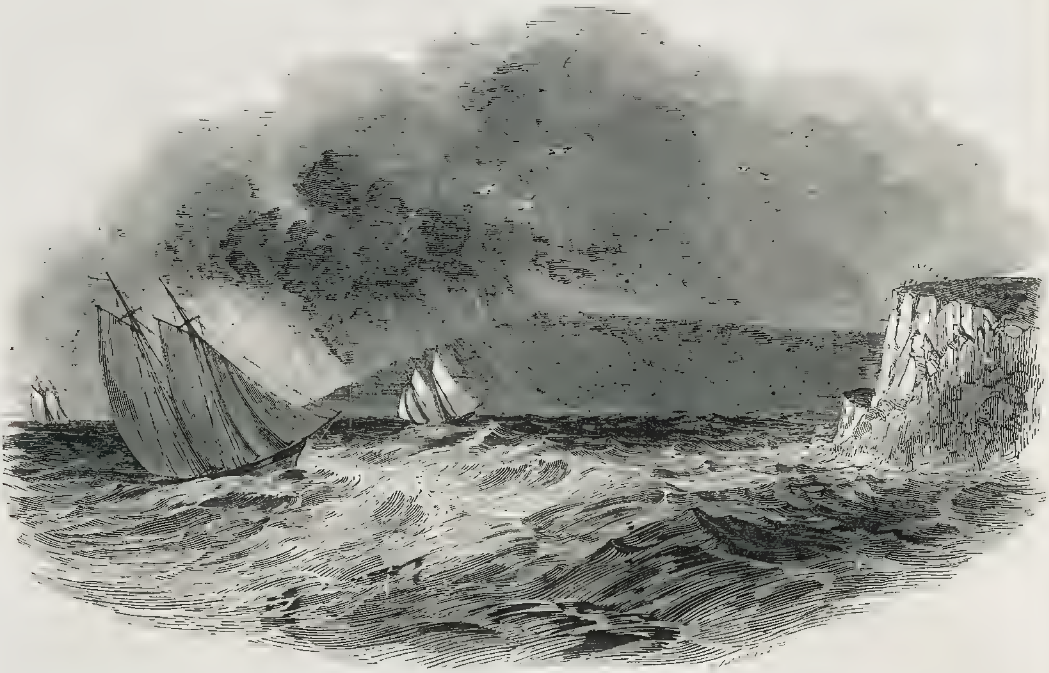
---

* The Report of the Commons Committee on Westminster Bridge states the pathetic fact that "the removal of old London Bridge disturbed its [i. e. Westminster Bridge] repose."

† The same report says, "In addition to its insecurity, the bridge is very inconvenient. Its inclination is greater than that of any bridge over a tidal river in England."

‡ See the Report for these calculation

YACHTING IN THE ISLE OF WIGHT.



SCHOONER YACHTS OFF CULVER CLIFF.—(ROYAL YACHT SQUADRON REGATTA.)—(SEE PAGE 121.)

order the facings of the regiment to be changed from yellow to blue, and to be styled "Prince Albert's Regiment of Light Infantry," and, further, to bear on their colours and appointments the words "Affghanistan," "Ghuznee," a mural crown superscribed "Jellalabad and Cabool, 1842." They returned to England in 1845. The late hero, Sir Robert Sale, was full Colonel of the 13th when he was killed.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert, wearing a field officer's uniform, came over from Osborne in the Royal yacht, accompanied by Colonel Wylde, and a small retinue, all in uniform, and landed at the King's-stairs, in the Dockyard, at about a quarter to four o'clock. The Commander-in-Chief, Admiral Sir Charles Ogle, Bart., the Lieutenant-Governor, Major-General the Hon. Sir Hercules Pakenham, K.C.B., and a brilliant staff of officers of both services, received his Royal Highness on landing, who immediately entered General Pakenham's carriage, and was driven to the field, escorted by General Pakenham and staff on horseback, receiving the shouts of welcome from the immense concourse of spectators who lined the road as he passed.

Soon after three o'clock, the regiment took up its position on Southsea-common, in line, at open order, with the old colours in the centre. On the arrival of the Prince, he was received with the customary honours. The regiment then formed three sides of a hollow square, the company told off as a guard for the new colours remaining in the centre of the open face.

The Prince having alighted from the carriage, mounted his charger—rode along the line, inside and out, inspecting the troops as they covered the ground, after which the Prince dismounted and entered the hollow square, accompanied by General Pakenham, Sir Charles Ogle, and staff, and stood uncovered while the Rev. J. R. Gleig, Chaplain-General to the Forces, consecrated the colours, which, after this ceremony, were handed to the Prince by Lieutenant-Colonel C. T. Van Straubenzee and Major Meredith. The Prince then handed them to the two senior Ensigns (J. D. Longden and Melvill Browne), who received them kneeling, and continued in that position whilst His Royal Highness addressed them in a brief but most spirited and soldierly manner, enjoining them to preserve their colours, never to allow them to be captured, but to emulate the conduct exhibited by the departed hero, Sir Robert Sale, whose absence was the only alloy to the gratification he felt in performing the august ceremony of the day. His Royal Highness, in the course of his address passed some high and well-deserved encomiums on Colonel Squire and the 13th Regiment, to which that gallant veteran replied

"I beg most respectfully to return my most sincere though humble thanks for the distinguished honour your Royal Highness has just conferred upon this corps in the presentation of new colours, and for the highly flattering manner in which your Royal Highness has been pleased to mention my name, in connexion with its services in India, and also for the gratifying encomiums which you have passed on our late honoured and respected commanders, Sir Robert Sale and Colonel Dennie. Your Highness may be assured that your gracious condescension will ever be esteemed by all ranks in the regiment as the greatest stimulant to the loyal and faithful discharge of their duty under whatever circumstances of trial they may hereafter be placed, in supporting the honour and interest of our beloved Queen and country. God save the Queen!"

His Royal Highness appeared much gratified with the sentiments of the gallant Colonel, and having bowed, retired with General Pakenham and Sir Charles Ogle, and remounted his charger.

The sides of the square, which were wheeled up, then wheeled back, and the regiment formed a line. The new colours were now "trooped," followed by the guard in charge, the band playing "The Grenadiers," slow march. On arriving at the left of the line the colours were carried, and the officers marched up in front of the line, one rank of the guard marching between the ranks of the line, and the other rank in rear of the rear rank.

On arriving at the place where the old colours were stationed, the new colours took up their place, whilst the old ones were paraded up the remaining portion of the line, the "trooping' still proceeding, and were then delivered over to the escort on the right of the line; their military existence, as standards of the regiment, then ceasing.

The ceremony having terminated, the Prince re-entered the carriage of General Pakenham, and, accompanied by Admiral Sir Charles Ogle, Bart., and escorted by General Pakenham and staff, returned to the dockyard, whence he embarked for Osborne House, under salutes from the ships in harbour, the Platform Battery, and the Contest, Columbine, and Sardinian corvette, at Spithead.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT PRESENTING THE NEW COLOURS TO THE 13TH REGIMENT

THE LATE SIR CHARLES WETHERELL.

Sir Charles Wetherell was the third son of Dr. Nathan Wetherell, Dean of Hereford, and for more than half a century Master of University College, Oxford, a clergyman of high literary and intellectual acquirements, and the friend of Dr. Johnson. The son, Charles Wetherell, was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, and prosecuted his studies there with much éclat. He was called to the Bar in his twenty-fifth year, in 1794, by the Hon. Society of the Inner Temple. He first practised in common law; but, though learned and eloquent, he had certain peculiarities of manner and delivery which marred his advancement there. He consequently soon left that department, and confined himself to equity: he speedily obtained extensive business, and high eminence in the courts of Chancery. In 1816, he was appointed a King's Counsel, with a patent of precedence. In 1817, in the celebrated trial of Watson for high treason, Mr. Wetherell was employed successfully to defend the prisoner. Here, despite of his Tory principles, he showed himself the bold and unflinching advocate of the accused; and the eloquent expression of his indignation at the spy system, by which the prosecution was supported, made at the time a great sensation. After this, he was appointed Recorder of Bristol; and in 1820 he took his seat, for the first time, in Parliament, as member for Oxford. In the House, as at the common-law Bar, the many peculiarities he possessed interfered with the distinction otherwise due to his talents: his slovenly attire, uncouth gestures, patchwork phraseology, fanciful illustrations, odd theories, recondite allusions, and old-fashioned jokes, made men less ready to admire his real ingenuity, learning, and consistency.

On the 31st of January, 1824, Mr. Wetherell was appointed Solicitor-General, and was knighted. Three years afterwards he succeeded Sir John Copley, as Attorney-General, but resigned, on the formation of the Canning Administration. He was again made Attorney-General, in 1828; but, on the Duke of Wellington's Government bringing in the Catholic Relief Bill, he once more retired, and never since held any office under the Crown.

In politics, Sir Charles Wetherell always stood forward as the most stanch and unbending supporter of Ultra-Toryism. His opposition to Catholic Emancipation and Reform in Parliament was unceasing and indefatigable. There was, indeed, something amusing in his perseverance to the very end against the Reform Bill, especially as he accompanied his hostility with much wit and humour. "This," said he, in his final address to the House on the subject, "is the last dying speech and confession of the member for Boroughbridge." His active and energetic enmity to Reform made him extremely unpopular at the time; when he went to preside at Bristol, as Recorder, in October, 1831, his life was endangered by the fury of the mob, and his presence in that city caused one of the most memorable riots ever known.

THE LATE SIR CHARLES WETHERELL.

After the passing of the Reform Bill, Sir Charles Wetherell quitted Parliament, and no consideration could induce him to again enter the House. He latterly had quite retired into private life.

Sir Charles Wetherell married, first, the 28th December, 1826, his cousin Jane, second daughter of Sir Alexander Croke. This lady died, without surviving issue, the 21st April, 1831. Sir Charles wedded, secondly, the 27th November, 1838, Harriet, second daughter of the late Colonel Warneford, of Warneford Place, Wiltshire, but had no children by this marriage: her Ladyship now survives him.

The melancholy accident which has led to the demise of Sir Charles Wetherell is already familiar to the public. He expired on the 17th instant, at Preston Hall, Kent, the seat of Charles Milner, Esq. He was in the 77th year of his age.

Death of the Prince de Rohan-Rochefort.—A letter from Prague, dated August 7, mentions the death of his Highness the Prince Benjamin Rohan-Rochefort, which, it is said, has the more deeply affected the inhabitants of Prague, to whom he was known, as the dreadful catastrophe was wholly unexpected. He arrived at that city in the afternoon, from one of his estates, intending to leave in the evening of the same day. Towards sunset, in order to refresh himself after his journey, he resolved to go to the military swimming institution. In spite of the warning of the superintending officer, the Prince ventured the dangerous leap from (or over) the barrier, when he was so unfortunate as to be carried under the raft; and, though all the swimming-masters followed him, it was with the greatest difficulty that they got him out of the water. All means taken to recover him were unavailing, his exertion in leaping having, doubtless, caused a rush of blood, which proved fatal.

Death of Another Flag Officer.—Rear Admiral of the Red the Hon. William Le Poer Treuch, died on Friday (last week), at Ballinasloe, at the age of 75. Two sons and a daughter by his first wife, and a son and a daughter by his second wife, survive him.

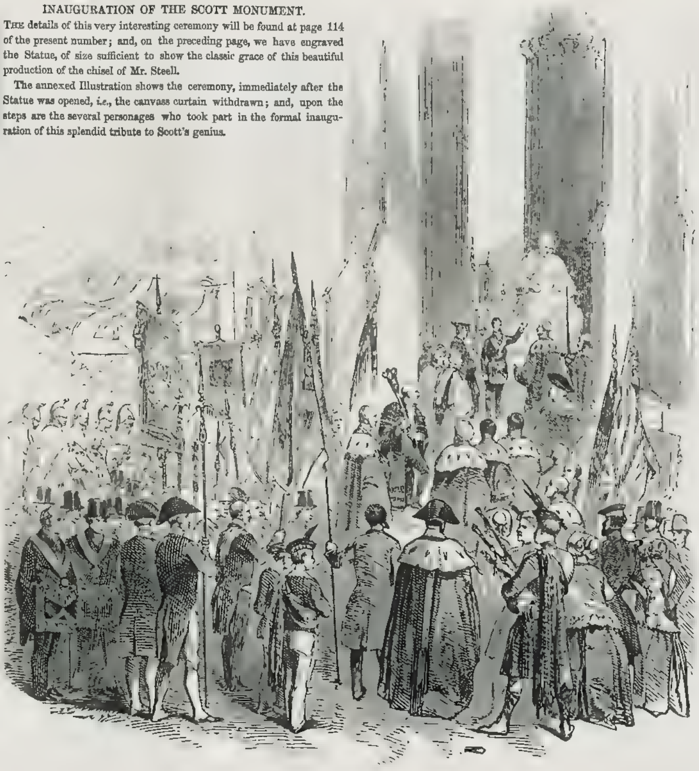
Death of Lieutenant General Wulff.—On Monday, only two days after the death of the senior Colonel Commandant of the Royal Artillery, Lord Bloomfield, the next senior, and, as a matter of course, his Lordship's successor to the commandantship of the horse brigade, from the colonelcy of the eighth battalion, Lieutenant General Wulff, died at the residence of his daughter, Lady Hardinge, on the Gun Wharf, Chatham, at the advanced age of 83 years.

Quarrel between the Hon. Mr. Sutton and Mr. Christie. Towards the close of the inquiry on Monday before the Andover Committee, a scene of great excitement took place, in which the above-named gentlemen were the principal actors. It appears that a question was put to Mr. Parker (then under examination) by Mr. Christie. Before the answer was given, the Honourable Mr. Sutton, in a state of excitement, ordered the room to be cleared. It is said that Mr. M. Sutton, when the room was cleared, charged Mr. Christie with having put the question, upon which strangers had just been ordered to withdraw, merely because he knew that The Times reporter was present. Mr. Christie replied that he treated the insinuation with contempt, and thereupon Mr. M. Sutton gave an intimation to Mr. Christie, which left upon the minds of the Committee no doubt that he contemplated sending a hostile message to the hon. member for Weymouth. With a view to prevent this object, immediate application was made to the sitting magistrate at Westminster Police-court, for a warrant against the honourable gentleman, and it was expected that he would have been brought up on Tuesday morning, for the purpose of being bound over to keep the peace. Owing, however, to the intervention of some prudent friends on both sides, we believe we may say that the affair has been so far settled as to render judicial inteference unnecessary.

INAUGURATION OF THE SCOTT MONUMENT.

The details of this very interesting ceremony will be found at page 114 of the present number; and, on the preceding page, we have engraved the Statue, of size sufficient to show the classic grace of this beautiful production of the chisel of Mr. Steell.

The annexed Illustration shows the ceremony, immediately after the Statue was opened, i.e., the canvass curtain withdrawn; and, upon the steps are the several personages who took part in the formal inauguration of this splendid tribute to Scott's genius.



INAUGURATION OF THE SCOTT MONUMENT, AT EDINBURGH.

THE POLICE OFFICES OF LONDON.

BY ANGUS B. REACH.

No. I.—THE MANSION HOUSE.

Dingy, fetid, close-smelling rooms, for the most part, places like a cross betwixt a bare, neglected, decaying school room, and a squalid sponging house, approached by low-browed, intricate passages; the walls greased and stained by the ceaseless friction of the forlorn, ragged groups of witnesses, and prosecutors, and the friends of prisoners, who lounge about in every avenue and approach which winds and crosses betwixt the Justice Room and the loathsome box-like cells—the head-quarters and general garrison of legions of policemen, who cluster round the outer door, and speak dictatorially to the swarms of poverty-stricken, squalid men and women who come for summonses, or with complaints, or to make distracted enquiries after missing friends or strayed children—the scenes, now of the awkward denouement of a midnight frolic; anon, of the revelations of sodden misery—of long-hidden, wasting despair—of foulest, most loathsome crimes—things which make society start back upon itself, and demand, breathlessly "Can this be amongst us?"—the loopholes, as it were, through which, every now and then, one half the world can, according to the old proverb, peep at what the other half is doing—those terrible revealers of the mysteries of London—the stepping stones, as it were, from the first triflings with crime, to the tremendous avengement of its developed daring—the Police Offices of this great city, unknown though their very localities, with a few exceptions, may be to the vast herd of Londoners—dingy, and drear, and dwarfed as is their general aspect—the Police Offices, we repeat, are spots which teach terrible lessons—which teem with extraordinary associations—occasionally mirthful, mostly sad—of scenes and passages the most exciting and the most wondrous of that great domestic drama whose mighty plot is daily and nightly being spun beneath the roof of every home in London!

People seldom think of the romance of Police Offices. They get quite excited about the cells of the Inquisition, or the oubliettes of the Bastile, or the dungeons of the Secret Tribunals of Bavaria. Perhaps, however, the common-place shabbiness of London Station Houses, the naked cribs of London Police vans, have witnessed as dire human misery, as fearful exhibitions of human depravity, as ever have the dungeons of the Council of Three, or the coffin-like recesses of the prison Gondola, which was wont to shoot with its captive freight along the Rialto. Bow-street, Clerkenwell, Guildhall, Marlborough-street—the names rattle glibly off the tongue. We associate them with tea and muffins, and a dressing gown, and the morning paper. We instinctively think of them as low, unpleasant places to be heard of, but no more to be entered, except upon compulsion, than we should dream of passing our forenoons in coiners' cellars or thieves' houses of call. Indeed, the vast majority of people who have been born and brought up in London would probably be not a little puzzled to find out the local habitations of the proper names they every day see connected with assaults and thefts and murders in their daily journals. There are, of course, exceptions. Bow-street had an ancient celebrity, which still haunts it. Every body knows the Mansion House, too; but we will answer for it that very few know much of the Mansion-house Justice Room. Where do the galleys of Thames Police we see upon the river rendezvous? In what precise spot is located the district tribunal we read of in general terms, as "Lambeth," or "Clerkenwell?" Who and what like are the "worthy magistrates" who preside at each of these minor benches? What their reputation—severe or tender-hearted?" What their personal air and bearing? Whether or no likely to be a "terror to evil-doers? What the class of offence with which each district more particularly abounds? What, in short, the general character and appearance of each of the principal seats of metropolitan police justice? These are questions which may be naturally, which are frequently asked, and questions which we propose to answer, in a series of light, sketchy papers, of which this is the first.

POLICE OFFICES OF LONDON.—THE MANSION HOUSE.

And now, without further preface, to plunge into our task. The materials are ample. We mentally survey not from China to Peru, but from Wandsworth to Lambeth-street, and demand with which we shall begin? The Mansion House carries it architecturally. A civic dignity, not to say majesty, invests it. We connect it with the thief-taking exploits of the Forresters; none of your mere police inspectors, with their dandy silver-embroidered uniforms, but chips of the regular old Bow-street block; men with the scent of a bloodhound after the embezzler or the forger. We connect it with the sayings and doings of a renowned series of Aldermen and Mayors; and, finding it invested with such attributes - such surpassing claims to attention -we postpone all consideration of the "great paid," and leaving offices extra muros for future consideration, we at once travel Citywards, and join the expectant group who are clustered round the eastern corner of the Mansion House, waiting the hour of noon, at which time, and not before (for civic majesty does not rise too early) a well-fed official will come solemnly down the steps of the the portico, and fling the portals open for the entrance of all and sundry

The crowd around is worth studying. There are a few well-dressed people mingling—and looking as if they were somewhat ashamed of themselves for the condescension—in the cluster of ragged witnesses and squalid women with dirty-faced babies at their breasts. There is no mistaking the plump "respectable tradesman" look of one personage. He is probably the prosecutor in some Mint case, of which the hero, after tendering a bad sixpence, and being laid hold of, has valiantly swallowed a couple of terrible coppery-looking half-crowns. There is a woman beside him, with a pinched face, and a dingy shawl, and a black eye—the fruits of last night's scuffle with her "fancy man." Beside her, again, may be a dandified-looking gentleman who has been sharp enough to catch a boy's hand in the act of taking the first requisite step for the transfer of a bandanna from his pocket to wave in the array of similar standards which decks Field-lane. Then you have a sharp vinegar-faced old maid, who has detected Sally in the act of handing up the remnants of the cold scrag of mutton to her hungry "follower," who has been lurking for half-an-hour before at the area railings. While making up the group of expectants, you note a collection of those indefinite, nameless, apparently houseless, mildewy, unshaven, dirty-faced, very shabby genteel people, who swarm about police offices, courts of law—every place, in short, where they can obtain the shelter of a roof for nothing.

And now the gate is open; you mount the portico flight—cast a look back into the swarming street—then, as you enter forward through the long vista of passages, broken by glass doors, which conducts to the Egyptian Hall, and, turning sharply to the left, you find yourself at once in the Justice Room of the Mansion House.

It might be called the Justice Closet—nay, the Justice Cupboard. 'Tis an oblong den of a place, the wainscoat greasy and soiled, the windows dusky and dim. An iron railing divides it into equal parts; one is for the spectators, the other for the actors in the drama. The space allotted for the former is trenched upon by a narrow passage, preserved by the rails in question, through which the prisoners are led to the dock by one door, while the Lord Mayor makes his entrance at another. Between the dock and the seat of judgment, the table allotted to the Clerk of the Court stands; and above him -the City arms carved over his [illegible] throne -sits, in all the glory of satin and ermine, the Lord Mayor of London -at present, John Johnson, Esq.

The ruler of the City for 1846 is a wealthy, and, in every way, a respectable and respected citizen. He is a paviour; and the enormous stone yard and wharf at Milbank, near the Penitentiary, belongs, or did belong, to him. It was there that the granite effigy of William the Fourth -which now graces the street called after him in the City—was carved. The Lord Mayor has the reputation of being a strong-willed, determined man; endowed with sound common sense in judging, and inflexible sturdiness of purpose in acting upon his opinions. He is, moreover, convivial, good-humoured, and, we believe, generally liked in private life. His Mayoralty has already been distinguished by even a greater than usual degree of civic hospitality; and he has been the first in the line of City Kings to [illegible]d the board of the Egyptian Hall for entertainments to literary and scientific men as well as to legal and parliamentary celebrities and gormandising City Corporations. Lord Mayor Johnson is a pleasant, ruby-gilled, looking personage, and in his judicial capacity generally exercises a sound common sense homely species of judgment; does not, very wisely for himself, stand so much upon the [illegible]icalities as upon the evident merits or demerits of a case; and has [illegible] follow the progress of false ent[illegible] book to ledger; unbaffled by all the mystic appliances which the commercial ingenuity of Capel court could bring to bear, with the view of concealing the cheat.

The ordinary routine of business at the Mansion House differs in no particular degree from that at the other Offices. Dispatch is generally the order of the day. The culprit takes his stand at the dock; the accuser, frequently a policeman, [illegible]ps into the witness-box beside him; puts his hat on the ground—all policemen do; smooths down his hair with the palm of his hand—another peculiarity of the force -and proceeds, inserting "Your Lordship" between every sentence, and at least twice in a long one—a third feature of the blue-coated gentry. In nine cases out of ten, the poor devil accused has nothing to say for himself; his hand was seen in another's pocket, or he was secured in the act of diving into some dark City court with the "swag" hidden under his ragged jacket, or the signature to the check which he presented at Smiths, Payne, and Smiths' is notoriously and palpably false, or the very scissors with which he has cut the old lady's pocket in the Paddington omnibus upon dividend-day is produced against him; and, in a few minutes, he is walked off, striding sullenly out of court towards the cells below, there to repose in peace until the arrival of the black dismal van, which is to bear him to a two months' residence in the House of Correction, or to the before-[illegible] wards of Newgate

But, besides this ordinary class of cases, the authorities at the Mansion House are frequently called upon to deal with other and more distressing instances of guilt. Probably, a well-dressed, gentlemanly lad stands at the dock. He has hidden his face in his hands, but his whole frame trembles convulsively; you can see the twitches of agony which jerk every limb; and, in the deep silence of the crowded court, stifled sobs are audible. He is a defaulter. Slowly and stolidly a witness gives his evidence—one of those white-neckclothed, steady going, bald, elderly gentlemen, so common about the City. He is the principal and confidential clerk of the house. He is distressed beyond measure for the ruined lad; but he has a duty to do—a duty, as he will say, "to the house, Sir—to my employers, Sir—to the whole commercial public, Sir." Alas! it is too true. Not a tittle of doubt about the case. The money under the prisoner's charge is deficient by hundreds. Evidence of extravagance and irregularity has been accumulating for weeks and months. First, there were flashy rings, and jewelled watches, and heavy bets on the Derby; and legends of champagne suppers, with sporting men, all boastfully narrated to his fellow clerks the next day. And then, poor Williams was often indisposed; and yet, somehow, he had been heard of driving a dog-cart in the Park, when he ought to have been in bed, curing his inveterate influenza. And when he did attend the office, he was unsettled and queer, and the flush came and went upon his face as a senior clerk approached his books; and he grew more nervous and fidgetty every day, and laughed loudly and vacantly, and then sat for half an hour gazing grimly on the fire. The [illegible]s first talked of his altered manner, then the partners. He was called into the private room. Loud voices were heard by the anxious listeners—at first, in anger—then, despairing cries for forgiveness. Presently the door opened -the senior partner appeared—"Jones, call a policeman!"—and in half an hour the defaulter stood at the Mansion House dock.

"Fully committed!" The criminal was led out; he walked mechan[illegible] face pallid as a sheet of paper, and as vacant, as meaningless.

A whisper runs through the auditory. "He is most respectably connected." Then comes a bustle, a scuffling—cries for "room" and "fresh air"—a man has fainted. Ah! no wonder, with this heat. They carry out into the open street a grey-haired gentleman. "Who is he?" "Hush! hush! The prisoner's fathe[illegible]

The late Mr. Haydon [illegible] subscription for the relief of the widow and children of the late Benjamin Robe[illegible] Haydon, the historical painter, now amounts to upwards of £2000, exc[illegible]e of the annuity of Lady Peel already fixed on the relict.

London and Brighton Railway.—The first meeting of the amalgamated [illegible] Brighton and London and Croydon Companies was held on Wednesday, at the London-bridge Station; W. A. Wilkinson, Esq, in the cha[illegible] [illegible]d for branches from the main line to Wandsworth, East [illegible]aven, Hailsham, and Eastbourne, and for a communication with the Thames [illegible]eptford. It is proposed to seek Par[illegible] [illegible]y sanction next session to the [illegible]lgamation with the Direct London and Portsmouth Company. The Company will then have lines from London-bridge to Brighton, Lewes, Hastings, and Newhaven, on the one hand; to Ep[illegible]m, Dorking, Petersfield, and Portsmouth, on the other; with coast lines from Portsmouth to Hastings. To complete this system by communication with the Continent, it is proposed to place steamboats on the passage to Dieppe, which will cross in a single tide This will be done by forming a separate company, the shares of which will be distributed pro rata among the proprietors. It is proposed to raise £531,000 by new shares for the construction of the extensions, and to borrow £783,666. The shares of the companies are to be consolidated into a common stock. The report was approved and adopted.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

Windsor, Thursday Evening.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The various excavations, and other works, connected with the improved system of drainage at the Castle, have been ordered to be completed with as little delay as possible; but, from the extensive nature of the contemplated improvements, having for their object the greater comfort and convenience of the inmates of the Royal residence, it is not expected that the numerous workmen, now employed, will have finished their labours before the middle of next month.

Cruise of Her Majesty and Prince Albert.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert are enjoying a cruise in the Royal yacht. The vessel anchored at Weymouth on Wednesday afternoon, where ample preparations had been made to receive the Royal party. Her Majesty and Prince Albert intend to proceed to Devonport, where they will stay a few days

Her Majesty's Proposed Visit to France.—The Queen and the Prince Consort are expected to pay a short visit to their Majesties the King and Queen of the French, at Eu, in the course of about a fortnight; proceeding to the French coast in the Royal Victoria and Albert yacht, from Osborne House.

The Reported Intention of Her Majesty to Visit Scotland.—The Scotch papers appear to consider that her Majesty will certainly visit Scotland this autumn. The Glasgow Post says—"Active preparations have for some time been in progress for the reception of her Majesty in the north. From the station now held by the Duchess of Sutherland in the household, and the extensive improvements that have for some time been in progress at Dunrobin Castle, we should think it almost certain that her Majesty will not leave Scotland on this occasion without having visited that noble mansion of the Duke of Sutherland. Most extensive arrangements have for some time been in progress in the Breadalbane country, even exceeding the preparations for the Queen's first tour."

The Duchess of Kent.—Monday was the anniversary of the birth of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, who completed her 60th year. Her Royal Highness arrived at Frogmore Lodge, on Tuesday afternoon, from her recent visit to the Queen and Prince Albert, at Osborne House.

Intended Royal Visit. -Her Royal Highness the Princess of Prussia, consort of Prince William of Prussia, eldest brother of the King, will visit England at the close of this month, with the view of sojourning about three weeks here.

The Duke of Marlborough.—Some exaggerated statements have appeared respecting the health of the Duke of Marlborough. They are best disposed of by the following letter from the noble Duke, dated Beaumaris, Aug. 19:—"I sailed on the evening of Wednesday last from Liverpool for the Head, under 'gaff-top-sail and flying-gib.' A violent storm suddenly overtook us, which increased almost to a hurricane during the night. During its continuance I received on deck a severe contusion. Not content with the medical assistance I found here, I instantly sent off for my friend Mr. Hodgson, of Birmingham. He attended my summons, and took his departure in six hours' time, perfectly satisfied as to the condition of his patient."

Sir James Graham.—Sir James Graham, Bart, passed through Carlisle on Saturday, en route for Netherby, where the Right Hon. Baronet is expected to remain some time. It is stated that the principal object of his visit is connected with the effects of the recent floods upon his estate.

Death of Baron Dedel.—We regret to announce the demise of his Excellency Baron Dedel, the Netherlands Minister at this Court, which event took place on Monday last, at his residence in Wilton-crescent.

Aristocratic Marriage.—The contemplated marriage between Viscount Stopford, of the Grenadier Guards, and the Hon. Miss Mills, daughter of Lord Sondes, is understood to be fixed for the 18th of next month.

POLICE.

THE WOMAN MURDERED AT THE GUILDHALL COFFEE-HOUSE.

In our latest edition, last week, we announced that a man, named John Vincent Smith, the cook at the Guildhall Coffee-house, had murdered the kitchen-maid, Susan Tolliday, on Saturday morning, by cutting her throat.

In the course of the day Smith was examined at the Mansion House.

The prisoner is about thirty years of age.

The first witness called was William Carr, who said: I am boots at the Guildhall Coffee-house. The prisoner was cook in the same service, and the deceased, whom we called Susan, was acting as kitchen-maid. About half-past twelve o'clock this day (Saturday last) I was cleaning one of the windows of the folding-doors of the front entrance of the coffee-house, in Gresham-street, when I saw the kitchen-maid come screaming from the kitchen up to the corner of the stairs, with the blood running from her throat. I ran towards her, and she fell before I got to her. She had a knife in her hand She said nothing, and died almost instantly. There is a back entrance to the kitchen, as well as the one from which she came. I had not been in the kitchen for an hour before. At that time the prisoner was in the kitchen, dressed in a brown jacket and apron (his cook's dress), and the deceased, and two other persons, namely, the scullery maid and a little girl who assists in the kitchen. Immediately upon the deceased falling I went into the kitchen, leaving her upon the ground, and there I saw the prisoner alone. He walked from the table (upon which I observed the cook's dress, and also a knife covered with blood lying) to meet me, and I said, "Dear me, what is the matter?" He said to me, "I have done it, and I wish you to give me in charge." He looked very pale and ghastly.

Thomas Gellatly (City policeman, 137), said: About twenty minutes past twelve o'clock, to day, I was called to the Guildhall Coffee-house; and, on entering the house, I saw the deceased lying at the bottom of the stairs, with her throat cut I then went into the kitchen with Carr (the boots), and saw the [illegible]-handled knife lying on the table, covered with wet blood. Blood had [illegible]d over the table, and there was a track of blood from the table to the place in which the deceased was lying. There were some French beans lying on the table in a heap. There did not appear to be any confusion in the furniture of the kitchen, or in anything about. I observed the cook's dress, consisting of two aprons, marked "J. P. S.," a jacket, and a cap, spotted with blood, lying on the table, and I took possession of them. I showed them to Inspector Woodruffe when he came in. I gave him the knife, and I took the clothes.

Here Carr (the boots) stated that, when he saw the prisoner before the deceased was killed, he did not appear to be excited.

Mr. Coulson, the eminent surgeon, of the Old Jewry, was next examined. He said: This day, about a quarter past twelve o'clock, I was sent for to the Guildhall Coffee-house. I went thither without a moment's delay, and, upon entering the house, I saw, at the foot of the main staircase, a woman lying on her back, with her clothes all covered with blood, and a towel put across her neck to staunch the blood, and in her right hand a dessert knife. She was quite dead. On removing the towel, I found a large and deep gash across the throat, beginning from the extreme right, and extending across the neck. The carotid artery and jugular vein were divided, which would have caused almost instantaneous death. It was too deep a gash, I should think, to have been inflicted by the deceased herself. There was a smaller wound under the wound I have described, but that did not divide any important vessel. Two wounds had, it was quite evident, been inflicted. The black-handled knife which had been produced would have caused such wounds. The white-handled knife (that found in the hand of the deceased) I should think would be much less likely to cause them. I applied some brandy and other things, but she was quite dead.

Thomas Phillips, waiter at the Guildhall Coffee-house, said: I was in the kitchen about five minutes before the catastrophe occurred. At that time there were in the kitchen the prisoner, a little girl who occasionally assists, and the deceased, who was sitting on a stool at the table, preparing some vegetables. The deceased was cutting French beans. I was there but about a minute, and I did not hear anything unpleasant between the prisoner and the deceased. The prisoner had some ducks, but I did not observe any knife in his hand, and he had his cook's dress on at the time. I left the kitchen, and the little girl was then in the kitchen with the prisoner and the deceased

The Lord Mayor: Did you hear any quarrelling between them?—Witness. I did not.

Emma Green, barmaid at the Guildhall Coffee-house, said: A little after tw[illegible] o'clock, the little girl who assists in the kitchen came to me at the bar, directly after Phillips went into the coffee-room, and she stood at the bar, waiting for some eggs and milk, about three or four minutes; directly after, I gave them to her, she went towards the kitchen, and, as she was going, she screamed out; and I directly afterwards saw the deceased, Susan Tolliday, rushing towards the passage, bleeding, and holding up her hands. She merely said, "Oh!" and I was so alarmed that I ran back into the bar. I have never heard the deceased and the prisoner quarrelling but once.

The Lord Mayor: Was it this day you heard them quarrelling?—Witness: Oh dear, no.

After the examination of this witness, the prisoner was remanded till Tuesday

On Tuesday, the prisoner, John Vincent Smith, was brought before the Lord Mayor for a second examination. All the approaches to the justice-room were crowded.

The first witness examined was Fanny Wittenhall, a little girl nearly twelve years of age. She said—I reside at No. 9, Half Moon-alley, Lower Whitecross-street. I have been employed about eight weeks past to assist in the kitchen at the Guildhall Coffee-house. The prisoner was cook, and the deceased was kitchen maid there, and I used to help them both. On Friday last, the 14th August, I heard some quarrelling between the cook and kitchen-maid. I do not know what it was they were quarrelling about, but they were quarrelling almost all day. On Saturday morning, I got to the Guildhall Coffee-house about nine o'clock in the morning, and was employed in the kitchen up to twelve o'clock. I heard the prisoner and the kitchen maid quarrelling about a Mrs. Riley, the charwoman. The prisoner said Mrs. Riley owed him some money, and Mrs. Riley said that she had paid him. The deceased took Mrs. Riley's part, and said the prisoner was not acting like a man for grumbling at the poor woman. Mrs. Riley was sent away about eleven o'clock.

The Lord Mayor: Did you hear any quarrelling between the prisoner and the deceased after Mrs. Riley went away?—Witness:—I did not.

The Lord Mayor. Where was the deceased at the time Mrs. Riley was in the kitchen?—Witness: She was sitting in front of the lobby cutting beans, and the prisoner was standing at the other corner of the table picking some ducks, with a knife in his hand

The Lord Mayor: Did he use the knife with the ducks?—Wit[illegible] He did. He used it to get out the feathers. A little after twelve o'clock the prisoner sent me out of the kitchen to the bar for some lard, and the barmaid (Miss Green) told me that he was to come himself, as she was busy. I went back to the kitchen, and delivered Miss Green's message to the cook. He was then standing at the corner of the table where I left him. He had finished picking the ducks, and had trussed them, and they were lying on the table.

The Lord Mayor: Had he the knife then in his hand?—Witness: He had. Susan (the deceased) was sitting on part of the table. The table may be about six or seven feet long. The prisoner then gave me a basin from the larder, which is close to the table, and told me to go and get a basin of milk and three eggs

The Lord Mayor: Had the prisoner the knife in his hand at that moment?-Witness: I did not notice whether he had the knife then. I then went to the bar with the basin, and I saw Miss Green and Miss Nicol, and Miss Green gave me the basin of milk and the eggs. I could not see into the kitchen then. I was then going back to the kitchen. I had been absent, I should think, about five minutes. As I was going back to the kitchen, I saw Susan coming from the kitchen towards the bar. The stairs are close to the bar. I noticed that her throat was cut, and she fell at the foot of the stairs, and I cried out, "Oh, Susan!" and then called out for Miss Green, and she began to holloa out for help. The deceased had in her hand a small, white-handled knife like that she had been cutting the beans with. I then ran into the bar, and afterwards went home

The Lord Mayor: While you were standing at the bar, did you hear any quarrelling between the prisoner and the deceased?—Witness: I did not.

The Lord Mayor: Do you remember having heard any particular words that showed that they were not on good terms?—Witness: About eleven o'clock on Saturday morning, whilst they were quarrelling, I heard the deceased woman say to the cook, that he would remember or regret it before many months were over his head, to which the prisoner replied, that she might before many hours were over her head.

The Lord Mayor: Prisoner, do you wish to ask this girl any question?—The prisoner: No, my Lord, not a word.

John Tolliday, of Castle-end, Cambridge, whitesmith, said Deceased was my sister. Her name was Susan Tolliday She was cousin to the prisoner's wife. I never saw her and the prisoner together.

The Lord Mayor: Now, if you would wish to make any remark, you are at liberty to do so. You are aware of all the evidence against you?—The prisoner: I don't wish to say anything, my Lord.

The Lord Mayor: Have you any questions to ask of any of the witnesses?—The prisoner: No, my Lord.

The Lord Mayor: I commit you to Newgate for trial for the murder

The witnesses were then all bound over to attend at the Central Criminal Court, to give evidence, and the prisoner was taken to Newgate.

The Coroner's Inquest was held on Saturday night, in the Guildhall Coffee-house, before the City Coroner. The evidence was much the same as that given at the Mansion House. Some testimony, however, was given by a little girl twelve years old, named Fanny Wittenhall, which threw some further light on the murder. Her evidence was repeated at the examination of the prisoner on Tuesday, and is given above. The Jury at once returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder against John Smith"

The body of the ill-fated girl was, after the inquest, on Saturday night, conveyed to the vaults beneath the church of St. Lawrence, Gresham-street; and her afflicted mother, who only arrived from Cambridge on Sunday, believing then that her daughter was seriously indisposed, was not undeceived until she arrived at Mr. Walters's, on Sunday evening, when the dreadful truth was revealed to her, and she afterwards saw the body of the deceased, and gave vent to her feelings.

The Cambridge Advertiser of Wednesday gives the following particulars respecting this unfortunate young woman, and her relations. Susan Tolliday was the daughter of James Tolliday, a whitesmith, residing in Mayes's-yard, Cambridge. The deceased was the eldest child. She left that town for London fourteen months since, and entered the service of Mr. Walters of the Guildhall Coffee-house. The murderer, John Smith, was distantly related to his victim through his wife. It appears that he was a man of violent passions and of intemperate habits. A great degree of intimacy existed between Smith and the deceased, consequent upon their relationship, though frequent quarrels took place between them. About six weeks ago, the deceased had arranged to pay a visit to her friends in Cambridge, but instead of coming, she addressed a letter to her mother, in which she stated that she could not come until she had received another month's wages, as she had lent some money to "John" and he had not paid her. This was the last communication her parents received from her. Last Sunday morning a messenger, dispatched by Mr Walters, brought a letter to deceased's mother stating that she was very ill and not likely to live, and that unless her friends immediately hastened to London they would not see her alive again. Her eldest brother, a well-conducted young man, suspecting, from the tenor of the message, that his sister was dead, pressed the man to tell him the truth, but the messenger declared that when he left London she was still alive. Not the slightest hint of the murder was given to the wretched woman's friends, nor did a suspicion of the horrid fact cross their minds until the Monday daily papers arrived, containing the particulars of Smith's examination and of the Coroner's inquest. The particulars we have been able to learn of the family of the deceased are as follows:—The father came originally from Histon, where there are several branches of the same family located. He is a man between fifty and sixty years of age, and has all his life been subject to fits, which has prevented his being employed in his trade, and he earns a subsistence by carrying water and collecting manure. His wife, a very industrious woman, takes in washing and goes out as charwoman, and although there are seven or eight young children, they are spoken of by their neighbours as always being cleanly and neatly clad. The eldest son has been in the employ of Mr. Finch, of Cambridge, for many years.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange (Friday).—The arrivals of English wheat for our market during the present week have been on a very limited scale, consequently, the show of samples here to-day was small. Owing to the bad accounts received from Ireland respecting the potato crop, and the present unsettled weather, the demand for wheat, of home produce, was active, at an advance in the quotations of quite 1s per quarter, and at which a good clearance was effected Holders of foreign wheat were very firm, and a large quantity was disposed of, at an improvement in value of 2s per quarter from Monday. No new barley at malt. Grinding sorts were quite as dear, but other kinds were neglected. The supply of malt was moderate Selected parcels moved off steadily, other kinds slowly, at late rates. Oats were in brisk demand, at a further improvement in value of 1s per quarter

Arrivals. English wheat, 2250; barley, 230; oats, 330. Irish Wheat, —, barley, [illegible]; oats, [illegible] Foreign wheat, 2200; barley, 1790; oats, 15,780. Flour, 2010 sacks; malt, 850 quarters

English—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 40s to 50s; ditto white, 49s to 58s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 40s to 50s; ditto white, 44s to 53s, rye, 30s to 34s; grinding barley, 24s to 27s, distilling, 26s to 28s, malting ditto 30s to 32s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 56s to 62s: brown ditto, [illegible] Kingston and Ware, 62s to 63s; Chevalier, 63s to 64s, Yorkshire and Lincolnshire f[illegible]s to 25s; potato ditto, 26s to 29s, Youghal and Cork, black, 23s to 24s; ditto, w[illegible] tick beans, new, 36s to 37s; ditto old, 37s to 39s; grey peas, 35s to 37s, maple, 33s to 36s; white, 36s to 40s; boilers, 40s to 43s, per quarter Town-made flour [illegible] to 40s, Suffolk, 36s to 38s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 35s to 37s, per 280 lbs. Foreign—Free wheat, [illegible]s to —s; Dantzig, red, 44s to 52s; ditto white, 49s to 57s per quarter

[illegible]d Market.—In foreign linseed, only a moderate business has been transacted this week, yet prices are supported. Archangel is worth 38s to 39s, Petersburg, 38s 9d to 41s, and Black [illegible] n English rapeseed at £21 to £22 per last [illegible] r bushel. All other articles are on slow sale, at our quotations

Linseed, English, sowing, 55s to 60s, Baltic, crushing [illegible]8s 9d to 41s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 41s to 42s Hempseed, 36s to 38s per quarter Coriander, 12s to 14s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 7s to 8s; white ditto, 6s to 7s 6d. Tares, 5s 6d to 7s 0d per bushel. English Rapeseed, new, £21 to £22 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 to £11 10s; [illegible] £7 10s to £8 10s per 1000; Rapeseed cakes, £5 0s to £5 2s per ton. Canary, 46s to [illegible] English Clover-seed, red, 45s to 50s; extra, 25s to 55s, white, 60s to 62s, [illegible] Foreign, red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s, white, 60s to 62s, [illegible]

[illegible] The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis, are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5½d to 6½d per 4-lb loaf

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat 45s 1d; barley, 27s 3 oats, 23s 3d; rye, 30s 7d; beans, 39s 6d; peas, 36s 0d.

The Six Weeks' Average. Wheat, 48s 6d; barley, 27s 3d; oats, 23s 7d; rye, 31s 5d; beans 38s 11d, peas, 36s 11d

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 8s 0d; barley, 4s, oats, 1s 6d; rye, 4s; beans, 4s 0d; peas, 4s 0d.

Sugar—In West India sugars a good business has been doing, at an improvement in the quotations of 6d per cwt All other kinds of raw sugar have commanded a trifle more money Refined goods steady, at 63s to 63s 6d for brown, and 64s 6d for standard lumps.

Coffee.—All descriptions are in sluggish request, yet we can notice no decline in value.

Provisions—Foreign butter is in good request, at an advance of from 2s to 3s per cwt. The best Dutch is selling at 90s to 96s, and inferior and middling 70s to 84s per cwt. A large business is doing in Irish butter, at 1s to 2s per cwt more money English butter has risen [illegible] to 4s per cwt. Dorset, 96s to 98s; Devon, 90s to 92s per cwt., and fresh, 11s to 13s per dozen The bacon market is active, at a further advance of 2s per cwt. Bale and tierce middles are commanding the same amount of improvement. Bladdered lard, 2s to 4s hi[illegible] other kinds of provisions have an upward tendency

Hay and Straw.—Old meadow hay, £3 0s to £4 0s new ditto, £2 5s to £3 15s; old clover, [illegible] 18s; new ditto, £3 5s to £4 18s [illegible] straw, £1 12s to £1 14s, wheat straw, £1 14s to £1 17s per load.

Wool. On the whole, there is rather more business doing in English wools, but all other kinds are a very slow sale.

Coals (Friday)—Seymour Tees, 14s 6d; Cowper's Hartley, 15s 6d; Llangennich, 22s 6d, Ludworth, 15s; Lambton, 16s; Stewart's, 15s 3d, Hilda, 14s 3d Killingworth, 14s per ton.

Hops ([illegible] The first pocket of new hops, grown by [illegible] J. G. Hart, of Stowmarket, Suffolk, has been disposed of at £9 per cwt.: the quality was very good. The supply of old hops, as well as yearlings, is small; yet the demand is heavy, and prices, owing to the [illegible] reports from the plantations, are not supported. The duty is £170,000. Sussex [illegible]s; Kent ditto, £5 0s to £6 6s; Mid and East Kent ditto, £5 10s to £8 8s per cwt.

Smithfield (Friday.)—The supply of beasts on offer here, to-day, was limited, and, comparatively speaking, of very middling quality, owing to which, the beef trade was steady, at fully the advance noticed in the quotations on Monday. There were on sale 119 oxen and cows 700 sheep and lambs, and 39 calves, mostly from Rotterdam. The numbers of home-fed sheep were smaller than for many weeks past. All kinds moved off freely, and prices were well supported. With lambs, we were fairly supplied, while the trade was heavy, and, in some instances, the currencies had a downward tendency. In calves, only a moderate business was doing, at late rates. Pigs were dull, but not cheaper. Milch cows sold slowly, at from £16 to £18 each, including their small calf

Per 8 lb. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; second quality ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 4d, prime large oxen, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 10d to 4s 0d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; second quality ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; prime South Down ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; large coarse calves, 3s 6d to 4s 0d; prime small ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 6d; large hogs, 3s 8d to 4s 6d; neat small pork [illegible] 8d to 4s 10d, lambs 4s 6d to 5s 4d. Suckling calves, 18s to 29s, and quarter old [illegible] pigs, 18s to 19s each. Beasts, 633, cows, 135; sheep and lambs, 9710; calves, 443, pigs, [illegible]

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday.)—We had a fair demand at full prices

Per 8 lb. by the carcase —Inferior beef, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; middling ditto, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; prime large ditt[illegible] small ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; large pork, 3s 4d to 4s 0d; inferior mutton, [illegible] ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; prime ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 2d; veal, 3s 6d to 4s 4d; [illegible] to 4s 10d; lamb, 4s 4d to 5s 4d. ROBT HERBERT

Louis Philippe and Richard Cobden[illegible] way to Paris, received an invitation to dine with the K[illegible]u d'Eu; and he accordingly joined the family dinner-party at the Chateau, where he was most graciously and cordially received by the King, the Queen, and Madame Adelaide His Majesty, who speaks English perfectly well, showed an intimate knowledge of the proceedings of the Anti-Corn-Law League, and of the recent struggle for the repeal of the Corn-Laws

The late Robbery of the Lord Mayor.—James Fitzsimons, the man charged with stealing the Lord Mayor's watch, was tried on Thursday at the Central Criminal Court, for stealing a watch, value £12, from the shop of Mr. Harris. The particulars have already appeared in our paper. The prisoner was convicted. The Lord Mayor's case was not proceeded with. The Recorder sentenced the prisoner to ten years transportation. He said he was an innocent man

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

There was no improvement at the opening of the Market on Monday, prices remaining at the quotations of the previous week. Consols have since scarcely varied ⅛ per cent, but as the week advanced betrayed less firmness. This cannot be thought surprising when the position of affairs is considered. The news of the state of the potato crop in Ireland is in itself a strong point for parties speculating for the fall, to which may be added the anticipated effect of the railway calls. Money both in and out of the Stock Exchange is, however, considerably easier; and, much of the depression that exists may be fairly attributed to the limited business which is usual towards the autumn, in consequence of the absence from town of many of the leading jobbers. A slack market is proverbially a heavy one, and is readily influenced by speculative sales, which have been, and continue to be, made at any symptom of an improvement in prices. Bank Stock, however, continues firm at 209, and India at 259 to 260. The Exchequer Market is also somewhat more active, and prices a shade better. The last quotations are, Bank Stock, 209; Three per Cent Reduced Annuities, 96½; Three per Cent. Consols Annuities, 95⅞; New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cent Annuities, 98; Long Annuities, Expire Jan. 5, 1860, 10 7-16; India Stock, 260; Consols for Account, 95⅞; Exchequer Bills, 14 pm.

The settlement of the account in the Foreign Market passed off easily, one defaulter (whose engagements are trifling) being the solitary instance of inability to pay. Since Monday, the business has been of the most trivial character. Portuguese and Mexican declined towards the close of Tuesday's business, the former to 40 to 42, the latter to 22½ to 23. A further depression in Portuguese has since occurred. In Spanish, there has been scarcely any business, and no fluctuations worthy of record. All the other securities have remained stationary, and close at the following prices:—Equador Bonds, 3½; Grenada, 1 per Cent., 20⅝; Mexican Bonds, Old, 5 per Cent., 22⅞; Ditto for the Account, 23; Portuguese 4 per Cent., 40¼; Ditto for the Account, 40¼; Spanish Bonds, 5 per Cent., 25½; Ditto 3 per Cent., 36⅝; Venezuela Bonds, 2 per Cent., 42; Ditto Deferred, 12⅝.

The Railway Market has shared the dulness of the English and Foreign Houses. Prices, however, continue to be pretty well maintained, among the dividend paying lines. Great Westerns have been better, but Eastern Counties rather worse. There is a strong party bearing this Stock, no doubt for ulterior purposes. With regard to the anticipated effect of Railway calls, the Old Lines must be benefitted by the difficulty which the New ones will find in raising the capital; as the longer occupied in making, the longer will the Old Lines remain without competition. This view is doubtless the cause of the firmness which all through the late depression has characterised such Lines as the Great Western, South Western, and (until Mr. Glyn's speech) the London and Birmingham. At the close of the week, business was on the most limited scale, the following being the closing prices: Ambergate, Nottingham, Boston, and Eastern Junction, 1⅞; Birmingham and Gloucester, 128; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 5⅛; Bristol and Exeter, 87; Caledonian, 15⅜; Ditto, Half Shares, 1¼; Ditto, Extension, 1⅝; Chester and Holyhead, 26½; Churnet and Blythe, 1⅞; Direct Manchester (Remington's), ⅝; Direct Northern, 1⅝; Eastern Counties, 22½; Ditto, New, 7½ pm.; Ditto, York Extension, 2⅛; Eastern Union, 48⅜; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 72; Ditto, New, Quarter Shares, 10⅛; Edinburgh and Perth, 3; Ely and Huntingdon, 5; Great North of England, 230 ex. div.; Ditto, New, 59⅜ ex. div.; Ditto New, 50⅜; Ditto New, 18½; Great Western, 149 ex.-div.; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 23 ex. div.; Guildford, Fareham, and Portsmouth, 5⅝; Hull and Selby, 104 ex. div; Ditto, Half Shares, 39½; Leicester and Bedford, ⅜ dis.; Leicester, Tamworth, &c., ½ dis.; London and Blackwall, 8½; London and Brighton, 62⅝ exclusive dividend; Ditto ditto, Fifths, 41½; London and Croydon, 22½; London and Greenwich, 9; London and North-Western, 206; Ditto, New Shares, 15½ pm; Ditto, Fifths, 21 pm; London and South-Western, 75; Ditto, New, 26½, London and York, 2; Ditto, Half Shares, 1⅛; Manchester and Leeds Extension, 2⅝ pm; Manchester and Birmingham, 79 x all; Ditto, Quarter Shares (C), 9 x all; Manchester, Buxton, and Matlock, ⅞ pm; Manchester and Southampton, 1⅛; Midland, 138⅝; Ditto, New, 36⅞; Newcastle and Darlington Junction, 42⅛; Ditto, New, 10⅛; Newcastle and Berwick, 27½; Norfolk Extension, 2; North British, 38⅜; Do., ⅛ Shares, 14¼; North Kent and Direct Dover, 1⅛; North Staffordshire, 3½ pm.; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 8; Portsmouth Direct, 5⅛; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 1 dis.; Richmond, 18⅝; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 2⅛; Shropshire Union, ⅝ dis.; South Midland, ⅜ pm.; South Eastern and Dover, 42; Ditto New (ditto £15), No. 4, 3⅛; South Wales, 4⅛; Waterford and Kilkenny, 2½; Welsh Midland, ⅞; West Riding Union, 3 pm.; York and Carlisle, ⅛; York and Selby, 72½; Ditto, East and West Riding Extension, 12; Boulogne and Amiens, 12⅛; Demerara, 2½; Direct Bombay and Madras, ¼; Dutch Rhenish, 6; East Indian, ⅝; Great Indian Peninsular, ⅜; Luxembourg, 1⅛; Namur and Liege, 3; Northern of France Constituted, 12½; Orleans and Bordeaux, 8; Over Yssel, 2½ dis; Paris and Lyons Constituted, 5⅝; Sambre and Meuse, 4½.

Saturday Morning. Consols were flat yesterday, at 95⅝ for money and account. Mexican improved a turn, but the Share Market was heavy, East India Scrip alone being in demand.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, AUG. 18.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, AUGUST 17.

Royal Regiment of Artillery.—Cadets to be Second Lieutenants: F. J. Soady, vice Waller; M. Stewart, vice [illegible] (Second Lieutenant Soady to be placed [illegible] above Second Lieutenant Dynele[illegible] Second Lieutenant Stewart between Second Lieutenants Margesson and Street); O'B. B. [illegible] W. Drayson, vice Ommaney; C. W. Elgee, vice [illegible] F. J. Carthew, vice Vansittart; G. H. A. Forbes, vice Paget; W. B. Blair, vice Phellps; L. Martineau, vice Mercer; C. Hunter, vice Colclough; R. J. Hay, vice Milward; A. J. MacDougall, vice Chermside; J. Spurway, vice Blakeley; G. R. C. Young, vice Craufurd; H. T. Boultbee, vice Ord.

Corps of Royal Engineers. H. T. Siborne, vice Inglis; C. S. Akers, vice Martindale; B. A. Wilkinson, vice Hutchinson; L. Nicholson, vice Wray; G. E. L. Walker, vice Pasley; J. T. Barker, vice Stokes; F. F. Cox, vice Hickey; S. B. Farr[illegible] vice Clarke.

ADMIRALTY, JULY [illegible]

[illegible] officers and men of her Majesty's marine forces who were engaged in the war [illegible] ging to the under-mentioned sh[illegible] received at this office, viz [illegible] Childers, Dido, Jupiter, P[illegible], Pylades, [illegible] Columbine, Conway, Cruize[illegible] North [illegible]

H. G. WARD.

[illegible] F. E. JONES, Knights[illegible] carpenter. W. NORRIS, [illegible] J. H. BUTTERWORTH, [illegible] Cornwall, grocer. J. [illegible] merchant. R. [illegible]RKINSON, Ashton-under-Lyne, [illegible] P. BURY, Manchester, calico printer. E. WARD, Medburn, Leicestershire, corn-dealer. W. BALLINGER, Swansea, Glamorganshire, maltster.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—J. BARR, Paisley, engineer. W. MOFFATT and Co., Leith, merchants. N. MACQUEEN, Stein, Island of Skye. W. MUSTARD, Feuar, Blairgowrie.

FRIDAY, AUG. 21.

WHITEHALL, AUG. 19.

The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Knight of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto Alfred Stephen, Esq., Chief Justice of New South Wales.

WAR OFFICE, AUG. 21.

Further List of Non-Commissioned Officers and Privates of the Queen's Army, killed in the recent Battles on the Sutlej, or who have subsequently died of wounds received in those actions:—

9th Foot: T. Bolton, T. Brennan, H. Eyles, P. Gillespie, D. Hoult, J. Lythall.

31st: W. Byrne (sergeant major), M. Sullivan.

50th: T. Bell, H. Brookman (corporal), T. Buggins, G. Bradshaw (corporal), W. Cains, J. Cantwell (sergeant-major), S. Chovil (colour-sergeant), D. Connell, C. Caley, M. Cullen, D. Connelly, T. Cream (corporal), J. Cook, W. Coroner, T. Dyer, F. Dunn, W. Eady, R. Ferguson (corporal), G. Greenfield, R. Husband, D. Hogan, J. Holland, A. Hamer, B. Barlow, J. Hunt, [illegible] F. Johnson (corporal), T. Jackson, S. Jordan, P. Kelly, M. Lynch, T. Lawson, P. M[illegible] W. Martins, F. Matthews, R. March, T. O'Shaugnessy, M. Pegg, R. Reynolds, J. [illegible] Spanton, J. Sullivan, D. Sullivan, T. Speak, J. Sherridon, F. Wiltshire, J. Whittak[illegible] P. W[illegible]nn, M. Kelly.

List of Non-Commissioned Officers and Privates of 50th Regiment, killed at Loodianah, 20th May, 1846, by a storm which blew down the Barracks:—

W. Armstrong (drummer), H. Bayley, G. Beddus, H. Biggs, J. Brookman, T. Cantwell (corporal), F. Cuff, W. Carr, J. Coney, G. Caiger, J. Clayton, J. Cook, M. Doyle, J. Danag[illegible] B. Davis, J. Ferris (sergeant), P. Feeney, J. Farmer, M. Flynn, R. Greer, H. [illegible] F. Judd, W. Kelly (corporal), J. Kendrick, L. Kelty, T. Kelly, W. [illegible] Morris Morris, J. M'Clone, A. Mitchell, Michael O'Brien, W. Ross (corporal), W. Ross (drummer), J. Rankin, E. Roxham, W. Sleigh, S. Stanlake, J. Samples, J. Smith, W. Sullivan, J. Twohy, S. Taylor, A. Thompson, J. Villarvise, G. Wall, R. Watkins, W. Walker, J. Williamson.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, AUG. 20.

Royal Artillery: Second Capt. F. Dick to be Captain, vice Stanway; First Lieut. J. M. Adye to be Second Captain, vice Dick; Second Lieut. F. J. Soady to be First Lieutenant, vice Adye.

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY LORDS-LIEUTENANT.

Pembrokeshire: J. W. Owens, Esq., to be D[illegible] Lieutenant.

[illegible] Pembrokeshire Militia: G. B. J. Jorda[illegible] Esq., to be Captain.

BANKRUPTCIES ANNULLED.—J. L. BUTLER, Liverpool, coal-merchant. W. CURTIS, [illegible]

BANKRUPTS. [illegible] J. C. MOORE, Strand, Middlesex, bookseller. G. A. CAVENDISH, Church-end, Finchley, clerk. J. MILLER, Mary-street, Hoxton Old Town, baker. L. MEUNIER, Leicester-place, Leicester-square, hotel-keeper. W. G. MERRETT, Leadenhall-street, [illegible] and Oliver's-terrace East, Bow-road, Middlesex, surgeon. W. TEW, Halifax, Yorkshire, [illegible] dealer. JAMES SUTCLIFFE, JOHN SUTCLIFFE, and W. BERRY, [illegible] Yorkshire, cotton spinners. J. TAYLOR, Manor House, Meltham, Yorkshire, manufacturer. R. H. HARTLEY, Halifax, Yorkshire, stockbroker. C. T. WOOD, Liverpool, corn-factor. E. MUNDY, Liverpool, house agent. H. TATE and R. L. NASH, Bristol, stock and share brokers.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—W. STOTT, Edinburgh, painter. J. RANKINE, Falkirk Distillery, near Camelon, Falkirk, Stirlingshire, distiller. J. CLARK, Campbelltown, Ardersier, Inverness-shire, baker. W. SHAND, and T. C. CHRISTIE, Glasgow, merchants. W. GREIG, and W. J. CARSWELL, Glasgow, stock-brokers. W. THOM, Langloan, [illegible] dealer. SIMPSON and DICK, Glasgow, stock-[illegible]

[illegible]

At Eastbourne-terrace, the lady of Lieut.-Col. Norman Maclean, of a daughter.——On the 19th inst., the wife of Mr. W. Harrison, builder, 12, Milbank-row, Westminster, of a daughter.——At Arborfield rectory, Berks, the lady of the Rev. J. Warren Hayes, of a daughter.——In [illegible]rave-square, the Hon. Mrs. Sanderson, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

At Farnborough, John, eldest son of John Hardy, Esq., M.P., to Laura, third daughter of William Holbech, Esq.——At Tonbridge, Surrey, John Robert Kenyon, Esq., to Mary Eliza, only daughter of Edward Hawkins, Esq.——At Paddington, the Rev. James Hargrea[illegible] Jane, eldest daughter of Joseph Baker, Esq.——On the 15th inst., at Kingston Church, [illegible]sea, Hants, by the Rev. Mr. May, John M. Master, Esq., of Kildarroch, Kirkinner, Wi[illegible]shire, to Matilda Louisa, eldest daughter of Captain George Palmer, R.N.——At Stony [illegible]dleton, Frederick Holland, Esq., to Anne, fifth daughter of Lord and Lady Denma[illegible] Woolwich, Captain Bainbrigge, Royal Engineers, to Margaret, daughter of Colonel P[illegible]

DEATHS.

At Barham Wood, Herts, Margaret, daughter of the late Sir John Halkett, Bart.——At Aspa[illegible] Hall, aged seventy-two, the Rev. Dr. Chevallier.——At Everton, near Liverpool, Theodosia, widow of the late Rev. W. Ewbank, M.A., and sister of the late Sir Hutton Cooper, Bart., M.P.——At Stowmarket, at the advanced age of ninety-one, Esther, relict of the late Samuel Barch, Esq.——At Up Marden House, Sussex, Charles Clarke, Esq.——On the 1[illegible] instant, the Rev. Edward Morris Keogh.——At Ashton Lodge, Lancaster, in his 63rd year, James Pedder, Esq., a magistrate, and deputy lieutenant of the county.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W. BATTY.—Under the especial patronage of her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Royal.—Immense [illegible] Change!! Fresh Additions to the Company, and First Night of the [illegible] spectacle of THE MERCHANT STEED!!! On MONDAY NEXT, August [illegible] and every Evening during the Week, will be presented the highly popular Drama of THE MERCHANT STEED; or, The Flight of Damon. Calanthe, Mrs. Morton Brooks; Damon, Mr. J. Harwood; assisted by the whole of the numerous Company. Double Stud and Rare Quadrupeds. Magnificent SCENES of the HIPPODROME, by the French, German, and British Professors. The whole concluding with the Drama of THE NAMELESS.—Box-Office open from 11 to 5. Commence at 7.—Stage-Director, Mr. T. Thompson.

THE ST. LEGER IN MINIATURE.

VAUXHALL OPEN EVERY NIGHT, except SATURDAY, with Tournaire's Troupe of unrivalled Equestrians. New Scenes in the Circle. Wonderful Horsemanship. Pony Races. The Great St. Leger in Miniature. The Favourites—Pyrrhus the First, Brocardo colt, Sir Tatton Sykes, [illegible] Messrs. J[illegible] Brothers, the very [illegible] Grand Concert. Conductor—A. Lee. [illegible], Mrs. Aveling Smith, Mr. Sinclair, Mr. Bing, and Mr. J. W. Sharp, [illegible] of the day. Extraordinary [illegible] Gorgeous Chinese Procession. [illegible] Palace of the Golden Bells. Grand [illegible] Admission [illegible] Doors open at Eight.

VAUXHALL.—WEDNESDAY NEXT.—A GRAND GALA in honour of the BIRTHDAY of HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT. The Gardens will be most brilliantly illuminated, and the Fireworks greatly increased. It will be the Fête of the Season, and the various devices displayed about the grounds will be emblematical of all Nations. THE FLAGS OF ALL NATIONS will be tastefully arranged, and the selection of music will consist of Italian, German, French, English, Scotch, Irish, and Welsh compositions.—Doors open at Eight. Admission, 2s.

COLOSSEUM.—Alteration of Time, Open at Seven in the Evening.—A Grand Mexican ALOE, or Century Plant, 30 feet high, now in Bloom, has been added to the various splendid Attractions of this matchless Exhibition without any extra charge. This rare and beautiful Plant is a different species from any [illegible] hibited in Europe. It has some thousand flowering buds upon it, was cultivated between Mexico and Texas, has been brought a distance of 7000 miles, and purchased by the Proprietor of the Colosseum.

The Atmospheric Effects in the marvellous PANORAMA OF LONDON by Night are repeated every half-hour. Holiday Prices continued. Music, 3 till 5; and 8 till half-past 10. The whole projected and designed by Mr. W. Bradwell.

THE SPEAKING AUTOMATON, or EUPHONIA (invented by PROFESSOR FABER, of Vienna).—Every Day and Evening, at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly. This greatest mechanical wonder ever accomplished or conceived, has been critically examined, and highly eulogised by the Emperor and Court of Austria, the King and Court of Prussia; the Duke of Wellington; the Lord Chamberlain, Earl Spencer; Lords Eldon, Hawarden, &c.; and the prominent members of the principal scientific institutions in London. It speaks anything [illegible] the words of "God save the Queen." During the last few days, it has held conversations sufficient to fill a volume. Hours—From eleven to twelve; half-past twelve to two; half-past three to five; half past seven to nine.—Doors open half-an-hour previous. Admission, One Shilling. Children under ten, Half-price.

INVENTORS and DEPOSITORS of WORKING MODELS, and of other Specimens of the Useful Arts (as well as the Visitors of the ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION) are respectfully informed that the Dir[illegible] anxious consideration to the new appointment of DEMONSTRATOR [illegible] duty will be to explain to the V[illegible] clearness and [illegible] as other [illegible] Instruments [illegible] mission, 1s [illegible]

MR. JAMES'S NEW WORK.

In a few days will be published, in 3 vols. Post 8vo. price £1 11s. 6d.

HEIDELBERG: A Romance. By G. P. R. JAMES, Esq. Author of "The Stepmother," "The Smuggler," "Arrah Neil," &c. &c.

London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 65, Cornhill.

Just Published, Price Sixpence,

ROUND RAIL v. T RAIL: or the Principles of the Geometrical Railway System examined by Geometricus.

PELHAM RICHARDSON, Cornhill.

TO ADVERTISERS.—DOUGLAS JERROLD'S WEEKLY NEWSPAPER, owing to the number required, is obliged to be put to press for the first edition early on Friday morning, and consequently Advertisements cannot be inserted, so as to circulate in the whole of the impression, unless received previous to Six o'Clock on the Thursday evening. Office, 169, Strand.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, AND AVOID, addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic. By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c. [illegible] CARVALHO, 147, Fleet-street; HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street; MANN, [illegible]

[illegible]

MARTIN THE FOUNDLING; or, THE ADVENTURES [illegible], appears regularly in the FAMILY HERALD, the most popular periodical of the day. The New Part, price 6d., contains, also, The [illegible] A Wedding Race—Riminsky, by Frances Brown—The Pilot—and other highly interesting Tales; with a variety of instructive and entertaining reading for the intelligent and reflecting. All Booksellers and News Agents sell the Family Herald.

TO AMATEURS OF MUSIC. NOW READY,

THE MUSICAL HERALD, Parts 1, 2, 3, and 4, price only 10d. each, consisting of Select Vocal and Instrumental Music, with entertaining and instructive Musical Literature. Edited by G. HOGARTH, Esq. The cheapest of the [illegible] Musical Works hitherto published are extravagant compared with the price of the Musical Herald. On an average, the cost of admired Airs and choice Pieces, will not amount to One Farthing each. Published also in Weekly Numbers, price 2d.

To be had of all Booksellers and News Agents throughout the United Kingdom.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

MR. COLBURN'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

I.

VOL. VI. of MADAME D'ARBLAY'S DIARY AND LETTERS. (Immediately.)

II.

TRAVELS and TRAVELLERS. By Mrs. TROLLOPE, Authoress of "The Barnabys in America," "The Robertses," &c. 2 vols., 21s.

III.

VOL. IX. of AGNES STRICKLAND'S LIVES of the QUEENS of ENGLAND; comprising the Life of MARY of MODENA, Consort of James II.

IV.

VOL. VII. of THE NELSON LETTERS and DISPATCHES; completing the Work.

V.

HOCHELAGA; or, ENGLAND in the NEW WORLD. Edited by ELIOT WARBURTON, [illegible] small 8vo.

VI.

[illegible], The Love Test. By the Author of "The Ma[illegible]"

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

COINS of the ANCIENT ROMAN EMPERORS; History of the Succession of the Ancient Roman Emperors, with [illegible] bearing [illegible] published by J. WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins, 46, Strand, London, price 1s., by post, 1s. 2d. Who has also published a short General Catalogue of his Coins and Medals, price 4d., by post, 6d., or the two books, 1s. 6d., post free. To be had as above, or through any Bookseller.

TO PATRONS and ADMIRERS of TOTAL ABSTINENCE. VAUGHAN and Co. have now completed, for the City of Cork, a 7 ft. 6 in. FIGURE of the Rev. THEOBALD MATHEW, modeled from life, in their imperishable Artificial Stone. [illegible] smaller full-length Portrait Figure of the same, 2 ft. 6 in. in height. On view at their [illegible], 60, STONES END and BOW-ROAD; where may also be seen a large stock of [illegible] (antique and modern), fountains, vases, and every description of exterior and garden ornaments, in original and unique designs, including the whole of the Models of the late firm of Coade and Sealy.

FOR SALE, A HANDSOME CHESNUT GELDING and ALBERT PHAETON, the property of a Gentleman. The Horse is sufficiently quiet for any lady to drive, and free from all vice, and a perfect beauty in appearance, 14½ hands high, 5½ years old. The Phaeton was built [illegible] will be invaluable; to any lady or gentleman in the country. To be sold a bargain. Apply at Watt's Dairy, 22, Frederick-street, Hampstead-road. N.B. No Dealer need apply.

THE PROVIDENT CLERKS' MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION and BENEVOLENT FUND, 42, Moorgate-street.

TRUSTEES.

Thomas Baring, Esq., M.P. | W. G. Prescott, Esq.

T[illegible] Jun., Esq. | Baron L. de Rothschild.

Treasurer of the Benevolent Fund—John Abel Smith, Esq., M.P.

Forms of proposal for Mutual Life Assurance, to meet every contingency, annuities, endowments, loans, &c., and the fifth annual report, with every information, may be had at the [illegible], where donations and subscriptions to the Benevolent Fund are received.

Table of Premium payable yearly, half yearly, or quarterly, by a person of the age of 25, to secure the sum of £100 to be paid at death, or on his attaining the respective ages of 50, 55, and 60, whichever event shall first occur:—

Age next birthday	Age Fifty.			Age Fifty-five.			Age Sixty.
	Year.	Half-Year.	Quarterly.	Year.	Half-Year.	Quarterly.	Year.	Half-Year.	Quarterly.
25	3 16 4	1 19 0	0 19 8	3 5 5	1 13 3	0 16 9	3 18 2	1 9 6	0 14 11

[illegible]es may be effected daily.

[illegible] 20th, 1846.

By order of the Board,

THOS. MULLINDER, Secretary.

THE NEWLY-OPENED HOUSES. (A BRIEF OUTLINE.)

The Extensive New Establishment of E. MOSES and SON is now open for the transaction of the various features of its business; and the Proprietors are anxious to state the principles upon which it is conducted, and the improvements under which it has opened. Bespoke customers have now devoted to them a spacious range of Show Rooms, entered by a Private Waiting Hall, 84, Aldgate. There are also apartments for cutting and measuring, and a select Waistcoat Room. Ladies are informed that a private Habit Room is likewise set apart; and E. MOSES and SON have made other additions, too numerous to name at present. The "Ready-Made" Department is at least four times its former extent, and its business will, consequently, be despatched with much greater facility. This department occupies 85 and 86, Aldgate. The Hat Depôt is at 83, Aldgate, and is furnished with every description of Hats and Caps, of the best quality and fashion. The Hosiery Mart, 155, Minories, is equally distinguished for the worth and variety of its articles, from which the most satisfactory purchases are made. The Outfitting and General Clothing Department, 154 and 155, Minories, [illegible] accommodations, and is an important feature in the New Houses of E. MOSES and [illegible] remembered that "Economy, Economy! Economy!" is the maxim at the [illegible]t, as it was at the old; and be it also remembered, that the Proprietors still [illegible] marking of the articles in plain-figured prices, from which no abatement can be [illegible] borne in mind, also, that any articles may be exchanged, or that the price of [illegible] returned without the least hesitation. For particulars of Self-Measurement [illegible] other essential information, obtain the new book, titled "Past, Present, and [illegible]" which may be had gratis, and post-free, of the Proprietors, E. MOSES and SON, 154, 155, 156, 157, Minories, and 83, 84, 85, and 86, Aldgate, City, London.

E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Woollen Drapers, Clothiers, Hatters, Hosiers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen, regret to be obliged to guard the public against imposition; but, having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood of "being connected with them," or it's the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and, for obvious reasons, they have no connection with any other house in or out of London, and those who desire genuine cheap clothing, should, to prevent disappointment, call at or send to the Minories or Aldgate, opposite the Church, City, London.

NOTICE. The entrance to the Bespoke Department is at 84, Aldgate.—No business transacted at this Establishment from sunset Friday evening till sunset Saturday evening, when it is resumed till twelve o'clock.

REMOVAL.—DR. CULVERWELL has REMOVED to 10, ARGYLL-PLACE, REGENT-STREET.

INSTRUCTION in MUSIC and SINGING, by a YOUNG LADY accustomed to tuition either at home or pupil's residence. For references and Terms, address H. E. (post paid), 27, Cottage Grove, Mile-end-road.

A GOVERNESS WANTED to GO ABROAD, and take charge of a Little Boy, the child of a Gentleman residing in Turkey. She must speak French well and give reference to a Protestant clergyman.—Direct to A. B., 1, Stanefield-terrace, Liverpool-road, Islington.

LIQUID INDIAN RUBBER.—This superior substitute for either gum or paste, may be had in its purest state of J. ROWBOTHAM, and Co., Indian Rubber Bookbinders, 70, Castle-street East, Berners-street, in tin canisters, 1s. and 2s. each, or by order of any bookseller.

WATCHES and CLOCKS.—A Pamphlet, explaining the various constructions and the advantages of each, with a list of Prices, will be forwarded gratis by post, if applied for by a post-paid letter. [illegible] COX SAVORY and Co. Goldsmiths, Watchmakers, &c., 47, Cornhill, [illegible] (from Gracechurch-street), London.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at [illegible] Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern [illegible] are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at [illegible] either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones's Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a Twopenny Stamp.

SIX POUNDS of GOOD TEA, for 15s.—Since it is barely possible that anything can be done about the duties this session, 2s. 6d. a pound is likely to be the quotation at present for useful tea; other sorts at 2s. 10d., 3s. 6d., and 3s. 10d. Coffee, 9d., 1s., and 1s. 3d.—East India Tea Company's Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 364, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, Sole Inventress of teaching the Art of Dress-making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most finished Style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers Wanted.—Millinery Rooms.

BED FEATHERS.

Mixed	1s. 0d. per lb.	Best Foreign Grey Goose ..	2s. 0d. per lb
Grey Goose	1s. 4d.	Best Irish White ditto ..	2s. 6d.
Foreign	1s. 8d.	Best Dantzic ditto ..	3s. 0d.

HEAL and SON, 196, opposite the Chapel, Tottenham-court-road.

CHUBB'S LOCKS, Fire-proof Safes, and Cash Boxes.—Chubb's New Patent Detector Locks give perfect security from false keys and picklocks, and also give immediate notice of any attempt to open them. Chubb's Patent Fire-proof Safes, Bookcases, Chests, &c.; strong Japan Cash Boxes, and Deed Boxes, of all sizes, fitted with the Detector Locks.—C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard.

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS AND GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM for STOVE GRATES, kitchen ranges, iron bedsteads, fenders, fire-irons, general furnishing ironmongery, tinned copper, iron and best tin cooking vessels, best [illegible] and table cutlery, japanned trays, tea urns, ornamental iron and wire works for verandahs, lawns, &c. [illegible] Every article is warranted, and marked at the lowest prices, in plain figures, for cash.—Adjoining the Royal Bazaar, 58, Baker-street, Portman-sq.

HOT WEATHER — TRAVELLING. — SEA-SIDE. — The REGISTERED PALETOT in London, only at 22, Cornhill, opposite the Royal Exchange; and the chief Llama Cloth Warehouse, 114, Regent-street. Do not be deceived by a similarity of name placed in the windows of a few petty shops in the neighbourhood of the Patentees. The Paletot is stamped H. J. and D. NICOLL, 114, Regent-street.

A SCOTCH TWEED GOTHA JACKET FOR 30s.—This Jacket, which is well suited to be worn by Gentlemen when shooting, angling, in the library or country ramble, is made to measure, in a first-rate style of fit and workmanship, for 30s.; best ditto, ditto, 38s.—At GRAVES'S Fashionable Tailor and Trowsers' Maker, 313, High Holborn.

TROWSERS! TROWSERS!! TROWSERS!!!—A good fit in this garment can [illegible] GRAVES, Fashionable Trowsers' Maker [illegible] after many years experience and study, is enabled to assert, without fear of contradiction, that he can fit gentlemen with this garment better than [illegible] in London. The characteristic of his fitting is a gentlemanly style, with perfect ease for stooping, sitting, walking, or riding. A well-assorted stock of the newest designs to select from.—R. GRAVES, 313, High Holborn.

DAMASK TABLE LINENS, most Elegant and Durable, at very Low Prices for Cash, by JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linen Drapers to the Queen, [illegible] established for nearly Seventy Years [illegible]

RETURN TICKETS.—GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY. ON and AFTER the 1st of SEPTEMBER, 1846, RETURN TICKETS on this RAILWAY will be available as follows:—

For a distance not exceeding 50 miles, on the same day they are issued, except on Saturday; a ticket taken on that day being available for the return journey on Monday.

Not exceeding 100 miles, on the same day they are issued, or the next (Sunday not being counted).

Exceeding 100 miles, on the same day they are issued, or either of the two next days (Sundays not being counted). By order of the Directors, CHAS. A. SAUNDERS, Secretary.

GIBBINS' CREAM of ROSES and ROSEMARY.—This esteemed and elegant article is most respectfully offered to the Public, by GIBBINS, Court Hairdresser and Perfumer (from Paris), 7, King-street, St. James's-square, as the most delicate and effectual Preservative of the Hair. Being a pomade, it will be successfully applied in promoting its growth and luxuriance.

GIBBINS' EXTRACT of ROSES and ROSEMARY is a Liquid made from the above-named plants, and when applied in Washing the Hair, renders it soft and glossy; or, after illness, its astringent properties prevent the Hair from falling off.

No. 7, King-street, St. James's-square, London.

PIANOFORTES for HIRE.—Superior Instruments Lent on Hire by G. PEACHEY (Maker by Appointment), 73, Bishopsgate-street Within, opposite the Marine Society. An extensive assortment of Improved Cabinet, Cottage, Piccolo, and Square PIANOFORTES, 6⅞ Octaves to G, for SALE or HIRE, of superior quality of tone and touch, warranted in every respect, with a large collection of Secondhand. Also, double and single action Harps, Seraphines, &c. Instruments tuned, repaired, and taken in exchange. One hundred Pianofortes for general inspection at G. PEACHEY'S Warehouse, 73, Bishopsgate-street Within, opposite the Marine Society.

BERDOE'S WATERPROOF OVER COATS, and SHOOTING JACKETS.—The reputation of these well-known garments for quality, respectability, and efficiency, has been so long established that they now need no other recommendation. More than seven years' extensive trial has proved beyond all contradiction that they are really completely impervious to the rain. One of the best proofs of their extensive sale exists in the numerous competitors it has produced. By royalty and a long list of noblemen and gentlemen of the highest rank and title they have long been patronized. Made only by W. BERDOE, tailor and over coat maker, 69, Cornhill (north side), and shortly at 96, New Bond-street.

SELLING OFF.—REAL VALENCIENNES LACE.

7,000 yards Edging, from 4½d. to 15½d. per yard.
5,700 ditto Narrow Lace, 18d. to 2s. 3d. ditto.
2,000 ditto Wide Ditto, 2s. 6d. to 12s. 6d. ditto.
700 ditto Insertions, 12d. to 3s. 9d.

Patterns will be sent to any part of the Kingdom. Address KING and SHEATH, [illegible], Regent-street, London.

N.B. A large lot of Real Black Lace, very cheap.

To Professors of Geology, Mineralogy, Lecturers, and others. [illegible] Collection of Specimens illustrative of the above Sciences, Valuable [illegible] Drawings, Prints, and other Effects of th[illegible] Professor of Geology to the London University.

MESSRS. RUSHWORTH and JARVIS will sell by AUCTION at their GREAT ROOM, SAVILLE-ROW, on WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 26th, by direction of the Administrator on behalf of the Crown, the Valuable and interesting Collection of Geological and Mineralogical specimens formed and arranged at a very great expense by the late Mr. Webster; also, a Library of about 1000 Volumes, including the works of many eminent writers on Natural History in general, Manuscript Works and Lectures, a large [illegible]ty of Water Colour Drawings and Sketches by himself and others, and miscellaneous [illegible]

To be viewed two days previous to the Sale, and Catalogues had at the Room; and in the City, at the Offices of the Auctioneers, 19, 'Change-alley, Cornhill.

CANDLE LAMPS FOR THE ENSUING SEASON.—GEORGE and JOHN DEANE respectfully invite their friends to favour them immediately with a call at their Lamp Show Rooms, 46, King William-street, London Bridge. They have just received a most splendid stock of Candle Lamps, the very first [illegible] issued from the artist's hands. They comprise a costly variety, some with [illegible] adorned with delicate and elaborate painting, mounted on rich or-molu bases, others of tastefully cut glass, or papier mache, gorgeously emblazoned. These, with a most various stock of cheaper and less ornamented Lamps are all of the latest designs and at the lowest possible prices. Deane's carts are delivering Camphine, Candles, and Lamp Oil, and Lamps on hire, in all parts of the metropolis daily. DEANE'S, opening to the Monument, 46, King William-street, London Bridge.

METCALFE and CO'S. NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—Useful Inquiry. For proof of the extreme durability, power of cleaning, and true economy, ask all who have used Metcalfe's Brushes. The Tooth-brush performs the highly-important office of searching thoroughly into the divisions, and cleaning in the most extraordinary manner; hairs never come loose, 1s. Peculiarly penetrating Hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russia bristles, which will not soften like common hair. Improved Clothes-brush, that cleans harmlessly in one-third the time. The new Velvet-brush, and immense Stock of genuine unbleached Smyrna Sponge, at METCALFE and Co.'s only Establishment, 130 B, Oxford-street, one door from Holles-street.

CAUTION.—Beware of the word "from [illegible]" adopted by some houses.

WHILST MESSRS. BETTS and CO. are studiously desirous to avoid the imputation of unwarrantably increasing the alarm created by the rumoured prevalence in the Metropolis of that fearful disease, the Asiatic Cholera, they deem it consistent with a due regard to the feelings of the public, to direct attention to the subjoined Testimonials as to the merits of their Patent Brandy. This pure and wholesome spirit has long been in very general use in the most important hospitals and infirmaries in the kingdom, and is deserving of especial notice at the present time, from its peculiar efficacy in arresting the ravages caused by those epidemics that usually prevail at this season of the year; and the same can be procured in quantities, not less than two gallons, direct from the Distillery, at 16s. per gallon, or in single bottles, at 3s. per bottle, from Retailers, in every locality, each bottle being secured by the Metallic Capsule, which Messrs. Betts and Co. have the exclusive right of making, and upon which is embossed the words "Betts's Patent Brandy, 7, Smithfield-bars."

EXTRACTS FROM TESTIMONIALS:—

"58, Aldersgate-street.

"Your Brandy is free from uncombined acid and astringent matter, which exists more or less in most of the Brandies imported from France.

"To Mr. Betts." (Signed) "JOHN THOMAS COOPER, Lecturer on Chemistry."

"Long-acre.

"I am bound to say, and do assert it with confidence, that, for purity of spirit, this cannot be surpassed; and that your Patent Brandy is also quite free from those acids which, though minute in quantity, always contaminate the foreign spirit.

"To J. T. Betts, Esq." (Signed) JOSEPH HUME, Chemist to his Majesty."

"38, Upper Gower-street.

"I do not hesitate to express my conviction that it is fully as free from anything injurious to health, and contains as pure a spirit as the best varieties of foreign brandy.—(Signed) EDWARD TURNER, Professor of Chemistry in the University of London.—John T. Betts, Esq."

"Grenadier Guards Hospital.

"The two samples of your Patent Brandy I had an opportunity of laying before the Board of Officers, which sat at the Regimental Hospital last Saturday. Every member of the Board approved of the Brandy, and have ordered that it shall be used for the sick.—(Signed)

"Messrs. J. T. Betts and Co." "J. HARRISON, Surgeon-Major, Grenadier Guards."

GOVERNMENT SCHOOL OF DESIGN.

The annual distribution of prizes to the pupils attending this School took place on Wednesdaday, at Somerset House,

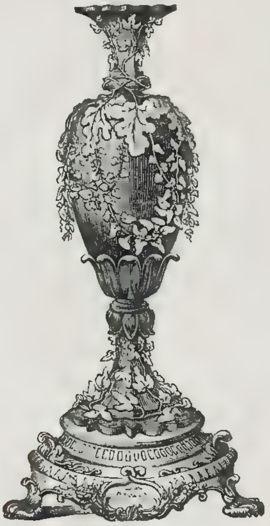
Mr. H. Bellenden Ker presided, and was supported by Mr. B. Hawes, M.P., Mr. Etty, R.A., Mr. W. Hamilton, and other members of the council.

The Chairman, in opening the proceedings, congratulated the meeting on the steady advance which had taken place in the School, and the great improvement manifested in the works of the Pupils. He considered this alike creditable to preceptors and students.

Mr. C. H. Wilson, the Director of the School, read the report of the past year, which set forth in detail the facts asserted by the Chairman as to the satisfactory progress of the School. The paucity of the works exhibited was most satisfactorily explained by the circumstance that many of the Pupils had obtained lucrative employment in their profession, which necessarily reduced the number of their studies executed for mere practice.

Mr. Etty, R.A., briefly addressed the meeting after the report had been read, and complimented the pupils generally on the improved style of their productions. Mr. Etty was especially loud in his praises of the female students.

Mr. Hawes, M.P., followed in a speech highly laudatory of the School, and the mode in which it was conducted. He apologised for the absence of several of his colleagues in the Ministry, and promised a more ardent support to the institution than Government had hitherto awarded it.



VASE PRESENTED TO MR. C. H. WILSON,
DIRECTOR OF THE GOVERNMENT SCHOOL OF DESIGN.

At the close of Mr. Hawes's address the distribution commenced. The prizes consisted of sums of money, varying from £5 5s. (the highest) to half a guinea (the lowest). There were about thirty recipients, half male and half female.

The works generally appeared very good. Two designs in oil for decorative panels, executed respectively by Miss Rowley and Miss Filmore, were greatly admired. The former of these young ladies gained two prizes, the latter three, viz., for the decorative panel, for a fruit piece in oil, and for wood engraving.

The distribution concluded, thanks were voted to the Chairman, and the meeting dispersed.

Before the proceedings commenced, an incident occurred, notice of which should not be omitted. This was, the presentation of a very beautiful testimonial to Mr. C. H. Wilson, the Director of the School, by the Students, as a mark of their esteem and respect for that gentleman. The testimonial consists of a ruby glass vase, 18 inches in height with silver mountings, in imitation of hanging festoons of bearbine and convolvulus. Both the vase and the tracery were designed by pupils in the School (Messrs. J. K. Harvey and D. Pearce); the chasing of the silver was also executed by a pupil (Mr. C. Worrall), and the carving of the wood stand was the handiwork of a fourth student (Mr. A. Abercrombie.) The testimonial was presented to Mr. Wilson by Mr. Harvey, who read an address to that gentleman, to which he responded with much feeling.

After the Director's reply, Mr. Harvey, in a short address, expressed the grateful feelings of the Pupils towards the Masters; to which Mr. Townsend, on behalf of himself and the other Masters, made a suitable acknowledgment.

LONDON STREET ARCHITECTURE.

Foremost among our metropolitan improvements, may be regarded the taste displayed in newly-erected Shop-fronts, some of which are of highly artistic design, such as it rarely enters into the head of a carpenter to conceive. The specimen we have engraved (No. 160, Regent-street), has lately been opened. It presents a meritorious architectural composition in the richly decorated style of the age of Louis XIV., by a distinguished French architect; and it has been cleverly executed under the superintendence of M. Cambon, the celebrated Parisian Decorator.

The beauty of the design is much increased from the same style of decoration having been carried out in the interior of the shop; and with such a degree of elaborate decoration in every part, as to produce a most unique effect, and afford a very satisfactory specimen of the capabilities of the style itself, for the purpose to which it is here applied.

Messrs. Winsland and Holland, of Duke-street, Bloomsbury, are the builders who have executed the general works; and Messrs. Holland and Sons of Marylebone-street, the upholstery.

NEW CHURCH AT TWICKENHAM.

The first stone of this Church (Trinity) was laid on the 31st August, 1840, by the late Venerable Archdeacon Cambridge; and the edifice was consecrated in July, 1841, by the Lord Bishop of London. The following were the principal subscribers. His Grace the Duke of Northumberland, lord of the manor; the Venerable Archdeacon Cambridge, Henry Pownall, Esq., Sir William Clay, Bart., and Thomas Twining, Esq., each giving five hundred pounds. The remainder of the funds required for the purchase of an eligible piece of land, a small endowment, and the completion of the building, was raised by voluntary contributions; and the plan and erection was confided to the late George Basevi, Esq.

The Church is in the early English style, and will contain six hundred persons in pews and sittings; half that number being accommodated with free sittings. Great interest is evinced by the gentry and others for the prosperity of the Church; and, in addition to their previous donations, a tower-clock and bell have been presented by Mr. Twining; new crimson velvet cushions and hangings for the pulpit, reading-desk, and clerk's desk, with cushions, kneeling stools, and cover for the Communion Table, all in very good taste, and of the best quality, by Lady Clay; and, lastly, by Andrew Maclew, Esq., an excellent mellow-toned organ, built expressly by Blyth, of Isleworth, the successor of the celebrated Green. This organ was opened by Dr. Blyth, of Richmond, whose taste and talents as a professor of music are already known and acknowledged.

The Correspondent of a morning paper remarks:—"He would say a word for the encouragement of others, as respects the singing at the church, and point out how much may be accomplished by a small amount of trouble. The choir, as we are informed, is composed of trades-people, and others, in the district; and, a little pains having been taken in style and time, notwithstanding, for the most part they sing by ear only, we must in justice confess that we have seldom heard a better performance in any of our churches. Contiguous to the church, is a national school for children of both sexes, with a house for the master and mistress in the centre, built by voluntary contributions; and, in sincere respect for his memory, is called 'Archdeacon Cambridge's School.' At the present time the number of children is nearly 200, to whom is imparted the blessings of a religious education. The church and school together are working admirably; and, without entertaining too sanguine anticipations, great improvement, both moral and religious, may reasonably be expected in this long and greatly neglected part of the county of Middlesex."

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Offor, Jun."—It is impossible to checkmate with a King and Knight only.

"Y. Z.," Sheffield.—We are unacquainted with the game.

"J. V.," Okehampton.—The solution shall be given next week. Your first move is correct, but you have not quite hit upon the modus operandi afterwards.

"A Subscriber," Guernsey; and "G. B. S."—Study the "Elementary Lessons on Chess" in the "Chess-Player's Chronicle," and "Lewis's First Series of Lessons for Beginners:" both may be got of Hastings, in Carey-street.

"W. D.," Petworth.—You are mistaken. Our dictum on the subject of the King Castling is in accordance with all the elementary works on Chess which we have ever met with.

"R. S."—The solution of Enigma 14, by Mendheim, is as follows:—1. Q to K B 7th (ch); K to Q B sq. 2. Q to K 8th (ch); K to Kt 2nd. 3. Q to her 7th (ch); K to Kt sq. 4. K to Q Kt 6th, winning the Queen, or giving mate next move.

"D. T. C." The limited portion of our Journal at present devoted to Chess, forbids a lengthy, detailed review of new Chess works; but we omit no opportunity of directing the attention of amateurs to such as are deserving consideration.

"Amateur."—A copy of Mr. Witcomb's Translation of Lewis's celebrated Treatise, has lately reached us, and we can cordially commend it as an extremely faithful transcript of that invaluable work. It is a model of beautiful typography, and is obtainable at a price—10 francs only—which places it within the reach of every one. Apply to Mr. Hurst, of King William-street, Strand.

"W. P.," Plymouth.—"R. S."—"W. R. T."—Next week.

Solutions by "Muff," "Pierre Evrard," "Sopracitta," "Marazion," "T. B.," "J. D.," "F.," "Punch," "Subscriber," "Andrew," "Phil," and "Miranda," are correct. Those by "J. D. S.," Liverpool; "M. P.," and "W. C.," Bradford, are wrong.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 40.—By M. P. Loquin.

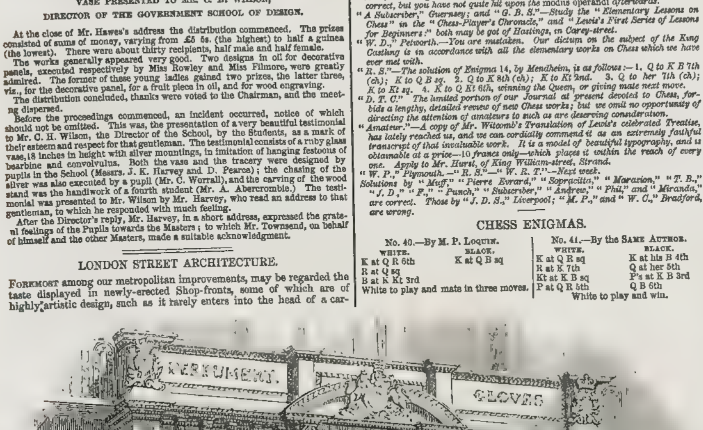
WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q R 6th	K at Q B sq
R at Q sq
B at K Kt 3rd

White to play and mate in three moves.

No. 41.—By the Same Author.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q R sq	K at his B 4th
R at K 7th	Q at her 5th
Kt at K B sq	P's at K B 3rd
P at Q R 5th	Q B 6th

White to play and win.



LONDON STREET ARCHITECTURE.—NEW SHOP-FRONT, REGENT-STREET.

TRINITY CHURCH, TWICKENHAM.

No. 42.—By the Same.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his R sq	K at Q R 2nd
R at Q 6th
B at K Kt 3rd
Kt at K 6th

White to play and mate in three moves.

GAMES IN THE MATCH BETWEEN M. M. KIESERITZKIJ AND HORWITZ (CONTINUED.)

Game the Fourth.

WHITE. (Mr. H.)	BLACK. (M. K.)	WHITE. (Mr. H.)	BLACK. (M. K.)
1. K P two	K P two	29. P takes P	P takes P
2. K Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	30. Q R to Q sq (ch)	K to B 3rd
3. B to Q Kt 5th	B to Q B 4th	31. Q R to Q 8th	B to K 3rd
4. B takes Kt	Q P takes B	32. K R to R 8th	K R P one
5. Castles	Q to Q 3rd	33. P takes P	R takes P
6. Q Kt P two	B takes Kt P	34. R takes Kt	K Kt P one
7. Q B P one	B to R 4th	35. Q R P two	Q Kt P one
8. B to R 3rd	Q to K B 3rd	36. R to K R 8th	Q Kt P one (d)
9. Q P two	P takes P	37. R takes R	P to Kt 8th (becoming a Queen)
10. K P one	Q to Kt 3rd	38. R returns to R 8th	Q to Kt 7th (ch)
11. Kt takes P	Q B to R 6th	39. K to B sq	B (ch)
12. Q to B 3rd	B to K Kt 5th	40. K to Kt sq	Q to Q 5th (ch)
13. Q to K Kt 3rd	Castles	41. K to R sq	Q to Q R 8th (ch
14. Kt to Q 2nd (a)	R takes K Kt	42. K to R 2nd	Q takes P (ch)
15. P takes R	B takes Kt	43. K to Kt sq	Q to K 6th (ch)
16. K B P two	B to B 4th	44. K to R 2nd	Q to K B 5th (ch)
17. B to B 8th (b)	Q takes Q	45. K to Kt sq	Q to K B 8th (ch)
18. P takes Q	K R P two	46. K to R 2nd	B to Q 4th
19. R to B 3rd	B to K 5th	47. K to Kt 3rd	Q takes P (ch)
20. R to Q R 3rd	Q R P two	48. K to B 4th	Q to K 5th (ch)
21. Q R to Q sq	B to Q Kt 5th	49. K to Kt 5th	Q to K 6th (ch)
22 B takes B	P takes B	50. K to B 6th	Q to Q 5th (ch)
23. R to R 8th (ch)	K to Q 2nd	51. K to Kt 5th	Q to K 4th (ch)
24. K to B 2nd	B to Q 4th	52. K to R 6th	K Kt P one
25. Q R to Q Kt sq	Q Kt P to Kt 3rd (c)	53. K to R 7th	Q to K 5th (ch)
26. K B P one	Q B P to B 4th	54. K to Kt 7th	Q to Kt 3rd (ch)
27. K R to Q Kt 6th	B to K 5th	55. K to B 8th	K B P one
28. Q R to K sq	B takes K B P	56. Resigns

(a) The least reflection must have shown the ill consequences of this move.

(b) Very well conceived.

(c) Neatly projected. If White now take the foremost Q Kt P with his Rook, Black advances his Q B P one sq, thus attacking both Rooks, by which manœuvre he must win at least "the exchange."

(d) The termination of this game is ably played by Mr. Kieseritzkij.

Game the Fifth.

White (Mr. K)	Black (Mr. H.)	White (Mr. K.)	Black (Mr. H.)
1. Q P two	Q P one	29. K to Kt 2nd	P takes P
2. K P two	K B P two	30. Q R to K Kt 3rd	K R to K B 4th
3. P takes P	B takes P	31. Q R takes P	Q R to K B 2nd
4. Q to K B 3rd	Q to Q B sq	32. Q R to K Kt 5th	Kt to Q 4th
5. K B to Q B 4th	K Kt to B 3rd	33. R takes R	R takes R
6. Q B to K Kt 5th	Q B takes P	34. K to Kt 3rd	Q R P two
7. K Kt to R 3rd	Q to K Kt 5th	35. R to K 2nd	Kt to K B 3rd
8. Q takes Q	Kt takes Q	36. K to K B 3rd	Q B P one (d)
9. K B to K 6th	K Kt to B 3rd	37. R to K Kt 2nd	Kt to K R 4th
10. Q Kt to R 3rd	B to K 5th	38. P takes Q B P	R takes Q B P
11. Castles (on K side)	B to Q 4th	39. R to K Kt 5th	R takes R
12. K Kt to K B 4th	B takes B	40. K R P takes R	Q R P one
13. Kt takes B	K to Q 2nd	41. P takes P	K Kt P one
14. K R to K sq	Q Kt to R 3rd	42. B to his 3rd	K to Q B 3rd
15. Q R to Q B sq	Q B P one	43. P to Q R 5th (e)	K P one
16. Q R to B 3rd	Q Kt to his 5th	44. P takes P	Kt to Kt 2nd
17. Q R to Q Kt 3rd	K Kt to Q 4th (a)	45. P takes Q P	Kt to K 3rd
18. Q Kt to Q B 4th	Q Kt P two	46. P to Q R 6th	Kt takes Kt P (ch)
19. K Kt takes B (ch)	K R takes Kt	47. K to B 4th	Kt to K 3rd (ch)
20. Q R takes Kt	P takes Kt (b)	48. K to his 5th	Kt to Q B 4th
21. Q R takes P	Q R to Kt sq	49. P to R 7th	K to Kt 2nd
22. Q Kt P one	K P one	50. B to Q 4th	Kt to Q 6th (ch)
23. B to Q 2nd	Kt to Kt 3rd	51. K to K 6th	Kt to Q Kt 5th
24. Q R to B 3rd	K R to B 4th	52. P to Q 7th	Kt to B 3rd
25. K Kt P two	K R to Q 4th	53. K to Q 5th	Kt to K 2nd (ch)
26. K R to K 4th	Q R to K B sq	54. K to Q 6th	Kt to B 4th (ch)
27. K B P two	K R P one (c)	55. K to his 6th	Kt takes B (ch)
28 K R P two	K R P one	56. K to Q 5th, and wins.

(a) From this point, we should take Black's game for choice. He has a clear Pawn plus and ought to have no difficulty in bringing all his pieces into play immediately.

(b) By this inconsiderate play, Black gives up all his advantage. It is clear he could not take the Rook, because mate would have followed in a few moves, but he might have played K R to B 4th, or even K R P one, and have had a decided superiority.

(c) Two steps would have been better.

(d) The remainder of the game is deplorably played by Black.

(e) K to Kt 4th, with the object of playing K B P one next move would have been stronger play.

Problem, No. 135.

This beautiful little stratagem we owe to the ingenuity of Mr. Kling
White playing first mates in two moves.

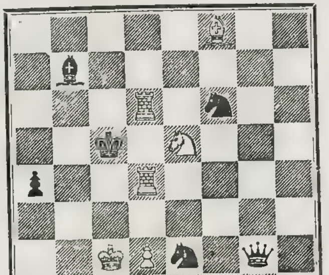
BLACK.



WHITE.

Rumoured Death of Dr. Bledow.—We are deeply concerned to state that a report has just reached us that this distinguished player and accomplished gentleman died suddenly, at Berlin, a few days since. For the sake of Chess, and the numerous circle of amateurs of which Dr. Bledow has long been the animating centre, we fervently hope this report may turn out to be unfounded.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, August 22, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 226.—Vol. IX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, AUGUST 29, 1846. [Sixpence.

THE PAST SESSION.

SILENCE again rests on the Halls of the Legislature, and there is a pause in the working of the great machine which for many months has been almost over-tasked. It is somewhat slow and cumbrous in its movements, but when managed with an earnest spirit and real intention, is capable of doing wonders. If perfect wisdom could always be united to absolute power much time and toil might be saved from the expenditure of both that is required to convert a principle into a fact; a short Ukase would supersede years of agitation, and months of debate. But as the two qualities are seldom united, save in "a lucky accident," it is better to trust to that system in which ideas struggle through long periods of opposition, where

> By degrees to fulness wrought,
> The strength of some diffusive thought
> Hath time and space to work and spread.

The very existence of a Parliament supposes a state of continual flux and change, and constant adapting of laws and statutes to the necessities of the time; and we take the great merit of the often praised "British Constitution" to be that no one can say exactly what it is; it varies from year to year, and month to month; perpetually is it shaken; constantly is the nation declared to be on the brink of ruin, and yet escapes in a miraculous manner, and goes on thriving and flourishing under what the "chainers of the wheel" demonstrate ought to destroy and lay it flat. They probably overlook the fact that in all change something is put in the place of that which is taken away, and that the eternal process is not one of abolition of all governing power, but the substitution of one form of it for another.

To those who regard all change with a kind of fear, the Session just closed must have been a terrible one indeed; when the Reform Bill passed, several Peers talked of selling off their estates and giving up England altogether as a lost land, in which none wearing coronets could thereafter live. A convention at St. Stephen's confiscating all men's goods, and the guillotine constantly at work at Charing-cross, were among the least terrible of the results they foresaw from the "revolutionary spirit" that insisted on cutting off two members from those boroughs which consisted of a few yards of wall and a gate post. But after a short space the ermine and strawberry leaves took comfort; the consequences were much less fatal than they anticipated. The Whigs were in office to be sure, which was a real calamity, but on the whole things went on very much as before; grass did not grow in the streets, pikes did not supersede walking sticks, nor did the Phrygian cap become a fashion, and what was more consoling, rents were paid with great punctuality, and it was discovered that rank and wealth had rather gained in influence by not being so much abused. So noble Lords bethought them, and came to the conclusion that England, after all, might be endured, that Dukes might breathe its air and survive. Nay, they soon perceived that the monstrous Reform Bill itself could be turned to account; they waxed bolder and bolder, abused Melbourne and the Whigs immeasureably, registered and canvassed and won elections, and actually in a few years "built up a great party" by means of the very measure which they first declared would be their social and political destroyer; and once more they were at the head of affairs, walking in the high places of the State, like wise men accepting the new state of things and acting according to it, allowing that the change had been a good one and that their fears were unfounded.

This Session we have had something like this exhibition of exaggerated fears and gloomy prophecies over again. Another old system has yielded to the assault of time and opinion. But, we are bound to say, the alarm has been much less general and intense. When, in the winter of last year, it was announced that Sir Robert Peel would certainly abolish the Corn-Laws, men doubted: how could he gain the consent of the Peers to a measure it was supposed they would consider little less than a destruction of their property? In defence of this, if for anything, they would dare the utmost, plant the banner of "No Surrender" on the citadel, and die, if needful, in the "last ditch of the Constitution." But, whether the faith in predictions of disaster is less strong than of yore, or whether there was a secret persuasion that the Corn-Laws were not in reality that benefit they were supposed to be, certain it is, they fell with far less opposition than was anticipated. The House of Peers met the crisis in the best possible spirit. There can be no doubt that, if the system was of real advantage to any body, it was most of all so to them as a class; yet they placed no delays in the way of a settlement, discussed the question calmly, and deliberately abolished, by their decision, a system that had endured for ages. They did so, too, knowing that their vote could not secure to the Minister of the predominant party among them a continuance of his power. The system and its destroyer fell together—the last, honoured and applauded, but conscious that, according to ordinary calculation, his should not have been the hand to deal the blow.

For the magnitude of the changes it has produced, the past Session has been the most memorable one since the Reform era; some of its events were almost dramatic in their effect; thus the resignation of Sir Robert Peel, after the vote on the Coercion Bill, was rather a triumph than a defeat. Lord John Russell certainly did not "darken his fall" with his own victory. The Whigs now occupy a throne which is theirs rather by the voluntary abdication of their predecessors, than by conquest.

HER MAJESTY'S CRUISE.—THE ROYAL YACHT OFF THE NEEDLES, ISLE OF WIGHT.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

The Liberals, in their chief measure—the arrangement of the Sugar Duties—have but followed out the policy of the late Premier; but they appear to have departed from it in one great particular—Sugar raised by slave labour is no longer to be excluded from our consumption. Hitherto, we have imported, bought, sold, exchanged, refined, exported it—done everything, in fact, except eat it; now we are to do that also. This is another of the great changes of the Session; more in principle, however, than practice. As our exclusion of slave Sugar before was rather a fiction than anything else, since we carried, manufactured, and sold it to half Europe, its being admitted to our home market will not make so great a difference as was anticipated.

The other measures of the Session require no recapitulation: the two great contending principles of the time have met in conflict on the two questions of Corn and Sugar: it seems almost strange that mere matters of commerce and finance should excite such intense controversy. Facts now will prove the best commentators both on what has been done and undone.

For a time the two great Leaders of the rival parties have retired from their public stations; one labouring under the reproaches of a disappointed and deceived party, but popular and possessing the confidence of the bulk of the represented classes; the other honoured and respected by all men, not excepting his opponents, for the manner in which he bore his part in the conflict, but suffering the penalty of a mind and body over-tasked, and obliged to seek, in the quietness of retreat, recruited health and strength; yet, even in retirement, he "works his work:" the Leader of the successful Opposition to a powerful Ministry, the organiser of a popular confederacy; the destroyer of old creeds and systems, feasted by a Monarch, and addressing the men of a foreign land, on principles as applicable to them as to ourselves, is one of the strangest spectacles of modern times—one that suggests many reflections.

England must, at the present moment, furnish a wondrous spectacle to other nations: the boldness with which we plunge into changes which the Powers of the Continent dare not even contemplate; the sympathy of opinion that seems to exist between the higher and the middle classes; the readiness with which a veteran Statesman has acknowledged the effect of his antagonist's arguments, and the quiet easy manner in which a social revolution and a change of Government can be effected, as if—

> The common sense of most did hold a fretful realm in awe—

All these are the fruits of a long discipline in the working of Constitutional and Parliamentary power. Nor are the material interests with which our Legislature has to deal less important than the political and moral. The Senate of Rome never had the direction of half the amount of wealth the expenditure of which is authorised by the English Parliament in a single year. It deals with millions as if they were thousands, leaving millions still to spare for undertakings in other lands. In this respect we have startled many even among ourselves, who think that a tighter hand on the reins of speculation would have added to the advantages the country hopes to derive from the unexampled activity, industry, and duration of the Session of 1846.

THE ROYAL CRUISE, AND RETURN TO OSBORNE HOUSE.

On Saturday morning, soon after six o'clock, his Royal Highness Prince Albert landed from the Victoria and Albert yacht, lying in Barnpool, and proceeded in a carriage and four to Dartmoor. His Royal Highness was attended by three members of the Royal suite. The carriage proceeded to the Millbay Pier, where the Prince and attendants went on board boats from the Royal yacht, and were rowed to Barnpool. Her Majesty was on board at the moment of the arrival of his Royal Highness, and came to the yacht's side to receive him.

At a few minutes after ten o'clock, her Majesty, accompanied by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, disembarked from the Royal yacht under a salute from Mount Wise, and proceeded in the state-barge to the shore at Mount Edgecumbe, where the noble proprietor and the Countess were waiting to receive her The persons, who had assembled in large numbers on the beach, cheered her Majesty as she approached the shore.

The Queen remained at Mount Edgecumbe until about one o'clock, when she returned to the Royal yacht, and remained on board until the arrival of the Prince Consort. Shortly after which her Majesty and Prince Albert, attended by the Countess Jocelyn and the Hon. Miss Napier, the Right Hon. Alfred Paget, and Baron Stockmar, left in the State Barge, and proceeded, under salutes from the citadel and Mount Wise, to Mount Edgecumbe, where the Royal party were received by the Countess of Mount Edgecumbe. The Royal party remained on shore about two hours and a half, viewing the delightful scenes of the park and grounds, and, it is understood, enjoying the hospitality of the noble proprietor

On Sunday morning at half-past nine the Victoria and Albert Royal yacht, with her Majesty on board, and the Fairy, tender, and the Black Eagle and Garland, steamers composing the Royal squadron, slipped their moorings, and having their steam up, were in a few minutes proudly dashing on their way out of the Sound.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert returned to Osborne House from their marine excursion on Monday. Both the Queen and her Royal Consort appeared in excellent health and spirits. On Tuesday afternoon, the Royal party was joined by the Duchess of Kent, who arrived at the Royal Clarence Yard, Gosport, at three o'clock, and crossed over to the Isle of Wight in the Fairy steam-yacht, under a salute of twenty-one guns from the platform battery and the men-of-war in commission

Our Artist has, in the preceding page, engraved the Royal Yacht passing through the Needles for Plymouth, on the morning of Tuesday week. There was a heavy sea; though the Queen remained on deck the whole of the passage The Royal squadron, comprising the Victoria and Albert yacht and the Admiralty yacht Black Eagle, started at nine o'clock, and passed through Cowes Roads under a salute from the yachts and battery.

VISIT OF HER MAJESTY TO GUERNSEY.

(From a Correspondent.)

About seven o'clock on Sunday evening last, her Majesty the Queen, in the Royal Yacht steamer, Victoria and Albert, accompanied by the Fairy, Black Eagle, and Garland, entered the Little Russell, a channel which runs between Guernsey and the island of Herne, and approached the town of St. Peter's Port Her Majesty's visit being quite unexpected, no preparations had been made, and the servants of the Lieutenant were surprised by being sent for during divine service at St. James's Church. On being apprised of the Queen's arrival the Lieutenant-Governor immediately embarked in a boat to attend to her Majesty's [illegible] Excellency shortly returned, and announced to the crowd assembled [illegible] that her Majesty would land with her retinue at nine on the following [illegible] Notwithstanding the suddenness of her Majesty's visit, the people manifested their loyalty in the most gratifying manner; for, before eight o'clock, the town, when viewed from the Pier-heads, presented one blaze of light. Every house was brilliantly illuminated: from ten to twenty lights were to be seen in [illegible] of St. Peter in such a stir The inmates of [illegible] house came forth to see their Sovereign. Young and old, rich and poor, were congregated together. From eight o'clock till ten there was one incessant display of fireworks Blue and red lights, rockets and Roman candles, were kept up till that time, whilst the loud tones of the National Anthem were to be heard from the crowd throughout the whole evening. The windows of L' Hotel de L' Europe, and Marshall's Royal Yacht Club Hotel, were gorgeously lighted.

So early as five o'clock on Monday morning, the pier was crowded to excess. Many persons staid out the whole night, in the hope of thereby obtaining a good situation to see her Majesty's disembarkation. The streets through which it was known that the Royal Procession would pass were decorated with innumerable flags, festoons, and wreaths of flowers, and lined on each side with the town regiment, which was called out at six o'clock

Precisely at nine o'clock the Barge, with the Royal Standard floating at the head, containing the Queen and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, was seen approaching the town. The eight bells in the parish church immediately began to sound a merry peal, which continued the whole day; and a Royal salute was fired from Fort George, both on the occasion of her Majesty's arrival and departure from the island. On the instant the boat entered the harbour, it was greeted with the most enthusiastic cheering

Her Majesty and Prince Albert, in an open carriage and four, preceded by the Lieutenant-Governor, officers of the regiments, &c., proceeded from the Pier up High-street, Smith-street, along the Grange-road, and Colborne-road, to Fort George—the principal fortification in the island; and, having stopped to admire the view, returned down the Grange-road to the Harbour. The reception her Majesty met with here could not but be gratifying; the event put a stop to all business; many of the shops in the High-street were closed during the whole day.

Within an hour and a half, her Majesty and Prince Albert proceeded to the Pier, where they embarked on board the barge of the Royal yacht, and were soon alongside. The squadron then departed in the direction of the Isle of Wight, and quickly lost sight of the privileged island of Guernsey.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

In my last letter, against every assertion of the French and English journals, I announced to you the approaching conclusion of the new opera of Rossini; and I explained to you the fair influence under which it had been written. A letter has just been received in Paris, announcing that Rossini has married his Armida, and the musical Rinaldo, resuming his panoply of "glorious war," is coming to seek glory in the Parisian arena, the birthplace of his bride. This operatic event excites the greatest sensation amongst the idle dilettanti and quidnuncs in Paris; it is the topic of every conversation; and we see it celebrated in verse, how Rossini, enjoying his favourite pastime, fishing, was surprised by M. Scribe, the dramatic Briareus.

"Rossini pèchait sur la Rive, Monsieur Scribe passa par là,"

&c. &c. &c., at this moment, is the favourite song of our gobemouches. Speaking of news I have been the first to give you, I likewise have just seen in the English journals the announcement, as a novelty, of the approaching arrival in England of the Princess William of Prussia; you published that news in a letter of mine long since.

The attention of the Parisians, this week, has been turned towards two personages circumstances have brought out in relief—the Comte de Paris and the Marquis of Normanby. The young Count this week completed his ninth [illegible], and all that could get access to the Palace, suddenly recollecting his existence, have flocked to behold the future King of France. None have been more happy to behold the vigour of mind and body of the young Prince than the party at present opposed to the Government. That party, having M. Thiers at its head, struggled to get the future Regency for the Prince's mother, instead of his uncle, the Duke de Nemours. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Orleans, chagrined at the preference given her brother-in-law, and, from her sorrows, and her being of the Protestant faith, not mixing in the gay scenes of the Court, has naturally been considered as not a little in the Opposition; and the party displaced from Ministerial power look up to her, on the King's death, to make a struggle against the Duke de Nemours—an excellent and gifted Prince, but unpopular—and, through this means, resume their position. As to Lord Normanby, his nomination is generally rejoiced at by all parties. The French Court have escaped one of those thorough-paced Whig Ambassadors of the Palmerston and Ponsonby style, who are anti-Gallican to the back-bone; whilst the volatile and artistic circles of Paris see in the noble poet and novelist an Ambassador just suited to their tastes—a perspective of gay réunions, and of encouragement to art.

If I had time and space I would give you an account of the number of provincial horse races which have lately taken place owing to the new-born taste of our volatile nation for le sport and le turf. Some of Louis Philippe's lieges—that is to say the spectators, and still more, the mob have been greatly indignant at the absence of any competent contests. Their indignation at Caen Races was unbounded when they saw M. Aumont's horse walk over the course without any contest—first for a prize of 1000, and next for another of 6000 francs. I heard Lord C——, at the Hippodrome, relating, with great zest, to his neighbour, that when the indignant bystanders were told by a French sporting gentleman that even in England horses sometimes walked over the course, there was a huge explosion of incredulity, derision, and discontent on the part of the provincial turfites: whilst one man roared out in French, "None of your chaff those sly rogues the English are too good judges to part with their money without either fight or fun!" Verily, le sport is not as yet our forte. Whilst we French folks adopt anything for the sake of novelty, our love of our own localities, and, consequently, our untravelled habits, make us the worst of imitators. We only copy what we see through our own medium.

FRANCE

THE LATE ATTEMPT UPON THE LIFE OF LOUIS PHILIPPE.

The trial of Joseph Henri, for shooting at his Majesty, Louis Philippe, on the 29th of July, commenced before the Court of Peers on Tuesday

The commencement of this trial attracted even less attention than that of Lecomte. The galleries were almost empty. At ten mintes to twelve, M. Baroche, the prisoner's counsel, took his seat. At a quarter past twelve, the Peers entered the hall The prisoner was then brought in by the gendarmes, and bowed to the Court. He wore spectacles, and was clad in a black redingote. He is a short and spare man, with a pale and insignificant face. He conversed for a moment with his Counsel. The Procureur-General, Hebert, and Avocat-General, Bresson, took their seat at the parquet, when the Chancellor declared the sittings opened.

After the secretary had called over the names of the members of the Court, the President ordered the accused to stand up, and asked him his name, profession, &c

The prisoner replied My name is Joseph Henri. I was born at Charmes, in the department of the Upper Saone. I am 51 years of age I lived in Rue de Limoges, No. 8, where I had a manufactory of fancy articles.

The President having then told him to sit down, the Recorder read the bill of indictment to the Court.

The President next proceeded to interrogate the prisoner.

Joseph Henri said that he had of late experienced great misfortunes; that, during the last six years, he had constantly meditated to commit suicide; but that, not having the courage to kill himself, he wished to fall by the hand of another. He married 25 years ago, and, for the last 18 years, was unhappy on account of the bad conduct of his wife On being asked what could have induced him to attempt the King's life, he replied, that in order to accomplish his end, he had resolved to fire upon an exalted peasonage. His intention was, not to kill, but merely to inflict a contusion, a slight wound. He had no particular political opinion: he prized an honest man, whatever his political principles might be Nobody was aware of his project. He fired two pistol shots upon the King. The pistols were loaden with slugs. He had purchased them on the Boulevard from a man named Caron, on the 30th of June, the day before he mounted guard at the Palace of the Tuileries. He had not contemplated firing upon the King on that day; he knew his Majesty was not in Paris; besides he did not intend to strike so high. No sooner had he arrived at the Carousel, and found himself surrounded by his comrades and chiefs, than he renounced his intention. On the 29th of July, he was determined to die, and resolved to fire upon some high personage, a Marshal of France, for instance, but reflecting that the Jury might bring in a verdict "with extenuating circumstances," he preferred firing upon the King. It was said that it was through pride he would not work in the service of others. This was not true. His infirmities alone prevented him from adopting that course. He did not wish, nor could he find resolution enough to commit suicide. Those who committed suicide evidently laboured under fever, and were not in possession of their faculties. He had not been fortunate enough to be visited with that fever. His object, besides, was to render a service to society, by affording a new argument in favour of the abolition of capital punishment. Sooner or later, it would, he hoped, be abolished; and he would die happy if he was instrumental in contributing to that result. Other penalties were punishments; the pain of death was no punishment. In his misfortune, he had applied to all classes of society; he had sought relief from clergymen, merchants, capitalists, and philanthropists -M. Lamartine amongst others- all had rejected his appeal, on account of his infirmity, and when he found that he had no means left of retrieving his fortune, he said to himself, "My only alternative is death; I cannot kill myself; men will kill me." When he was arrested on the 29th July, he feared, from the attitude of the crowd, that they would massacre him, and he exclaimed, "Spare me, for I have accomplices," and that expedient saved his life. Had he perished in that manner, he would have had no opportunity of vindicating himself, and would have passed for a monster He had at one moment thought of placing himself in the passage of the King, in the Avenue de Neuilly, and firing upon his carriage so as to leave a mark upon it, but the fear of wounding one of the servants standing behind it, or one of the outriders, had deterred him from his project, for he never wished to inflict the least injury on one of his fellow-creatures.

The Attorney-General next interrogated the prisoner relative to the high personage he intended to kill on the 30th of June.—"You mean," replied Joseph Henri, "to fire upon, for I never wished any harm to mortal. I never was guilty of a base act; and, had I been animated by feelings of revenge or hatred, I would have killed one of the persons who had occasioned my ruin."

The examination of the witnesses afterwards commenced.—The first witness was the police-officer Roussel, who arrested Joseph Henri, in the garden of the Tuileries, on the 29th of July, and with difficulty conducted him to the post of the palace.

The second witness, named Quentin, had assisted in apprehending the prisoner, who cried to him, "Spare me." He then gave him in charge to the guard.

[illegible] had fired, he dropped [illegible] "I [illegible]

[illegible] those expressions.

The next witness, a Sergeant-Major of the 72nd Regiment, had also heard those expressions

When our last accounts left Paris, the trial was not concluded.

Last Saturday the Chamber of Peers voted, by a majority of 102 to 4, an Address in reply to the King's Speech, and, in the evening, it was presented to his Majesty, who returned the following answer:—"I am much touched with the sentiments you express in this Address, and it is ever pleasing to me to tell you how much mine respond to them. These conspicuous manifestations have enabled me to endure sorrowful trials; and I find in the loyal co-operations of which you reiterate the assurance, a precious pledge of the preservation of what you so justly call the glorious conquests of modern civilisation, the faithful maintenance of our institutions, and the security of the rights of all. So long as it shall please God to protract my life, it shall be devoted, with your support, to that noble object, and to the progressive development of the happiness and prosperity of France."

The Marquis of Normanby, the newly-appointed Ambassador to the Court of the Tuileries, has arrived with his Marchioness and suite at Paris. On Monday [illegible]quis presented his credentials to the King. The state carriages of [illegible] Majesty were sent to the British Embassy to fetch the noble Ambassador, and, [illegible] the presentation, conveyed him back to the Faubourg St. Honoré.

The Earl of Cardigan has arrived in Paris.

Some experiments are being made on the Rouen and Havre Railway, to ascertain the strength of the works; and it is reported that the Government will authorise the opening of the line in the beginning of the winter, but that for some time it will only be open for the transport of goods, so as fully to test the solidity of the constructions.

The Presse announces that the Count de Paris entered his ninth year on Monday last, the Royal infant having been born on the 24th of August, 1838. "The Count de Paris," adds the Presse, "although of a delicate constitution, enjoys excellent health. He is tall for his age, and his features strongly resemble those of his father. He has made much progress in his studies, and he expresses himself with facility in the German, Italian, and French languages."

The increase in the price of corn has created a great deal of discontent in France. Some serious riots have taken place in the departments, and the papers speak as if they thought that the discontent had by no means reached its utmost height.

SPAIN

We have accounts from Madrid to the 20th inst. The chief topic which appeared to occupy the public mind was the marriage of the Queen.

Public attention was still directed to the presence of the Infante Don Francisco de Assiz, whom various Corporations and high functionaries of the State were about to congratulate on his arrival. Innumerable reports were spread, and conjectures formed as to his chances of obtaining the Queen's hand. The Opposition print, El Clamor Publico of the 19th, even ventures the following paragraph:

"It was, yesterday, said that on Monday evening a meeting had taken place at the Palace, which several Prelates, the presidents of the legislative bodies, the Duke de Bailen, the Ministers, and some of the Members of the Council of State had attended; and that the Queen's marriage had been the object of the meeting. There are persons who even affirm that her Majesty's marriage with the Infante [illegible] is to be solemnised this day or to-morrow.

[illegible] Not the least doubt now exists that the Spanish, French, and British Cabinets have fixed upon Don Francisco de Assiz as the future husband of Isabel Segunda, instead of his brother Don Enrique, who, since his indiscreet alliance with the Progresistas, has lost all chance of becoming the Royal Consort, unless it be by the advent to power of Espartero and his party, which can only take place through a revolution."

The British Minister at Madrid, Mr. Bulwer, has slightly rallied, but still remains in a precarious condition.

ITALY

The Marseilles and Italian papers contain accounts of a very violent earthquake on the 14th inst., which occasioned great loss of life and property in several villages and towns of Tuscany. The village of Osciano, situate at about twenty [illegible] from Leghorn, suffered extremely: out of one hundred and twenty houses, of which this village is composed, two only have remained standing in the midst of the general ruin Fifty-nine persons were there killed, and sixty-five wounded. At Leghorn, almost all the houses are rent more or less. They say that the ground in the streets opened and shut: this is probably imaginary only, the consequence of the terror into which the people were thrown.

Some interesting details respecting the earthquake are given in the following letter, dated Leghorn, Aug 17: "This town has experienced an earthquake, which has thrown the inhabitants into the greatest state of alarm. On the 14th inst., at 50 minutes p m, the first shock was felt, having been preceded by a subterranean noise. The shock lasted from seven to eight seconds. The oscillations were at first perpendicular, and as if produced by a rising up of the earth taken from the south-east to the north-east, and repeated five or six times. Household furniture was displaced and thrown down; the church bells violently agitated. The noise produced by the cracking of beams and the walls which opened, gave warning of an impending catastrophe. The inhabitants, terrified, threw themselves into the street, evincing the greatest fear and despair; women throwing themselves down on their knees, imploring the Madonna de Montenero, the patroness of the town; the men making the sign of the cross and hastening to the residence of their families to give them succour. During the night several other shocks were felt; the earth seemed to be in a continued convulsion. The sky was free from clouds, but there was a thick mist in the air which produced a melancholy on the mind. The palace occupied by M. de la Rochefoucault, the French Minister, has been much damaged. A stone from the ceiling fell on the chair Madame de la Rochefoucault had left a few minutes before the earthquake. The house of M. Bremer, Consul-general, has also suffered: at an angle it sunk, and all the inside walls are full of crevices, and shaken. No Frenchman established at Leghorn has been personally injured, or his property damaged. The villa established by M. Moreau, the son of the cashier of the Bank of France, has been seriously damaged. M. Moreau passed the night in a carriage in his garden. The earthquake was more violent and did more damage in the country round, and great disasters have occurred, especially in the Maremmes, a volcanic country, which still bears the signs of a subterranean influence. Whole villages have been thrown down in the Saulia, Lorenzana, Osciano, and Casciano, the centre of the oscillating motion, and at about five leagues from Leghorn. At Voltera, a government prison fell, burying several prisoners. The numbers of persons killed are stated to be, in all the districts, 38; and 140 wounded, of which 58 seriously. The effects of the shock extended to Pisa. The vaulted roof of the old Church of St. Michael fell at the first shock. The congregation had just left the building after divine service. The houses of the town were shaken, but the shock being less than at Leghorn, did not cause so much damage. Several natural phenomena occurred. Spouts of muddy and boiling water sprung out of the earth. A lake has been formed in a sunken space of land. All the villas in the neighbourhood of Pisa have been considerably damaged. The farms and peasants' dwellings have more or less suffered on the whole line of the shock. The inhabitants are in the greatest state of alarm, which is increased by the [illegible]tals of the disasters caused by former earthquakes in this quarter. The inhabitants have a full recollection of the earthquakes in the years 1798 and 1816. It is not forgotten that in 1798 the town of Sienna was threatened with total destruction by shocks, which lasted nine days The last shock in particular caused many victims. During the last four days the earth has not ceased to shake at intervals. Looking to the state of the houses at Leghorn, a smart shock would evidently complete the ruin of the town. A portion of the inhabitants have left the town, many are bivouacking under tents in the public places, many are on board the boats. The Government has lost no time in sending into the rural districts engineers, medical men, medicine, and provisions. It is stated that on the 10th of August a slight shock of an earthquake was felt in the city of Naples, but fortunately without any injury being done."

POLICE.

SERIOUS AFFRAY AT THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

On Monday afternoon, a conflict of a sanguinary nature took place at the Camden Town Station of the London and North Western Railway Company. It appears that in consequence of a quarrel between the Irish and English labourers employed upon the line and other buildings adjacent, the former party went to the station alluded to, and made a most violent attack upon the English, many of whom were dreadfully cut by working tools, stones, brickbats, &c, which were hurled at them in all directions, and one or more of them, owing to the injuries inflicted, are hardly expected to survive.

Twenty of the principals in the affray were taken into custody, and were examined at MARYLEBONE Office, on Tuesday. They gave their names Joseph Glory, John Crimming, John Duggen, John Donohue, John Tracey, Jeremiah Kilahar, John Brown, Patrick O'Donnell, John Sheehan, James Kennedy, Thomas Kinlove, John Cooper, Eugene Madden, Tobias Hackett, John Lyons, Jeremiah Donohue, Thomas Maloney, Patrick Ginnew, Timothy Killahar, and Thomas O'Donnell.

Mr. Humphreys appeared in compliance with the directions of the London and North Western Railway; and Mr Robinson on behalf of five of the accused.

Several surgeons' certificates were handed to Mr. Rawlinson, and it appeared that some of the injured parties (absent) were in a very alarming condition, from sundry cuts and blows which they had received on the head and body

Many of the witnesses in attendance bore evidence of the sanguinary treatment which they had received. Some of them had their eyes shockingly discoloured, and others their arms in slings.

The first witness called was Carter, railway-constable 175, who said: Yesterday afternoon, about half past two o'clock, I saw a great many of the Irish labourers coming towards Roundhouse-gate, Camden Town, at which I am stationed, when Duggen, who was one of them, crossed the ground and spoke to others at the gate. I told him I had orders not to admit any one through the ground except those who were at work inside, when he went back a little way, and afterwards again attempted to come in, at the same time beckoning to some of his companions to do so too. I took hold of him and pushed him along, upon which he said that if I didn't let him alone he'd knock my —— head in. I then tried to put up the bar of the gate, but was prevented from doing so by three of the prisoners and some others, who pulled me forward with great force into the road, when the prisoner Glory and several more struck me in a very violent manner. I seized hold of him (Glory), and immediately I was knocked down, and kicked on the head and body by him and about a dozen more. (Witness's face was much cut and bruised) I called aloud for assistance, and some of the English labourers at work inside of the gate coming to see what was the matter, they were felled to the ground by blows inflicted upon them with shovels, bricks, &c. I again laid hold of Glory, and while in the act of taking him away, Crimming and four others came up with brickbats, threatening to knock my brains out if I didn't let him go; and, feeling convinced from their manner that they would have no hesitation in putting their threat into execution, I suffered him to escape. This morning Madden came to the ground to take away some hods, and he was then recognised as being the man who had broken four of the ribs of one of the navigators (now in the hospital) at the time of the affray.

Some corroborative evidence was then given, and, from the statements of other witnesses, it appeared that the outrage upon the poor Englishmen was of a serious character; many of them were at one time lying bleeding upon the ground, having been beaten with pickaxes, spades, sticks, &c

The witnesses were severally cross-examined by Mr. Robinson, and all of the prisoners were positively identified as having acted prominently in the murderous outrage, with the exception of Gonoche and Maloney; the two latter were discharged, and the rest stand remanded till Tuesday next.

A question of much importance to Life Assurance Companies has lately been decided by the Judges in the Exchequer Chamber, on a bill of exceptions, in an action brought by the representatives of Schwabe against the Argus Life Assurance Company The Judges have decided that a party assured, holding his policy in his own hands, who may commit suicide, forfeits his policy, and that the office is not bound to pay the amount

In the Court of Bankruptcy, on Wednesday, a decision was given in the case of D. Maclean, Esq, M.P. for Oxford. The case had been before the Court on a previous day, when an application was made to grant further time for the bankrupt surrendering to his fiat, he being in Italy for the benefit of his health. The learned Commissioner said that he had read the evidence of Dr. Thompson, and was of opinion that the bankrupt had gone abroad for the benefit of his health, and not to avoid his creditors, and therefore he should grant the application.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS. Monday.

Further Explanation from Lord Lyndhurst.—Lord Lyndhurst read a letter which he had received from Sir R. Peel, wishing him to correct an erroneous statement, imputing to him an expression of a desire for the reconstruction of the Conservative party. As the letter was occasioned by a misapprehension, he read it to their Lordships as a confirmation of the statement he had made on Saturday

The Irish Constabulary Bill was read a second time; some other bills were disposed of; and the House adjourned, after a short sitting.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. Monday.

The House met at twelve o'clock, and sat four hours.

British Interests in Mexico.—Lord George Bentinck called the attention of the House to the present state of British interests in Mexico, consequent on the war between that country and the United States of America. The noble Lord concisely adverted to the great stake which this country held in the fortunes of Mexico; and, having narrated the events that preceded the war, contended that territorial aggrandisement was the ruling passion of America; hence, he concluded that Mexico would undergo a similar fate to Texas, unless this country interfered. The sentiment that prevailed through America was, that the stars which bespangle their flag should be so increased indefinitively. He wanted to know how long our Government would look tamely upon this aggrandisement—would it be before Mexico and California were annexed? He desired to know the result of the mediation which had taken place between this country and America, and to press on the Government the necessity of affording full security to our West India possessions, so as to control the usurpation and dominion of the United States.—Lord Palmerston said he did not think it probable that Mexico would be annexed to the United States, though, if it were, he admitted that the interests of this country would be seriously damaged thereby. An offer of mediation had been made by Sir Robert Peel's Government, but the Oregon question then interfered. The offer simply was, that if the United States were disposed to ask the mediation of England, it would be immediately offered. The United States, in consequence of the then unsettled state of the Oregon question, had given no answer. Now, however, as the Oregon question was set at rest, and the treaty ratified, the Government had given instructions to Mr. Pakenham to renew the offer of mediation. This offer had been made, and in such a form that it would require an answer from the Government of the United States. A corresponding offer had been made to the Government of Mexico. Lord Palmerston, in the course of his speech, said that he believed the preservation of peace over the world would be best secured by an extension of commerce, which was now likely to take place under the principles of Free-Trade.—Mr. Disraeli could find no satisfaction in the vague declaration, that in the principle of extending trade a stoppage of foreign wars was to be found. Such a theory was absurd. The political existence of Mexico might be lost ere a month or two elapsed, and the House was, therefore, entitled to demand of the Government to consider the subject seriously.—Mr. Wakley said it was impossible not to be struck with the novel position of the present Government. He always regarded the noble Lord as a peaceful Minister. (Hear, hear, from Lord Palmerston.) If there ever had been an impression that the noble Lord wished for war, it ought to be removed by the speech made by him this afternoon, for a more peaceful speech he (Mr. Wakley) had never heard. But the noble Lord must be somewhat astonished at finding that a complaint was made against him because he had not interfered. He was delighted to find that the noble Lord wished for peace between the United States and Mexico, and he hoped the noble Lord would persevere in his policy.

The rest of the afternoon was occupied in the disposal of the various bills before the House.

HOUSE OF LORDS. Tuesday.

The Earl of Ripon's Explanation.—The Earl of Ripon, in the most emphatic terms, indignantly repelled the charge lately preferred against him by Lord George Bentinck, of having bartered the patronage of the Chief-Justiceship of Bombay for the patronage of the living of Nocton. The noble Earl said he should leave the vindication of his character to the statement of facts made by Lord Lyndhurst, but he owed it to his own sense of honour to give the accusation the most unqualified contradiction. "My Lords," he said, "this I am compelled to state, and I do so on my honour as a gentleman, and as if it were the last word that I was to utter on this side of the grave, that I do absolutely deny, in the most unqualified manner, that there either is, or was, the slightest foundation for the imputation that was cast upon me. My Lords, that imputation was no slight matter. It was not an imputation that merely affected me in my political capacity, but it was one which mixed up a much more grave and serious accusation, namely, that of trafficking in a matter of ecclesiastical patronage, and of endeavouring, by the most scandalous interchange of advantages, to obtain for myself the nomination to a living which I was desirous that a friend of mine should possess. My Lords, I consider that the disposal of ecclesiastical patronage is a matter of awful responsibility. It does not merely concern the mere temporal advantages of those over whom the Minister is placed, but matters of a far higher interest; and to suppose that any man of common feeling, who has a sense of what is right in his bosom, would be guilty of so dishonourable and scandalous a traffic, is an assertion that ought not to be made, unless it is so clearly provable as that the sun is visible at noonday."

The Poor Employment (Ireland) Bill was committed, and some other bills having also been advanced a stage, the House adjourned till two o'clock on Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. -Tuesday.

The Poor Law Commissioners.—Mr. Hume moved the resolutions which he had placed on the paper, condemning the conduct of the Poor Law Commissioners, but withdrew them after he had made a speech.—Sir George Grey promised that the Government would give the subject their earliest consideration.—Mr. Etwall gave notice that he would take the earliest opportunity, next session, of calling the attention of the House to the Report of the Andover Committee.

Distress in Mayo.—Mr. Dillon Browne called the attention of the House to the distress that existed in the county Mayo. The potato crop, he said, had entirely failed there, and there were not less than 42,000 persons in that county in a state of famine, and an immense number in a state bordering on destitution. Sir D. Norreys corroborated Mr. Browne's statement The O'Conor Don said that similar distress existed in Roscommon, Galway, and other counties.—Mr. Labouchere assured the House that unremitting attention to the subject of Irish distress would be given by the Government. The measures that they had introduced would, he hoped, mitigate the evils complained of, but they did not rest satisfied there, nor think that they had done all that was necessary. The Lord-Lieutenant and the Government would devote their best consideration to the question.

The House, which had met at twelve, was occupied after this, until a quarter past three, in disposing of various bills. At that hour, the House adjourned till two o'clock on Wednesday.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Wednesday.

The House of Lords met to-day chiefly that the Royal Assent might be given by Commission to certain bills recently passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. Wednesday.

The House met at two, and sat till six

Foreign Affairs.—Lord Palmerston, in answer to a question from Dr. Bowring, stated that the Russian Government had consented, by treaty, to forego the exclusive privilege of trading with Turkey, being anxious that Russia should place itself on a fair and impartial footing with the other nations of Europe. In answer to a question from Sir H. Douglas, the noble Lord also intimated that a gentleman had been sent out to Buenos Ayres, with the view of communicating with the French Minister there, in order, if possible, to bring about a termination of hostilities in that quarter.

The Haydock Lodge Lunatic Asylum.—Mr. Wakley brought under the consideration of the House the abuses which had taken place in the management of the Haydock Lodge Lunatic Asylum, and moved for various returns, and for the appointment of a Commission thereupon. The hon. gentleman entered largely into the facts which had been brought to light respecting this asylum, one of which was that the mortality in the second year of its establishment was no less than 112 out of 450. It was to be recollected that Mr. Mott was the superintendent of this asylum while holding the office of auditor of the union in which it was situated; and, taking all matters into consideration, he thought an inquiry was indispensable into the scandalous proceedings connected with it. Mr. Fielden, in seconding the motion, said the proceedings connected with the asylum were perfectly disgraceful.—Sir G. Grey regretted that the hon. member had brought forward this most important subject before so thin a house. All the facts which had been stated with so much force were contained in the papers which had already been laid on the table of the House. He admitted that those facts showed that private lunatic asylums were in the most deplorable state, and he was afraid it was entirely out of the power of Parliament to remedy that state. With regard to a Commission of Inquiry, the hon. member must remember that the Commissioners of Lunacy were not at all implicated in this ill-treatment of lunatics. He admitted that it was most discreditable to any parties employed under the Poor-Law Commission, to be connected with the management of Lunatic Asylums. After the disclosures that had been made, he thought that the Commissioners of Lunacy ought to direct their most close attention to the conduct of the managers of the Haydock Lunatic Asylum. The only remedy for the evils connected with Lunatic Asylums was in the hands of the magistrates of this country, who should immediately set about erecting County Lunatic Asylums. He hoped, in conclusion, that the hon. member would not press his motion.—After a few words from Mr. R. Yorke and Mr. P. Borthwick, Mr. Wakley replied, and hoped the right hon. gentleman the Home Secretary would make an effectual inquiry into the case before the next session of Parliament; and, if this could not be done, he should feel it his duty to move for an inquiry to investigate the circumstances

The motion was then withdrawn; and the House, which had been almost entirely occupied with this subject, adjourned till three o'clock on Thursday.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

The House met at h[illegible] three o'clock.

The Commons' amendments to the Small Debts Bill were agreed to

The District Lunatic Asylums Bill, the Railway Commissioners Bill, and the Pawnbrokers Bill, were read a third time and passed.

STATE OF IRELAND. THE POTATO CROP.

The Earl of Roden then rose and expressed a hope that he might be allowed to take the first opportunity of saying a few words upon the state of Ireland. The noble Earl then adverted in general terms to the state of Ireland, and the calamity of the failure of the potato crop. Within the last few days, he had traversed the province of Ulster, and he believed there was not one field which was not tainted. There was also another evil—a great deficiency of the oat crop. He stated these facts with the view of impressing upon her Majesty's Government the awful responsibility which rested upon them.

The Earl of Clarendon assured the noble Earl (Roden) that the most earnest attention of the Government would be directed to the subject. The accounts alluded to by the noble Earl were most distressing, and he hoped the measures of the Government would mitigate the evils complained of.

Some routine business was then disposed of, and the House adjourned at five o'clock till Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

The Speaker took the chair at half-past three o'clock.

Mr. Foster moved for leave to send a message to the Lords, for a copy of the reports on the progress of the building of the Houses of Parliament.—Agreed to, and the message sent.

Mr Warburton brought in a Bill to restore Arrest on Mesne Process in civil actions, under certain limitations, which was read a first time, and ordered to be printed.

The House then adjourned, at half-past four, till Friday.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. W."—Published frequently before.

"J. T. B." The position you refer to must have been mislaid. Have you a copy? The beautiful Problem by Mr. Kling, in the August "Chess Chronicle," will amply repay you for the purchase of the Number.

"A. W."—When the conditions of solution to a Problem are "to move and win," they merely mean that White, having first move, is to win the game without limitation as to the number of moves.

"J. L. L."—We should recommend Lewis's last Treatise, decidedly. The Match between MM. Staunton and Harrwitz has commenced, and the latter has won the three games at odds already played. We shall report upon its progress next week

"F. C.," Peckham.—Your solution of No. 280 is correct. Any one of respectability is eligible for admission as a member to the London Chess Club; and no qualification as to strength of play is required.

"An Inquirer" is hypercritical. With sometimes a hundred communications on Chess to examine at once, it is not surprising that a single solution to a Problem should have been overlooked.

"D. W."—Your question is quite unintelligible.

"W. R."—The position of the pieces in Mr. Kling's ingenious Problem in "The Chess-Player's Chronicle" is correct. You will find another, also extremely clever, in the Number for September, just out, from India, by "Shagird."

"Old Stager," "Hector," and "S. S. M." We are grieved to say the reported death of Dr. Bledow is confirmed by a letter we have just received from his friend Von H. de Laza. Dr. Bledow expired on the 6th instant, after a few days' illness only, at Berlin, in his fifty-first year. The Chess Journal which he had commenced conducting will still be carried on by the Berlin Chess Club.

"T. Y. P."—We are utterly ignorant of the principles of the "Round Game." Do you mean the game of Chess played by four persons? If so, there is a little book extant containing rules for playing it, which may be got at most of the Chess-men Turners.

"R. F. D," Lisbon.—Your problems and solutions shall be duly examined.

"B. C."—Your first attempt is perfectly correct.

Solutions by "M. P.," "Styk," "B. C.," "Muff," "J. E. C.," "J. T. B.," "P. W.," "L. L. C.," Clapton; "G. A. H.," Hitchin; "W. R.," Glasgow; "Sopracitta," "J. V.," "T. B. W.," Frant; "H. P. C. C.," "H. M.," Bristol, "T. B.," Bradford; "Valley-field," "P. A. C.," and "J. L.," are correct.

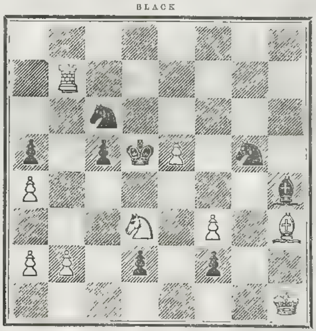
⁂ Solutions of Problems No. 134 and 135 next week.

Problem No. 136

By Mr. R. F. Hodgson, of the Bengal Civil Service.

White to play and checkmate in seven moves.

BLACK



WHITE.

GAMES IN THE MATCH BETWEEN M.M. KIESERITZKIJ AND HORWITZ (CONTINUED.)

Game the Sixth.

White (Mr. H.)	Black (Mr. K.)	White (Mr. H.)	Black (Mr. K.)
1. K P two	K P two	13. Q takes B	Q takes Q (ch)
2. K Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	14. K takes Q	K B P two
3. Q P two	P takes P	15. Kt to Q 5th	P takes P
4. Kt takes P	K B to Q B 4th	16. B takes P	Castles (ch)
5. Kt to K B 5th	K Kt P one	17. K to Kt 3rd	R to K B 2nd
6. K Kt to his 3rd	Q P one	18. B to K R 6th	B to K B 4th
7. K B to Q 3rd	K Kt to B 3rd	19. B to K B 3rd	Kt to Q 5th
8. Q Kt to B 3rd (a)	K Kt to his 5th	20 Q B P one	Kt takes B
9 Castles (b)	Q to K R 5th	21. P takes Kt	Q B P one
10. K R P one	Kt takes K B P	22. Kt to K 3rd	Q R to K sq
11. R takes Kt	Q takes Kt	23. Kt to Q B 4th	Q R to K 3rd
12. Q to K B 3rd	B takes R (ch)	24. K R P one	K R to K 2nd

The Game was prolonged a few moves, and won by Mr. Kieseritzkij.

(a) Instead of this move White should have Castled or played K R P one.

(b) It is hardly credible that a player so proficient in the openings should fall into the well known dilemma resulting from this position.

Game the Seventh.

White (Mr. K.)	Black (Mr. H.)	White (Mr. K)	Black (Mr. H.)
1. K P two	K P two	20. Q B to K Kt 5th	Q R to Q 2nd
2. K B to Q B 4th	K Kt to B 3rd	21. K P to K 6th	P takes P
3 K Kt to B 3rd	Kt takes P	22. B takes P (ch)	K to R sq
4. Q P one	K Kt to K B 3rd	23 Q takes K P (c)	Q takes Q
5. K Kt takes P	Q P two	24. B takes Q	Q R to K 2nd
6 Q to K 2nd	Q B to K 3rd	25. B to Q B 5th	Q R takes B
7. K B to Q Kt 3rd	K B to Q 3rd	26. B takes R	R to K 7th
8 K B P two	Castles	27 K to Kt 2nd	B to Q 5th (ch)
9. Castles	Q Kt to Q 2nd	28 K to R 3rd	R takes Q B P
10. Q Kt to Q B 3rd	K B to Q B 4th(ch)	29 R to R 3rd	K R P one
11. K to R sq	Q Kt takes Kt	30 K to Kt 4th	B takes K Kt P
12. P takes Kt	Kt to K Kt 5th	31. B to Q 6th	B to K B 3rd
13 Q B to K B 4th	Q B P one	32 K R P two	R takes Q R P
14. Q Kt to K 4th (a)	Q P takes Kt	33. K to K B 5th	K to K R 2nd
15. K B takes Q B	K Kt to K B 7th (ch	34 K to K 6th	R to Q 7th
16. R takes Kt	K B takes R	35. R to K B 3rd	Q R P two
17. K B to Q Kt 3rd	Q to her 5th (b)	86. K to Q 7th	R to Q B 7th
18. Q R to K B sq	K P to K 6th	37. Q P to Q 4th	B takes P
19. K Kt P one	Q R to Q sq	And White resigns.

(a) This is pretty, but not sound.

(b) A good move. If White play Q B P one, Black takes Q P with P.

(c) He would have been mated in two moves, on taking the R with his B.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 43.—By J. Brede.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his Kt sq	K at Q R sq
Q at her Kt sq	Q at her R 5th
R at Q 7th	R at Q B sq
R at Q Kt 5th	Kt at K B 5th
P's at K R 2nd	P's at K R 4th
K Kt 2nd and Q R 6th	K Kt 3rd and Q B 7th

White to play and mate in four moves.

No. 44.—By the Same.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his Kt 2nd	K at his B 5th
R at K Kt 3rd	Q at her B 5th
B at Q Kt 4th	R at K R's 5th
Kt at K Kt 4th	Kt at Q's 5th
P at K 4th	P's at K Kt 3rd and Q's 4th

White to play and mate in four moves.

No. 45.—By the Same.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q R sq	K at his R 4th
Q at K B 4th	Q at her B's sq
Kt at K Kt 2nd	R at Q sq
Kt at Q Kt 4th	R at Q 2nd
P's at K R 4th	B at Q Kt 2nd
K Kt 3rd K B 5th and Q Kt 2nd	Kt at K Kt 2nd
	P's at K R 3rd
	K Kt 5th Q B's 5th
	Q Kt 6th and Q R's 5th

White to play and mate in four moves.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE MARQUIS OF THOMOND, K.P.

His Lordship, who died at Taplow House, Maidenhead, on the 21st inst., was eldest son of the late Edward O'Brien, Esq., and succeeded to the Marquisate of Thomond at the decease of his uncle, the first Marquis, in 1808. The Barony of Tadcaster, a Peerage of the United Kingdom, conferring a seat in the House of Lords, his Lordship acquired by patent in 1826. The illustrious family from which the deceased nobleman deduced descent is one of the few native houses at present to be found in the Peerage of Ireland, and derives from the Royal line of Thomond, a race of Princes which sprang from the celebrated Hibernian Monarch, Brian Boiroime, who fell at the battle of Clontarf, in 1014. In the reign of Henry VIII., Murrough O'Brien, Prince of Thomond, surrendered his royalty to that Monarch, and was created in consequence Earl of Thomond, in 1543. From the eldest son of this renowned chieftain descends the House of Thomond, and from his second son, the O'Briens of Dromoland, now represented by Sir Lucius O'Brien, Bart., who will succeed to the Barony of Inchiquin at the decease of the present Marquis of Thomond. Sir Lucius is elder brother of Mr. Smith O'Brien, M.P. The Peer whose death we announce married, 16th September, 1799, Elizabeth, only daughter and heir of Thomas Trotter, Esq., of Duleck, and has left four daughters—Susan Maria, wife of the Hon. Capt. George F. Hotham, R.N.; Sarah, married to Major William Stanhope Taylor; Mary, wife of Richard Viscount Berehaven; and Elizabeth, married to George S. Buck, Esq., of Hartland Abbey, Devon.

THE EARL OF STRATHMORE.

Thomas Lyon Bowes, eleventh Earl of Strathmore, died at Holyrood Palace, Edinburgh, on the 22nd inst. His Lordship was youngest son of John, ninth Earl, by Eleanor, his wife, the only daughter and heiress of George Bowes, Esq., of Streatham Castle, and Gibside, county of Durham. This lady, the wealthiest heiress of her time, married for her second husband, the notorious Andrew Robinson Stoney-Bowes, and exhibited, in her melancholy fate, a striking instance of the insufficiency of rank and riches to insure happiness. An interesting narrative of her ladyship's chequered life, is given in the recently-published "Memoirs of Lord Stowell and Eldon, by William Edward Surtees, Esq." The great estates which Lady Strathmore inherited, devolved on her eldest son, John, tenth Earl, and were by that nobleman devised to his illegitimate son, the present Member for Durham.

The Earl, whose decease we record, was born 3rd May, 1773, and had been thrice married. His first wife was Mary Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of George Carpenter, Esq., of Redbourn, Herts, and by her he had a daughter, Mary Isabella, married in 1824 to J. Walpole Willis, Esq., from whom she was divorced in 1833; and one son, George, Lord Glamis, who died in 1834, leaving two surviving sons, Thomas-George, born in 1822, now Earl Strathmore, and Claude.

The late Peer's second wife, Eliza, daughter of the late Col. Northcote, left an only daughter, Sarah, married, first, to George Augustus Campbell, Esq., E.I.C.S., and, secondly, to Major Charles Philip Ainslie; and his third wife, Lady Campbell, widow of Sir Alexander Campbell, of Ardkinglas, still survives, without issue by his Lordship.

The greatness of the House of Strathmore dates from the marriage of Sir John Lyon, Great Chamberlain of Scotland, with the Lady Jane Stuart, youngest daughter of Robert II., King of Scotland. Much historic interest is associated with this distinguished family; and its splendid residence, Glamis Castle, is one of the finest specimens extant of feudal architecture.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE. Aug 21.

Trinity College.—The Rev. George Townsend Warner, M A., of this college, and incumbent of Trinity Church, Swansea, has been appointed Junior Master of the Upper School at Harrow.

St. John's College.—The Rev. John Taylor, B.A., formerly of this college, has been appointed Resident Mathematical Tutor and Chaplain of the College Hospital, Queen's College, Birmingham.

Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest.—His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge has appointed to-morrow morning (Sunday) for a sermon to be preached before him in Kew Church, by the Lord Bishop of Jamaica, in aid of the funds of the Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest.

Statistics of Pauper Lunatics.—From a Parliamentary document just printed, it seems that, in January last, there were as many as 16,310 lunatics and idiots chargeable in England, and 1205 in Wales, making, with an estimate of 372 for places not in union with parishes, 17,887, of which number 9712 were lunatics, and 8175 idiots.

Monument to Miss Linwood at Leicester.—A monument to Miss Linwood has been placed in the Church of Saint Margaret, at Leicester. It was executed in marble, by Mr. S. Hall, and bears an inscription referring to her works with the needle, as "monuments of art and perseverance."

THE WAR IN CIRCASSIA.

By the aid of a Russian artist, we are enabled to present our readers with the annexed portrait of Shamil, or Schamil, the heroic leader of the Circassians in their contests with the Russians in the Caucasus; to which the best pendent will be the following particulars of some recent military operations of the Circassian troops, communicated to the Morning Chronicle by a Correspondent on the Rhine, whose informant is an officer just returned from the Russian frontier.

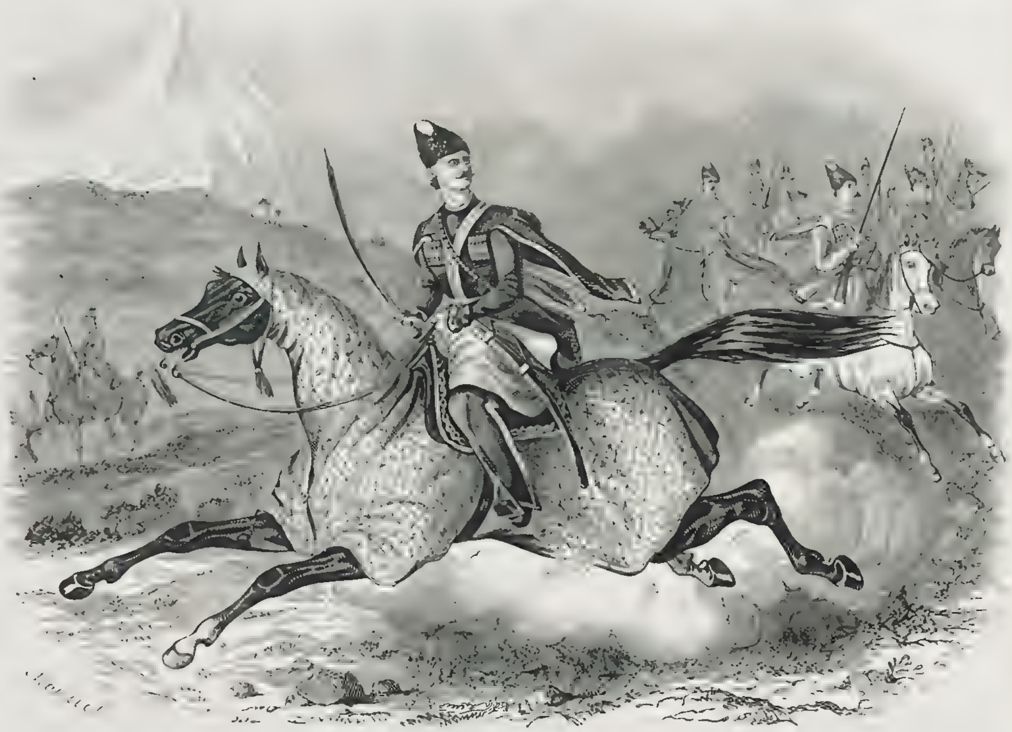
After the retreat of the Russians last year from Itchkeri, Shamil removed the seat of his government from Dargo to Vedea, on a small stream called [illegible]-Kulse, about twelve miles further westward. Shamil's authority throughout the mountains was much strengthened by the events of last year's campaign, so disastrous to the Russian arms. He established a more regular system of administration, and during the winter exercised his power in various acts of hostility against the Russian frontier and dependencies. At an early period he made an inroad across the Sulak into Taski; he then crossed over the Corras into Ahuska and Karamalki, and at one time he threatened to break into the province of Kahetle. But he has lately accomplished an enterprise more daring than any which he ever before attempted.

In the early part of April, Lieutenant-General Freytag, who commands on the left flank of the Russian line of the Caucasus, receiving notice that Shamil was assembling a large force at Shali, in Great Tchetchnaya, six miles distant from Tchakkeri, messengers were instantly sent to every part of the Russian line; and four battalions were detached by Lieutenant-General Harford, from Mosdak, as a reinforcement to Grosnaya. On the evening of the 25th April, Shamil moved from Shali, and crossing the Russian line of communication between Grosnaya and Tchakkeri, he came on the 27th upon the river Soudja, between the Russian forts Karak Kitcha and Zananyourt. The force he had with him is stated to have consisted of from 6,000 to 8,000 infantry, 12,000 cavalry, and six guns. After crossing the river, he reached, on the 29th, Constantinofsky, the chief place of the Little Kabarda, whence he rapidly advanced to the river Tcherek. He crossed that river at a point opposite to the Stanitza of Urich, where 2,000 Russians, under Colonel Sitkovick, were posted. This small body maintained their ground with great bravery, but were at last overwhelmed by the superior number of their assailants.

Shamil having by this movement placed himself on the [illegible], moved along that road to [illegible] the great Kabarda, as far as the T[illegible] of which stream and at the foot of the central chain of the Caucasus, he [illegible] himself.

In the meanwhile, his cavalry scoured the country, and the [illegible] rose and joined him in considerable numbers; and, having collected the [illegible] and flocks, hastened away from the country, and under escort of his detachments many of them succeeded in reaching the strong country of Tchetchnaya. On the 8th of May, Shamil broke up his encampment on the Tcherek, and retired rapidly within his own territory, which he reached without any loss, and with little opposition. He was, indeed, met at the confluence of the Tcherek and Zeneisa by three Russian battalions under Colonel Baron Miller Zacomelsky, but they were compelled to give way before his superior force. The Russian troops were not idle during all these operations, but they were out-manœuvred by the rapidity of Shamil's movements.

THE WAR IN CIRCASSIA.



SHAMIL, THE CIRCASSIAN CHIEF.

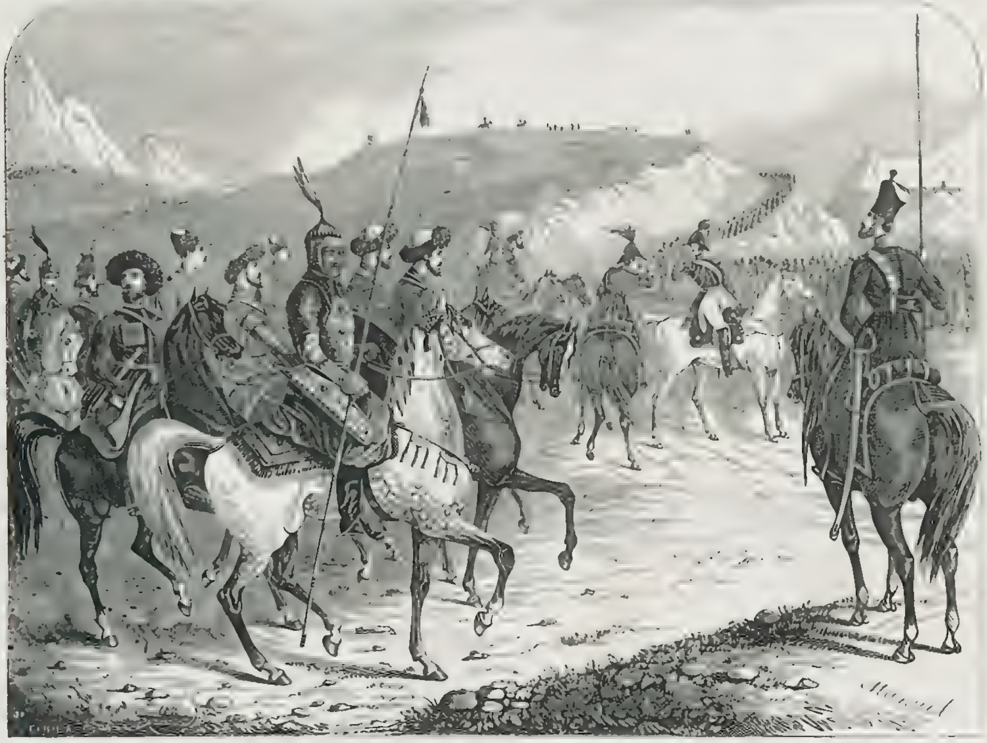
In the Times, of the 8th instant an extract from a letter, dated Tiflis, 20th June, states that Shamil, whose preparations for a descent upon the Kabardias was reported to, but discredited by, the Russian General Freytag, appealed to the tribes, to "their love of arms, of danger, of pillage, and of booty," and was eminently successful. Twenty thousand of those reckless mountaineers placed themselves under his command, and rushing from their fastnesses on the Cossack settlements, made themselves masters of from sixteen to twenty of them; seized and carried off the property, and the inhabitants they enclosed; but we regret to say, desirous to hasten their flight and secure their plunder, they put the greater portion of their unhappy prisoners to death. The booty was immense.

Accompanying the Portrait of Shamil, and from the same authentic source, is a spirited scene of the assembling of the Russian troops previous to entering the Caucasus.



ASSEMBLING OF RUSSIAN TROOPS FOR THE CAMPAIGN OF THE CAUCASUS.

THE POTATO MURRAIN.

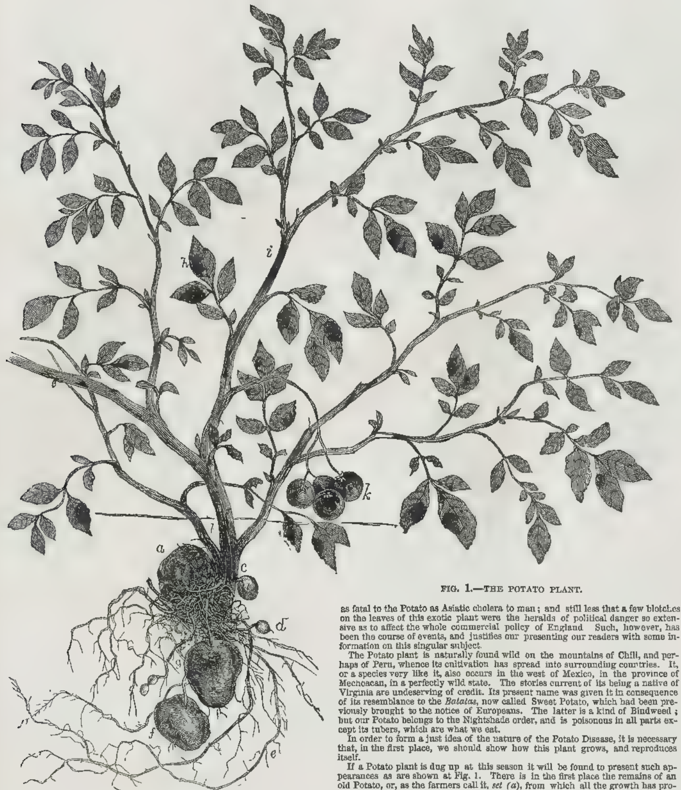


FIG. 1.—THE POTATO PLANT.

Never was witnessed a more important result, springing from a seemingly insignificant beginning, than has been presented by the disease now ravaging the Potato-fields of all quarters of the earth. No one could have imagined that a rot which appeared in this crop in the island of St. Helena, in the year 1840, was the "small speck on the horizon" which would become the forerunner of a calamity as fatal to the Potato as Asiatic cholera to man; and still less that a few blotches on the leaves of this exotic plant were the heralds of political danger so extensive as to affect the whole commercial policy of England Such, however, has been the course of events, and justifies our presenting our readers with some information on this singular subject.

The Potato plant is naturally found wild on the mountains of Chili, and perhaps of Peru, whence its cultivation has spread into surrounding countries. It, or a species very like it, also occurs in the west of Mexico, in the province of Mechoacan, in a perfectly wild state. The stories current of its being a native of Virginia are undeserving of credit. Its present name was given it in consequence of its resemblance to the Batatas, now called Sweet Potato, which had been previously brought to the notice of Europeans. The latter is a kind of Bindweed; but our Potato belongs to the Nightshade order, and is poisonous in all parts except its tubers, which are what we eat.

In order to form a just idea of the nature of the Potato Disease, it is necessary that, in the first place, we should show how this plant grows, and reproduces itself.

If a Potato plant is dug up at this season it will be found to present such appearances as are shown at Fig. 1. There is in the first place the remains of an old Potato, or, as the farmers call it, set (a), from which all the growth has proceeded. Immediately rising from that is the main stem, or haulm, and above the ground level are the leaves and branches. Among the former, will be found a number of green berries, about as large as musket balls: they are the potato-apples or plums (k) and are filled with seeds which nature provides to multiply the Potato. If the plant produced nothing more than has now been mentioned, it would be of no use to mankind, for all these parts are more or less poisonous. But it also pushes forth under-ground runners, which are a kind of branch, the ends of which swell out into great round or oblong bodies, which are filled with starch, and have the name of tubers. These (d and f), which are vulgarly called roots, are very different from the real roots (e), which are little threads, resembling hairs, and unable to swell out or form much starch in their inside. Every Potato plant is capable of producing many such tubers, and every tuber will bear to be cut into many pieces, each of which will become a new plant; and thus the quantity of produce which an acre of land will furnish, and the extent to which the crop may be easily propagated, are quite enormous. It is said that as much as forty thousand pounds weight of Potatoes has been obtained from an English acre of land; this would supply a man with ten pounds of food a day for nearly eleven years, if he could keep it; and hence has arisen the universal desire to cultivate the plant in all countries into which it has been introduced.

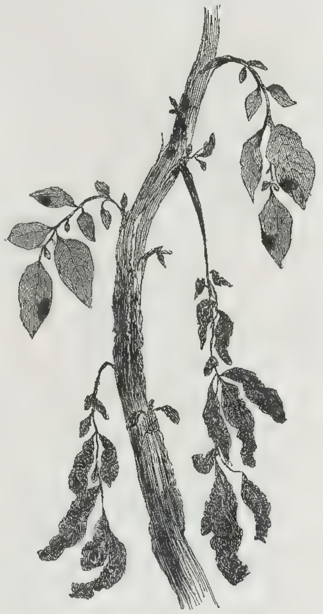

FIG. 5.—DISEASED STEM, NATURAL SIZE.

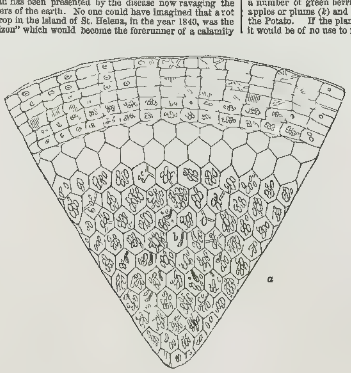

FIG. 2.—MAGNIFED VIEW OF A SLICE OF A RIPE POTATO.

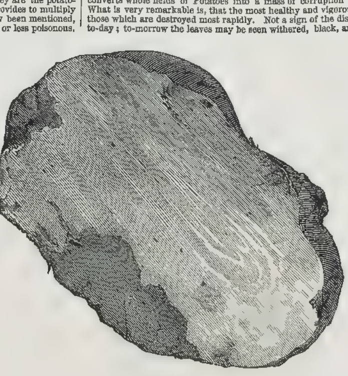

FIG. 6.—SECTION OF A POTATO, SHOWING THE DISEASE IN PROGRESS.

It now, however, seems as if Providence had determined to arrest its further increase, for it has been lately attacked by a new disease, the nature of which is unknown, which speedily destroys the hopes of the farmer, and sometimes even converts whole fields of Potatoes into a mass of corruption within a few hours. What is very remarkable is, that the most healthy and vigorous Potato-fields are those which are destroyed most rapidly. Not a sign of the disease may be visible to-day; to-morrow the leaves may be seen withered, black, and half putrid; and the day after they are followed by the destruction of the stem. Generally, however, the evil is less rapid in its strides.

It first appeared in Europe in the east of Germany, about Midsummer, 1845; in a few weeks it spread over all the western parts of the Continent, extending even to the coast of Portugal, missing, however, the north-west of Spain, and not advancing so far as the Mediterranean. England was visited in the middle of August, and or some time it was hoped that our cold northern climate would resist it; by degrees, however, it made progress, and was finally stopped only by the Highlands. In the meanwhile it reached Ireland, where, in the month of October, it had already done so much mischief that the British Government thought it necessary to send Commissioners to inquire into the facts, and to consider what could be done to arrest the progress of this murrain; for it is believed that 4,000,000 of Irish peasants feed almost exclusively upon Potatoes, and the destruction of any considerable quantity of their only food could not be regarded otherwise than as a formidable national calamity. By the beginning of November half the crop was estimated to have been destroyed, or rendered unfit for human food. On the Continent, the loss had been even more severe; so that, in many places, the export of food was prohibited; the Dutch and Belgian Governments were so much alarmed that they directed agents to purchase rice in London, and their operations were such as to double the price of that kind of grain in a single week

FIG. 3.—BLOTCHES ON A POTATO LEAF.—a, UPPER SIDE; b, UNDER SIDE.

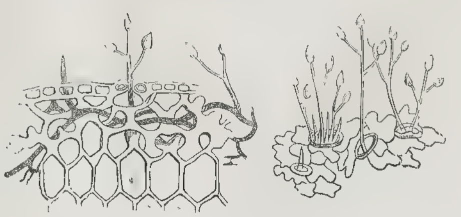

FIG. 4.—THE BOTRYTIS INFESTANS, VERY HIGHLY MAGNIFIED

What the amount of loss may really have been, it seems impossible to ascertain with accuracy or even probability. It has been estimated at £18,000,000 for the United Kingdom; Professor Lindley has computed it to have been £3,500,000 for Ireland alone.

Whatever the past fact may have been, it is certain that the injury sustained this year is very much more considerable, perhaps twice as great, for many new districts are attacked, no old ones are spared, and the destruction is in all cases more extensive.

The real cause of this sudden visitation is unknown. Some have ascribed it to the ungenial season of 1845, and that has been the prevalent idea; others have fancied that the life of the Potato is wearing out; many believe in electrical agency, and talk of blue lights seen at night playing over the doomed Potato grounds; insects, worms, parasitical fungi, night frosts, vegetable cholera, all have in turn had their advocates; and, as usually happens, those who have the smallest knowledge of the facts conceive themselves most capable of explaining the cause.

It is sufficient to say that none of the Scientific Commissions which have been issued by European Governments have ventured to pronounce any opinion on the subject; and the Editor of the Gardeners' Chronicle, in which the whole subject has, from the first outbreak, been most carefully discussed, still declares that the disease is beyond the reach of explanation.

But, although the cause is unknown, the symptoms have become too familiar. In all cases, the leaves become black and soft, in roundish patches; and, quickly after, the tubers change here and there to a brown substance which resembles a decayed apple, and eats into their centre; in some instances, especially in warm, damp places, this is followed by a putrid decomposition, accompanied by an indescribably offensive smell; in others, it is not more disagreeable than a rotten apple. It is very remarkable that this decay injures the starch in no considerable degree: so that, by mere grinding and washing, it may be extracted from the most decayed Potatoes, cleaned, and used for food. This led a noble Lord in the House of Commons, more remarkable for zeal than intelligence, to assert that a rotten Potato had been changed into starch!

It is not, however, in the leaf that this curious disease really begins. Weeks before there is any sign above ground, the foundation of the mischief is laid, by the appearance of a brown blotch on the young stem, just above the old set. This is shown at Fig. 1 (c), and invariably precedes every other symptom, as was first pointed out by Professor Lindley. The writer of this has examined hundreds of cases, without in any instance finding an exception to the rule. It seems as if the old tuber contained the germ of some affection, or some undiscoverable deleterious matter, which acted upon the young stem just after it began to push, and that this was by degrees communicated through the subtle tubes of the stem, and, by degrees, corrupted the juices of the leaves

Be this as it may, the blotches of the leaves are instantly assailed by countless myriads of a minute parasitical plant, called Botrytis infestans, similar to those which mildew corn and other crops, which seems to be as constant a follower of the Potato disease as the Jackal of the Lion. A very full account of this plant has been given by the Rev. Mr Berkeley, of whose drawings in the Horticultural Society's Journal we have availed ourselves in the accompanying Illustrations. When the blotches are first examined nothing perhaps will be seen; but if their underside is steadily looked at for a minute, especially when held a little obliquely, by degrees the eye will observe a minute grey mouldiness on the edges of the blotch, especially beyond them. The mouldiness is the parasite; it has a spawn like a mushroom, which it insinuates among the cells of which the leaf consists, and it finally emerges by the breathing pores of the plant. (See Fig. 4.) In order to gain a just idea of this curious vegetable, the reader must imagine himself to be looking through one of those solar microscopes which are used in public exhibition rooms, and magnify everything enormously He will then perceive a green surface, which looks like a fair meadow, upon which rises a forest of trees with branches like glass, and every one of them tipped with a hollow glittering globe containing powder, which escapes from time to time in a cloud (Fig. 4.) The meadow is the surface of the leaf, the fruit is the parasite, the globe is its seed-vessel, the powder its seeds; while the largest dimensions of this marvellous creation are smaller than the finest cobweb.

Some naturalists believe that this "parasite" causes the disease; all that we, however, can venture to say is, that it appears to be in some way or other connected with it. Acting upon that opinion, Professor Morren, of Liége, very early in 1845, recommended the stems and leaves to be pulled up and removed from the tainted fields; he thinking that if the parasite were removed, the tubers would not be injured by it. The practice has been to a small extent adopted in France and this country; and, in the opinion of good judges, with decided advantage; we fear, however, that more experience must be had before it will be safe to recommend it as a certain cure. Should it prove to be so, it will not necessarily follow that the disease is caused by the fungus; it may only show that the presence of a diseased stem is likely to cause the tubers also to be tainted.

That the calamity, whose nature has thus been explained, must be productive of very great distress, will be admitted on all hands. We, however, believe that it will be followed by greater advantages; for the plant, whose existence is thus threatened, is one of the most worthless of all known food: three-quarters of it are mere water, and the other quarter is hardly able, of itself, to sustain animal life. The very facility of producing it has been a curse to Ireland, which all thinking men will be anxious to see removed.

EXPLANATION OF THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Fig. 1. General view of the Potato Plant, its roots, leaves, tubers, and apples (or fruit); a, the old set or tuber; b, the first stem that is thrown up by a; c, the place where the disease first breaks out; d, the young tubers forming at the end of [illegible] ground branches, resembling roots; e, true roots; f, full grown tubers; g, the same, diseased; h, the disease, as it first appears on the leaves; i, the blotches found at a later period on the stem; k, the apple, or real fruit, containing the seeds: this is also diseased.

Fig. 2. A magnified view of a slice of a small wedge of a ripe Potato, as seen under the microscope. It resembles honeycomb, the cells of which contain the starch, in the form of oval grains at a; at b, are seen little seedlings of the Potato Botrytis, just beginning to grow.

Fig. 3. The blotches on the Potato leaf, of their natural size. a shows the upper side, on which there is no mouldiness; b presents the under side, with white spots, which indicates the presence of the mould.

Fig. 4. The Botrytis infestans, very highly magnified, together with a bit of a leaf, out of which it is growing Among the cells of the latter its spawn will be seen branching in various directions

Fig. 5. A diseased stem, natural size, with the lower leaves dead, and the upper attacked by the disease. Here the blotches on the stem are running into the state of gangrene.

Fig. 6. The section of a Potato, natural size, showing the disease in progress.

THE POTATO CROP, 1846.

Alas! the foul and fatal blight,
  Infecting Raleigh's grateful root,
Blasting the fields of verdure bright,
  That waved o'er Erin's favourite fruit.
The peasant's cherished hope is gone,
  His little garden's pride is o'er,
Famine and Plague now scowl upon
  Hibernia's fair and fertile shore.

Yet, well the statesman's eye foresaw
  The monster evil; well his heart
Felt how unjust must be the law,
  That starves the cot, and chains the mart.
Boldly the patriot-path he trod,
  Through obloquy, reproach, and [illegible]
His sole reward the smile of God,
  And blessings of the yet unborn.

And what can equal that reward?
  N[illegible] all the gold-mines of Peru?
When black and blighted lies the sward,
  Aid hastens o'er the billows blue;
Employment gives the peasant bread,
  Gives hope and virtue. Therefore, bless'd
And honoured be the heart and head
  Which cheer the humble and oppress'd.

Th' example fructifies, and men
  Devote them to their country's good;
Improvement bids the hill and glen
  Contribute to the nation's food.
The swamp is drained—the dismal fen
  Shall smile to heaven with golden grain
Outrage is fetter'd in his den,
  And Justice vindicates her reign

Hence out of evil good may spring,
  Social and physical. The land
Lacks but the care of man to bring Forth happiness. "The helping hand"
Alone is needed. Property
  Has duties which will be fulfill'd;
And the fair Island yet shall be
  Such as the voice of nature will'd.

And oh! not only there, but here,
  Even in a land with riches rife,
Want shivers o'er the hearthstone drear.
  And chills the blood of human life.
This too shall end; the struggling poor
  Possess an humbler brother's claim;
Eliza's law may yet restore
  Old England's charitable fame.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

Prince Albert's Birthday.—Wednesday being the anniversary of Prince [illegible]'s natal day, on which his Royal Highness completed his twenty-seventh [illegible] it was observed with the usual demonstrations of loyalty. At one o'clock, the [illegible] and Tower guns were fired; and, in the evening, the Royal tradesmen illuminated their [illegible]

Lord John Russell.—[illegible] John Ru[illegible]l has taken a residence for the season, near Rickmansworth, Hertfordshire, and it is now being prepared for the [illegible] of his Lordship and [illegible].

Public Dinners at Windsor to Celebrate Prince Albert's Birthday.—At the Public Dinner, which took place on Thursday evening, at the Town Hall, in honour of the birthday of the Prince Consort, there were upwards of 70 gentlemen present, including Colonel Reid and Ralph Neville, Esq. (the Members for the [illegible]), the Dean of Windsor, the Rev. Mr. Gould, several of the municipal [illegible]ities, and about twenty from London, the friends of many of the Royal [illegible]n in the town. The proceedings, which had co[illegible] after [illegible], passed off [illegible] [illegible]ublic dinner at the R[illegible], to celebrate the [illegible]ent, was attended by nea[illegible] ninety of th[illegible] [illegible]itants, and t[illegible]esmen connected with the Court [illegible] [illegible]persed with music and singing, [illegible] and the numerous [illegible] until past midnight. In the course of the evening, there was a grand pyrotechnic display in the gardens of the Hotel

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, Aug. 30.—12th Sunday after Trinity
Monday, 31.—Length of Day, 13h. 36m.
Tuesday, Sept. 1.—Partridge Shooting begins. St. Giles.
Wednesday, 2.—Great Fire of London, 1666
Thursday, 3.—Oliver Cromwell died, 1658.—Riots at Oxford, 1830.
Friday, 4.—Riots at Manchester, 1830.
Saturday, 5.—Mars rises at 5h. 26m. a.m., and sets at 6h. 48m. p.m.

High Water at London-bridge for the Week ending September 5.

Monday.		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday.
M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A
h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m
7 52	8 30	9 13	9 56	10 37	11 20	[illegible] 54	0 0	0 25	0 54	1 21	1 43

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"W. H. F.," Durham.—Tomlinson's "Student's Manual of Natural Philosophy" details some of the principal Instruments, but its date is 1838. One of the Useful Knowledge Society's Tracts, also, describes the Instruments. Dr. Arnott has not yet published the Second Part of the Second Volume of his "Elements of Physics."

"St. Bartholomew (two intersected equilateral triangles) is referred to Mr. Ballantine's "Treatise on Painted Glass." We perfectly appreciate our Correspondent's "good feeling."

"G. D.," Ramsgate.—The tenant must repair.

"A Constant Subscriber," Ramsgate. "The Handbook to Paris" is published by Strange, Paternoster-row.

"A Constant Subscriber," Bonchurch.—It is very common, after the commencement of the Gospel, for the people to say "Glory be to Thee, O Lord;" but this response has no Rubrical authority, though it is as old as St. Chrysostom, and was inserted in the First Book of King Edward. (Walker's Elementa Liturgica.)

"Our Belfast Correspondent" might recollect the national adage—

"He who gives all,
Gives none at all."

A near translation of Eutropius, no very great writer—

"Ut qui plurimum, minimumque tradunt."

Context is generally the best interpreter.

"Αγωγευς" must very well know that, in the Greek language, several verbs dressed in a neutral or passive garb bear universally an active signification. There is only one Aorist, the historical tense; and, whatever Schrevelius or other Lexicographers may say to the contrary, χαυθησωμαι is, on the face of it, very bad Greek.

"A Constant Reader" is thanked for the hint; but the Screw Pile named is not a novelty in Engineering.

"A. A. L.," Kennington.—Declined.

"R.," Metesford.—"Knight's Journey-Book of Derbyshire"; or, a more copious work, "The Gem of the Peak"

"L. B.," Pall Mall, is thanked for the Portrait.

"A Beginner" will find "Bloxam's Principles of Gothic Ecclesiastical Architecture" to be an excellent work

"A Weekly Contributor" is thanked.

"H.," Newchurch, is thanked; but, we have already engraved the Emperor of Russia's Yacht.

"A Young Lady." We fear that we cannot entertain the proposition.

"Lines on the Dying Soldier."—We have not room.

"Nihil," Jersey, will, perhaps, repeat the question.

"X. Y. Z.," St. Leonard's, may claim the entire return of the Railway Deposits, if it can be proved that any names have been fraudulently used.

"G. B. J."—In a former Number of our Journal, we gave full particulars of the "Cockade." Custom, we believe, confines its usage to the Servants of those holding either a Military or Naval commission.

"J. M."—We do not know where to direct our Correspondent to apply for the Baptismal Register of Mr. Plumer Ward. His father, John Ward, Esq., having resided almost all his life in Spain, and not having settled in England before 1782, it is probable that the distinguished author of "Tremaine" was by birth a Spaniard. A letter directed to "H. G. Ward, Esq., M.P., Admiralty, London," would, no doubt, obtain the desired information.

"Querist."—"J. H.," Aberystwyth.—"D. B.," Cookstown.—We will, next week, give the desired Answers.

"A Gentleman in Black."—It is not lawful to marry a deceased wife's sister: and, consequently, all children born from such a union would be illegitimate, and could not inherit property

"R. Z."—The restoration of estates does not follow the restoration of attainted titles. The Dukedom of Wharton, having become extinct by the death without issue of the celebrated and eccentric Peer of the reign of George the First, could not be restored. The Barony of Wharton, however, is still existant, and might be conferred by the Crown on any one of the coheirs, who are the Marquis of Cholmondeley, Lord Willoughby de Eresby, Charles Kemeys Tynte, Esq., of Halswell, in the county of Somerset, and Mr. Baillie Cochrane, the late M.P. for Weymouth.

"J. D.," Toulouse.—The letter and contents have been forwarded to your News-Agent at Birmingham, with whom you had better communicate. The Numbers required will cost 17s.: they cannot be sent by post.

"G. W. B.," London Wall.—Mr. Macready first appeared in London, as Orestes, in "The Distressed Mother," in the year 1816.

"Θεοφιλος."—Monumental Brass Rubbers may be had of Mr. Bell, next St. Dunstan's Church, Fleet-street

"A Constant Subscriber," Bonchurch.—A black hood, lined with blue, worn by an Oxford man, denotes him to be B C. L.

"Kral." will, perhaps, send us a Sketch of the Festival. We have already engraved Buckingham Palace.

"J. D."—By the Act 7 Geo. IV., c. 46, each Partner in a Joint Stock Bank is individually liable for the entire debts and engagements of the Company.

"H. F. S."—A Bill must be read three times in both Houses of Parliament before it passes into a law.

"Fitzgrog." Individuals found employed in unentered excise manufactories are severally liable to a penalty of £30 for the first offence.

"F. W.," Watford, has not stated the nature of the property.

"A Bristol Subscriber" will require a passport, to be obtained, gratis, by applying at the Belgian Legation. 9A, Weymouth-street, Portland-place; and the passport will be delivered on the following day. Several cheap Guides and Maps have been published: or, see "Monteith's Foreign Railways."

"An Old Subscriber."—A letter for Mr. Sheridan Knowles will, probably, reach him, if it be addressed to the Dramatic Authors' Society, 1, Trinity-place, Charing-cross; or, to care of Mr. Moxon, Dover-street, Piccadilly.

"A Constant Reader," Tredegar.—R. S. V. P. denote Reponder s'il vous plait ("Answer, if you please.")

"A Subscriber."—See the valuable paper on the Potato Murrian, in our present Number.

"M. B." is thanked; but we have not room.

"J. W."—A varnish to fix Chalk or Pencil Drawings, may be made of Mastic, and dissolved in alcohol, in the proportion of 3 oz. of the gum to one pint of spirit.

"Bathus"—We cannot assist our Correspondent.

"G. C. H.," Lisbon, is thanked.

"Peregrine."—The best account of Cotehele, the ancient seat of the Earl of Mount Edgecumbe, visited by her Majesty during her recent Cruise, is by Mr. N. Condy: it is a large folio, and very complete in its details and illustrations: the publishers in London are Day and Haghe.

"J. D. F.," Wallingford.—The words "legs," "arms," &c., in certain Almanacs, are pretended to denote the moon's influence upon those parts of the human body It is now an exploded folly.

"Cæsaromagnus."—A small level may be bought for a few shillings, of an Optician.

"W. P.," Falmouth.—Does our Correspondent refer to Floorcloth?

"O.," Liverpool.—We have received the information as to Military Schools in France, which shall be sent to our Correspondent by post, on our receiving his full address.

"T. J. P. M." wishes to ascertain the colours, &c. of the Livery of the Royal Family of France.

"C. D. S."—Apply to the Toxopholite Society, Inner Circle, Regent's Park.

"G. M. P.," Exeter.—We cannot speak as to the private Tontine in question by way of investment.

"W. J. D. R." is thanked for the account of her Majesty's Visit to Guernsey.

Reviews of several New Books are in type, but are unavoidably deferred.

Limerick Agricultural Show. We regret that the press of other subjects prevented our engraving the Sketches of the above Event, prepared for our Journal by Mr. Mahony, of Cork.

Our Subscribers and the Public are apprised that, from this date, the Numbers comprised in Vols. 1, 2, and 3 of the Illustrated London News (Nos. 1 to 87, inclusive), cannot be sold separately, but only in Volumes. This alteration, rendered imperative by the constant demand for back Numbers, will, we trust, suggest to our Subscribers the necessity of keeping their Sets of our Journal perfect, in order to insure its entirety as an unique Illustrated History of Our Own Times.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 29, 1846

There is such a thing as political prudery; and we have lately had a plentiful exhibition of it. The leader of the Conservative malcontents, Lord George Bentinck, has made an onslaught upon the late Ministry on something more tangible than principles; he accuses them of corruption, abuse of their patronage, and, in one case, of making an absolute illegal appointment. Of all charges that are brought against official men, this is the most frequently made; the history of party is full of them; from the time of Elizabeth downwards, we can trace the allegation continually recurring. If we look only at one side in these matters, we shall be struck with the remarkable and melancholy pertinacity with which Englishmen have always elevated the very worst of their fellow citizens to the posts of trust and power. Always striving to secure the best men to rule us, some miserable fatality thrusts the very worst upon us; and the business of an Opposition is to prove that they are so, it being an unspeakable comfort to the nation to have it certified that it is under the domination of knaves, and that the only honest men are precisely those who are debarred from exhibiting their virtue in any other way than that of exposing the vices of others. What a roll of Ministers can we recall, who have been handed down to us as base, wicked, corrupt, incapable! Throughout the whole "Georgian era," and the less exclusive Reform period that followed it, we cannot remember one Ministerial exception. It is a gloomy prospect for the upright part of the world, that they are the only portion of mankind from whom rulers are never chosen. If, by some rare chance, one just person enters the gates of office, the enervating miasma of the place surrounds him; he lapses from his purer state, and becomes little better than one of the wicked. Therefore, the world is hopelessly given over to the sway of baseness and political profligacy.

This is one side of the question; but there is also another which it would be well to consider. In the first place, we doubt this perpetual allegation of the meanness and dishonesty of Statesmen. The definitions of political corruption are very vague; we do not admit that the distribution of patronage among supporters or dependents can be called so; the world is governed by human agents, not etherial essences, above the reach of earthly motives; the business of a kingdom must be conducted by fixed officers, and the selection of them must be placed somewhere. Where shall that power be lodged? In Russia, the Czar makes and unmakes when and how he pleases; the Field-Marshal of to-day, is a nameless convict to-morrow; there is no check to, no appeal from, the Imperial will; that is one clear, simple, and well-defined system; but no one, we apprehend, would desire to see it in practice here; its effects, too, are most mischievous; the whole official system of Russia, legal, fiscal, and military, from the highest officer to the lowest drudge, is one mass of corruption;—it is the very empire of peculation and corruption.

In States a shade more free, the disposing power is in the hands of Ministers, who are removable by the Sovereign only: they use that power as extensively as other men would in their position; and we believe the administrative departments of Austria and Prussia are as well filled as those of any other country, with respect to individual ability, though the system they carry out is unpopular. In England, the Constitution places the control in the hands of the people; they make and unmake the Ministries, by whom all officials are appointed. That each party should distribute its patronage chiefly among its own supporters, is an inevitable consequence; but opinion is by no means the sole or only test. Tories have made Whig appointments; Whigs have given office to Conservatives. Before corruption can be alleged against a Minister in the exercise of this power, it must be proved that he, for a direct personal advantage, sets in a place of trust a man unfit, or incapable, to discharge its duties. The selection of dependents and supporters for such posts, is a recognised and established principle; and when we remember that no party has for longer periods acted upon it more extensively than that represented by Lord George Bentinck, his indignation at what is so usual, appears overstrained and affected,—it is "political prudery:" we venture to say, were he in office to-morrow, he would do exactly the same as the men he denounces.

What personal benefit does Lord Lyndhurst derive from giving his Secretary a Judgeship in a Bankruptcy Court? A very average amount of ability is sufficient for the place, and the Secretary of a Chancellor is as likely to be qualified for it as any one else. Till the whole system of Church patronage is changed, there will always be such negotiations and requests as those which preceded the presentation of the living of Nocton. What may be bought in the market for money without scandal, may be given in friendship with no improper motive: in either case, the qualities of the pastor or the wish of the flock are secondary considerations; but that springs from the system, which Lord Lyndhurst did not make, and which Lord George Bentinck himself would not alter. Throughout the whole of these transactions, we cannot trace, on the part of the late Ministry, anything that deserves the name of dishonesty or corruption. The vacant places are filled by fitting men who are connected with the late Government; a month later they would have fallen to equally able persons connected with the present Government: that is all the distinction we can see in the matter.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

COURT-MARTIAL ON THE HON. CAPTAIN GORDON.

A Court-Martial was held on Wednesday, on board her Majesty's ship Victory, at Portsmouth, for the trial of Captain the Hon. John Gordon, of her Majesty's ship America, on charges instituted by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, for leaving the South American station in that ship without permission, and contrary to the orders of the Commander-in-Chief, Rear-Admiral Sir G. Seymour, and also with bringing home a quantity of specie, which was intended, if of small amount, to have been shipped for England in the Salamander steamer; and, if of large amount, in her Majesty's ship Daphne.

The Court was composed of Admiral Sir Charles Ogle, Bart., Commander-in-Chief of her Majesty's ships and vessels at Portsmouth, President; Rear-Admiral Hyde Parker, C.B.; Captain John Pasco, her Majesty's ship Victory; Captain H. D. Chads, C. B., her Majesty's ship Excellent; Captain Sir H. E. Home, Bart., and C.B., her Majesty's ship North Star, Captain John Robb, her Majesty's steam-ship Gladiator.

Mr. G. L. Greetham was Judge Advocate on the occasion.

Captain Gordon was assisted in his defence by Mr. Hoskins, solicitor.

Evidence having been adduced in support of the charges,

Mr. Hoskins read a very good address on the part of Captain Gordon, by which he endeavoured to satisfy the Court that pecuniary motives did not induce Captain Gordon to take charge of the treasure, for he had since directed his agents to pay the freight money over to Captain Onslow, of the Daphne, or Commander Hammond, of the Salamander, or any other officer who might be entitled to it by bringing it to England, had not the America done so.

Captain Gordon produced a number of letters from consuls and merchants at the various ports, representing the state of affairs between the Mexicans and the Brazilian Government, the large sums of money to be sent, the risk of its safety, and the great insurance which would be exacted if it went in a small vessel.

The address concluded by asking for an acquittal of Captain Gordon of blame on the occasion, and to impute his conduct to an error in judgment.

The Court was cleared several times while the members deliberated; and, on the public being readmitted, the Deputy Judge Advocate read the sentence, which stated that the Court were of opinion the charges of neglect of duty and disobedience of orders by Captain the Honourable John Gordon, of her Majesty's ship America, had been fully proved, and sentenced him to be severely reprimanded, and he was thereupon reprimanded accordingly. The President then declared the Court to be dissolved, and all persons soon left the Victory. The circumstances attending this Court-Martial having occasioned considerable interest among naval men, the Victory was crowded with ladies and gentlemen anxious to witness the trial, which occupied five hours. Captain Gordon is the brother of the Earl of Aberdeen.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

This day having been fixed upon for the prorogation of Parliament, the Lords Commissioners took their seats at three o'clock, when Sir Augustus Clifford, the Usher of the Black Rod, summoned the House of Commons to hear the Royal Assent given to various bills recently passed

The Commissioners were, the Lord Chancellor, the Marquis of Lansdowne, Earl Spencer, the Earl of Minto, and Lord Campbell.

The Lord Chancellor then read her Majesty's most gracious Speech, which will be found in another column.

At the conclusion of the Speech the Commission for the Prorogation was read, and the Lord Chancellor, in the terms of the Commission, then declared Parliament to be Prorogued until Wednesday, the 4th day of November next.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

The Speaker took the chair at three o'clock

New Writ. A new writ was ordered for Derby, in the room of Mr. Strutt, appointed one of the Commissioners of the Railway Board.

In answer to a question by Mr P. Borthwick, Lord J. Russell said he could not at present state what course the Government would adopt with respect to the report of the Committee on the Andover Union; but he considered it would be necessary to institute some general measure of inquiry respecting the Poor-laws; and, if a motion for a Committee on that subject were brought forward next Session, he could promise that it would not be opposed by the Government.

At three o'clock Sir A Clifford, Usher of the Black Rod, appeared at the table, and summoned the House to the House of Lords to hear the Royal Speech read on the prorogation of Parliament. The Speaker and the members present immediately left the house. On their return, the Speaker read her Majesty's most gracious Speech, the members standing round the table, after which the House immediately adjourned, and the session closed.

Return of her Majesty the Queen Dowager. Yesterday (Friday) forenoon her Majesty the Queen Dowager arrived in town from the Continent, in company with the Princess William of Prussia, who, it is understood, will be the guest of her Majesty during her sojourn in this country. The Royal party embarked at Rotterdam on Thursday evening, at seven o'clock, in the Black Eagle steamer, commanded by Mr. Cook, R N, and arrived at Woolwich at half-past eleven o'clock yesterday forenoon, after a pleasant voyage. Her Majesty and the Princess were received by Sir Thomas Downman, commandant of the garrison, and by a host of naval and military officers. The Earl Home, and the Earl of Denbigh, of her Majesty's household, were in attendance, as was the Chevalier Bunsen, the Prussian Minister. On her Majesty's disembarking, the batteries fired a Royal salute, and the three bands in attendance, viz., those of the Royal Horse Artillery, Foot Artillery, and Royal Marines played several national airs. The passage leading from the stairs which the party ascended was covered with green cloth, and guarded on either side by detachments of the Marines and Foot Artillery, the Horse being stationed at the Yard gate. Her Majesty, the Princess and Viscountess Barrington, having entered one of the Royal carriages, proceeded direct to Marlborough House, the others following. The Viscountess Barrington was Lady in Waiting on the Queen Dowager. Several fashionably attired ladies witnessed the arrival of the Royal party. The Royal standard floated from the usual points, and the scene, in every respect a brilliant one, was much heightened in splendour by the propitious weather. The workmen, labourers, &c., employed in the establishment, received a half holiday in honour of the event, and the bells of the surrounding churches rang merry peals at intervals throughout the day.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

Portugal.—Accounts from Lisbon to the 20th inst. have reached town to-day. There seemed to be no further apprehension of an invasion on the part of Spain, the Spanish troops having retired from the frontier, in consequence of a strong remonstrance from the Portuguese Minister at Madrid. The monetary crisis had not abated.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE SANATORY CONDITION OF THE PEOPLE.

A meeting of the inhabitants of the city of Westminster and its vicinity was held on Monday evening, at the Literary, Scientific, and Mechanics' Institution, Westminster, for the purpose of devising means for improving the sanatory condition of the city, and more especially the localities and dwellings of the poor.

Mr. Charles Cochrane, President of the National Philanthropic Institution, was called to the chair

The Chairman said the amount of privation and human suffering which the poor were liable to in consequence of the absence of ventilation and adequate room, was frightful to contemplate. It could scarcely be conceived by those who were unaccustomed to certain localities, that so much human wretchedness could exist without obtruding itself more upon the attention of the public.

Several gentlemen subsequently addressed the meeting, and resolutions to the following effect were agreed upon:—That the thanks of the meeting be given to Lord Morpeth, for bringing a bill into Parliament to let Crown lands on reduced terms to encourage the building of commodious and healthy dwellings for the poor; that the present sanatory condition of the poorer localities of the city of Westminster was truly deplorable; that the dwellings of the poor were crowded and ill-ventilated; that the sewerage and cleansing of the streets were very defective, and the supply of water imperfect and scanty; that the parochial authorities of the city be requested to remedy the foregoing evils, at the expense of their respective parishes, particularly with regard to imperfect sewerage; that the streets be washed twice a week; that lime be given gratis to the poor to whitewash their rooms; that the streets, courts, and alleys be regularly cleansed, and supplied with an abundance of water.

The following resolution was also passed unanimously:—"That the cordial thanks of this meeting are eminently due to the press for the deep interest evinced in the improvement of the sanatory condition of the metropolis."

Births and Deaths in the Metropolis The number of deaths registered during the week ending on Saturday, August 22, was 902, of which 422 were those of females. This is above the average of the corresponding weeks during the last five summers by no more than four, whilst it is below the weekly average of deaths for the same number of years by 66. The births during the week were of exactly the same number of each sex, namely, 639, making an increase in the population of 1278

Baths and Wash-Houses for the Labouring Classes It appears from a return, that from the 3rd instant (the opening day of the establishment situate in George-street, Hampstead-road) up to the 22nd, upwards of 9613 persons have availed themselves of the facilities afforded; and, owing to the insufficient accommodation, between 200 and 300 persons have been daily refused, on application for baths.

Dangerous Condition of Westminster Bridge—On Tuesday afternoon considerable alarm was created amongst the workmen employed on Westminster Bridge, by the sudden cracking of the crown of one of the arches of that structure. Upon making an inspection, it was found that the roadway of the bridge, as well as a portion of the foot pavement, had opened very considerably, and the carriage way, a short distance towards the centre, had to all appearance sunk several inches. Intelligence was quickly forwarded to the proper authorities, and during the same night the following notice was issued. "Johnson, Mayor.—Notice is hereby given, that the navigation through the centre, and the two next arches of Westminster Bridge, towards the Surrey side of the river is stopped by order of the Lord Mayor. (Signed) Nathaniel Saunders, sub-conservator and water bailiff Mansion House, August 25, 1846." Whilst the men were at work on Wednesday afternoon, two large pieces of stone slipped from their level and again caused much confusion. The men, fearful that the arch was about to fall, got away, and it was some time before they were satisfied that their work was attended with safety. An extra number of workpeople was put on to the bridge during the afternoon, and, with the assistance of the regular hands, the wooden pallisading on the upper side of the bridge was removed, and large poles were fixed on either side so as to strengthen the part that had given way. The dangerous arches are now properly [illegible] protected.

Sinking of a Railway Embankment—Some curious phenomena have occurred on the works of the Ipswich and Bury Railway, at Stowmarket. For the last two months, immense quantities of dilutial clay have been deposited, without intermission, at one spot, about 200 yards on the westward side of the proposed station, and yet the works are no forwarder! It has all sunk into an immense bog, and the field on each side, after being gradually raised, has been divided by large and deep fissures, and a great portion of its peaty structure has turned over and fallen into the line where the first embankment was thrown up, but which has long since disappeared, leaving fourteen feet of water on its surface for a distance of about fifty yards! On the Bury side of the town, things have a similar unfavourable aspect. After great difficulty in finding a bottom, which was only done by driving in immense piles, a wooden bridge was erected, and the earth deposited for about 30 or 40 yards beyond it. The earth, however, has all sunk, and the bridge itself presents a triangular arch, from the sinking of the supporters at each end, while the sunken earth is covered with a deep pool of water, and the ground on each side has been raised, [illegible] and turned partly over into the [illegible]. How deep the bog may extend is, of course, a matter of conjecture, although, from the [illegible] quantity of clay, &c., which has been swallowed up, it must be [illegible]. Mr [illegible], the surgeon of Stowmarket, very narrowly escaped [illegible] his life last week, in going to see the extraordinary phenomenon above described, about [illegible] yards from the spot, but in the line which the embankment is to traverse. [illegible] slipped into a ditch which it appears contained no less than seventeen feet of mud. He was alone, and was only saved by catching hold of the grass on the [illegible], by which he held until two persons, who had previously observed him, and were surprised at his sudden disappearance, came up, and found him buried up to his neck in the mud, from which perilous position he was extricated without material injury. A pleasant prospect this for the contractor for the railway!

The following plan for saving potatoes affected by the disease was tried with success, last season, in the neighbourhood of Devizes:—"The haulm was removed from the ground before the disease had communicated to the tubers, not by cutting it, but by pulling it away from the roots; the land was then pressed down firmly, and afterwards earthed up in ridges, to preserve the potatoes from the rain, till they were dug at the usual period of the year. One half of the land was treated in this manner, and the crop was saved; on the remainder it was almost entirely lost."

NATIONAL SPORTS.

A contemporary, whose columns are consecrated to the consideration of our popular pastimes, has just now a series of articles current on the Decay of Old English Sports. Be it our office to deal with a more grateful theme and, in offering to our public this brief treatise on the Growth of New English Diversions

> The bane and antidote are both before them

Whatever may have been the recreations of our ancestors, now become parcel of the things that were, they can stand no comparison with that refinement on the Chase—whose rise and progress belong to the present century a device of moral woodcraft, wherein, abandoning the pursuit of the lower animals, men make game of each other:—

> The noblest quarry of mankind—is man

This modern National Sport is called Betting: the implements used in exercising it, are the odds; the district chiefly devoted to it, the metropolis. The cream of the country is the West End—the two great covers are Tattersall's and Limmer's. The former is hunted by day—the latter by night; and here is one important advantage which "oddscraft" enjoys over woodcraft—it is pursued through the twenty-four hours: indeed, the most favourable time for it is "the witching hour." Everybody's eyes and ears are familiar with Tattersall's: it is a household word you can't take up a paper, but it stares you in the face, and when you read in your Monday morning's Herald "Latest Betting at Tattersall's" it's only a polite way of quoting the business done the preceding afternoon—but that's a secret between us. The latter great game cover is less known we proceed to a notice of it—first sacrificing a stanza to the manes of its departed keeper:

> O! weep for John Collins, late waiter at Limmer's,
> At the corner of Conduit-street, Hanover-square,
> Whose pet occupation was filling up brimmers
> To solace young gentlemen laden with care.

The place of meeting here consists of an oblong chamber furnished with no carpet, probably because the practice is to stand upon the chairs, whence else, no doubt, it comes to pass that the custom is to sit upon the tables. The principal season of operations is during the summer months. Then, about midnight, may be seen some hundreds of sportsmen, for the most part well mounted—on the chairs and tables, as aforesaid—burning with impetuosity and extrinsic caloric. Lo! their natural heat has converted the saloon into an oven, at the door of which is stationed a blazing kitchen range, whereby they might supply you with barons of beef on the shortest notice. Libellers of the age! call ye these degenerate days, wherein the chivalry of England live for hours—best pace at such hot work as this? We tell thee, forty minutes with the fast ones at the coffee-room of Limmer's would have cooked the coolest of their grandfathers. Betting, abstractedly considered, does not seem good fun; but, as Shakspeare says

> There be some sports, though painful in themselves,
> Delight in them sets forth

Speculation belongs to this category—and if any one doubt us, let him attend an auto-da fe at Limmer's: there will be one every evening till after Doncaster Races. He will there see excitement carried to the pitch, beyond which, "the force of fancy can no further go," and by dint of a good constitution and Wenham ice, he may survive the experiment.........All descriptions of wild animals coming under the denomination of vermin, we are told, have suffered much from the existing taste for game-preserving. Well, if badgers are on the wane, betters are in the crescent—a quid pro quo—at all events. Which of the two genera affords the best sport, may be a matter of opinion; but bagging the odds we have shown to be a capital diversion. Next week we purpose going into the details of this amusement, which the vulgar suppose to be the doctrine of chances, but which the better-informed know to be the philosophy of pastime. The latest of its problems will be found in Tattersall's list.

TATTERSALL'S.

Monday.—Very few St. Leger horses were in favour this afternoon; indeed, saving Brocardo, The Traverser, Fancy Boy and Erin-go-Bragh, the market was decidedly downward. The movements embraced a change in the premiership, and the retrogression of Sir Tatton Sykes, Iago, and Pyrrhus the First. Poynton was friendless. Closing odds

LEAMINGTON STAKES.

4 to 1 agst Mongrel | 5 to 1 agst Roderick

ST LEGER.

5 to 1 agst Brocardo	10 to 1 agst Fancy Boy	20 to 1 agst Poynton
6 to 1 —— Sir Tatton Sykes (t)	13 to 1 —— Sting	20 to 1 —— Free Lance
7 to 1 —— The Traverser (t)	15 to 1 —— Iago	25 to 1 —— Erin-go-bragh (t)
	16 to 1 —— Grimston	33 to 1 —— Mount Callan

1000 to 10 agst Romance (t)

Thursday—The great feature of the betting this afternoon was the decline of Sir Tatton Sykes; 6, 7, and 8 to 1 was betted, to upwards of £1000; and it looked like "finding money" to lay against him. Brocardo also caught it; and an extraordinary anxiety was shown to lay against everything except The Traverser, Iago, and Poynton. In short, it was a field-day for the bears. The Leamington Stakes was scarcely mentioned, but it transpired that by the rather sudden death of Mr F. Ongley, Roderick was disqualified.

LEAMINGTON STAKES

9 to 2 agst Mongrel (tak n)

ST LEGER

13 to 2 agst The Traverser	15 to 1 agst Fancy Boy (t)	20 to 1 agst Sting (t)
7 to 1 —— Brocardo	18 to 1 —— Grimston	30 to 1 —— Erin-go-Bragh (t)
8 to 1 —— Sir Tatton Sykes	18 to 1 —— Poynton	35 to 1 —— Pyrrhus the First
12 to 1 —— Iago	20 to 1 —— Free Lance (t)	50 to 1 —— Mount Callan

1000 to 20 agst Joanna colt.

EGHAM RACES. Tuesday.

The Magna Charta Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 25 added, for three-year-old colts, 8st 7lb; and fillies, 8st 4lb. Winners of any stakes of £100 each 7lb extra; of the Derby, 10lb extra. Maidens at starting allowed 5lb. Old mile. 7 subscribers.

Sir G. Heathcote's Japan	(Chapple)	1
Cornet Bathyany's Mustee	(Mann)	2

Match, £100, h ft, weight for age; one mile.—Mr. Dyson's Devil-to-pay, 5 yrs (Nat), beat Mr. Oldaker's The Witch. 6 to 4 on Devil-to-pay, who won as he liked.

The Gold Cup of £120 (specie), by subscribers of 10 sovs each; the second to save his stake, and the winner to be sold for £400; 3-year-olds, 7st; 4 yrs, 8st 7lb; 5 yrs, 9st; 6 yrs and aged, 9st 3lb; mares, &c, allowed 3lb. Two miles. 12 subscribers.

Mr John Day's Bourton	(A. Day)	1
Lord Exeter's Sister to Pargularia	(Pettit)	2

The race was between the first two all the way, Bourton making all the running, and winning rather cleverly by half a length.

Plate of £40, given by the County Members, added to a Sweepstakes of 5 sovs each; 3-yrs-old, 6st 12lb; 4 yrs, 8st 7lb; 5 yrs, 9st; 6 yrs and aged, 9st 3lb; mares, &c, allowed 3lb. The winner to be sold for £200. Heats, 2 miles. 3 subs.

Sir S. Spry's f by Sir Hercules, out of Taglioni, 4 yrs	(Wakefield)	1	1
Count Bathyany's Master Stepney, 4 yrs		2	dr

WEDNESDAY.

The weather was extremely favourable, and the attendance not so large perhaps as we were in the habit of meeting when Egham rejoiced in Royal patronage, but still numerous and fashionable.

Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each, with 25 added; for two-yr-old colts, 8st 7lb, and fillies, 8st 4lb; winners once 4lb, twice 7lb extra. T.Y.C. Seven subs.

Baron Rothschild's The Daughter of the Star	(H. Bell)	1
Sir G Heathcote's br c by Liverpool, out of Carolina	(Chapple)	2
Mr. John Day's The Tartar	(A. Day)	3

The Tartar took a lead of three or four lengths, and made strong play to the distance, where the Carolina colt and the Baron's filly joined him, and the trio raced home together, the filly winning by a neck; the same between second and third; Pell-mell a bad fourth.

The Surrey and Middlesex Stakes, of 25 sovs each, 15 ft, and only 5 if declared, with 50 added. The winner of the Brighton Stakes, 7lb extra; of the Queen's Plate, at Brighton, or any other Handicap amounting to £100, 4lb extra. Two miles and a dis. 35 subs; 21 of whom declared.

Mr. Ramsbottom's Pine-Apple, 6 yrs, 8st 7lb	(Sly)	1
Mr Worley's Example, 5 yrs, 8st 3lb	(H. Bell)	2
Mr. S. Spry's f by Sir Hercules out of Taglioni, 4 yrs, 7st 10lb	(Wakefield)	3
Mr S. Scott's Mosque, aged, 8st 3lb	(Mann)	4

Mosque made the running, followed by Pine-Apple, the Taglioni filly third, and Example last. No change took place till they reached the distance; Mosque then gave way, and Pine-Apple went on with the running, was never afterwards headed, and won by half a length.

The Queen's Plate of 100 guineas: three yrs, 7st 5lb; four yrs, 9st 1lb; five yrs, 9st 11lb; six yrs and aged, 10st 2lb. Two miles and a distance.

Mr. John Day's The Hero, 3 yrs	(A. Day)	1
Mr. Moore's Wolfdog, 4 yrs	(Nat)	2
Sir G. Heathcote's b c by Hetman Platoff out of Nannette, 3 yrs	(Chapple)	3
Count Bathyany's Tragical, 3 yrs	(Mann)	4
Mr. Winch's Oliver Cromwell, 5 yrs	(Sut)	5

Oliver Cromwell went away with the lead, and made the running for about three parts of a mile; it was then taken up by The Hero, who made the pace severe, had it all his own way, and won by a couple of lengths. Run in 3 min. 40 sec.

The Amateur Stakes of 10 sovs each, and 25 added, for three-yr-olds, 9st 10lb; four, 10st 10lb; five, 11st 5lb; six and aged, 11st 12lb. Gentlemen riders. The second to save his stake, and the winner to be sold for £150. Heats, one mile. Nine subs.

Mr. P Bolt's Collingwood, 3 yrs	(Owner)	1	1
Count Bathyany's Master Stepney, 4 yrs	(Owner)	3	2

First heat: 5 to 2 on Collingwood, who won by a head. Second heat:—4 to 1 on Collingwood. Won by a neck.

The Egham Stakes of 5 sovs each, and 10 added from the fund, and 20 by the South-Western Railway Company. Three-yr-olds, 7st; four, 8st 4lb; five, 8st 10lb; six and aged, 9st. Mares allowed 3lbs. Heats, one mile and half. Four subs.

Mr. West's Rowland, 6 yrs, 7st 3lb	(Mann)	1	1
Mr. Death's Subduer, 6 yrs, 8st 3lb	(Wakefield)	2	2
Count Bathyany's Master Stephen, 4 yrs, 7st 11lb	(Chapple)	3	3

THE PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.

Parliament was yesterday prorogued by Royal Commission. The Lord Chancellor, in the name of her Majesty, read the following gracious Speech to the assembled members of the Houses of Lords and Commons:—

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"We are commanded by her Majesty to express to you the warm acknowledgments of her Majesty for the public spirit you have evinced in the discharge of your laborious duties during an anxious and protracted session.

"Her Majesty trusts that you will be rewarded by witnessing the beneficial results of the measures which have been sanctioned by her Majesty for the present relaxation and ultimate repeal of Protective Duties on Corn and Sugar.

"Her Majesty entertains a confident hope that the more free admission of the produce of foreign countries into the home market will increase the comforts and better the condition of the great body of the people.

"Her Majesty feels the greatest satisfaction in reflecting that her Majesty's efforts to settle in a manner consistent with the national honour, the conflicting claims of Great Britain and the United States, with respect to the territory on the North West Coast of America, have been completely successful.

"Her Majesty continues to receive from all Foreign Powers the strongest assurances of their desire to cultivate friendly relations with this country.

"Her Majesty commands us to congratulate you on the victorious course and happy conclusion of the war in India; and her Majesty has much gratification in announcing to you that perfect tranquillity prevails throughout the whole of the British possessions in that quarter of the world.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"Her Majesty has observed with satisfaction the care you have taken to prevent permanent loss to the Revenue and to maintain the public faith.

"Her Majesty has commanded us to acknowledge the zeal and unanimity with which you assented to the increase in the Naval and Military Estimates, which a regard to the exigencies of the public service induced her Majesty to propose for your consideration.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"Her Majesty has to lament that the recurrence of a failure in the potato crop, in an aggravated degree, will cause a serious deficiency in the quantity of a material article of food.

"Her Majesty has given her cordial assent to measures by which this calamity may be mitigated in that part of the United Kingdom where the cultivation of the potato has hitherto afforded the chief supply for the subsistence of the people.

"Her Majesty has seen with pleasure that a considerable diminution of crime and outrage has taken place in those counties of Ireland which had been most disturbed.

"Her Majesty is confident that on your return to your several counties, you will find a spirit of loyalty generally prevalent. The extension of works of improvement has increased the demand for labour, and the tranquillity of the country has favoured the pursuits of industry in all its branches.

"Her Majesty trusts that, by a combination of prudence with enterprise, and of a willing obedience to law, with a desire for social progress, her people will, through the Divine blessing, enjoy the full advantages of peace."

[The following appeared only in our Late Edition of last Week]:—

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Saturday.

LORD LYNDHURST AND LORD G. BENTINCK

The House met to-day at two o'clock, and some interest was excited in consequence of its being known that Lord Lyndhurst had a further explanation to make upon the subject of Lord G. Bentinck's statement. As soon as the House met, Lord Lyndhurst rose and said, he wished to call their Lordships' attention to a circumstance personally affecting himself. After the dissolution of the late Government, he communicated with several friends in the other House, in order that former differences might be forgotten, and the Conservative party be reformed. In order not to be subject to any misinterpretation, he communicated his intention to Sir Robert Peel, and stated on that occasion that what he was doing had no reference to any particular measure. He made the same communication to Sir J. Graham. Whilst this was going on, a gentleman, with whom he was acquainted, called upon him for an explanation of the course he was pursuing, and was placed in possession of what was taking place. As it was impossible to communicate with every individual, he sent a message to Lord G. Bentinck, requesting to see him for the purpose of conversing on the matter, in order to see whether the difference which existed might not be settled. No allusion whatever was made to the Sugar Bill. The answer which he received was that Lord G Bentinck declined the interview, wishing the communication to be made through Lord Stanley. With reference to what had been said relative to the three other Cabinet Ministers, he said not a single word. What took place, he mentioned to a noble Lord opposite. ("Hear, hear," from the Earl of Clarendon.) It had been insinuated that he was endeavouring to form a connection with the noble Lord, in order to come into office in conjunction with him. Now it was well known to their Lordships that he was not desirous of continuing in office, but rather wished to retire into private life. Now he had seen the gentleman to whom reference had been made, who had given him the statement. "I stated to Lord George Bentinck that I came with a message from Lord Lyndhurst, the object of which was to express the desire of his Lordship that the Conservative party should be reunited as speedily as possible, and that several of his political friends joined in the feeling with him, and that he would be happy to come into communication with Lord G. Bentinck. His answer was that he acted under Lord Stanley, who, with Lord Lyndhurst, was a member of the House of Peers, and that he thought it better that all communications should pass between these noble Lords, and that he was in cordial co-operation with Lord Stanley." He had this morning received a message from the Chief Baron of the Exchequer, stating that it was quite untrue that the office in question was pressed on his brother by him, or any other person—that he never interfered on the occasion; and that it was not until his brother had decided to accept the office, that he told him he thought he had acted with perfect propriety. The noble and learned Lord added that the gentleman through whom the communication was made to the noble Lord was personally unknown to him, but was made the medium of communication in consequence of the recommendation of his secretary.

Some bills were then disposed of, and the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Saturday

The House met to-day at twelve, and sat four hours, but merely to expedite bills. Nothing of importance occurred

The Murder at the Guildhall Coffee-House. John Vincent Smith was this day (Saturday) tried at the Central Criminal Court for the wilful murder of Susan Tolliday, convicted, and sentenced to death, without hope of mercy.

AGRICULTURAL PICTURES.

HAY-HARVEST.—WHEAT-HARVEST.

This pair of pictures of Harvest—a most important business to the husbandman—cannot be better accompanied than by the following lines by Bloomfield:—

> Hark! where the sweeping scythe now rips along,
> Each sturdy Mower, emulous and strong,
> Whose writhing form meridian heat defies,
> Bends o'er his work, and every sinew tries;
> Prostrates the waving treasure at his feet,
> But spares the rising clover, short and sweet.
> Come, Health! come, Jollity! light-footed, come;
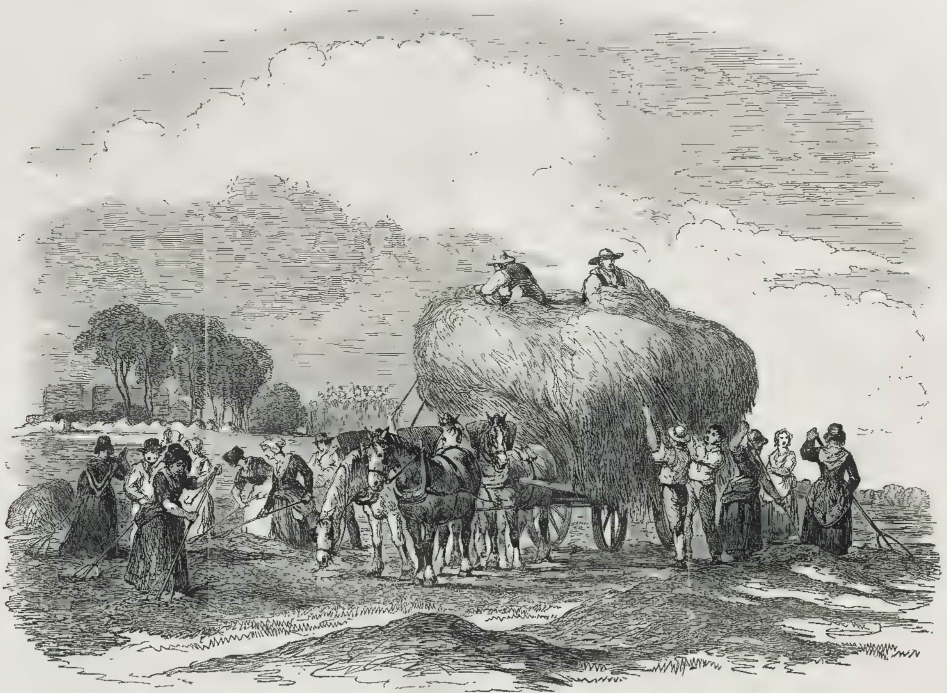
> Here hold your revels, and make this your home.
> Each moisten'd brow, that scorns to wear a frown
> Th' unpeopled dwelling mourns its tenants stray'd;
> E'en the domestic laughing dairy-maid
> Hies to the field, the general toil to share.
> Meanwhile the Farmer quits his elbow-chair,
> His cool brick floor, his pitcher, and his ease,
> And braves the sultry beams, and gladly sees
> His gates thrown open, and his team abroad
> The ready group attendant on his word,

AGRICULTURAL PICTURES.



HAY-HARVEST.—DRAWN BY DUNCAN.

To turn the swarth, the quiv'ring load to rear,
Or ply the busy rake, the land to clear.
Summer's light garb itself now cumb'rous grown,
Each his thin doublet in the shade throws down;
Where oft the Mastiff skulks with half-shut eye,
And rouses at the stranger passing by;
Whilst unrestrain'd the social converse flows,
And every breast Love's powerful impulse knows,
And rival wits with more than rustic grace
Confess the presence of a pretty face.

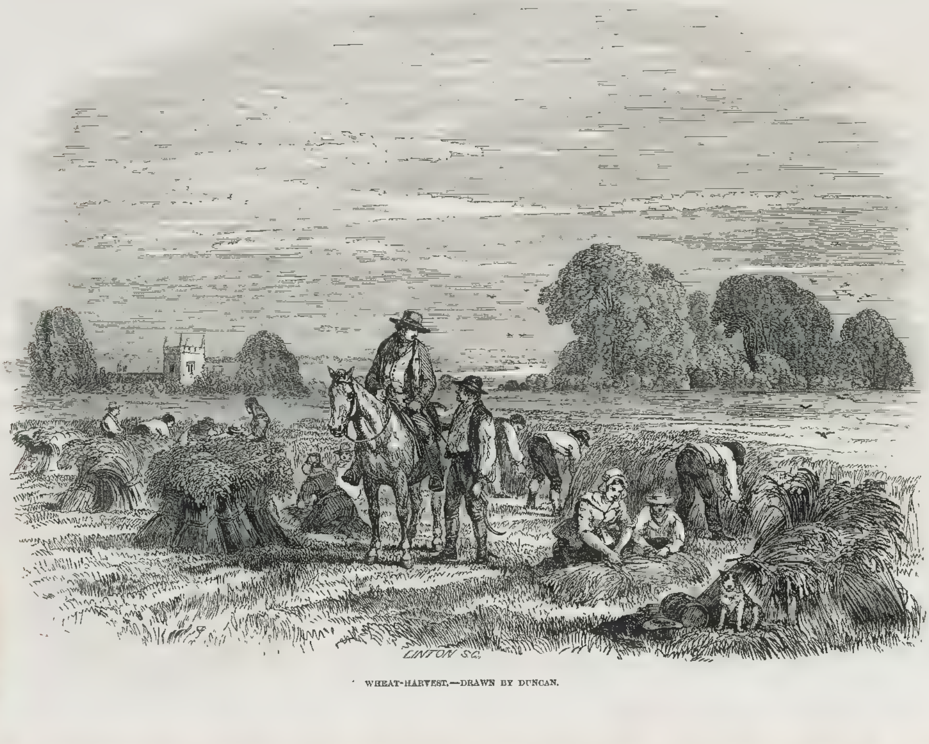
Here, midst the boldest triumphs of her worth,
Nature herself invites the reapers forth;
Dares the keen sickle from its twelvemonth's rest,
And gives that ardour which in every breast
From infancy to age alike appears,
When the first sheaf its plumy top uprears.
No rake takes here what Heaven to all bestows—
Children of want, for you the bounty flows!
And every cottage from the plenteous store
Receives a burden nightly at its door.

The muse of Thomson sings—

Crown'd with the sickle, and the wheaten sheaf,
While Autumn, nodding o'er the yellow plain,
Comes jovial on.

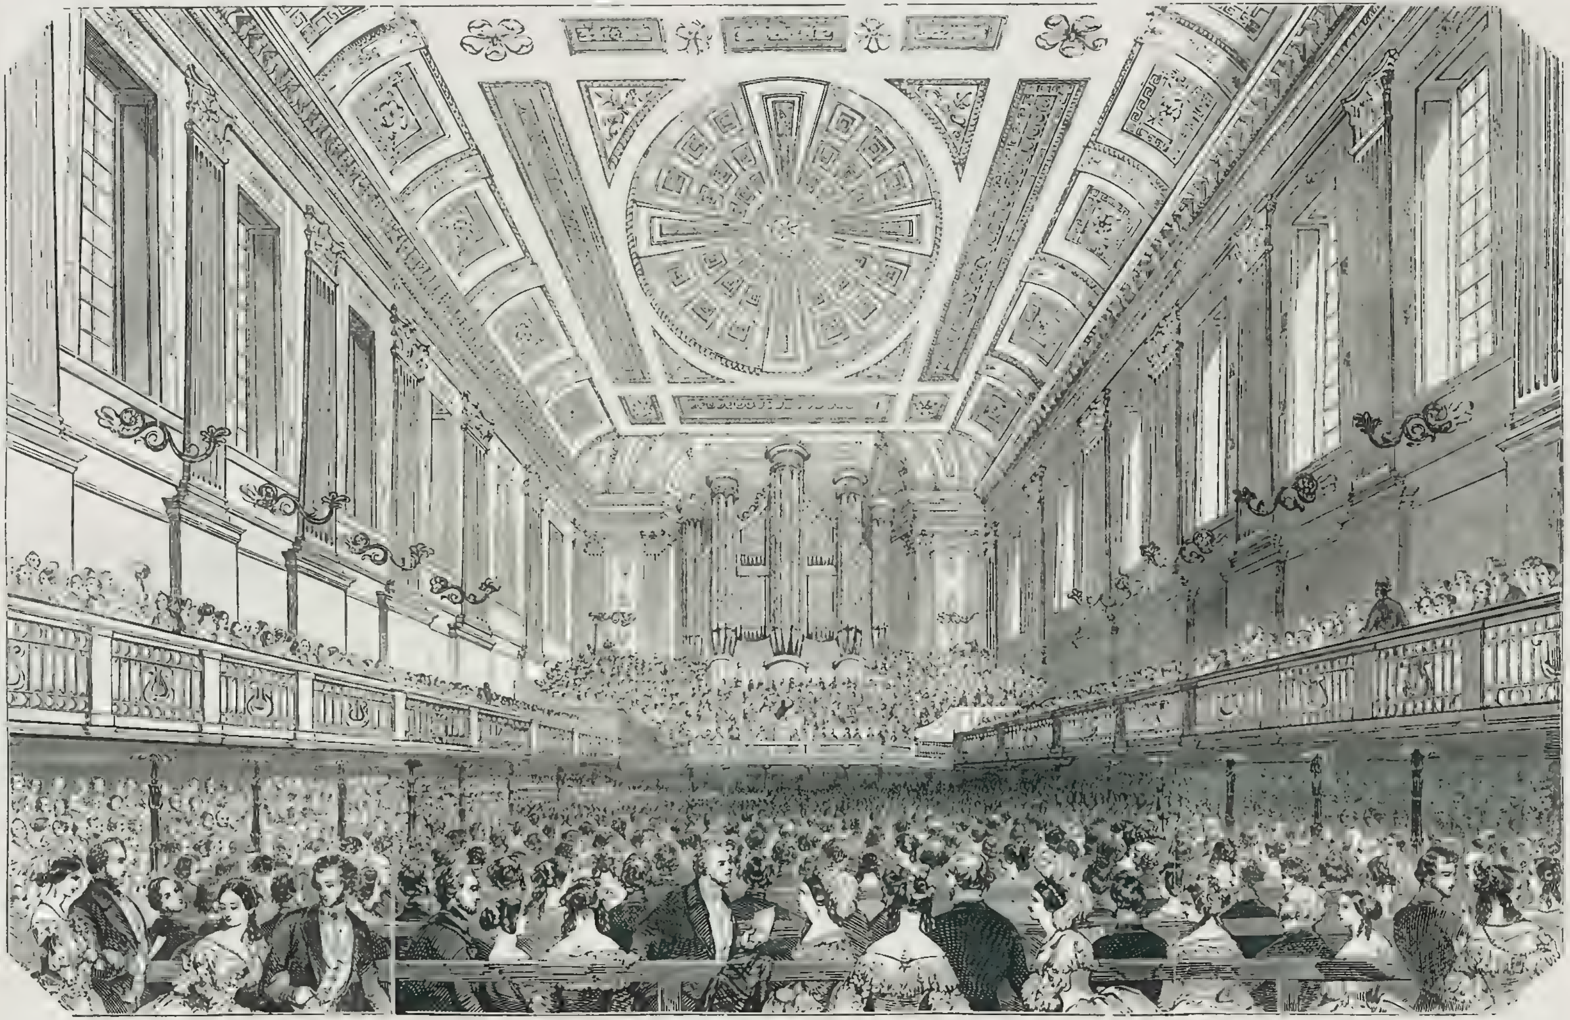
* * * * * *

Soon as the morning trembles o'er the sky,
And, unperceiv'd, unfolds the spreading day;
Before the ripen'd fields, the reapers stand
In fair array; each by the lass he loves,
To bear the rougher part, and mitigate
By nameless gentle offices her toil.
At once they stoop, and swell the lusty sheaves;
While, bandied round and round, the rural talk,
The rural scandal, and the rural jest,
Fly hearty, to deceive the tedious time,
And cheerly steal the sultry hours away.



WHEAT-HARVEST.—DRAWN BY DUNCAN.

EWSPAPER



THE BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—THE GREAT MUSIC HALL.—(See next page.)

MUSIC.

THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Birmingham, Wednesday.

This meeting is always looked forward to with interest, as the exertions to secure the best singers, native and foreign, and to produce striking novelties have been manifested at various periods with great success. The Committee this year has been particularly active, and it is not their fault that they have not secured Jenny Lind, for tempting offers were made to her. The engagements of Grisi and Mario, and of Mendelssohn to conduct his second Oratorio, are evidence that no outlay has been spared to render the Festival of 1846 attractive. With the new work of "Elijah," more than ordinary pains have been taken. Whilst the local choruses have been practising, two rehearsals of the London singers and instrumentalists have been given at the Hanover-square Rooms. On Monday there was a full gathering of the forces, and in the evening and last night, pieces that were regarded as imperfect by the gifted composer, were again gone through. The band. chorus and principal artists arrived by a special train on Sunday. The town filled on Monday rapidly with the visitors invited by the hospitable inhabitants. The nobility and gentry within a circle of fifty miles, come in daily by the railroads, and trains, for the convenience of the Concert-frequenters, depart at midnight. The ringing of bells ushered in the Festival yesterday, and the first performance took place at the Town Hall, where, by the way, all the schemes this year will be performed, the Theatre being only reserved for the Dress Ball, on Friday night, terminating the triennial gathering. It is, of course, known that the profits go to the funds of the General Hospital, an admirable institution—so that Charity goes hand in hand with Music—a very charming coalition. The hotel keepers have manifested a desire to be less exacting; and this example will, no doubt, in the long run, be the best to be followed.

Haydn's "Creation" was well executed on the whole, although it was done without a single rehearsal; and Mr. Moscheles, who was Conductor, took the time so rapidly, that some choruses—especially that of the "Heavens are telling" became almost dance music. The soli were assigned to Madame Caradori Allan, Miss Bassano, Mr. Hobbs. Mr. Lockey, Mr. Machin, Mr. Phillips, and Herr Staudigl. The music was too high for Miss Bassano, who, therefore, disappointed the expectations of her friends. If she cultivates her contralto, she will make a fine singer; but, as a soprano, she must fail. Caradori's style is still artistical and finished, but her intonation is impaired. Hobbs was deservedly encored in the air "For native worth:" he never sang with more taste and feeling. Mr. Lockey is a rising tenor; he has a good organ, but lacks passion. Machin and Phillips both sustained their reputations as singers in the sacred school. Staudigl created an immense sensation, and was called upon to repeat the air, "Now Heaven in fullest glory." After the Oratorio, there was a selection from the "Stabat Mater" of Rossini, Mario singing the "Cujus animam;" Grisi and Miss Bassano the duo, "Quis est homo;" Staudigl the air, "Pro peccatis;" and Grisi the "Inflammatus." The duo was encored—the voices of the fair vocalists blending beautifully; and Miss Bassano retrieved her laurels in the low notes. Grisi was in superb voice. The Hall was well attended, and the sale of tickets larger than is usual on a first day

This morning Mendelssohn's "Elijah," conducted by himself, was the great source of attraction. The argument has been gleaned from Holy Scripture by the composer himself, and Mr. Bartholomew has adapted the English version. A more interesting subject could not have been selected. It comprises the departure of Elijah for Zarephath, the restoration of the child's life, the gathering of the Priests at Mount Carmel and their destruction, the opening of the Heavens, the descent of the rain, the flight of Elijah to the wilderness, the passing by of the Lord, the death of Elijah and prophetical declarations as to the advent of The Messiah.

Mendelssohn has made a great advance on "Paul" by "Elijah." His innovations are more daring, his choral effects more potent, his melodies more exhilarating. The orchestration is marvellously grand and impressive. The accompaniments are never ceasing—like Haydn, the picture is always in the band, and the vocal parts are chiefly accessory. Perhaps relief may be wanting, owing to this continued orchestral working, but the impetuosity is overwhelming. The music for the solo singers is for the most part allotted to the bass and contralto voices. It was a great opportunity for Staudigl in "Elijah," and he did not neglect it. Never did this gifted artist gain greater glory. His duties were most onerous and arduous; he had a series of recitatives and airs, besides a large share in the concerted pieces, of unprecedented responsibility. The quartet writing is rich in harmony, and the choruses colossal. Whilst the contrapuntal combinations display the highest erudition, dramatic effect has never been lost sight of. There are less of dry fugues and canons, and the symphonies are infinitely shorter than usual. We must refer our readers to the 17th and 18th chapters of the First Book of Kings to form some notion of the theme that Mendelssohn has grasped like a master-mind. Its magnitude has been adequately upheld. The contrasts between the sacred and secular subjects have been most judiciously preserved.

The execution of the new work was quite surprising. Every artist seemed inspired, and resolved to perform as if the result depended on individual exertion.

There were eight encores—four in each part. Mr. Lockey, the tenor, obtained the first, in the air, "Ye people, rend your hearts." The chorus, "Baal, we cry to thee," with its Paganic effects, was next in rotation. The quartet, "Regard thy servant's prayer," nicely sung by Madame Caradori, Miss Hawes, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. Phillips, was the third; and the chorus finale of the first act, "Thanks be to God," the fourth. The fifth was the lovely chorus, "He watching over Israel;" the sixth, the air by Miss Hawes, "O, rest in the Lord;" the seventh was in Staudigl's air, "O Lord, I have heard of thee;" and the eighth encore was the quartet, "Oh! every one that thirsteth."

Mendelssohn was called for at the close of the Oratorio, and was more cheered even than on his entrance.

The Hall, this day, had a most animated aspect, as it was crowded in every part. The beautiful toilettes of the ladies harmonised exquisitely with the new decorations of the Hall. The blending of the colours is charming. The ceiling is divided into three large circles, and studded with rosettes and panels, painted blue and white, on a cream and chocolate ground alternately. The organ case has been splendidly embellished, and the pipes gilt, with scrolls. A judicious sprinkling of arabesques add to the beauty of the ceiling. The seats have been painted a dark mahogany, with red cushions. The ventilation has not been lost sight of in the improvements. The whole has been done under the directions of Mr. Crace, of London.

Lord Wrottesley (the President), the Earl of Dartmouth, Lord Sandys, Lord Leigh, Lord Ward, Sir A. Barnard, &c., have been present at the performance.

Nothing is talked of but the great success of the "Elijah;" and a wish has been expressed for a second performance.

Birmingham, Thursday Night.

The first Concert last evening was very well attended, and the Hall, lighted up with gas, had a magnificent appearance. The programme opened with Beethoven's Symphony in A No. 7, with the repeats cut out. It did not go well, as also Spohr's "Faust" Overture, owing to the Conductor's incapability. Indeed, the accompaniments to the vocal pieces were so disgracefully executed, owing to this cause, that a break down was nearly the result in many pieces. Moscheles has ruined himself as a Conductor by his exhibitions at this Festival. His best friends were dismayed at his palpable failure. There were six encores—Mario, in "Il mio tesoro," of Mozart; Grisi, in Bellini's "Qui la voce," and with Lablache, jun., in Mayer's comic duo, "Con pazienza;" the Misses Williams, in Macfarren's pretty duo, "Two Merry Gipsies;" Miss Hawes, in Arne's "Oh, too lovely;" and Herr Staudigl, in Handel's "Ruddier than the cherry." Webbe's glee, "Discord, dire sister," was beautifully sung by Miss Hawes, and Messrs. Hobbs, Lockey, and Phillips. Miss Bassano gave Haydn's "Mermaid" delightfully. Mdme. Caradori sung Donizetti's "L'amor suo" artistically. Mr. Moscheles played his "Recollections of Ireland" on the pianoforte, with orchestral accompaniments, splendidly. As a pianist and composer, he is great. There will be a treat to-night at the Second and Last Concert, in the duo between Mendelssohn and Moscheles on two pianos, and in the "Midsummer Night's Dream" music of the former. To-morrow morning is the last performance of Sacred Music. The scheme includes Beethoven's Mass in D in part; Spohr's Hymn, "God, thou art great;" and a new Psalm, by Moscheles (the 93rd). Dr. Gauntlett will perform on the organ on this occasion, "The Harmonious Blacksmith" of Handel, and one of Bach's fugues. A Ball at the Theatre concludes the Festival. On Saturday, a Concert will be given in the same place, at which Grisi, Mario, F. Lablache, and John Parry will sing, and Benedict conduct.

The performance of "The Messiah" this morning was on the whole more satisfactory than that of "The Creation," a hint having been given to Moscheles that the traditions in taking the time would be preferred to his own crotchets. Still the same degree of uncertainty prevailed as to his beat. The band and chorus exerted themseves strenuously. The "And the glory," "And he shall purify," "For unto us," "Let us break," &c., went unsteadily. The "Hallelujah," "All we like sheep," "Worthy is the Lamb," with the fugue "Amen," were better. Five encores were bestowed by the President, Lord Wrottesley, who gives the signal when the Vice-Presidents signify their gratification. Miss M. Williams obtained the first in the air "He shall feed his flock;" her sister Miss A. Williams coming in for another in the second part "His yoke is easy." Miss Hawes's pathetic delivery of the air, "He was despised," secured the third encore. Mdme. Caradori received the fourth, in the air, "But Thou didst not leave his soul in Hell"; and Staudigl at last, in "The Trumpet shall sound," with Harper's obligato; but the latter was dead beat, and would not play the symphony the second time. Mr. Stempson officiated with ability at the Organ. The receipts were £2,500; and it is anticipated that the money received this Meeting will be greater than at any previous Festival. The largest on record was that of 1834, when the Hall was opened, amounting to £13,527. The weather has been splendid every day.

The number of executants amounts to about 400, of which 125 are instrumentalists and 272 choralists. Too much praise cannot be bestowed on the Stewards for their attention and politeness, and the police regulations were admirable. The streets, although thronged with vehicles and pedestrians, were quite free from confusion. The following is a list of the visitors:—The Earl of Bradford, the Earl of Dartmouth, the Earl of Aylesford, the Countess of Kilmorey, the Bishop of Worcester; Lords Wrottesley, Ingestre, Hatherton, Southwell, Lyttelton, Leigh, Guernsey, and Calthorpe; Sir A. Barnard, Sir T. Winnington, Lady Cavendish, Lady Ward, Right Honourable W. Y. Peel, Sir E. Hartopp, Lady R. Carnac, Hon. Colonel Clive, Sir J. Cave, Sir E. Scott, the Deans of Lichfield and Worcester, the High Sheriff, G Muntz, Esq, M.P., C. P. Adderley, Esq., M.P., E. J. Shirley, Esq., M.P., W. S. Dugdale, Esq., M.P., Mark Philips, Esq., M.P., Colonel Norton, Lieut.-Col. Thorne, J. F. Ledsam, Esq., the Chairman of the Committee, Sterndale Bennett, and Charles Horsley, the Composers, the Countess of Hahn-Hahn, Professor Gesarius, of Halle Prussia, Herr Carl Engell, of Berlin, Benedict. &c., &c.

I shall be unable to supply you with details of to-morrow's doings, but next week I will give a general summary of this important meeting.

COUNTRY NEWS.

Hurricane at Rugby.—On Thursday (last week), the neighbourhood of Rugby was visited by the most tremendous hurricane ever known in that locality Upwards of 100 trees, many of them exceeding two yards in circumference, were snapped in two, whilst others were torn up by the roots, to the extent, in one line of country alone, of nearly two miles and a half. The damage in the neighbourhood is estimated at between £2000 and £3000. After lasting about three hours, the hurricane abated, apparently going in the direction of Kettering

Incendiary Fire in Essex.—Last Sunday evening, a fire suddenly broke out upon the premises belonging to Mr. James Hill, known as Wenington Hall farms near Purfleet. There being a large pond of water on the ground, the engines were taken thither, and were, with as little delay as possible, set to work, and vast streams of water were discharged upon and into the blazing property, but without making any visible impression upon the flames; and rick after rick, and building after building, were destroyed. During the whole of Sunday night and Monday morning the engines were at work. From a survey which has been made, there is little doubt that the fire was the work of some incendiary. Mr Hills is a man universally respected in the neighbourhood. His loss must be very considerable, and, unfortunately, he was only partially insured. Official Report of Damage:—"Sunday, August 23, half-past eight P M, a fire broke out on the premises of Mr. Hill, farmer, situate at Wenington, near Purfleet, Essex, which destroyed one wheat rick, one barn filled with grain, one rick of rye, five more ricks of wheat, two stacks of pea haulm, two ricks of hay, one cart lodge, two barns, one straw shed, the chaise and carriage houses, the ox stalls, cow houses, and hurdle sheds, with a number of fat geese."

Murders at Leeds.—On Friday (last week), a double murder was perpetrated at Leeds, which caused considerable excitement. A man named William Walshaw, a hawker of hardware, went to his house in the Old Post-Office Yard, Kirkgate, in a state of intoxication. A quarrel between himself and wife ensued, and the latter, through his threats, left the house. He then began to beat his child in so cruel a manner that its cries attracted the attention of the neighbours; and two of them, named Elizabeth Smith and Catherine M'Loughlan, who are both the wives of pedlars, went into the house and attempted to interfere. Walshaw, with a clasp-knife in his hand, attacked them in a most ferocious manner, and stabbed them very severely. The wounds inflicted upon Smith caused her death in two or three hours. M'Loughlan's wound was found to be of a serious character, and she was removed to the Infirmary, where she also died At the Inquest, the Jury returned a verdict of Manslaughter against Walshaw. Both women have left families of children, and the husband of M'Loughlan is at present a prisoner in Wakefield House of Correction, having been sent there for an assault.

IRELAND.

The Repeal Association.—At the weekly meeting of the Repeal Association, on Monday, Mr. O'Connell as usual made a speech about Repeal. He said there never was a better prospect for Repeal than at present The Repealers were right, and their enemies were wrong, because the Repealers were determined to proceed on the basis of moral force, and on that alone. The late Government acted most basely in keeping back from the court and jury at the State Trials the principle on which the Repeal Association was founded. If that principle had been clearly shown to the court and jury, the prosecution could not have succeeded even with the aid of the Nation. The Young Irelanders talked of using the sword men who would be afraid to look at a poker talking of using the sword. (Laughter) He did not regret the secession of the Young Irelanders, with the exception of Smith O'Brien; but they should do without even him, if he would not be a member of the Association on the principle of moral force. No man could be a member of the Association on any other grounds. If the Association admitted any other principle the principle of physical force—it would be an illegal assembly, and all the members of it would be liable to be prosecuted for high treason. Away for ever with physical force! moral force alone would obtain what they wanted. He would not have consented to remain in that hall if physical force was assented to. He had the felicity of knowing that the country was with him, from the humblest Repealer to the Hon. Cecil Lawless. Who would have supposed that Peel would have proclaimed the necessity of establishing perfect equality between England and Ireland? This from "Orange Peel," as they used to call him, and as he deserved to be called; but now they would Peel off the orange, and present him a new man to Ireland. Already they were getting some advantage. He would tell them he would support the Whigs whil they did good to Ireland. Mr. O'Connell then referred to the law for the relief of the poor, which he lauded for its humanity. That measure was the first step towards a universal system of poor-laws, and that measure would be perpetuated, unless the gentry of Ireland joined him to repeal the Union. After some routine business, the rent for the week was declared to be £138 16s.

Extraordinary Case of Poisoning.—A most diabolical attempt to poison the entire family of Dr. Grattan, of Drummond House, county of Kildare, was made on the 17th instant. His eldest son, a lad of fifteen, died in consequence; and Mrs. Grattan, the four surviving children, and a servant-maid, are still in a very precarious condition. From the circumstances brought to light at the inquest, it would appear that Dr. Grattan, alarmed at the wide spread failure of the potato crop, and anxious to make timely provision for the wants of his labourers, likely to be deprived, by this mysterious visitation, of much of their ordinary food, had a small supply of Indian meal brought from Dublin at his own cost, for the purpose of introducing it among them, and familiarizing them to its use. Some prejudice against it having been manifested, Dr Grattan, in order to remove it, if possible, determined to use it in his own family; and, upon finding that his domestic servants refused even to prepare it, insisted on their doing so, and stood by until his directions were obeyed. Of the meal thus prepared, he and all his children partook. In the kitchen the servants refused to eat it, and their share was given to four calves, all of which died shortly after. The following morning Dr. Grattan was actively engaged investigating this extraordinary occurrence, which had immediately been spread abroad amongst the ignorant peasantry as the effect of the Indian corn, when his eldest son called him to breakfast, mentioning, at the same time, that they had just breakfasted on flummery, and, what was very curious, that they were every one sick; and true it was. When he reached the house, he found Mrs Grattan, the four children, and a servant-maid, exhibiting all the symptoms of poisoning by arsenic. The doctor having, by his accidental absence, escaped partaking of the poisoned food, was able to give instant assistance to the unfortunate sufferers, and had used the ordinary antidotes and remedies hours before medical assistance could possibly have reached them from any other quarter. In spite of every care, his eldest son died within twenty-one hours, and the others of the family are not out of danger. An inquest was held upon the body of the young man, and a verdict implicating the cook in the transaction was found, in consequence of which she has been committed to Naas gaol.

Execution at Nenagh.—William Walsh was hanged on Saturday, at Nenagh, for the murder of Daniel Berachree.

TRACTS FOR THE TRAINS.

BY ALBERT SMITH.

No. XI

THE RIVERS, VALLIES, AND MOUNTAINS, OF FLEET-STREET.

Forming a complete Tourist's Handbook to that Romantic District.

KNOWING the propensity of our countrymen to travel at this time of the year, we beg to suggest a tour, which is unequalled for diversity of adventure; and can be undertaken without passport, expense, or sea-passage. We allude to the celebrated pass of Fleet-street, on the frontier of the City, which equals the Simplon or St. Gothard in engineering difficulties and bold prospects

Omnibuses convey the traveller at all hours to the New Church, in the Strand—at which point we recommend him to descend—and, as the journey is not unattended with peril, he ought to take a knapsack, a mountain staff, and a flask of brandy

The Wenham Lake glacier is the first object of interest, from which the sherry cobblers of London take their source. In the dark ages of the Strand, it was a depôt of American manufactures, which were truly national, for the clocks were much given to "tick," and were frequently "wound up." Some cheap wooden combs, too, proved the facility with which the Yankees could cut any teeth but their wisdom ones, and, we believe, the firm expected several cases of preserved repudiation, recommended by the faculty for gentlemen in embarrassed circumstances But, being unprofitable, the store was changed to a glacier; and, being first done up as a speculation, was next done up as an ice-house. The glacier differs from the Swiss ones, its magnitude depending not on the cold of the winter, but on the heat of the summer. So many jokes have been made on Wenham ice as its being the only thing American that can be clearly seen through, or is ever liquidated, &c.—that we may spare the reader's feelings by not making any more. We may state, however, that the ice-drinks, being a late importation, it is by no means a work of supererogation to teach your grandmother to suck cobblers.

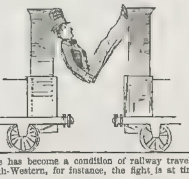
The effervescing fountains of Sainsbury are the next natural curiosity: but from their fizziological power should only be visited by people of strong nerves capable of standing explosions.

The tourist next approaches the office of the Illustrated London News, the exhibition of which is free to the public, and comprises the shop, the pigeon holes for the back numbers, the Panorama of London, and the pile of bound volumes. The gentleman in attendance is exceedingly polite, and makes no charge for showing these curiosities; but the visitor is expected to buy a paper.

At the Temple Bar frontier, an examination of personal effects sometimes takes place; and the tourist then arrives at the celebrated pass, where he first encounters a large body of natives, armed with enormous clubs, and performing some mystic ceremony of thumping the earth, accompanying their exertions by wild cries. This tribe is friendly, unless the traveller is the aggressor, when they pour forth an angry flood of words, perfectly unintelligible. The journey now becomes one of much peril. Large deserts of gravel have to be crossed, and huge rocks of granite must be scaled, which offer very insecure footing; whilst, here and there, terrific chasms appear to open to the very centre of the earth. The view is, however, very interesting, embracing long perspectives of Chancery-lane and the Middle Temple, as well as the entrance of Hare-court, so called from the number of them found there, which the Templars have the sole right of hunting. High up, in these wild seclusions, live patient men recluses of the order of J. Blackstone who labour incessantly for the welfare of their fellow-creatures. Their doors are always open to those who are oppressed, or fancy that they are so; and their opinions may always be had, for a small consideration, which, as at the Great St. Bernard, they cannot demand, but must leave entirely to the generosity of the visitor. The revenues of the Templars are collected by their almoners, or attornies; and they live principally upon roots and water, which they find in certain caves along the pass, known by the fantastic names of Dick's, The Rainbow, The Cock, The Cheshire Cheese, &c., which originate in different legends

To one of these refectories, the traveller may now betake himself for the humble fare above spoken of. And at any of them he can procure guides, and every information, should he have made up his mind to attempt the ascent of Ludgate Hill, the loftiest of the London Alps.

OUR MAIL-TRAIN BAG.



MANY letters have reached us, by the last delivery, from ingenious Correspondents, which are filled, in equal proportions, with compliments, abuse, suggestions, complaints, and jokes on trial. From them we select the following

1.

"Sir, The pay-places at the stations are beginning to rival the pit doors of the Opera on the 'long Thursdays,' in the confusion and scrambling of the mob of travellers: and physical force has become a condition of railway travelling. At the mail-train of the South-Western, for instance, the fight is at times so severe, that carpet-bags change hands in the melee and go into all sorts of wild destinations Ladies find themselves, at Guildford, with two regatta shirts, a razor, and a folding bootjack, for their luggage. and gentlemen are put down at Winchester with a visite, a paper of patchouli, something made of crinoline, and two side combs. Pray recommend more hands to be put on at these lines. alleviate the frantic bewilderments of the clerks, and oblige, Your constant reader, Philo Basingstoke."

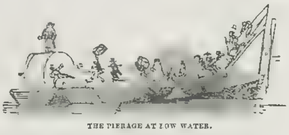
2.

The next is from a gentleman who makes complaint of the present state of



THE PIERAGE AT LOW WATER.

"Sir," he says, "it is abominable; nobody could go up and down those dreadful platforms, but the horses from Astley's who attack the blazing towers. And what with hopping from one lighter to another many feet below you; and clearing monstrous chasms of bottomless mud; and scaling barges blockaded by opposition Companies; and being totally bewildered by cries of 'Who's for Tunnel Pier?' 'Now Vauxhall!' 'Pay here for Gravesend!' the only wonder is that passengers ever arrive at all, anywhere. Pray, sir, exert your influence to reform all this, and oblige Your obedient servant, Daniel Tucker, Jun."

3.

The next is from a country Correspondent, who writes as follows:

"Sir,—In your 'Lays of the Line,' you keep too much to the railway itself, forgetting its branch connections. We live three miles from a station, and have an omnibus—a curious machine, made by our country wheelwright—that goes at the strangest times in the world; forty-two minutes to this hour, and twenty-six after that; exceedingly difficult to remember; and, in addition to this, it usually occurs that it gets up to the station as the train disappears round the cutting. All our parishioners will rejoice to see this noticed; for although we live in a 'Nook and Corner of Old England,' your Journal reaches us there, and the ballad may do some good. I propose that it should be called—

THE RETURN OF THE OMNIBUS.

Air.—"The Admiral."

How gallantly, how merrily, we ride along the lane,
The passengers all hope to catch the eight o'clock up-train;
The wind is fresh, and clouds of dust do in our faces fly,
Like coming from the Derby, when the roads are always dry.
And all along we triumph: large crows above us sweep;
Small boys rush out to shout at us, and maids from windows peep.
A free-school urchin hangs behind some way upon the road—
Oh! proud must be our omnibus of such a jolly load!

And proud is Tom, the driver, too, who smiles, and well he may,
Of twice three people (in and out) who'll each a shilling pay;
He's proud, too, of that old grey horse, who earns so very hard
The hay and water he shall have when once more in his yard.
Oh, would that I were Tom, to drive and order with a word,
That old grey horse, whose harness is made up of tape and cord,
I'd shout unto the free-school boy who's hanging on our lee,
'If you don't mind, I'll whip behind, as quickly you shall see.'

Our driver pale and paler grew; but, as we went along,
Still talked he to the passengers, and then he hummed a song;
And first he look'd behind him, and then he look'd on straight;
And then we thought we heard him say, 'I thinks we is too late.'
He shook—'twas but an instant—we saw his fearful plight,
The village clock struck eight just then: but that is never right.
He flogged the old grey horse along, till he was out of breath,
And when he reached the station doors he turn'd as pale as death.

We heard a bell, and then a pause, and then a bell again!
We knew our fine old omnibus had missed the 'eight up train.'
And next we heard a rush of steam, but nothing could we see,
But a whistle and a puff among the fir trees on our lee.
We watch'd the passing vapour till it vanish'd round the steep,
Then back again t'wards home with all our luggage did we creep;
But never from that moment, having once been 'sold,' again
We patronised the omnibus that always miss'd the train."

ANSWER TO CHARADE THE SEVENTH.

1. Ban. 2. Jo. 3. Banjo.

THE THEATRES.

LYCEUM.

A new fairy extravaganza—without which the play-going public do not appear to believe in the existence of this pleasant theatre—was produced here on Monday evening, with the most complete success. It is called "The Magic Horn", and is, as the bill honestly avows,

> -----a version, somewhat tranche,
> Of "Oberon," by Weber and by Planché ';

the libretto being followed with much tact and happy humour, and the names grotesquely parodied, and well cast. Thus, we have Sir Bottle-of-Bordeaux the Sir Huon of the old piece (Mr. Keeley); and Sherryumne—Sherasmin (Mr. Wigan); O'Brian—Oberon (Miss Villars), and so on. Mrs. Keeley is the Rei[illegible] Miss Bromley, Fatemma; and Mr. F. Mathews, Badmansur. A [illegible] working company at the Lyceum are employed in the acting.

There is a much to laugh at; and this we hold to be a great end in theatrical amusements. Jokes there are in abundance, with fewer old friends than we have been accustomed to meet in similar entertainments; and allusions of all kinds whilst, in the very effects, a burlesque spirit is well carried out. Mrs. Keeley imitates Rachel à ravir, and her spouse threw the house into convulsions by his impersonation of Braham, calling forth a loud encore for his magnificent singing in "Oh! 'tis a glorious sight to see." The appearance of Mr. F. Mathews, admirably made up for Ibrahim Pacha, was also the cue for a prolonged round of laughter and cheering. Mr. Wigan's Sherryumne was not very effective; but the part was by no means a good one for the display of this clever actor's peculiarities: albeit, we admire him less in Irishmen than in other characteristic delineations. Nor could Miss Farebrother make a great deal of Roshana, except an appearance, magnificently dressed. Miss Keeley played Puck, and sang some difficult music in a manner that was highly relished by the audience. Her acting was very spirited, and she looked remarkably well in her fanciful fairy dress. The first joke that hit the house was a line of Sir Bottle's. The ferocious Prince (Mr. Collyer) is reclining on the shoulder of Reiza, pretending not to hear a challenge, when the knight exclaims—

> There, take your Saracen's Head from that Snow Hill.

In the pretty concerted music, Miss Bromley sang to much advantage; and Miss Laidlaw's attractive dancing was no small feature in the piece. At the end of the first act, there was an exceedingly effective representation of a storm and shipwreck, produced by a phantasmagoria, under the direction of Mr. Child, on the same plan as the transformation in "Cinderella" and the flight in "The Enchanted Horse;" and a beautiful group of fairies, with the principal characters, lighted up by different coloured fires, formed an imposing tableau for the conclusion, after a neat plea for the fairies had been given by Mrs. Keeley. It reflects credit on the management of this theatre to state, that, notwithstanding the complicated machinery, there was not a single hitch on the first night.

The burlesque is from the pen of Mr. Charles Dance, who, with Mr. Planché, originated, in a great degree, this popular style of entertainment, and whose pieces were amongst the most popular during the Vestris management of the Olympic Theatre. It is elegantly written, and all the jokes are turned with peculiar neatness. Although the loud bursts of laughter do not follow each other so closely as they were wont to do in former pieces of the kind, there is a continuous murmur of appreciation and amusement amongst the audience, which may be equally, if not more, satisfactory to the author.

The applause at the end was very hearty and general; and Mr. and Mrs Keeley, Miss Keeley, and Mr. Wigan appeared before the curtain to receive the congratulations of a crowded house. "The Magic Horn" will have a long run. A word for the scenery by Messrs. Phillips and Hawthorn, which is admirably painted.

QUEEN'S.

We were glad to see so good a house at this theatre on Wednesday, when Mr. Abington, the lessee, appeared as Hamlet, for the second time, if we mistake not. The acting of this gentleman is throughout marked by careful emphasis, and an evident perception of the various phases of character through which the philosophic Prince passes. His features are expressive; and his reading, generally, evinces careful education and study. His attempt to support the legitimate drama, and raise the general character of the performances at this theatre, is most praiseworthy. It was, therefore, gratifying to find his performance loudly applauded by a full and intelligent audience. We cannot say a great deal for the other characters, who, however, certainly did their best. We must give the highest praise, however, to one exception Mrs. R. Gordon, whose acting, as the Queen, was most admirable, and worthy of a much higher sphere than we conceive she has been hitherto in the habit of appearing in. The tragedy was carefully put upon the stage; and the appearance of the Ghost was managed by a [illegible]y ingenious effect; the platform of the castle, and the portrait in the closet, being painted on a very transparent medium, which, when light was thrown on the figure, blended the scene and the spirit so curiously, that the latter had the appearance of being seen through. It is the intention of Mr Abington, in the course of the winter, to become the manager of the Richmond theatre.

Miss Cushman and her sister have been during the week playing with great effect at the Surrey Theatre, in characters which we have already noticed at full.

The fine weather of the week has again caused the various gardens to be filled with visitors. There has been a balloon race at Cremorne, and an attractive flower show at the Surrey Zoological, for the benefit of the florists who suffered by the late storms; whilst at Vauxhall the fête on Prince Albert's birthday drew together eight or nine thousand people on Wednesday evening. Fine weather has done all this; and, at the same time, there is evidently a disposition on the part of "the people" to become Parisian in their amusements of this nature.

Queen's College, Birmingham.—The annual meeting of the Governors of Queen's College was held on Thursday in the Theatre of that institution. Mr. G. F. Muntz, M.P., occupied the chair. The report read congratulated the Governors upon the successful progress of the College, and particularly eulogi[illegible]wearied exertions of Mr Sands Cox, the Dean of Faculty, its founder [illegible]cers and Council of last year were re-appointed, and a vote of thanks being passed to Mr. Muntz for his conduct in the chair, the meeting broke up. The proceedings were altogether formal.

The Cobden Tribute.—On Tuesday evening, a special meeting of the Manchester Committee was held, when Mr. Wilson said, the general fund had considerably increased since they last met, and now amounted to £68,650. Of this [illegible] Manchester proper had contributed about £24,300, and the district around [illegible]ster, £16,151; making £40,451. At Liverpool, the amount by that time was about £8000; Preston, £800; Bristol, £1000; London, £12,000; Dundee, £400; Leeds, nearly £1000; Glasgow, about £3000; and Birmingham £2000 Of course, from the agricultural districts, large sums could not be expected, but a considerable number of small subscriptions had been received. The midland county towns were also exerting themselves. Amongst the subscribers were the following members of the Government:—The Prime Minister, £100; Earl Gr[illegible], £100; Viscount Morpeth, £30; Earl Fortescue, £50; the Chancellor of the Exchequer, £100; Mr. T. B. Macaulay, £25; Mr. W. Gibson Craig, £25. Mr. Wilson then alluded with much satisfaction to the reception of Mr. Cobden in France; not only from his Majesty Louis Philippe, but also from the distinguished political economists of Paris, which, he thought, would contribute much to a good understanding between the two countries.

Singular Fraud upon Messrs. Coutts. A singular fraud has been committed upon Messrs Coutts and Co. It appears that a person having a check for £5, increased the amount to £5000 by an obvious alteration, and succeeded in getting Bank-notes. This operation having been accomplished, he lost no time in going to the Bank of England, and changing a part at least of his newly-acquired notes for gold. As yet, we believe, there is no trace of the culprit.

GOSSIP OF THE WEEK.

Every reader of Southey must recollect the Fiery Three in the "Curse of Kehama," and the very unpleasant station which they filled as supporters of the Golden Throne in Padalon:—

> Three human forms sustained its ponderous weight,
> With lifted hands outspread, and shoulders bowed,
> Bending beneath the load.
> A fourth was wanting. They were of the hue
> Of coals of fire; yet were they flesh and blood,
> And living breath they drew;
> And their red eyeballs rolled with ghastly stare,
> As thus, for their misdeeds, they stood tormented there.

The Three Poor-Law Commissioners have lately been standing before the public in a similarly uncomfortable position, bending beneath the burden of their offiue, and tormented by Press and Parliament for their misdeeds, and those of their officials. The evidence given before the Andover Committee is about to stir up fresh fuel for public indignation against the Fiery Three of Somerset Houuse, whose berth will soon, we suspect, grow far too hot to hold them.

Next to this topic, which Whig and Tory, Malthusian and Sadlerian, seize on with equal avidity, the zeal of honourable M.P.'s during the last week has principally displayed itself touching matters of taste. The Duke's Statue haunts senatorial minds like chimeras dire, and very funny ideas and proposals it gives rise to.

The Duke (that is to say the Duke in effigy) is not to be robbed of his ride on the arch at Hyde Park Corner. Lord Morpeth says "he is to be put up experimentally," just as an equestrian novice is put up experimentally on the big horse in the riding school. Or, as horse dealers allow a trial of a living animal, so a three weeks' trial of the stone steed on the top of the gate is to be permitted before the nation is fixed with the bargain. However, in the words of Lord Morpeth, we "do not wish to say anything which would derogate from the experiment;" and only hope that

> When the Arch-Duke doth ride aloft
> May we be there to see.

It is not often that anything very humorous comes from the hon. member for Evesham; but, in this debate about the Arch and its Rider, he certainly gave out the germ of a bright idea, when he said that "they might as well place the statue of the Venus di Medici behind the Speaker's chair." Depend upon it, casts of the first-rate statues might be ranged round the House of Commons, and adapted to the places usually occupied by eminent members with very great effect. Thus the large statue of the Eleusinian Ceres might be placed behind the chief bench of the Pro-Corn-Law orators. The group of Hercules and Antæus might fitly appear near Sir Robert Peel, to commemorate his tardy and difficult victory over the sons and champions of the land. The Fighting Gladiator would make a fit emblem for the pugnacious D'Israeli, though probably he would prefer the Apollo, as typical of himself, when he has just shot off some sarcasm against our late rulers The Farnese Hercules should be near O'Connell, notwithstanding his disclaimer of physical force; and the Bearded Bacchus would make an appropriate neighbour for Mr. Muntz.

We only indicate a few specimens of this symbolical decoration, but we have no doubt but what, during the recess, some intellectual member will prepare some resolutions on the subject.

> Limerick's ancient town,
> Where bould Sarsfield won renown, seems disposed to uphold Smith O'Brien in his rebellion against the mighty Dan. But men have ceased to think much about "Ireland and Repeal," compared to the extent to which their thoughts are now fixed on "Ireland and Potatoes." Would that the stanza were still applicable, which George Colman put in the mouths of his Irish Bards:—

> Ours is an esculent lusty and lasting—
> No turnip, or other weak root of the ground;
> Waxy or mealy, it hinders from fasting
> Half Erin's inhabitants all the year round.

The subject, however, is too painful to dwell on here; and we gladly send our minds on a trip in the Great Western, to watch what scenes Brother Jonathan may be preparing for our edification.

The Yankees seem to be having it pretty much their own way in the New World. California, Yucatan, and a number of other Mexican provinces, with horrible names and worse climates, seem in a fair way of being metamorphosed into new states of the "Great Pattern Republic," which is certainly showing itself a perfect pattern of Republican rapacity. As for war, the business in Mexico does not deserve the name. Indeed, the Spanish race there seems to be as helpless before the Anglo-Saxon as the Aztec was in bygone centuries before the Spanish. Cortes and his followers were scarcely more superior to the native Mexicans, whom they attacked and subjugated, than old "Rough and Ready" (as General Taylor is called) and his riflemen are to the degenerate descendants of the old "Conquestadores."

When a new State joins the Union, the national banner of stars and stripes is immediately decked with a new luminary; and the extent to which a spirit of ambition and aggrandisement now prevails through all ranks of American citizens, may be judged of by the popular toast at their public dinners being, "May the stars bespangling our flag so increase, that there may be no longer any room for stripes." At the same time that we read of this national symptom of Yankee restlessness and thirst for conquest, we see in one of the Liverpool papers a pleasant proof of the notion which these "free and enlightened citizens" entertain of human rights in men whose flesh-colour differs from their own. Some American sailors have been amusing themselves by spitting on and striking a Negro, a Mulatto, and a Hindoo, to uphold the true "Aristocracy of the Skin." The information that our laws admitted no difference between white and black, coupled with as sharp a sentence as a magistrate could inflict, has, we hope, served as a salutary lesson to these slave-holding Liberals of the Far West.

Let America try internal reform, and emancipate her slaves, instead of meddling with her weaker neighbours. This will be a far nobler way of increasing her stars at the expence of the stripes, than will be found in her present career.

AMERICAN STARS AND STRIPES.

Stars of the West, whose fearless flag
Floats o'er th' Atlantic's guardian crag,
From Nova Scotia's realms of cold
To Montezuma's kingdom old,
And shades the far Pacific's coast;
Why seek to swell your glittering host?

It is not number makes ye bright;
'Tis beaming in the cause of Right.
The first among your heavenly band
Dawn'd forth Oppression to withstand.

Why dim them with the rays malign
That o'er Aggression's triumphs shine?

Go, rather, set your bondsmen free,
You vaunting Sons of Liberty!
Let your proud flag no longer wave
Over the scourgings of the slave,
And then the Stripes that stain its field
To holiest Stars may fitly yield.

While the descendants of the Spaniards are exhibiting more and more anarchy and feebleness in the New World, Spain herself, in the Old World, is running wild—very wild indeed: she threatens Portugal, heedless of the recollections of Albujarotta; and, heedless of how much she herself has cause for alarm, if nations are to be at liberty to interfere with their weaker neighbours. A sort of border system of escape and robbery seems established on the Portuguese frontier, so that Gallicia pours its scamps and renegades into Portugal, for which Portugal is by Spain considered the aggressor. Meanwhile, Don Miguel agitates, and Carlists cease not to intrigue.

When a civilised European observes the infinite trouble that is given by uncles and aunts to Kings and Queens, and the extent to which they complicate the succession, he feels almost inclined to eulogise the good old custom of the Turk, who, like the poet Addison,

> Bore no brother near the throne.

Russia sends still from time to time before the world formidable bulletins about what she is doing with the Circassians. But the truth is, that she fares but badly in that struggle.

This is not exactly the St. Petersburg version of the campaign, but it is the true one. Disraeli says the Jews are true Caucasians. We should like to raise Schamil, the Abd-el-Kader of the Caucasus, an auxiliary legion in Monmouth-street and the Minories.

Cabinet Council.—A Cabinet Council was held on Wednesday afternoon, at the Fore[illegible]ce. The Ministers present were -Lord John Russell, the Lord Chancellor, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl of Minto, Viscount Palmerston, Earl Grey, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Earl of Auckland, Sir John Hobhouse, Lord Campbell, the Earl of Clarendon, Viscount Morpeth, the Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay, and the Right Hon. H. Labouchere. Sir George Grey subsequently joined his colleagues. The Council sat two hours and a half.

The Alleged Murder by Two Boys.—At Liverpool, on Monday, James Seddon, [illegible] 17, and Joseph Lean, aged only 12, were tried for the murder of George Ray, in Manchester. We gave some particulars of the case at the time. The Jury acquitted the prisoners.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Lisbon letters of the 15th inst., state that a conspiracy for the overthrow of the existing Ministry had been discovered, and happily frustrated. The 1st Regiment of Lancers, the 16th Foot, and part of the Municipal Guard were to have turned out, and proclaim the Cabral régime; but the plot was discovered in time, and its execution prevented, owing to the prompt measures taking by Count Das Antas, the Military Governor of Lisbon. It is said the conspirators purposed to murder the Duke of Palmella, Sa da Bandeira, and other leading men in power.

The Ministerial Whitebait Dinner took place on Saturday, at Greenwich.

According to a Vienna letter of the 9th, the Pope's Nuncio to the Court of Austria has gone to see Prince Metternich at Konigswart, to make some important communications from his Holiness

Sir Charles Grey has been appointed Governor of Jamaica.

A private letter from Papaete states that fresh hostilities had taken place. The letter bears the date of 11th April: "Taking advantage of the absence of the Uranie, stationed at Uahine, the Kanaks, to the number of 1200, on the evening of the 13th, attacked the village of Papaete and the camp pitched by the crew of the Uranie. The camp was defended by 50 sailors of the Heroine, who eventually beat off the enemy. The French had six killed and 15 wounded, among the latter a midshipman of the Phaeton. The buildings outside the camp were pillaged and destroyed The loss of the Kanaks is not given."

The Nuremberg Correspondent of August 17, announces that Don Miguel, who lived at Albano, in the Roman States, on a pension granted to him by the Pope, had gone to Porto d'Anzi to wait there the arrival of a Portuguese vessel, which was to conduct him to his country, where his party, continues this letter, had some chances of succeeding

One of the largest trains ever seen on a railway left the Rugby station on Friday (last week). It consisted of 84 carriages, and was impelled by three of Stevenson's powerful six-wheeled engines. Its length extended to nearly half a mile, and the weight of merchandise, exclusive of the carriages, was upwards of 240 tons

Private letters from Alexandria of the 10th inst. mention that the officers of the British steamer Avenger, and the Consuls of England, France, and Portugal, dined with Ibrahim Pacha, on the 9th, at the Garden at Gabare. Court carriages had been sent to the bridge of the Mahmoudieh, to convey the English officers to the banquet. On the 10th, the latter, accompanied by M. Boufort, left for Cairo, to visit the Pyramids, and Ibrahim Pacha was to follow them on the 12th. Accounts from the Red Sea announced that the cholera was making ravages along its coast At Medina the deaths amounted to 300 per day, and at Gedda to 25. Four cases had manifested themselves at Suez, which, however, had not proved fatal.

Advices from Constantinople state that a serious riot took place at Erzeroom, on the 25th ult., occasioned by the misconduct of a Persian soldier, and which led to great excitement on the part of the Turks. Another letter from Constantinople, of the same date, speaks of an insurrection which had burst out in the Pachalic of Trebisond, and which appeared spreading to that of Van. Troops had been sent from Constantinople.

The Frankfort Journal inserts a letter from Breslau of the 12th inst., stating that the Abbé Ronge had been condemned to four months' imprisonment for having celebrated divine service in the town of Lachu without the permission of the authorities. It was supposed that the Abbé would appeal against this decision to the Prussian Ministry, and afterwards to the King

The Brazil journals announce that a negro lately found in the diamond district of Bahia a rough diamond weighing nearly an ounce. Its approximative value is £45,000, but it was sold by the finder for £35.

A letter from Chambery, 17th inst., says, that throughout that country the disease in the potato crop has declared itself with greater intensity than last year. The Bishop of Chambery has ordered prayers to be offered up in all the churches of his diocese to avert the evil.

The Emperor of Russia has just ordered that for the future no work concerning himself, or the members of the Imperial Family, shall be published without previous authority. A similar order has already been published in Prussia. At the time of the Empress' journey into Italy some Prussian journals gave some details which were considered as deficient in respect, and they were therefore ordered for the future to confine themselves to what was published in the official journal.

A Vienna letter, of the 18th inst., states that the Austrian engineers, sent to England to examine the atmospheric railroads, having made a favourable report, the Emperor has decided upon constructing a line on that principle from Simmering to Broeck, along the southern slope of the mountain of Simmering

The French papers state that two shocks of an earthquake were felt on the 17th inst. at Mâcon. Three shocks were felt on the same day at Lausanne. The first, in the night, was only felt by a few persons; the second, at seven in the morning, was much more violent, causing furniture to fall down, and doors to open. A third shock followed almost immediately, and caused great consternation among the inhabitants of Lausanne. It lasted five or six seconds. It was also felt at Orbe, Yverdon, and in other localities.

The Voss Gazette contains an answer from Sir Robert Peel to the address transmitted to him a short time back from the town of Elbing. The right hon. Baronet expresses his satisfaction at the approbation with which his late measures had inspired the signers of the address, and enters into a short explanation of the motives which had prompted him to adopt the course of conduct thus approved of

A Correspondent writes on the 13th from Breslau to the New Hamburg Gazette:—"I am able to announce to you, from a source worthy of credence, that a convention has been entered into between Austria and Prussia, in virtue of which these two Powers bind themselves to take care that Germany be not in any way affected in its rights on the Duchies of Schleswick and Holstein. The presence of the King of Prussia at Konigswartz has decided the question.

The very warm weather this summer has been favourable to the growth of cucumbers, no less than two tons of which (a novel way of reckoning this fruit) were brought to Norwich on Tuesday night (last week). They were taken to the market the next morning, and in a few hours nearly the whole of them were retailed at four a penny. They were brought from Bedfordshire, where they are grown in the open air, in great quantities

The Second Chamber of the Grand Duchy of Baden decided, in its sitting of the 19th inst., that a national bank was rendered necessary by the improved condition of the country. It in consequence called on the Government to sanction the formation of such an establishment.

At Southampton, on Saturday, a shopkeeper was fined Eighty Pounds for having 800lbs. of gunpowder on his premises more than the law permits. The informer is the landlord of the premises, who will receive half the penalty.

According to the latest return presented to the House of Lords, the total amount of capital authorised to be raised under the Railway Acts of this session is rather more than £146,000,000. The amount of further capital which the companies are authorised to raise by way of loan, is nearly £34,000,000

We learn from Havre that the potato disease has made its reappearance in that part of the country. After having shown itself in the environs of Montivilliers it has infested the valley of Graville, and may be said to have reached the gates of Havre. At L'Heure the potato fields, which a week ago were luxuriant, have now entirely changed their appearance. The stalk and leaves have assumed a reddish hue, and are fading away. The Progress of Cauchois represents the disease as being no less rife in the environs of Fecamp.

Algiers journals of the 19th give a satisfactory account of the state of the colony. Abd-el-Kader was reported to be at Kasbah-Kroum, a small town on the road from Fez to Ouchda. His Deira had been increased by a number of tents dispersed among the Beni Snazzems. He was still endeavouring to gain over some of the emigrant tribes, but met with little success.

A company is being established in London to supply the community with bread, to be made from the best wheaten flour, at 4d. the four-pound loaf, which will include a profit of five per cent., as well as the actual cost of material, wages, &c. Their capital is to be £200,000.

A Deputation from the Committee appointed by the Commissioners, respecting the Pavilion at Brighton, had an interview last Monday with Lord Morpeth, in whose hands, as First Commissioner of the Woods and Forests, the management of this question is placed. The deputation were received by his Lordship with the greatest courtesy, and every disposition was manifested to meet, as far as possible, the wishes of the inhabitants; but the deputation left the noble lord with the impression that it is the full determination of the Government to carry out the design of selling the Palace.

Lord John Russell has given his opinion that it is objectionable to publish an account of the number of stamps issued to newspapers

During the week ending the 23rd instant, the number of persons passing between England and France was—At Boulogne, 2367; at Calais, 537; total, 2904

The Waterford Mail records another gratifying instance of the progr[illegible]f improvement in Ireland; it is the launch of an iron steam-ship, built in W[illegible]ord, at a cost of £18,000, and with engines of 220-horse power, on the di[illegible]t action principle.

The King and Queen of the Belgians, the Duke of Brabant, and the Count de Flandre, went on Sunday at ten o'clock to Antwerp. They went to the [illegible]hibition of paintings, where the King desired to see several artists, with whom [illegible]ir Majesties conversed with great affability. In the room allotted to en[illegible]vings, his Majesty stopped a considerable time before two splendid engravings in wood, by Mr Henry Brown, Professor in the Academy. The King desired to see him, and their Majesties complimented him in the most flattering terms.

Last Saturday there was a meeting of the labourers lately employed on the partly finished lines, when it appeared that a great number of them had received notice to hold themselves in readiness, at the end of the present month, to proceed to Spain, where a long work has been promised them, as well as liberal pay. The majority of them are married men, and have large families.

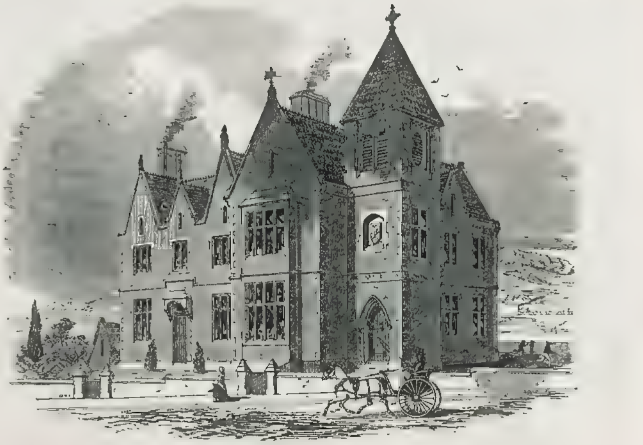
It appears from a Parliamentary return, that the expenses which have been incurred by the Charity Commission in each year, from the commencement, in 1818, to the final termination, in 1838, amounted to £261,826 1s. 0½d. There are nineteen periods embraced in the return.

The Commissioners of the Northern Lights have, after an interval of three years, resumed operations, preparatory to the erection of a beacon on the "Ebbstone," a rock which has long proved a dangerous and fatal trap in the track of the trade between the Mersey and Clyde.

NEW GRAMMAR SCHOOL AT CHESTERFIELD.

THE borough of Chesterfield, in Derbyshire, had its grammar or free school, founded in the reign of Elizabeth, and well attended for a long period. It was under the management of the Corporation, who seem, however, scarcely to have respected the munificence of their ancestors; for, in 1832, the school was closed, owing to the affairs of the Charity being in Chancery. At length, the prospect brightened, when the old structure was ascertained to be in such a state of decay, that it became necessary to take it down, and rebuild it.

The architects chosen for this purpose were Messrs. Patterson and Hine, of Nottingham, from whose design the building engraved above, has been erected, on the site of the old school—a beautiful spot in the outskirts of the town, and commanding a fine view of the Derbyshire hills. The new edifice is of stone, and in the early pointed style of English architecture. The plan comprises two lofty school-rooms, 44 by 18 feet, with masters' residences, and excellent accommodation for boarders. On the south side is a tower, containing the staircase to the upper school-room, and a chamber for a clock and bell. The work has been most substantially executed, and is a pleasing architectural group.



NEW FREE GRAMMAR SCHOOL, AT CHESTERFIELD.

GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—The half-yearly Meeting of this Corporation was held on Tuesday, at their offices, 69, Lombard-street; Mr. Wilkin in the chair. A Report from the Directors, and a statement of the accounts for the half-year ending the 30th of June last, were read to a large assemblage of the proprietors. The Report was very satisfactory, the result of the last half-year's operations rivalling that of the most prosperous the Company ever had. After declaring the usual dividend, the cordial thanks of the Proprietors were voted to the Chairman and to the Directors for their unabating zeal in the promotion of the Company's interests.

A CENTENARIAN AND SOMETHING MORE.—Mr. Matthew Pearson, the oldest inhabitant of the town of Knaresborough, is now in the one hundred and eleventh year of his age, and, wonderful to relate, notwithstanding his great age, he continues in full possession of his faculties. He can read without the aid of spectacles, and can at any time walk between the towns of Harrogate and Knaresborough, a distance of three miles, without any assistance whatever. This modern Old Parr resides with his son-in-law, Mr. T. Hemsley, near the Anchor Inn, in the High-street. He was born in the parish of Pannall, and for a long period kept a public-house there, known by the sign of the Black Bull, and followed the occupation of a common carrier between Leeds and Knaresborough. -Halifax Express

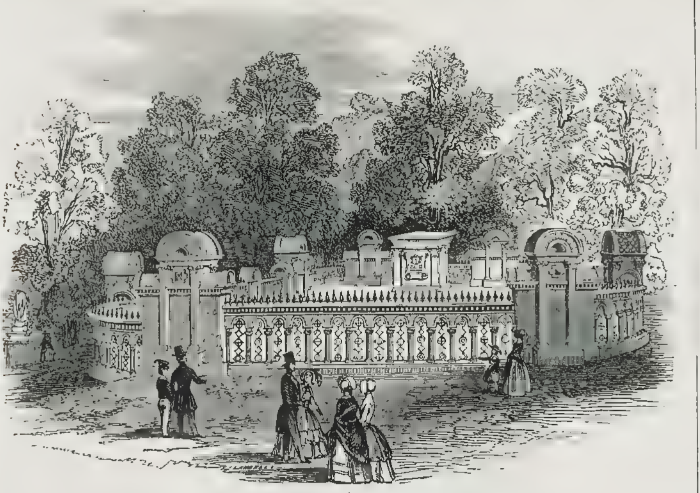
FUNERAL OF THE LATE SIR CHARLES WETHERELL.—At the hour of eleven on Tuesday morning, the remains of the late Sir Charles Wetherell were deposited in the vault of the Inner Temple Church, appropriated for the interment of the Benchers of that Society, of which Sir Charles was the senior member. The arrangements were of a strictly private character The relatives who attended his remains to the grave were—his brothers, the Rev. Richard Wetherell and Archdeacon Wetherell; his brother-in-law, Mr. Richard Spooner, M.P.; and the Rev. Edward Rowden, and his nephews, the Rev. Richard Lane Freer, and Mr. Nathan Wetherell.

TOMB OF THE LATE MR. BECKFORD, AT BATH.

THIS artistical monument to the Author of "Vathek," and the architect of Fonthill Abbey, and Lansdown Tower, was prepared during his life-time, from a design of his own suggestion. It was placed in the garden at Lansdown, wherein Mr. Beckford wished that his remains might rest; but, as some difficulty arose in obtaining the consecration of the ground, this idea was relinquished; and, at the wish of Mr. Beckford's daughter, her Grace the Duchess of Hamilton, the tomb has been placed in the Cemetery, at Bath, where the man of genius lies sleeping.

The Tomb is hewn out of a solid block of the finest Peterhead granite; the top slab or cover is, also, in one piece. Upon bronze scrolls are borne the date of the death, &c, and quotations—one from a poetical prayer by Mr. Beckford; and the other a passage from "Vathek."

The monument is inclosed with metal-work, designed by Mr. Goodridge, the architect, in the Byzantine style, so as to harmonize with the Norman chapel of the Cemetery, and the cloisters proposed to be added. The metal-work has been executed by the Coalbrook Dale Company, and is one of the finest specimens of iron-casting in the country.



TOMB OF MR. BECKFORD, IN THE CEMETERY AT BATH.

STATE CABIN OF THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA'S NEW YACHT.

IN our Journal of June 20th, we engraved the launch of this splendid Yacht, built for the Emperor of Russia, by Mr. Joseph White, of Cowes. We are now enabled to present to our readers a view of the interior of the State Cabin, which, for the exquisite taste of its fittings, has been the admiration of all who have inspected it.

The State or Main Cabin is 23 feet square, and 6 feet 10 inches in height under the beams. It is fitted with bird's-eye maple and rosewood; each alternate panel being filled with a picture of Yachting (principally at Plymouth), Russian ships saluting, &c.; the subjects, ten in number, painted by Mr. N. M. Condy, the characteristic fidelity of whose marine sketches has so often graced the pages of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. The mantel-piece is of greenish-blue marble; above it is a mirror; and on each side is a mahogany door. The furniture is of rosewood and crimson velvet, except the arm-chairs, which are finished with figured green velvet; the carpet is of various shades of red. In the centre of the Cabin is a patent expanding table, which, with the upholstery throughout, is of the finest manufacture.

On Monday, the 17th instant, her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Duchess of Kent, and the Royal suites, inspected this fine Yacht, prior to its proceeding to St. Petersburg.

Mr. Joseph White, the builder, and Mr. Powell, the commander of the Yacht, received her Majesty at the gangway. Lord Mount Edgecumbe, being an invalid, was nevertheless on the quarter-deck. Her Majesty, after taking a view of the vessel's deck, addressed a few complimentary words to his Lordship on the fine appearance of the Yacht, who disclaimed all merit to himself as regarded its construction, beyond the internal arrangements. His Lordship, by permission of her Majesty and the Prince, introduced Mr. White to them, both of whom most condescendingly entered into a lengthened conversation with the builder, and afterwards inspected the arrangements below. His Royal Highness requested Mr. White to accompany her Majesty over the Yacht, and explain to them the various departments, which he had the honour to do. Her Majesty and the Prince appeared to take great interest, and remained below nearly a quarter of an hour inspecting the internal fittings of the Yacht, and eventually expressed themselves highly pleased, and passed a very high eulogium on her talented builder.

The illustrious visitors, after remaining on board the Yacht about half-an-hour, returned to the Barge, which proceeded towards the bow of the Yacht, to enable the Queen to have a view of her own bust, which forms the figure-head, and is a most excellent likeness. Her Majesty appeared to be highly pleased with its execution, but indulged in a most hearty laugh, probably at the idea of its probable constant exposure to the inclemency of the weather

On leaving the Yacht, her Majesty was greeted with the loud and hearty cheers of the crew, who, from captain to cook, are all Welchmen, and noble looking fellows.

On Monday last, the Yacht proceeded out of the Harbour; and, in the evening, being ready for sea, got under way, having on board Mr. Sims, the Baltic Pilot, who will have charge of her as North Sea Pilot. At her departure, she hoisted the new Imperial Yacht Flag, which is very similar to the St. George's Ensign.

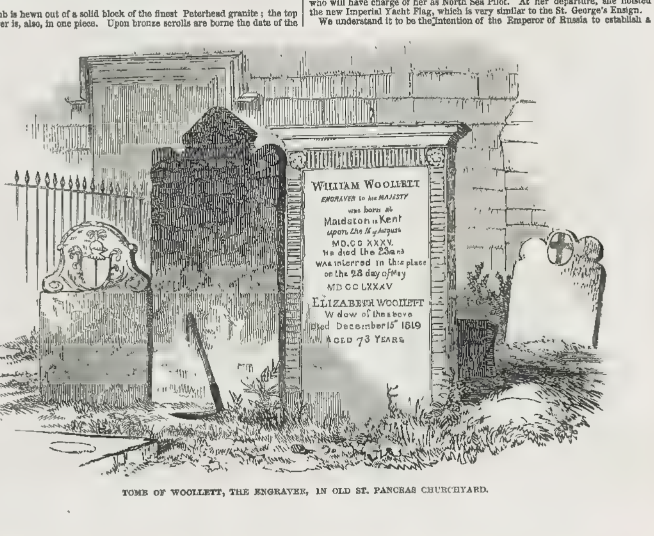
We understand it to be the intention of the Emperor of Russia to establish a

RESTORATION OF THE TOMB OF WOOLLETT, THE ENGRAVER.

WE have been interested to learn that the Tomb of William Woollett—who ranks at the head of the English school of engraving—has lately been restored at the expense of the Graphic Society.

Woollett died in London, in 1785, and was buried in Old St. Pancras Churchyard; there is a monument to him in the cloisters of Westminster Abbey; but this memorial has the character of a mausoleum in comparison with the head and foot-stones which mark the engraver's "narrow home" at St. Pancras. The inscription on the head-stone had become almost illegible; when the Graphic Society stepped in, and directed the work to be restored at their expense; a worthy tribute to the memory of Woollett, who must be considered as the founder of our school of Landscape Engraving, which, since his time, has been carried to the highest perfection of art. And, as the extensive distribution of pictures by means of engraving has most materially tended to improve taste, as well as greatly to assist in the diffusion of knowledge, we look upon Woollett as a great benefactor to his country; and this mark of respect which has just been paid to his memory is highly commendable to the intelligent Society of Artists with whom it originated.

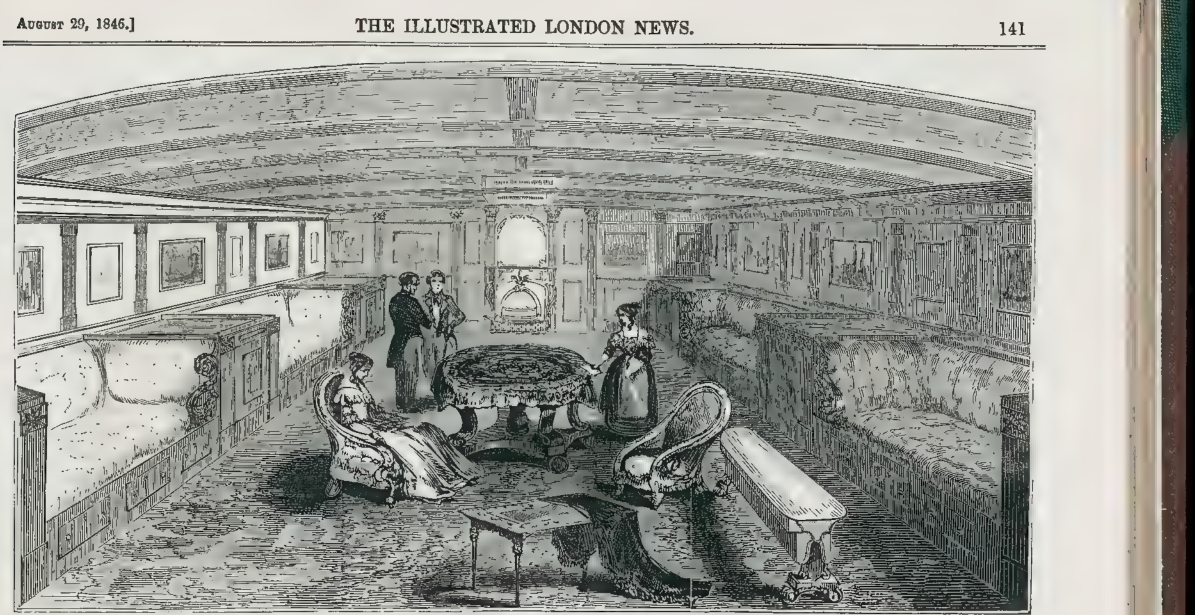
Woollett is spoken of as a man of admirable character and a very amiable disposition. The following anecdote, said to have been told by West, evinces an extraordinary degree of perseverance and patience. Woollett, when he had finished his plate of the "Battle of the Hogue," took a proof to West for his inspection: at first, the President expressed himself perfectly satisfied with the plate; but, upon a longer examination, he observed that in some parts alterations might be made, and in others additional colour might be added, which would, in his opinion, improve the effect of the whole; and, taking a port-crayon with black and white chalk in it, he showed in a few minutes the effect he wished to be produced, remarking at the same time that it was of no great consequence, but it might improve the appearance of the plate. Woollett, however, immediately consented to make the alterations and additions pointed out: "But, how long will it take you, Mr. Woollett?" said the President. "Oh! about three or four months," replied the engraver. "And the patient creature," said West, when relating the circumstance, "actually went through the additional labour without a murmur."



TOMB OF WOOLLETT, THE ENGRAVER, IN OLD ST. PANCRAS CHURCHYARD.

ARTISTIC AND LITERARY REUNION.—On Saturday last, Mr. Britton, F.S.A., entertained at the Castle Hotel, Richmond, a large party of artists, men of science, and letters. After dinner, which was served in the best style of the establishment, the leading toasts were—Friendship, given by Mr. Britton; Literature, responded to by Mr. Jerdan; Art, by Mr. T. Uwins; and Science, by Mr. T. Bell; and the company separated after an evening of delightfully intellectual festivity. Among the guests we noticed Sir W. Ross, R.A.; Mr. T. Uwins, R.A.; Mr. D Roberts, R.A; Mr. W. Harvey; Mr. C. E. Wagstaff; Mr. T. Bell, F.R.S; Mr. J. E. Gray, F.R.S.; Mr. G. Godwin, F.R.S.; Mr. W. Jerdan, F.S.A.; Mr. T. Crofton Croker, F.S.A.; Mr. P Cunningham; Mr. Brayley, F.S.A.; and several other personal friends of Mr. Britton, during his extended and honourable career.

PUBLIC INCOME AND EXPENDITURE.—Returns have just been laid before Parliament relative to the public income, expenditure, &c., for some years past. It appears from them that the public income of the United Kingdom was as follows: In 1843 it was £56,935,022; in 1844, £58,590,217; and in 1845, £57,602,268. The expenditure was, in 1843, £55,501,740 (leaving a surplus of £1,433,283); in 1844 it was £55,103,647 (leaving a surplus of £3,486,570); and in 1845 it was £58,872,063 (leaving a surplus of £3,729,205). In 1843 the expenses attending the national efforts for the abolition of slavery (such as bounty on slaves, commissioners to prevent the traffic in slaves, "bills drawn on account of captured slaves," &c.), amounted to £1,760,463; in 1844, to £1,733,328; and in 1845, to £1,568,451.



STATE CABIN OF "THE QUEEN VICTORIA" YACHT, BUILT FOR THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA.

Grand National Yacht Club; and his Imperial Majesty has himself commenced by the construction of this Vessel.

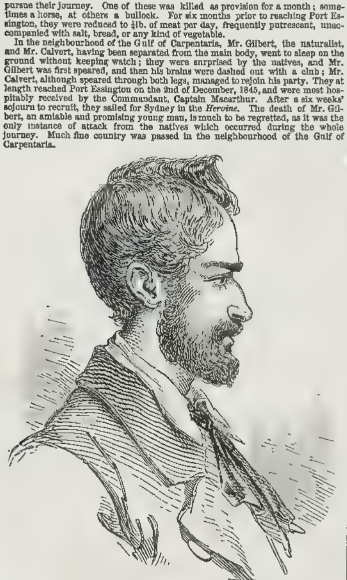
RETURN OF DR. LEICHARDT FROM PORT ESSINGTON.

BY the courtesy of a Correspondent, we have engraved a Portrait of this enterprising traveller in Australia; of whose safe return to Port Essington, after sixteen months' journey in the Desert, a recent Indian Mail brought intelligence to the Royal Geographical Society.

Dr. Leichardt, accompanied by Mr. Gilbert, a naturalist, and six others, started from Moreton Bay in October, 1844, to penetrate to Port Essington, in order, if possible, to open a direct route to Sydney, right across the country. Various reports arrived at Moreton Bay in the spring of 1845 of the party having been cut off by the natives. To ascertain the truth of this report, an expedition was sent out in August last, under the command of Mr. Pemberton Hodgson, who traced the party for a distance of 400 miles, far beyond the place of their supposed massacre: Hodgson's party were ultimately compelled to return with only the hope of the probable safety of the adventurous explorers, who have at length brought their journey to a successful termination.

Dr. Leichardt found it impossible to penetrate into the interior in a direct course, on account of high table-land and the absence of water: this circumstance compelled him to keep within six or seven degrees of the coast. Their six months' provisions being exhausted, their only resource was the horses and stock bullocks, and with these the strictest economy was necessary to prolong life and pursue their journey. One of these was killed as provision for a month; sometimes a horse, at others a bullock. For six months prior to reaching Port Essington, they were reduced to ¼lb. of meat per day, frequently putrescent, unaccompanied with salt, bread, or any kind of vegetable.

In the neighbourhood of the Gulf of Carpentaria, Mr. Gilbert, the naturalist, and Mr. Calvert, having been separated from the main body, went to sleep on the ground without keeping watch; they were surprised by the natives, and Mr. Gilbert was first speared, and then his brains were dashed out with a club; Mr. Calvert, although speared through both legs, managed to rejoin his party. They at length reached Port Essington on the 2nd of December, 1845, and were most hospitably received by the Commandant, Captain Macarthur. After a six weeks' sojourn to recruit, they sailed for Sydney in the Heroine. The death of Mr. Gilbert, an amiable and promising young man, is much to be regretted, as it was the only instance of attack from the natives which occurred during the whole journey. Much fine country was passed in the neighbourhood of the Gulf of Carpentaria.



DR. LEICHARDT, THE TRAVELLER IN AUSTRALIA.

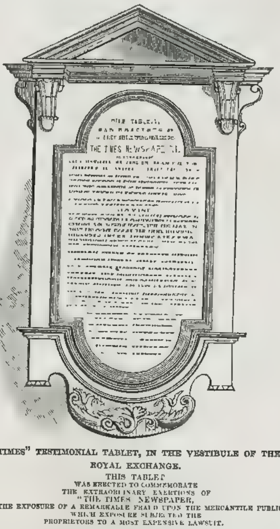
We quote this from a recent communication in the Times.

"I think," says Dr. Leichardt, in concluding his narrative, "the most important results of my expedition are the discovery of the Mackenzie, the Isaacks, the Downs of Peak Range, and the Suttor; that of a communication between the east coast of Australia and of the east coast of the Gulf of Carpentaria, along the river, with running water through a fine country; that of the Nonda Country, and of the Big Plains at the east side, and at the head of the Gulf; that of a communication between Limmenbight and the South Alligator River, along running streams and creeks. The future will show how far the country along the Big Rivers between the head of the Gulf and Limmenbight is available."

"THE TIMES" TESTIMONIAL.

AN interesting tribute to the manly independence and high character of The Times newspaper has, with the permission of the Joint Gresham Committee, just been erected, by public subscription, in the New Royal Exchange. It consists of a neat mural tablet of white marble, surmounted with a bold projecting pediment, supported on sculptured Italian trusses; the block, sustaining the whole, being richly ornamented with classic foliage. The Tablet is placed in the vestibule of the Exchange, under the clock, by the entrance to the Subscription Room of the Merchants and Underwriters; and opposite to the spot on which the marble statue of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, as having laid the foundation-stone of the Royal Exchange, is to be set up.

The Monument was opened to the public on Thursday, the 20th inst., by the Lord Mayor, Mr. Masterman, M.P., Mr. Alderman Wilson, Mr. Alderman Hughes, and a Sub-committee appointed for the purpose; when the greatest admiration was expressed by all present of the manner in which Messrs. Piper (the sculptor), had erected the very handsome and appropriate design of Mr. Tite; and, on the suggestion of the Lord Mayor, it was resolved that the sculptors' and architect's names should be inscribed on the Tablet. The following is a copy of the inscription:—



"THE TIMES" TESTIMONIAL TABLET, IN THE VESTIBULE OF THE NEW ROYAL EXCHANGE.

THIS TABLET
WAS ERECTED TO COMMEMORATE
THE EXTRAORDINARY EXERTIONS OF
"THE TIMES" NEWSPAPER,
IN THE EXPOSURE OF A REMARKABLE FRAUD UPON THE MERCANTILE PUBLIC,
WHICH EXPOSURE SUBJECTED THE
PROPRIETORS TO A MOST EXPENSIVE LAWSUIT.

At a meeting of merchants, bankers, and others, held at the Mansion-house on the 1st day of October, A.D. 1841, the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor in the chair, the following resolutions were agreed to, videlicet —

"That this meeting desire to express, in the most unqualified terms, its sense of the indefatigable industry, perseverance and ability shown by the proprietors of the Times newspaper in the exposure made, through the instrumentality of that journal, in the trial of 'Bogle v Lawson,' of the most remarkable and extensively-fraudulent conspiracy ever brought to light in the mercantile world.

"That this meeting desires to offer its grateful acknowledgments to the proprietors of the Times newspaper, for the services which they have thus been the means, at great labour and expense, of rendering the commercial community throughout Europe.

"That the effect of such exposure is not only highly useful to the commercial and banking community, as suggesting additional care and circumspection in all monetary dealings, but as showing the aid which a public-spirited and independent journal has in its power to afford in the detection and punishment of offences which aim at the destruction of all mercantile confidence and security.

"That the Committee now appointed be empowered to take measures for the purpose of recording, in a more permanent manner, the sense of obligation conferred by the proprietors of the Times on the commercial world.

The proprietors of the Times refusing to be reimbursed the heavy costs incurred by them in the defence of the above mentioned action, the Committee opened a subscription, which amounted at its close to £2700; and, at a meeting held at the Mansion-house, on the 9th day of February, A.D. 1842, specially summoned for the purpose of considering the application of the amount subscribed, it was resolved as follows.

"That 150 guineas be applied to the erection of this Tablet, and of a similar one to be placed in some conspicuous part of the Times printing establishment.

"That the surplus of the fund raised be invested in the purchase of Three per Cent. Consols, the dividends to be applied to the support of two Scholarships, to be called 'The Times' Scholarships.

"That 'The Times' Scholarships' be established in connection with Christ's Hospital and the City of London School, for the benefit of pupils proceeding from those institutions respectively to the Universities of Oxford or Cambridge.

"That Christ's Hospital and the City of London School be required to place in their respective institutions a tablet commemorative of the establishment of such Scholarships."

All which has been duly carried into effect.

(Then follow the names of the Committee, headed by the Right Hon. Sir JOHN PIRIE, Bart., Lord Mayor, Chairman and Treasurer.)

The Lord Mayor, Mr. Masterman, Aldermen Wilson and Hughes Hughes, accompanied by Messrs. Tite and Piper, afterwards proceeded to Printing-house-square, to remove the covering from the Tablet bearing the same inscription, erected by order of the subscribers in The Times office. This Tablet is an oblong panel, of beautiful veined marble, introduced over the frontispiece forming the architectural decoration of the principal entrance to The Times office, and has been so designed as to harmonise with the general façade of the building. The Lord Mayor and the other gentlemen having expressed their unqualified approbation of the manner in which the directions of the committee of subscribers had been carried into effect, were conducted over The Times' establishment, and inspected the four printing machines, one of which, recently erected, throws off the almost incredible number of 6,000 double sheets per hour.

GOLD; OR, THE HALF-BROTHERS.

BY CAMILLA TOULMIN.

CHAPTER V.

Her voice was like the voice of his own soul
Heard in the calm of thought. SHELLEY.

Mrs. Clifford and her second daughter had departed for the theatre; and Hester, the eldest, had retired, as was her custom so often, to her own chamber, either to induge in wild and gloomy reveries, or shadow them forth with the pencil. Margaret was alone, and she sat for a while near the open window, in that dreamy mood in which the senses are cognisant of all that passes though the mind may wander far away. To be sure there was very little in the aspect of that quiet street to distract her attention from engrossing thoughts. The postman, it is true, passed on the other side of the way with his quick step and impatient knock every now and then, but he brought no letters there; and the ringing sound of children's glad voices floated from the open drawing-room windows opposite, in token that a Father was returned from his daily labours—a Father who could unbend his mind to meet their baby glee and dear caresses. Margaret could see the little urchins climb and cling about him; and the mother, in the early summer of her years, wait smiling and patiently till they had evinced their noisy welcome, sure herself of the last and warmest greeting.

It was a picture of domestic happiness that the heart deciphered, and which contrasted forcibly with Margaret's lonely and desolate home—for companionless she was. Of her two sisters, one was an object of deep and painful pity; the other, impulsive and changeable, was absorbed in a profession with which Margaret had little sympathy, seeing as she did, nothing but its trickeries and its mockeries. The poetry and power of acting as a branch of Art were not yet revealed to her.

She had sat in this dreamy listless mood a considerable time—for the needle work on which she had been engaged had fallen unheeded on her lap—when she was aroused by a slight tap at the door, and the next instant Trevor Sefton entered the room. He came for a book of which they had been speaking a day or two before, and which Margaret had promised to lend him; at least, so he said, and so he thought; though, after lingering with her nearly an hour (it did not seem a quarter the time), he went away without the volume after all!

They had arrived at a significant stage in their intercourse. The easy unsuspecting frankness of pleasant friendly companionship was fast melting away. Though not a word had passed between them that the vainest being could have interpreted as expressive of personal regard, there was a consciousness in the heart of each that would make itself felt; and yet they were very far from the full deep confidence which only belongs to acknowledged love. General topics of conversation somehow or other commonly became personal, and there was a slight constraint of manner, and occasional averting of the eyes, which made the gathering twilight anything but disagreeable. Conversation was much less fluent than it had been a few weeks before, and yet that hour seemed but a few minutes; and when at last he started up to take leave, there was a lingering pressure of the hand, neither resisted nor resented by Margaret, that—perhaps, made him forget the book for which he had come!

When the door was closed Margaret again sank into her ch[illegible], and mused until the soft twilight deepened into night. But her reverie, [illegible] so calm as before, was also less sad. The strange chaotic feelings which had hitherto rather disturbed her mind than anything else, would now take the beautiful shapes of Love and Hope. But then came, like a shadow across the brightness, the bitter consciousness that they were both Poor, and in this worldly world Love is thought to be a luxury fit only for the Rich.

From instinctive knowledge rather than experience Margaret Clifford had told her friend that Love was an "ennobling sentiment;" and already was she beginning to prove the truth of her own words. Never had she felt so brave to meet the capricious temper of her mother, as she did that night, when Mrs. Clifford returned especially out of humour, partly because she had had an inferior box allotted to her, and partly because the new piece had been a failure. She was too cross to notice the wretched depression of Susan—or if she did observe it, no doubt she attributed her low spirits to the reprimand she had herself administered, and to the dissatisfaction expressed by the manager. The rôle apportioned to her was one of rather more importance than those she had been accustomed to sustain; and at rehearsal she had appeared to enter fully into its spirit, and adapt herself admirably to the part. Alas! when night came she was like a lifeless clod: never had she acted so feebly.

But Margaret was not so easily deceived. She felt there must be a cause for the failure, instead of the failure being the cause of the unutterable anguish depicted in the poor girl's face; and in the silence of night, when their mother had fretted herself to sleep, and Hester had sunk into a fitful slumber, she wrung from her sister the history of her secret grief.

Strange, within twenty-four hours to be made the confidante of two love stories: yet so it was. In her misery, Susan laid bare her heart: it was too late to be warned or advised, all she now asked was sympathy and compassion; these she knew her sister would bestow. But if she calculated only truly on her tenderness and affection, she also was aware of her clear judgment and unswerving principles; and, acting as a thousand others have done in similar circumstances, she had refrained from revealing passing events, while pursuing a wrong and imprudent course. Borne onwards as if by an intoxicating dream, she had not dared to seek the counsel which her heart told her must awake her to a darker reality.

It was a very common story. Flattered, and at first, perhaps, only amused by the eloquently-expressed admiration of a stranger—for her fickle lover was, by her own account, self-introduced—in the end, her fancy, if not her heart, had been captivated. The theatre afforded but too many facilities for carrying on a clandestine correspondence, in which she had become involved; in short, she had lived for months in a world of her own imagination, believing in a love, and truth, and honour, that existed nowhere else. That night, while dressing for her new part, she had received one of the scented satin-paper billets she was so well accustomed to recognise. But how different were its contents to anything she had expected! Expressions of devotion there were—such as a non-inventive genius might copy from a Minerva-Press novel—a plentiful sprinkling of "cruel fate" and "stern necessity," with mysterious allusions to pistols and prussic-acid. But, when Susan Clifford found, at the conclusion, that the "cruel fate" resolved itself into the "stern necessity" of marrying a lady possessed of a considerable fortune —"an event which she would, probably, find very soon announced in the papers"—she had common sense enough left to dismiss all fears of the writer proving a suicide.

But, though indignation and contempt might struggle for the mastery in her heart, they could not prevent the wreck and ruin of that beautiful fabric her woman's nature had built. Is there much wonder that, in the new play, she had seemed like a lifeless automaton, rather than the spirituelle actress?

The heartless letter was signed with the single initial "F."; and Susan refused to tell her sister who the writer really was.

"No, Margaret," she exclaimed, "spare me that confession. Let the secret be buried in my own heart; so that if, in the strange chances of life, we should ever meet, you may not have to blush for me, even if I find cause to blush for myself. It is a great satisfaction to me that he is in ignorance of my real name, knowing me only by that which I have assumed as an actress. Ah, you may look at the seal," she added, with a faint smile, "that tells no tales, for it is a very common one."

"You are wrong, dear Susan; I am 'herald' enough to know that the crest and quarterings are very uncommon. Were I so mean, I might wrest your secret from you with very little trouble by the help of this seal; but be assured I will not." And, as she spoke, she returned the letter to her sister.

"To think of heraldry being turned to such an account as that!" cried Susan; "well, your head seems filled with all sorts of out-of-the-way bits of knowledge. I wonder if you will ever find room in it for love and folly. Nay, you need not change colour at the mere idea. But, Margaret," she continued, after a pause, and the tears again flowing, "won't it be dreadful if I lose my engagement? Mr. ——— had calculated on the piece being a hit, and I have ruined it. What will become of me? I am fit for nothing but the stage. And just, too, as I was getting on, and making my way up the ladder."

The fears of the young actress were only too truly realised. Her engagement was by the week, and the next Saturday she received her dismissal.

If the household of the Cliffords was very miserable when, at least, there was a sufficiency of means coming in for their daily expenditure, imagination better than words may picture what it became when the chief prop was removed and new anxieties crowded thickly around them. It is justice, however, to Mrs. Clifford, to own that, like most ill-tempered persons, she bore real troubles infinitely better than imaginary ones; and, having found the safety-valve of hatred and indignation against the manager, her daughters experienced less of her wrath than they would have done under happier circumstances. And yet she loved them—in her way.

Weeks passed on. Margaret had taxed her strength to the utmost, and had taken additional pupils, to eke out their narrow means. She had really had very little time to devote to Catherine Joyce, and the interviews she had had with her friend had left rather a painful impression on her mind than otherwise, and yet she would have found it difficult to say why it was so. That she might arrange for her additional labours, and as the summer was drawing on, Margaret now began her avocations rather earlier than before; and, on her arrival one morning, she was met at the door by Mrs. Joyce, who was in tears, and she saw in an instant that the whole household were in terror and dismay from some sudden affliction.

"Oh, Miss Clifford," exclaimed Mr. Joyce, "I have sent a messenger to hasten your coming; you, perhaps, can give us some help, some clue, to point whither my daughter has fled."

"Fled! Catherine gone!" cried Margaret, in horror and amazement.

It was but too true; fled, as a letter she left on her table declared, to become that morning the wife of Frederick Drayton. Probably by accident, or perhaps on purpose, another letter was left behind, one from him to her, but it contained neither date nor address, and Mr. Joyce knew not the home of a mere acquaintance, whom, when invited to his parties, he had always addressed at his club.

But a strange discovery was at hand. The letter was shown to Catherine, and in an instant she recognised the hand writing and the Seal as identical with those of her Sister's fickle wooer! She uttered a cry almost of joy as she exclaimed

"I can save her—I can—I can."

"Perhaps—if you can find her before it is too late," said Mr. Joyce mournfully, "but where to seek I know not."

Margaret pressed her hand to her brow. She was trying to recall the dim memory of the address she had seen for an instant, when her friend had besought her to post the letter.

She experienced the common sensation of knowing she should recall it by-and-by; but it seemed as if there were a weight, an accumulation of more recent events, to be removed from her brain first. And, what was worst of all, she could not command words to explain what she was trying to remember, or to describe—even if she had wished to do so—the subtle chain by which she [illegible] that she could unmask the double deceiver.

At last, the half-forgotten address dawned upon her. But, when she gave it, they hardly knew what she meant.

"I will go; I will show you; come with me," she exclaimed; and, scarcely waiting for Mr. Joyce to find his hat, she rushed from the house. Infinitely lighter of foot than that portly personage, she kept in advance of him, sometimes half a street's length; and, though the distance altogether that they traversed was but short, many were the heads turned to look at the hurrying pair.

At last she reached a certain street—approached a certain number: there was a carriage at the door. Breathless with running, Margaret Clifford darted up the steps, and knocked loudly. The door was opened in a moment; for Mr. Drayton, dressed as a bridegroom, and accompanied by a friend, was just being ushered out. Margaret seized his arm, in the excitement of the moment, crying, "In time to save her!" And at this instant, just before Mr. Joyce came up, Trevor Sefton passed by, saw there was some strange scene enacting, recognised Margaret, and beheld her familiar action!

(To be Continued.)

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

Fatal Accident in a Powder Mill, in Scotland.—On Tuesday morning (last week), a fearful occurrence took place at the Kames Powder mills, on the Kerry side of the Kyles of Bute (Argyleshire.) The workmen were just about to commence operations in the corning-house, where the powder undergoes the operation of sieving, and where, consequently, a large quantity is gathered, when, by some unaccountable accident, this portion of the building was in a moment blown into the air. The workmen, five in number, shared the fate of the building; and their mutilated remains were found scattered at a great distance. A workman who was at some distance, although severely bruised, is still alive, but is not expected to survive. The scene is described as having been awfully grand. The report was so loud as to be heard at Inverary, a distance of forty miles.

Mysterious Case. On Tuesday an inquest was held at Greenwich before C. J. Carttar, Esq., on the portion of the body of a female found off Ship Dock, on Saturday. The Jury proceeded to view the remains, which had been deposited in the bone-house, and which presented a sad spectacle, having apparently been imbedded in the mud for several months. The upper portion of the body above the breast bone was wanting. Henry Spriggs, waterman, at Greenwich, found the mangled remains. The only clothing on it was the boots; there were no stockings on. Mary Casey deposed that she resides in George-street, St. Giles's. She had a daughter by her former husband, named Catherine Donovan, about 21 years of age. She was an unmarried woman. The last time she saw her alive was on Easter Sunday, about four o'clock in the afternoon; nor did she know what had since become of her. When she left home she was dressed in a new striped cotton dress, stays, petticoats, new cotton stockings, boots, and a [illegible]cy pattern shawl. She saw the body and knew it to be that of her daughter by the particular position of the toes. Mary Quindon, cousin to the deceased, deposed that about four o'clock on Easter Sunday she saw the deceased pass her door. Three young men accosted her, and asked her to go to Greenwich with them. Her cousin told her what the young men had proposed, when she advised her not to go, as they were strangers to her, and she had no money in her pocket. One of them pulled out a quantity of silver, and told her she should not want for anything. The young men then went across the street to a public-house, and witness went in doors. In about ten minutes after she saw deceased and the young men in company, repass her house, when she said she was going to see an acquaintance, and should shortly be home. Witness went and told her mother, never having known her keep company with any young man. She has since, upon two occasions, seen one of the young men in Wardour-street, and she believes he lived at No. 71, in that street. Could swear to deceased's boots, as she was with her when she bought them, on the Saturday before Easter Sunday, and was with her when she put them on, when, having broken one of the silk laces, witness gave her a cotton one. The boots found on the body were produced, and compared with another pair bought at the same shop by the last witness. They were examined by one of the Jury (a shoemaker), who pronounced them to have been bound by the same person, and that they were evidently a new pair of boots, and had not been worn more than one day. The Coroner said he should adjourn the case, in order that there might be a surgical examination. The inquiry was, therefore, adjourned until Tuesday next.

Collision on the Brighton and Hastings Railway.—On Monday afternoon, a collision occurred on this line, at a place called Pevensey Sluices, about two miles beyond the Pevensey Station. Adjoining that spot is a pit whence the materials for ballasting are drawn, and parallel with the railway is a "siding" upon which the waggons, in order that the line may be kept clear, are drawn while being loaded; and it is the duty of the engineer when he takes a train upon this siding to see that the points leading to it are turned, so as to prevent any following train passing upon it. On the day above mentioned, about one one o'clock, an engine and a train of ballast waggons were upon this siding, and the engineer had neglected to see that the points were turned off; and when the half-past twelve o'clock train from Brighton came up, and the engine-driver seeing the points improperly placed, endeavoured to stop the train, but was unable to do so, as it was going at the rate of twenty miles an hour, it came into violent collision with the standing train in the siding. The engines came in contact, the buffer beams of both were much broken, the tender of the passenger train was thrown off the line, and the engine-driver and stoker were both thrown out. The driver suffered some contusions in the ribs, and the stoker was much scalded and burned. None of the carriages were thrown off the line, but several of the passengers were bruised and hurt. Some had their teeth knocked out, whilst others had their faces cut; and we regret to add that a clergyman, the Rev. Mr. Brown, had one of his legs broken. Fortunately, there was a surgeon in the train, Mr. H. R. Wotton, of Fitzroy-square, who promptly attended the unfortunate gentleman, had him removed to an inn in the neighbourhood, and at once set the limb, and he was removed to Hastings by a special train the same night. Dr. and Mrs. Hamilton, of Grafton-street, Piccadilly; Mr. and Mrs. Jeffrey Nightingale, of Norbiton, Surrey; and Mr D'Egville, of London, were seated together in one of the second-class carriages. When the collision took place they were all thrown forward. Dr. Hamilton had his knee severely injured, Mr. Nightingale lost several of his teeth, his leg was severely bruised, and he remained insensible for nearly an hour. Immediately after the accident, a messenger was sent to Lewes for another engine, the engines which came into collision being both disabled; but, before one could be obtained, the two o'clock train from Brighton arrived at the spot, and the passengers were thus conveyed to their several destinations.

Suicide at Cheltenham. We regret to learn that Sir Justinian Vere Isham, Bart., a resident of Cheltenham, blew his brains out on Tuesday last. The unfortunate deceased was about thirty years of age, and had but lately succeeded his father in the title and estates. He was rather eccentric in his habits and turn of mind, and it is presumed that melancholy induced him to the committal of the rash act.

The Recent Deaths from Eating Poisonous Berries.—On Wednesday afternoon, Mr. William Baker, Jun., resumed the inquest at the London Hospital on the bodies of Thomas Parker and Samuel Jones, the two persons who died in the above institution from eating berries of the belladonna, or deadly nightshade. The Jury returned a verdict of Manslaughter against John Hilard, who sold the berries, for gross and criminal negligence, and want of due caution. The second case, that of the child Samuel Jones, was adjourned until Monday.

Mysterious Robbery at the Berwick-upon-Tweed Bank.—A robbery of a large sum of money was effected at the North of England Joint Stock Bank, Berwick-upon-Tweed, on Thursday (last week), which created considerable sensation there. The amount of gold and silver missed was said to be £3000. A ladder was found placed against the yard wall, as if for the purpose of getting over the wall, but as no impress from the ladder was discovered in the soil upon which it was rested, and it having been ascertained by experiment that the weight of an ordinary person on it caused it to sink to a considerable depth, it was at once concluded that no one had passed into, or from, the yard in that direction, or by means of it. Even then suspicion was not at once directed towards the inmates of the house. Subsequently, however, Mr. Cameron, the police officer of Tweedmouth, who, in conjunction with Mr. Proudfoot, of Berwick, were aiding in the investigation, happened to look into a water-butt in the yard, and, observing the water had been disturbed, he put his stick in, and found something soft and bulky at the bottom. He drained the water off, and then he discovered two packages, in strong brown paper, with a coarse towel round them. These turned out to be parcels of silver, which had been made up in the bank on the afternoon of Thursday. Mrs. Thompson, the wife of the manager of the bank, came into the yard with others, when it was known these parcels had been found, and, among other remarks, said, "she hoped the whole of the money would be found." It was evident, from various circumstances, that the robbery had been effected by a party or parties well acquainted with the bank. On Monday, accordingly, the authorities procured the assistance of a blacksmith and joiner, in order thoroughly to gut the house. This fortunately was not necessary, as £300 in gold and the remaining portion of the silver were found in the kitchen, secreted under the stairs. Meanwhile, other parties were examining the bedrooms, and in that occupied by Mrs. Thompson the whole of the notes were recovered. There were £1000 Bank of England notes, £830 in notes of Scotch banks of various denominations above £1; and £6[illegible]3 in ditto of £1 each, and all these were discovered sewed up in the bolsters and bedding of Mrs. Thompson's bed. Every farthing, therefore, amounting to very nearly £3000, has thus been recovered in a surprisingly short period. Mrs. Thompson, on being apprised of the discovery, was taken ill; she was, however, taken into custody, though allowed to remain in the house under the care of one of the matrons of the Berwick gaol. What future steps may be taken will depend upon the decision of the bank directors.

New Coventry-street and Cranbourn-street.—On Saturday morning, these thoroughfares, forming a direct line of communication from Piccadilly, through Leicester-square, to Long acre, were opened for the passage of vehicles, having been closed during the relaying of the roadway.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange (Friday).—The arrivals of English wheat for our market during the present week have been small, and we had a very limited number of samples of that article h[illegible] to-day; yet, owing to the prevailing fine weather for harvest work in the north of England, the demand was in a very sluggish state, at, in most instances, a decline of 1s per quarter. In foreign wheat—the holders of which evinced a disposition to give way in price—next to nothing was doing. No new barley at market. Grinding sorts were quite as dear. In other kinds next to nothing was pas[illegible] Malt was in fair request at previous quotations, but other qualities commanded very little attention. Although the arrivals of foreign oats were large the oat [illegible] steady, at previous quotations. Beans, peas, and flour without alteration.

Arrivals. English. wheat, 2760; barley, 350; oats, 690. Irish Wheat, — barley, —; oats, 1200. Foreign: wheat, 2210, barley, 3010; oats, 26,490. Flour, 1840 sacks; malt, 180 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 48s to 55s; ditto white 54s to 62s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 44s to 53s; ditto white, 44s to 58s, rye, 30s to 34s; grinding barley, 24s to 27s, distilling, 26s to 28s, malting ditto 30s to 32s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt 56s to 62s, brown ditto, 51s to 53s, Kingston and Ware, 62s to 63s; Chevalier, 63s to 64s, Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed [illegible] otato ditto, 31s to 34s; Youghal a[illegible] 6s to 37s; ditto old, [illegible]

The Seed Market.—The [illegible] and prices are well supported.

Linseed, English, sowing, 55s to 60s, Baltic, crushing, 38s 9d to 41s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 41s to 42s. Hempseed, 36s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 14s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 7s to 8s; white ditto, 6s to 7s 6d. Tares, 5s 6d to 7s 0d per bushel. English Rapeseed, new, £21 to £22 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 to £11 10s; ditto, foreign, £7 10s to £8 10s per 1000, Rapeseed cakes, £5 0s to £5 2s per ton. Canary, 46s to 52s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, 46s to 50s, extra, 25s to 55s; white, 60s to 62s, extra, up to 68s. Foreign, red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread. The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis, are from $7\frac{1}{2}$d to 8d; of household ditto, 6d to 7d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat 45s 11d; barley, 27s 5d; oats, 23s 3d, rye, 30s 10d; beans, 39s 9d; peas, 36s 9d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 47s 5d; barley, 27s 3d; oats, 23s 5d; rye, 30s 10d; beans, 39s 3d, peas, 36s 2d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 10s 0d; barley, 4s, oats, 1s 6d; rye, 4s; beans, 4s 0d; peas, 4s 0d.

Tea.—This market has been in a very inactive state, yet we can notice no alteration in value. The deliveries are moderately extensive.

Sugar.—Owing to the large public sales only a moderate business has been transacted in the private contract market, and prices have ruled somewhat in favour of the buyers. Standard lumps are selling at 64s per cwt.

Coffee. Good ordinary Ceylon may be purchased at 41s, but there are very few buyers. In all other kinds of coffee very little is doing.

Rice.—This article moves off freely, at an advance of quite 6d per cwt.

Provisions.—Irish butter is in good request, at a further advance in value of from 2s to 3s per cwt. Carlow and Clonmel, landed, is held at 86s to 92s, Cork, 85s to 87s; Limerick, 84s to 86s and Waterford 82s to 85s per cwt. On board, or for forward delivery—owing to the high prices demanded by the shippers—very little is doing. Although the supply of English butter is very large, the best Dorset is producing 96s to 100s; middling and inferior, 90s to 94s; and Devon, 90s to 92s per cwt. Fresh is rather lower—many sales having been made at 11s to 12s per dozen. Foreign butter moves off steadily, at from 96s to 102s for the best marks. The best parcels of bacon are 2s to 3s per cwt. dearer. Waterford sizeable, 52s to 70s; heavy, 52s to 58s; Limerick, sizeable, 52s to 60s, and heavy, 51s to 57s per cwt. The market is active for prime hams, but other kinds are a dull sale. The best parcels command 70s to 80s per cwt. Lard is 1s to 2s higher. Prime Waterford, bladdered, is selling at 70s to 72s per cwt. All other kinds of provisions are quite as dear.

Tallow.—Holders of Russian evince firmness, and prices are well supported. New P.Y.C. from the scale has sold at 41s 9d to 42s; and prime old, 41s 6d to 41s 9d per cwt. Town tallow firm.

Oils.—This market is very steady, at full prices.

Hay and Straw.—Old meadow hay, £3 5s to £4 0s; new ditto, £2 5s to £3 15s; old clover, £4 5s to £5 16s, new ditto, £3 10s to £5 0s; oat straw, £1 12s to £1 14s; wheat straw, £1 14s to £1 16s per load.

Potatoes. The supplies of potatoes are on the increase, and the quotations have a downward tendency.

Coals (Friday).—Hasting's Hartley, 16s; Holywell Main, [illegible] Tanfield, 12s 6d; Ord's Redheugh, 13s; Tanfield Moor, 15s; Wylam, 14s 6d, Gosforth, 14s 6d; East Hetton, 14s 6d; and Stewart's, 15s 9d per ton.

Hops (Friday).—Several pockets of new hops have come to hand during the present week from Sussex, and which have been disposed of at £6 per cwt. From the plantations the accounts are very favourable, and the duty is backed at £180,000. Sussex pockets, £4 10s to £5 16s. Weald of Kent ditto, £5 0s to £6 6s; Mid and East Kent ditto, £5 12s to £8 8s per cwt.

Smithfield (Friday.)—The supply of [illegible]sts on offer here, to-day, was by no means extensive, yet the beef trade was in a very inactive state, and, in some instances, the quotations had a downward tendency. We had on sale 61 oxen, from Spain, via Southampton, 42 oxen from Hamburgh; 115 oxen and cows, 887 sheep and lambs, and 55 calves from Holland, in, for the most part, good condition. The numbers of sheep were not large; while the mutton trade was very steady, at fully Monday's currencies. In lambs, only a moderate business was doing, yet prices were well supported. Prime small calves sold at a trifle more money, but the middling and inferior qualities of veal hung on hand. The pork trade was dull, at [illegible] rates. Milch cows moved off slowly, at from £16 to £18 each, including their small calf.

Per 8lb. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 8d to 2s 10d, second quality ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 4d; prime large oxen, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 10d to 4s 0d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 6d to 3s 10d, second quality ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; prime coarse-wooled ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime South Down ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; large coarse calves, 3s 6d to 4s 6d; prime small ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 8d; large hogs, 3s 8d to 4s 6d; neat small porkers, 4s 8d to 4s 10d, lambs, 4s 4d to 5s 4d. Suckling calves, 18s to 29s; and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 19s each. Beasts, 772, cows, 124; sheep and lambs, 9180; calves, 345, pigs, 240.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a very steady trade here to-day, and prices were well supported.

Per 8lb. by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; middling ditto, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; prime large ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 4d; prime small ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d, large pork, 3s 4d to 4s 0d; inferior mutton, 3s 0d to 3s 4d, middling ditto, 3s [illegible] to 3s 8d, prime ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 2d, veal, 3s 6d to 4s 6d; small pork, 4s 2d to 4s 8d; lamb, 4s 4d to 5s 4d.

Robt. Herbert.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English Market, during the early part of the week, was very inanimate, and, for want of other employment, the jobbers and brokers occupied themselves with the preparations for settling. On Thursday, money being very easy, and the account comparatively trifling, it became, as was anticipated, a very unimportant affair. Upon the closing of the old account, Consols were immediately quoted at an advance for the next, when the following notice became generally public:—

"Bank of England, Aug. 27, 1846.

"The minimum rate of interest on bills discounted by the Bank of England, not having more than ninety-five days to run, will for the future be 3 per cent."

This announcement, although arriving late in the market, gave an immediate impulse to prices. Consols improved about $\frac{3}{8}$ per cent. upon the day's quotation, and the market closed buoyantly at the following rates: Three per Cent. Reduced Annuities, $96\frac{3}{8}$; Three per Cent. Consols Annuities, 96; New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cent. Annuities, $98\frac{1}{4}$; Long Annuities, Expire Jan. 5, 1860, 10 7-16; Ditto 30 years, Oct. 10, 1859, $10\frac{1}{4}$; India Bonds, under £1000, 19; South Sea Old Annuities, $95\frac{3}{8}$; Consols for October 14, [illegible] Exchequer Bills, 13 to 17.

The Foreign Market has been nearly deserted, fluctuations having only occurred in Portuguese and Mexican. The latter improved nearly one per cent. upon the purport of Lord Palmerston's speech arriving in the City. This rise has been well maintained since, although business has been limited; and, on Thursday, [illegible] was the closing quotation. Portuguese improved a shade on Wednesday, and have not since receded. In the other Securities, no change worthy of remark has taken place. The Market, however, closes more buoyantly, in consequence of the Bank announcement. Brazilian Bonds, Five per Cent., [illegible]; Mexican Bonds, for the Account, 2[illegible]; Portuguese Four per Cent., $42\frac{1}{2}$; Spanish Bonds, Five per Cent., for the Account, 26; Ditto, Passive Bonds, $5\frac{3}{8}$; Ditto, Three per Cent., [illegible]; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cent., 5[illegible]; Ditto, Four per Cent. Certificates, 94.

During the early part of the week, dulness and absence of business were the chief characteristics of the market. A better feeling, however, has since been apparent, arising from the reduction in the rate of interest announced by the Bank of England. It is conceived that the time of pressure is past, as such a reduction would not have been made for a period merely temporary, as the Directors are possessed of the best information with regard to monetary affairs both here and on the Continent. A rise in the value of all bonâ fide undertakings is now confidently anticipated, and the closing prices which are annexed, already indicate a tendency to advance. Aberdeen, $8\frac{1}{4}$. Ambergate, Nottingham, Boston, and Eastern Junction, 2[illegible]. Birmingham and Gloucester, 128; Ditto New (issued at $7\frac{1}{2}$ discount), $3\frac{3}{4}$; Birmingham and Oxford Junction [illegible]. Bristol and Exeter, New, $10\frac{1}{2}$; Buckinghamshire, $\frac{1}{2}$ dis.; Caledonian, 15[illegible]. Ditto, Half Shares, [illegible]. Cambridge and Oxford [illegible]. Cornwall 1; Direct Northern, $1\frac{1}{4}$; Eastern Counties, [illegible]; Ditto, New, $7\frac{1}{2}$ pm.; Ditto, York [illegible] stol, $2\frac{1}{2}$, East Lancashire, $22\frac{3}{4}$; Edinburgh and Glasgow Quarter Shares, $17\frac{1}{2}$; Goole, Doncaster, and Sheffield, &c., $\frac{1}{2}$ dis.; Grand Union (Nottingham and Lynn), $\frac{5}{8}$; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), [illegible]; Great North of England, [illegible]; Ditto, New, 50; Great Western, $146\frac{1}{2}$; Ditto, Half Shares, 8[illegible]; Ditto, Quarter Shares, $22\frac{1}{2}$; Hull and Selby Half Shares, $50\frac{1}{2}$, Ipswich and Bury St. Edmund's, $8\frac{1}{2}$; [illegible] Leeds and Bradford, 68; Liverpool, Manche[illegible] London and Brighton, $63\frac{1}{2}$; London and Croydon, [illegible] Western, $206\frac{1}{2}$, Ditto, Quarter Shares, 24; Ditto, Quarter New Shares, 15 pm; London and South-Western, 74; Ditto, New Consol. Eighths, 56; Ditto New, [illegible]; London and York, [illegible] Ditto, Half Shares, [illegible]. Manchester and Leeds, Half Shares, 53; Ditto, Quarters, $8\frac{3}{4}$; Ditto, Fifths, $10\frac{1}{4}$, Ditto Extension, $2\frac{1}{2}$; Manchester and Birmingham, Quarter Shares (A), $13\frac{3}{4}$; Ditto, Quarter Shares [illegible], Manchester and Southampton, 1; Midland, 139. Newcastle and Darlington Junction, $42\frac{1}{2}$; Ditto, New, $11\frac{1}{2}$; Newcastle and Berwick, 28; Norfolk, $26\frac{1}{2}$; North British, $38\frac{3}{4}$; Ditto, Half Shares, $16\frac{7}{8}$; Ditto, Carlisle [illegible] sion, 4; North Staffordshire, [illegible]. Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 8; Richmond, 19; Scottish Central, $19\frac{1}{2}$; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, [illegible] Shropshire Union, $\frac{1}{2}$ dis.; South Midland, [illegible]; South Eastern and Dover, [illegible], Ditto, New (do. £15) $3\frac{1}{2}$; South Wales, 4[illegible]. Swans. and Loughor and Cameron's, —; Vale of Neath, $1\frac{1}{4}$; Waterford and Kilkenny, [illegible]; West Riding Union, 3 p; York and Carlisle, $\frac{1}{2}$; York and North Midland [illegible]; Ditto East and West Riding Extension, $12\frac{3}{4}$; Boulogne and Amiens, —; Bordeaux, Toulouse and Cette (Mack[illegible]), $1\frac{1}{2}$; Ditto, ditto (Espelete), 1; Dutch Rhenish, $5\frac{7}{8}$; East Indian, $\frac{7}{8}$; Jamaica South Midland Junction. Northern of France Constituted 13; Orleans and Bordeaux $8\frac{3}{8}$, Paris and Lyons Constituted, [illegible]. London and Westminster, $26\frac{1}{2}$. Mines Real del Monte, Unregistered [illegible].

Saturday Morning.—[illegible] and Foreign Markets were buoyant yesterday, at the previous day's prices. In the Share Market, Eastern Counties quoted 23 ex div.; and Foreign Shares were better.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, AUGUST [illegible]

WAR-OFFICE, AU[illegible]

1st Foot [illegible] C. Pugh to be Ensign, vice Shadwe[illegible] [illegible]nt. W. Domville to be Captain, vice Adamson; Second Lieut. H. P. T. Wood[illegible] to be First Lieutenant, vice Domville; Ensign J. F. Shadwell to be Second L[illegible] Woodington [illegible] Sir H. O. R. [illegible] Chamberlain, Bart., to be [illegible] Lieutenant, vice Lord Greenock [illegible] Lieut. A. F. Lord Greenock to be Adjutant, Colour-Sergeant R. Fortune to [illegible] Quartermaster. 30th. Lieutenant R. B. Jennings to be Lieutenant, vice Wh[illegible] Ensign G. L. R. Berkeley to be Lieutenant, vice Jennings [illegible] Rice to be Ensign, vice Berkeley. 7th. F. Stead to be Ensign, vice Per[illegible] [illegible] Lieutenant C. S. Glazbrook to be Captain, vice Pearson, [illegible] sign C. G. Richardson to be Lieutenant, vice Glazbrook; R. G. Augustus de Montmorency to be Ensign, vice Richardson. Lieutenant J. W. Armstrong to be Adjutant, vice Glazbrook. 63rd: Lieut. C. E. Fai[illegible] to be Captain, vice Brevet Major Oliver. To be Lieutenants: Ensign H. M. Walmsley, vice Ford; Ensign J. Spier, vice Mahon; Ensign H. White, vice Walmsley. To be Ensigns: H. E. Quin, vice Spier; S. Fairtlough, vice White. 71st: Sergeant-Major J. Taylor to be Quartermaster. 79th: Captain J. Ferguson to be Major, vice Lawrie; Lieut. A. Hunt to be Captain, vice Ferguson; Ensign K. H. Maitland to be Lieutenant, vice Hunt; E. G. Place to be Ensign, vice Maitland. 85th: Ensign G. Thompson to be Adjutant, vice Knox.

Cape Mounted Riflemen: Lieut. R. O'Reilly to be Captain, vice Sandes; Ensign W. Harvey to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]; [illegible]ant-Major J. Harvey to be Ensign, vice W. Harvey.

UNATTACHED.—Brevet-Major [illegible] Major.

COMMISSARIAT.—[illegible] Thomas Stickney to be Deputy Commissary-General.

MEMORANDUM.—The Christian names of Ensign King, of the 6th Foot, are Henry John and his surname Newton King.

BANKRUPTS.—W. POUNELL, High-street, Poplar, grocer. H. WOOLCOTT, Museum-street, [illegible] King William-street, lamp manufacturer. J. HUMFREY, Hockley, Warwickshire, coal-dealer. J. BRINDLEY, Coventry, laceman. J. BOLAND, Manchester, hardwareman. R. YATES and T. H. WILLIAMS, Manchester, merchants.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.

J. HAY, Kilsyth, grocer. A. BROWN, Edinburgh, commission agent. M. GILMOUR and CO., Cowgate, cabinet-makers. R. GLASS, Greenock, merchant. A. BARBOUR, Johnstone, spirit-merchant.

FRIDAY, AUG. 28.

At the Court at Osborne House, Isle of Wight, the 27th day of August, 1846, present, the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty in Council, her Majesty in Council was this day pleased to appoint the Right Hon. Gilbert Earl of Minto, Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal, to be a Member of the Committee of Council to superintend the application of any sums voted by Parliament for the purpose of promoting Public Education.

WHITEHALL, AUG. 26.

The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Seal appointed by the Treaty of Union to be made use of in place of the Great Seal of Scotland, nominating and appointing John Earl of Stair to be Keeper of the said Seal.

DOWNING STREET, AUG. 25.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Oliver Byrne, Esq., to be Surveyor for her Majesty's Settlements in the Falkland Islands.

BANKRUPTCY ANNULLED.—J. BUSH, Blackman-street, Surrey, victualler.

BANKRUPTS.—T. MERCER, Albury, Surrey, dealer. J. GRANT, Wellington-street, Woolwich, printer. W. SMITH, Tanners-hill, New-town, Deptford, potato dealer. S. HAWLEY, Ashton-under-Lyne, Lancashire, grocer. P. O'HANLON, Liverpool, draper. [illegible] WILKINSON, Liverpool, fruiterer. W. LONGHURST, Old Brompton, carpenter. [illegible]TON, Llanelly, Carmarthenshire, brick maker. R. B. LINE, Plymouth, carpenter. [illegible] Chapstow, Monmouthshire, currier. R. MADDOCK, Rock Ferry, Cheshire, [illegible] Liverpool, saddler. R. GILL, Black-banks, Darlington, Durham, brick-manufacturer. [illegible]DINER, and F. R. T. CRISP, Wellington-street North, Strand, printers. [illegible]-street, Poplar, grocer. H. BROWN, Ferdinand-terrace, Hampstead Road, surgeon. [illegible] HALL, Bank-chambers, Lothbury, stock-broker. T. BROOKS, Great Percy-street, Lloyd-square, Pentonville and Abchurch-lane, City, boarding-housekeeper. T. P. WEBB, Balsham, Cambridgeshire, coal-merchant. J. BURBRIDGE and R. BURBRIDGE, Upper Whitecross-street, grocers. S. READING, Birmingham, button-manufacturer. E. WILLIAMS and T. ROBERTS, Birmingham, builders. G. E. PHILIPS, Birmingham, japanner.

BIRTHS.

At [illegible], the wife of John H. Drummond Hay, Esq., of a son.——At Glenfeulan, Gareloch, Dumbartonshire, the lady of Colonel P. Edmonstone Craigie, C.B., aide-de-camp to her Majesty, of a daughter.——Mrs. Robinson, of Maryland Point, Stratford, Essex, of a son.——At Clarence-terrace, Regent's Park, Mrs. Macready, of a daughter.——On the 10th of April, District of Bathurst, New South Wales, Mrs. Mathew Thomas Pratt, of a daughter.——The wife of Dr. Mullinder, of Westmoreland-place, Camberwell, of a daughter still-born.——At Larnica, the lady of Niven Kerr, Esq., Her Britannic Majesty's Consul for the Island of Cyprus, of a daughter.——In Eaton place, the lady of Captain Gladstone, R.N., M.P., of a daughter.——At Hampstead, the wife of the Rev. Dr. Saunders, of Charter House, of a daughter.——On the 24th instant, at 14, Montague-square, the lady of P. D. Pauncefort Duncombe, Esq., Jun., of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

At Aberdour, James Lysaght, Esq., to Adeline Jannetta Douglas, fifth daughter of the late Major-General Beatson.——At Harpenden, Herts, Henry Thompson, Esq., to Ma[illegible] third daughter of Henry Oldaker, Esq.——At Notting-hill, John Callcott Horsley, Esq., to Elvira, eldest daughter of William Walter, [illegible]

DEATHS.

On the 21st instant, the Rev. John Nottidge, [illegible] of East Hanningfield, and of Ashenden, Essex.——At New Cross, Josias Stansfeld, Esq., one of her Majesty's [illegible] of the Peace for the county of Kent.——At Shelton Rectory, Bedfordshire, [illegible] Dame Crofts.——At Slough, Bucks, Mrs. Henry, relict of the [illegible] Esq.——At Bath, Robert C. Scones, Esq.——Aug. 18, at Bradford, Wilts, aged 81, [illegible] of the late Mr. Thos. Chapman.——At Barton Hall, Norfolk, Jane, relict of the late Sir T. [illegible] Preston, Bart.——At Llanfair Crossenney, Monmouthshire, Frances Elizabeth, widow of the late Mr. Sergeant Taddy.——In Upper Harley street, Daniel Stuart, Esq., of Wykham-park, in the county of Oxford, aged 80.——At his house, in Mornington-place, Hampstead-road, Mr. Alfred Freebairn, the engraver.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W. BATTY.—Under the especial patronage of her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Royal.—Immense Novelty! An Entire Change! Fresh Additions to the Company. On MONDAY NEXT, August 24, and every Evening during the Week, will be presented the highly popular Drama of THE MERCHANT FIEND; or, The Flight of Damon. Calanthe, Mrs. Morton Brooks; Damon, Mr. J. Harwood; assisted by the whole of the numerous Company. Double Stud and Rare Quadrupeds. Magnificent SCENES of the HIPPODROME, by the French, German, and British Professors. The whole concluding with, for the last six nights, the Drama of THE NAMELESS.—Box-Office open from 11 to 5. Commence at 7. Stage-Director, Mr. T. Thompson.

STRAND THEATRE.—A party of Gentlemen, admirers of Dramatic Art, and advocates of fair play, feeling disgusted and indignant at the Un-English and Unmanly Treatment of Mr. GREGORY at the Haymarket Theatre, have taken this, the only house in the Metropolis at present available, and, through their Acting Manager, Mr. Davidson, have invited Mr. GREGORY (who has consented to appear) to perform for a limited number of nights, with the assurance that he shall have, what every actor is entitled to, a clear stage and a fair hearing. The public is respectfully informed that this theatre is in course of preparation for the representation of some of Shakspere's Plays, and will—every exertion being used to produce them in an efficient manner—be opened on MONDAY, with the Tragedy of OT[illegible] Kate O'Brien, Miss M[illegible] £1 11s 6d. Boxes and Pit Stalls, 4s. Pit, 2s. Gallery, 1s.

VAUXHALL OPEN EVERY NIGHT EXCEPT SATURDAY.

VAUXHALL.—On THURSDAY NEXT, A GRAND NAVAL GALA, under the most distinguished patronage. The Gardens will be most brilliantly illuminated. Devices of a Nautical Character will be displayed in front of the Quadrangle, and the Union Jack will be seen in all quarters. The Fireworks, by Darby, will be on a scale of magnificence hitherto unattempted. Arrangements are making with many professionals to do justice to the SONGS OF DIBDIN. It will be a Gala worthy of the patronage of the Jolly Tars of Old England, the defenders of her Wooden Walls.

Admission, 2s. Doors open at Half-past [illegible]

COLOSSEUM.—THE DAY EXHIBITION consists of the Panorama of London, Museum of Sculpture, Arabesque Conservatories, Gorgeous Gothic Aviary, Classic Ruins, Swiss Cottage and Mont Blanc, with Mountain Torrent, &c.—[illegible]

EVENING EXHIBITION.—The new and extraordinary Panorama of London by Night, with [illegible]nal atmospheric effects every half hour, Museum of Sculpture, Conservatories and [illegible]us Gothic Aviary, &c., brilliantly illuminated, Swiss Cottage, Mont Blanc, and Mountain Torrent, represented by Moonlight. Open from Seven till Half-past Ten. The whole projected and designed by Mr. W. Bradwell. The Grand Mexican Aloe still in Bloom. No Extra Charge.

THE WILD MAN OF THE PRAIRIES; or, "WHAT IS IT?" NOW EXHIBITING at the EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY. Is it an Animal? Is it Human? Is it an Extraordinary Freak of Nature? or is it a legitimate member of Nature's works? Or is it the long-sought for Link between Man and the Ourang Outang, which Naturalists have for years decided does exist, but which has hitherto been undiscovered? The Exhibitors of this indescribable Person or Animal do not pretend to assert what it is. They have named it the WILD MAN OF THE PRAIRIES; or, "WHAT IS IT?" because this is the universal exclamation of all who have seen it. Its features, hands, and the upper portion of its body are to all appearances human; the lower part of its body, the hind legs, and haunches, are decidedly animal! It is entirely covered, except the face and hands, with [illegible] hair of [illegible] It is larger than an ordinary sized man, but not quite [illegible] "WHAT IS IT?" is decidedly the most extraordinary being that ever astonished the world. It has the intelligence appertaining to humanity, and can do anything it sees done, or anything which man or animal can do, except speak, read, or write.—Hours from 11½ to 1, 3½ to 5, and 7½ to 9. Doors open a quarter of an hour previous. Admission, One Shilling. Children and [illegible]en, Half-price. Exhibition to commence Monday, Aug. 31, 1846.

INVENTORS and DEPOSITORS of WORKING MODELS, and of other Specimens of the Useful Arts, as well as the Visitors of the ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION, are respectfully informed that the Directors have given their anxious consideration to the new appointment of DEMONSTRATOR in MECHANICS, whose duty will be to explain to the Visitors the Principles and Uses of the above Specimens with clearness and simplicity. The Lectures now comprise the ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH, as well as other objects of present interest. The beautiful Optical Instruments, &c. &c. Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price.

TO AMATEURS OF MUSIC.—NOW READY,

THE MUSICAL HERALD, Parts 1, 2, 3, and 4, price only 10d. each, consisting of Select Vocal and Instrumental Music, with entertaining and instructive Musical Literature. Edited by G. HOGARTH, Esq. The cheapest of all Musical Works hitherto published are extravagant compared with the price of the Musical Herald. On an average, the cost of admired Airs and choice Pieces will not amount to One Farthing each. Published also in Weekly Numbers [illegible]

To be had of all Booksellers and News Agents throughout the United Kingdom.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, AND AVOID, addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic.

By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c.

SHERWOOD, 21, [illegible] street; HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street; MANN, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 10, Argyll-place, Regent-street.

COMPANION TO THE PEERAGE.

Now Ready, complete in [illegible], royal 8vo., price £2 10s., bound, beautifully printed in double columns, uniformly with the "Peerage and Baronetage,"

MR. BURKE'S HISTORY OF

THE LANDED GENTRY, [illegible] Dictionary of the Whole of the Untitled Aristocracy of England, Scotland, and Ireland.—This important national Work has been undertaken as a Companion to Mr. Burke's popular "Dictionary of the Peerage and Baronetage," and upon a similar plan, in order that the two publications may embrace the whole body of the British Peerage, Baronetage, and Gentry, and may furnish such a mass of authentic information, in regard to all the principal families in the kingdom, as has never before been brought together. It re[illegible] the Untitled Families of Rank, as the "Peerage and Baronetage" does to the Titled, [illegible] forms, in fact, a Peerage of the Untitled Aristocracy. It embraces the whole of [illegible] interest. The Landed Gentry of England are so closely connected with the stirring [illegible] its eventful history, that some acquaintance with them is a matter of necessity with [illegible] lator, the lawyer, the historical student, the speculator in politics, and the curious in topographical and antiquarian lore; and even the very spirit of ordinary curiosity will prompt a desire to trace the origin and progress of those families whose influence pervades the towns and villages of our land. This Work, abounding in interesting anecdote, and displaying deep research, must rank among the first class of those publications which elucidate or connect themselves with the annals of our country, and is indispensable to the library of every gentleman. N.B. Purchasers of single Parts of this Work are advised to complete their sets without delay, as the Parts will only be sold separately for a short period.

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street. Orders received by all Booksellers.

PRICE EIGHTEEN PENCE.

A COMIC PANORAMA. By "LEECH."

ACKERMANN and CO., Strand, and all Booksellers.

TO CHESS AMATEURS.—See No. 9, Vol. 7, of the CHESS PLAYER'S CHRONICLE for September, price only 1s. This number, in addition to its general store of Chess miscellanies, will, this month, be found to contain a splendid collection of Match Games; Games played Blindfold; Games, by M. M. Horwitz, Kieseritzkij, Harrwitz, Staunton, &c. &c.; Masterly Problem, by a Native Indian Player; Chess in the Provinces, &c. &c.—HURST, 26, King William-street, Strand.

NEW WEEKLY JOURNAL OF CHEMISTRY AND PHARMACY. No. I. of

THE PHARMACEUTICAL TIMES; A Journal of Chemistry applied to the Arts, Agriculture, and Manufactures, will appear on SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 5th. Price 5d., stamped 6d. In addition to original articles [illegible] units, with a careful review of Foreign and Home Chemical Intelligence, Course of Chemistry applied to the Arts and Manufactures, by the celebrated DUMAS; and of Practical [illegible] by Mr. WARRINGTON, will be given in the first number.—Office, 49, [illegible]

EUGENE SUE'S NEW NOVEL.

MARTIN THE FOUNDLING; or, THE ADVENTURES of a VALET-DE-CHAMBRE, appears regularly in the FAMILY HERALD, the most popular periodical of the day. The New Part, price 6d., contains, also, The Nieces—A Wedding Race—Riminsky, by Frances Brown—The Pilot—and other highly interesting Tales, with a variety of instructive and entertaining reading for the intelligent and reflecting [illegible] Booksellers and News Agents sell the Family Herald.

HAND-BOOK FOR IRELAND. Fourth Thousand, Corrected and Enlarged. 12s. [illegible]

A HAND-BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN IRELAND, descriptive of its Scenery, Towns, Seats, Antiquities, &c., with various Statistical Tables; also, an Outline of its Mineral Structure, a brief View of its Botany, and information for Anglers. By JAMES FRASER, Landscape Gardener. An Edition with 16 [illegible] Maps of Separate Roads, 16s.

"As complete as the limits and size of such a Manual can possibly permit."—Atlas. "To take a journey through Ireland without it would be perfectly absurd."—London M[illegible] "The traveller could not have a better or more trustworthy conductor."—Dublin Monitor. "An accurate and valuable guide book."—Nation.

[illegible]: WILLIAM CURRY, Jun., and Co. London: LONGMAN and Co. Sold by all Booksellers.

COINS of the ANCIENT ROMAN EMPERORS; History of the Succession of the Ancient Roman Emperors, with the Prices of their Coins, bearing Portraits, their Dates and Mottoes, is just published by P. WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins, 46, Strand, London, price 1s., by post, 1s. 2d. Coins sent by post, Bought, &c.

DAMASK TABLE LINENS, most Elegant and Durable, at very Low Prices for Cash, by JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linen-Drapers to the Queen, at their Family Linen Wareroom, 26, Regent-street, two doors below Piccadilly Circus. Parcels above £5 sent throughout England carriage paid.

John Capper and Son's General Linen-Drapery Business, established for nearly Seventy Years, is continued in Gracechurch-street, without change.

SILVER TEA and COFFEE SERVICES.—Printed lists sent gratis into the country, in answer to a paid letter, with full particulars of size, weight [illegible] Silversmiths, &c., 47, Cornhill, seven doors from Gracechurch-street.

THE BEST ENGLISH WATCHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Watchmakers, No. 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, request the attention [illegible] to their stock of London-made PATENT LEVER WATCHES, which are manufactured by themselves in their own house. In silver cases, with the detached escapement and jewelled; the prices are four guineas and a half, six, and eight guineas each, or in gold cases, 10, 12, 14, and 16 guineas each. The very large stock offered for selection includes every description, enabling a customer to select that which is more particularly adapted to his [illegible]

METCALFE and CO'S. NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—Useful Inquiry.—For proof of the extreme durability, power of cleaning, and true economy, ask all who have used Metcalfe's Brushes. The Tooth-brush performs the highly-important office of searching thoroughly into the divisions, and cleaning in the most extraordinary manner; hairs never come loose, 1s. Peculiarly penetrating Hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russia bristles, which will not soften like common hair. Improved Clothes-brush, that cleans harmlessly in one-third the time. The new Velvet Brush, and immense Stock of genuine unbleached Smyrna Sponge, at METCALFE and Co's only Establishment, 130 B, Oxford-street, one door from Holles-street.

CAUTION.—Beware of the word "from" Metcalfe's [illegible]

GIBBINS' CREAM of ROSES and ROSEMARY.—This esteemed and elegant article is most respectfully offered to the Public, by GIBBINS, Court Hairdresser and Perfumer (from Paris), 7, King-street, St. James's-square, as the most delicate and effectual Preservative of the Hair. Being a pomade, it will be successfully applied in promoting its growth and luxuriance.

GIBBINS' EXTRACT of ROSES and ROSEMARY is a Liquid made from the above-named plants, and when applied in Washing the Hair, renders it soft and glossy; or, after illness, its astringent properties prevent the Hair from falling off.

No. 7, King-street, St. James's-square, London.

CANDLE LAMPS FOR THE ENSUING SEASON.— GEORGE and JOHN DEANE respectfully invite their friends to favour them immediately with a call at their Lamp Show Rooms, 46, King William-street, London Bridge. They have just received a most splendid stock of Candle Lamps, the very first that have issued from the artist's hands. They comprise a costly variety, some with porcelain pedestals, adorned with delicate and elaborate painting, mounted on rich or-molu bases, others of tastefully cut glass, or papier mache, gorgeously emblazoned. These, with a most various stock of cheaper and less ornamented Lamps, are all of the latest designs and at the lowest possible prices. Deane's carts are delivering Camphine, Candles, and Lamp Oil, and Lamps on hire, in all parts of the metropolis daily. DEANE'S, opening to the Monument, 46, King William-street, London Bridge.

THE PROVIDENT CLERKS' MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION and BENEVOLENT FUND, 42, Moorgate-street.

TRUSTEES.

Thomas Baring, Esq., M.P. | W. G. Prescott, Esq.
Thomson Hankey, Jun., Esq. | Baron L. de Rothschild

Treasurer of the Benevolent Fund: John Abel Smith, Esq., M.P.

Forms of proposal for Mutual Life Assurance, to meet every contingency, annuities, endowments, loans, &c., and the fifth annual report, with every information, may be had at the offices, where donations and subscriptions to the Benevolent Fund are received.

Table of Premium payable yearly, half yearly, or quarterly by a person of the age of 25, to secure the sum of £100 to be paid at death, or on his attaining the respective ages of 50, 55, and 60, whichever event shall first occur.—

Age next birthday	Age Fifty.			Age Fifty-five.			Age Sixty.
	Year.	Half-Year.	Quarterly.	Year	Half-Year.	Quarterly.	Year	Half-Year.	Quarterly.
25	2 16 4	1 19 0	0 19 8	3 5 5	1 13 3	0 16 9	2 18 2	1 9 6	0 14 11

Policies may be effected daily.
July 30th, 1846.

By order of the Board,
THOS. [illegible], Secretary.

WHILST MESSRS. BETTS and CO. are studiously desirous to avoid the imputation of unwarrantably increasing the alarm created by the rumoured prevalence in the Metropolis of that fearful disease, the [illegible] Cholera, they deem it consistent with a due regard to the feelings of the public, to direct attention to the subjoined Testimonials as to the merits of their Patent Brandy. This pure and wholesome spirit has long been in very general use in the most important hospitals and infirmaries in the kingdom, and is deserving of especial notice at the present time, from its peculiar efficacy in arresting the ravages caused by those epidemics that usually prevail at this season of the year; and the same can be procured in quantities, not less than two gallons, direct from the Distillery, at 18s. per gallon, or in single bottles, at 3s. per bottle, from Retailers, in every locality, each bottle being secured by the Metallic Capsule, which Messrs. Betts and Co. have the exclusive right of making, and upon which is embossed the words "Betts's Patent Brandy, 7, Smithfield-bars."

EXTRACTS FROM TESTIMONIALS.—

[illegible], Aldersgate-street.

"Your Brandy is free from uncombined acid and astringent matter, which exists more or less in most of the Brandies imported from France.

"To Mr. Betts." (Signed) "JOHN THOMAS COOPER, Lecturer on Chemistry."

Long-acre.

"I am bound to say, and do assert it with confidence, that, for purity of spirit, this cannot be surpassed; and that your Patent Brandy is also quite free from those acids which, though minute in quantity, always contaminate the foreign spirit.

"J. T. Betts, Esq." (Signed) JOSEPH HUME, Chemist to his Majesty.

[illegible]

"I do not hesitate to express my conviction that it is fully as free from anything injurious to health, and contains as pure a spirit as the best varieties of foreign brandy.—(Signed) EDWARD TURNER, Professor of Chemistry in the University of London. John T. Betts, Esq."

Grenadier Guards Hospital.

"The two samples of your Patent Brandy I had an opportunity of [illegible]ing before the Board of Officers, which sat at the Regimental Hospital last Saturday. Every member of the Board approved of the Brandy, and have ordered that it shall be used for the sick.—(Signed)

"Messrs. J. T. Betts and Co." "J. HARRISON, Surgeon-Major, Grenadier Guards.

THE NEW HOUSES OF E. MOSES AND SON.

Good reader, your attention let us fix
On [illegible]-five and Eighty-six
[illegible]dgate-church are these display'd,
To furnish you with clothing ready made.
Neat, strong, and matchless goods are purchas'd here
And not a single article is dear.
Next your attention we would beg to call
To No. Eighty-four, the "Private Hall."
Here you ascend the stairs of solid oak
To gain the Room where orders are bespoke.
This show-room with its giant chandelier,
Eclipses all that's witnessed far and near.
Here a secluded Habit-room you view,
And here there is a room for Vestings, too.
Other apartments follow in rotation,
To answer one design, ACCOMMODATION.
The next compartment we survey, must be
The Hat depôt of MOSES, Eighty-three.
There's not another Hat-mart in the Town
Which casts such lustre on the human crown.
On turning round the corner, you behold
The Warehouse where the Hosiery goods are sold.
This House, whose trade is constantly alive,
Is in the Minories, No. One-four-five.
On passing to the right you'll find, next door,
The Establishment for Outfits—One five-four.
And here, good reader, our description closes,
Our brief description of the House of MOSES.
We trust you'll not omit to give a call—
Not to ONE Warehouse only, but to all.
We mark the prices on our goods for trade,
From which, of course, there's no abatement made.
If anything that's sold is found to lack,
We change the goods or give the money back.
We do, to please you, all that CAN be done.
Do all "YOU" can for MOSES and his SON.

For particulars of Self-Measurement, and other essential information, obtain the new book [illegible] Past, Present, and Future," which may be had gratis, and post-free, of the Proprietors, E. MOSES and SON, 154, 155, 156, 157, Minories, and 83, 84, 85, and 86, Aldgate, City, London.

[illegible] and SON, Tailors, Woollen-drapers, Clothiers, Hatters, Hosiers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen, regret to be obliged to guard the public against imposition, but having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood of "being connected with them," or it's the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and, for obvious reasons, they have no connection with any other house in or out of London; and those who desire genuine cheap clothing, should, to prevent disappointment, call at or send to the Minories or Aldgate, opposite the Church, City, London.

NOTICE.—The entrance to the Bespoke Department is at 84, Aldgate.—No business transacted at this Establishment from sunset Friday evening till sunset Saturday evening, when it is resumed till twelve o'clock.

DANCING.—Mr. WILLIS begs to announce that his ACADEMY will RE-COMMENCE on FRIDAY, the 11th instant.

REMOVAL.—DR. CULVERWELL has REMOVED to 10, ARGYLL-PLACE, REGENT-STREET.

REMOVAL.—Mr. SAUNDERS begs to inform his friends that, having associated himself with Mr. NASMYTH, he has REMOVED from Argyll-street to 13A, George-street, Hanover-square.

EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY, (Offices, No. 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate).—Six Pounds of good useful TEA are still sold for 15s.; or half-a-crown a pound; other sorts 2s. 10d., 3s. 6d., [illegible] 1s. [illegible] and 1s. 3d.

TONIC ALE.—This splendid new description of Bottled Beer is now in high perfection. It is strongly recommended by the Faculty as possessing peculiar stomachic qualities, promoting appetite, &c. Sold in quart and pint bottles, secured by Betts's Patent Capsule. JOSEPH STOCKTON, Sole Agent, 51, Lamb's Conduit-street.

HEAL and SON'S LIST OF BEDDING, containing a full description of weights, sizes, and prices, by which persons are enabled to judge the articles that are best suited to make a good set of Bedding, sent free by post.

HEAL and SON, Feather Dressers and Bedding Manufacturers, 196, Tottenham-court-road.

ITALIAN ALABASTER, MARBLE, BRONZE, DERBYSHIRE SPAR, and other ORNAMENTS for the Drawing-room, Library, and Dining-room, consisting of a new and elegant assortment of Vases, Figures, Groups, Candlesticks, Inkstands, [illegible] Tables, Paperweights, Watchstands, &c.

Imported and manufactured by J. TENNANT, late Mawe, 149, Strand, London.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great [illegible] at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house. [illegible]es' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a Twopenny Stamp.

HOT WEATHER.—TRAVELLING.—SEA-SIDE.—The REGISTERED PALETOT in London, only at 22, Cornhill, opposite the Royal Exchange, and the chief Llama Cloth Warehouse, 114, Regent-street. Do not be deceived by a similarity of name placed in the windows of a few petty shops in the neighbourhood of the Patentees. Each Paletot is stamped H. J. and D. NICOLL, 114, Regent-street.

HEALTH PRESERVED, INDIGESTION PREVENTED, by the use of EFFICIENT TEETH. Mr. HOLLANDS, Surgeon Dentist, 8, Regent's Quadrant, may be consulted upon all Diseases of the Teeth and Gums. Teeth fitted [illegible] detection, and closely resembling nature in use and appearance. Tooth Powder to preserve the teeth chemically prepared.

CHILDREN'S AND INVALIDS' CARRIAGES.—Invalids Wheel Chairs, from £3 to £35, with hoods, second-hand as well as new; Spinal and Self-Acting Chairs, Children's Chaises, vis-à-vis Waggons, Phaetons, Barouches, &c., from 10s. to 20 guineas. Immense and varied collection on sale or hire, at INGRAM'S Manufactory, 29, City-road, Finsbury-square.—N.B. Illustrated Catalogues.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, Sole Inventress of Teaching the Art of Dress-making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most finished Style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to pupils. Apprentices and Improvers Wanted. Millinery Rooms.

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS AND GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM for STOVE GRATES, kitchen ranges, iron bedsteads, fenders, fire-irons, general furnishing ironmongery, tinned copper, iron and best tin cooking vessels, best Sheffield plate, and table cutlery, japanned trays, tea urns, ornamental iron and wire works for verandahs, lawns, &c.; flower-stands. Every article is warranted, and marked at the lowest prices, in plain figures, for cash.—Adjoining the Royal Bazaar, 58, Baker-street, Portman-sq.

CHUBB'S LOCKS, Fire-proof Safes, and Cash Boxes.—Chubb's New Patent Detector Locks give perfect security from false keys and picklocks, and also give immediate notice of any attempt to open them. Chubb's Patent Fire-proof Safes, Book-cases, Chests, &c., strong Japan Cash Boxes and Deed Boxes, of all sizes, fitted with the Detector Locks. C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard.

A SCOTCH TWEED GOTHA JACKET FOR 30s.—This Jacket, which is well suited to be worn by Gentlemen when shooting, angling, in the library, or country ramble, is made to measure, in a first-rate style of fit and workmanship, for 30s.; best ditto, ditto, 38s.—At GRAVES'S Fashionable Tailor and Trowsers' Maker, 313, High Holborn.

TROWSERS! TROWSERS!! TROWSERS!!!—A good fit in this garment can seldom be obtained.—R. GRAVES, Fashionable Trowsers' Maker and Tailor, 313, High Holborn, after many years' experience and study, is enabled to assert, without fear of contradiction, that he can fit gentlemen with this garment better than any other person in London. The characteristic of his fitting is a gentlemanly style, with perfect ease for stooping, sitting, walking, or riding. A well-assorted stock of the newest designs to select from. R. GRAVES, 313, High Holborn.

CAUTION.—BERDOE'S WATERPROOF OVER-COATS.— W. BERDOE regrets the necessity of repeating the Caution he gave several months since against certain parties, who, falsely representing themselves as "travellers" for him, have, for a long period, been visiting almost every town in the kingdom, selling goods, which, although having attached to them W. B's. name and label (or a very slight variation therefrom), have not been made by him. Almost every post brings letters from persons complaining of having been so defrauded. A careful examination of the label will render the deception apparent, and save the public from being victimized. W. BERDOE, Tailor and Over-coat Maker, 69, Cornhill (north side), and (shortly at) 96, New Bond-street.

OPENING OF THREE PUBLIC PARKS AT MANCHESTER.

On Saturday last, the Public Parks in the neighbourhood of Manchester, which have been purchased by voluntary subscription, and are devoted to the free and uncontrolled recreation and amusement of the working community in that densely populated district, were inaugurated and thrown open with great ceremony and display of rejoicing. The day having been pretty generally observed as a holiday by the manufacturers and principal merchants of the town and neighbourhood, vast bodies of working men and clerks were enabled to attend; and when, at eleven o'clock, the municipal authorities started from the Town-hall in a gay procession of equipages, the multitude of pedestrians who prepared to accompany them was almost beyond calculation. Various bands of music, military and amateur, contributed to enliven the scene; and, from almost every window and balcony on the route of procession, there floated gay and variegated banners, bearing devices and inscriptions appropriate to the occasion. It may here be mentioned that the Parks have been severally named the Queen's Park, the Peel Park, and the Philips' Park (the latter in honour of Mr. Mark Philips, one of the representatives of the borough of Manchester.) As a matter of convenience, it was resolved to open the Peel Park first, the grounds lying within the jurisdiction of the borough of Salford, the trusteeship having to be transferred to that body from the Corporation of Manchester. The procession having reached the Town-hall of Salford, was joined by John Kay, Esq., the Mayor, and the members of the Council, in nine carriages. In a short time, the cortège arrived at Lark Hill, the site of the Peel Park.

The day being fine, the park (which is thirty-two acres in extent, and laid out in lawns, parks, and parterres, with archery-ground and gymnasium) looked exceedingly picturesque and attractive, an effect which is not diminished by a fine view of the river Irwell. Here, as in other parts, everything that can tend to promote rational recreation, and manly and athletic exercises, has been furnished in the most tasteful and convenient manner, whilst handsome and commodious refreshment-rooms proclaim an assurance that some more stimulating beverage may be had than that contained in the stone basins, where iron ladles fastened to the wall, are rather ostensibly displayed. It was expected that Lord Ellesmere would have performed the ceremony of baptism for the Peel Park, but his Lordship was unavoidably absent, and the duty devolved on the Mayor of Manchester (W. B. Watkins, Esq.), who addressed the assemblage in brief but appropriate terms, on the gratifying spectacle before them. He said that no fewer than [illegible],000 working persons had contributed to the Park Fund, and the manner in which they had been backed by their wealthier neighbours gave a practical refutation to the statement that the manufacturing and mercantile classes of the kingdom were actuated solely by a desire to accumulate wealth, without caring for the sufferings or enjoyments of their poorer neighbours. The worthy magistrate then formally declared a transfer of the property to the Salford Corporation, and having christened the grounds by the name of the Peel Park, they were declared to be open henceforth and for ever, free to the public.

The announcement was received with loud huzzas by the multitude, amid the firing of cannon and the braying of trumpets, which made it almost deafening. Amongst the gentlemen surrounding the Mayor at the moment of inauguration, were Mark Philips, Esq., M.P.; W. Entwisle, Esq., M.P.; P. A. Slaney, Esq., late M.P. for Shrewsbury (one of the first promoters of the park scheme); Stephen Blair, Esq., Mayor of Bolton; John Meller, Esq., Mayor of Ashton-under-Lyne; P. Marsland, Esq., Mayor of Stockport; and the chairman and various members of the Parks' Committee.

A considerable portion of the multitude having dispersed in search of amusement, the procession was enabled to retrace its steps, and, passing slowly through the thronged streets, ultimately made its way over the Victoria bridge, and proceeded towards the Queen's Park at Harpurhey (formerly the Hendam Hall estate), about two miles distant to the eastward from the Manchester Exchange, on the Rochdale road. Here a ceremony similar to that at Peel Park was performed by Mr. Mark Philips, who addressed the multitude at considerable length on the importance of the occasion they had met to celebrate, and urging them to still further exertions. The name of the Philips Park, which is situated at Bradford, about a mile and a half from Manchester, was given to it by Mr. Entwisle, M.P., who indulged in a warm eulogium on Mr. Philips, for the manner in which he had performed his Parliamentary duties. The firing of cannon, and cheering, and music, having subsided,

Mr. Philips expressed his acknowledgments for the high honour that had been done to himself and family by calling the park after his name. As Mr. Entwisle had referred to his retirement from the representation of Manchester, he begged to say that he found it impossible to continue his Parliamentary labours without injury to his health. There was no cricket-ground or skittle-alley, or other gymnasia, connected with the House of Commons; and every man who had attended to his duties found that his health must ultimately give way.

The proceedings then terminated, and the procession returned to Manchester at five o'clock, where an elegant and substantial repast awaited the invited guests at the Town-hall.

DESCRIPTION OF THE PARKS.

THE PEEL PARK, LARK HILL AND WALNESS, SALFORD.

This Park is distant from the Manchester Exchange exactly one mile due west, "as the crow flies," but about 200 yards more by the nearest route; the milestone being a little beyond the Adelphi. It is within three-quarters of a mile of the greater part of the dense population of Salford (which, in 1841, amounted to 53,200)—and that of the extreme S.W. portion of the township of Manchester, adjacent to the river, including great part of Water-street, &c. It is very accessible, being on a spacious high road, and extremely well situated, so as to meet the requirements of the inhabitants at the westerly side of that aggregation of buildings and townships, generally known as Manchester. This Park is bounded on the east by the river Irwell; on the west, by the Strawberry Hill property (which lies between the Walness property and the Bolton canal, extending from Lark Hill to Walness Bank), and by Walness Lane and Ford Lane, the ancient road to the Broughton Ford; on the north, by the Walness Meadows, extending to the Suspension Bridge erected over the Irwell, by John Fitzgerald, Esq, a little south of the old ford; and, on the south, by the Pendleton road, there called the Crescent. The area of the Park is a little larger than either of the others. It is about 32 acres, exceeding the Philips Park by one acre, and the Queen's Park by about two acres in extent. The lower part of the Park comprises the whole breadth of the Walness land, between Strawberry Hill or Walness-lane and the river, about 300 to 350 yards in breadth, and probably about 1200 yards in length from north to south; and, previously to being imparked, it consisted of three meadows, separated from the remainder of the Walness estate beyond the Park boundary to the north, by a ditch. The out-lying land consists principally of one meadow, extending nearly to the Broughton Suspension Bridge. This Park will be found engraved in No. 218 of our Journal.

OPENING OF THE QUEEN'S PARK, MANCHESTER.

OPENING OF THE QUEEN'S PARK, MANCHESTER.

THE QUEEN'S PARK, HENDHAM HALL, HARPURHEY.

This beautiful park, which contains 30 acres of land, is distant, in a N.E. direction, from the Manchester Exchange, as the crow flies, just one mile and three-quarters; but its first entrance gate is near the second milestone on the Rochdale-road.

This park, though the smallest of the three, possessed, previously to its conversion, the greatest natural and acquired advantages of any for adaptation to the purposes of a public park. It had been the most extensively planted of any of the sites purchased, and being occupied up to the time of its sale, as the residence and grounds of a private gentleman, the land and timber were in excellent order. The great features of this park are its superior advantages of cultivation, its possessing both level plateaux and undulating ground, terrace, dell, and clough, wood and water; the timber being mostly old, of large growth and very fine. In character it is very much like a private park and pleasaunce. It is situated on an eminence, commanding some very fine and extensive prospects over the valley of the Irk, which stream flows in the gorge far below it, and at a sufficient distance to offer no annoyance to the promenaders in the park. Within the belt of trees and shrubs, which extend quite round the park, is carried a drive, and a carriage-way also passes from the old lodge up to the house. This latter drive divides the garden in front of the house into two open parks, ornamented here and there by clumps or single trees. The middle portion of the land, from the house southward to the drive, is occupied by the lake and a pretty flower garden; and behind these and the house is a third open park; the space between the drive and the park fence is fitted up with archery grounds, skittle-alleys, quoit grounds, play-grounds, gymnasium, &c. From the back windows of the house some fine views of the park and the neighbouring country are obtained, both towards Cheetham, in which the spire of St. Luke's Church, embosomed in trees, is a striking and pleasing object, and towards Rochdale, Oldham, &c.

THE PHILIPS PARK, MILL-LANE, BRADFORD.

This park is thirty-one acres in extent; and is distant, as the crow flies, about a mile and seven furlongs from the Exchange, but by the nearest road is upwards of two miles. It is just a mile and a half in a direct line from the Queen's Park; and within a circle of a mile radius is a population of at least 50,000, chiefly of the classes most needing the advantages afforded by a public park.

If the Peel Park be the most open, level, and spacious, and the Queen's Park be richest in sylvan and park-like character, best wooded and best watered, the Philips Park has the boldest and most romantic character of the three, consisting of high knolls, with much broken ground and a pretty little amphitheatre sloping down to the river Medlock. The greater part of this park is laid out as open park, divided by two footpaths into three spaces, and these again bisected for some distance by a rivulet, broken by weirs into a succession of ponds, and crossed here and there by a rustic bridge of oak. The drive, which extends quite round the park (with the exception of the low land in the delta), is eighteen feet in width; and, in the upper part, the view, especially in the direction of Newton Grange, with its meadows, is very pleasing; these appearing, when the river is hidden, as a part of the park itself. The natural inequalities of surface give a picturesque character to this park, which has been much admired, and which has no parallel in the metropolitan parks, or that at Birkenhead.

MEETING AT THE FREE-TRADE HALL.

At seven o'clock on Saturday evening the subscribers to the Park Fund assembled in the Free-Trade Hall. There were several thousands present.

The Chair was taken by W. B. Watkins, Esq., Mayor of Manchester, who briefly addressed the meeting, apologised for the unexpected delay of the proceedings, which had been protracted beyond what was anticipated.

Mr. Mark Philips, M.P., next addressed the meeting. The hon. member concluded by proposing a resolution, pledging the meeting to a liberal maintenance of the parks that had been that day opened.

W. Entwisle, Esq., M.P., seconded the resolution, which was then put and carried unanimously.

Mr. Bright, M.P., moved a vote of thanks to the Committee of Management, which was seconded by Mr. Slaney, and carried unanimously.

Mr. Watts, Secretary to the Working Classes Committee, and several other intelligent persons addressed the meeting during the proceedings, which did not terminate until after ten o'clock.

"THE HALF-WAY HOUSE."

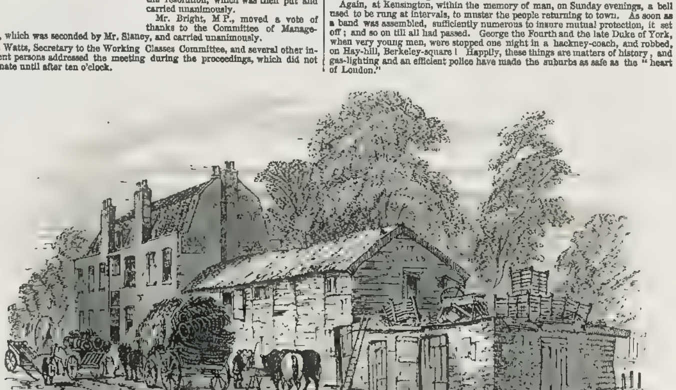
THE Half-Way Public-house, on the Kensington-road, which has for so many years disfigured the western entrance to the metropolis, to the obstruction of the foot and carriage ways, and the annoyance of the neighbouring residents, is at last in the course of removal, owing to the persevering efforts of Mr. Elger, the architect and builder, who is about to erect a range of noble dwelling-houses on the land opposite to it.

The cost of the demolition of this unseemly structure has been upwards of £3000, independently of the purchase of the fee, made some years since by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods and Forests, in furtherance of this object.

We learn that the influential inhabitants of the district are memorializing the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Woods and Forests, for a new entrance into Hyde-park, near to the site of "The Half-Way House:" we cannot but augur favourably of the result, as it would, unquestionably, be found a great public convenience.

"The Half-way House" appears to have long been a place of notoriety; and, the following mention of it in the trial of a highwayman, sentenced to death for robbery in 1752, shows the state of the roads bounding Hyde Park at that time, and also presents us with a picture of the substitutes then used for a good police. The principal witness in the trial, William Norton, deposed:—"The chaise to the Devizes having been robbed two or three times, as I was informed, I was desired to go in it, to see if I could take the thief, which I did, on the 3rd of June, about half an hour after one in the morning. I got into the post-chaise; the post-boy told me the place where he had been stopped was near "The Half-way House," between Knightsbridge and Kensington. As we came near the house, the prisoner came to us on foot and said, 'Driver, stop!' He held a pistol tinder-box to the chaise, and said, 'Your money, directly: you must not stay, this minute your money.' I said, 'Don't frighten us; I have but a trifle; you shall have it.' Then I said to the gentlemen (there were three in the chaise), 'Give your money.' I took out a pistol from my coat-pocket, and from my breeches-pocket a five-shilling piece and a dollar. I held the pistol concealed in one hand, and the money in the other. I held the money pretty hard: he said, 'Put it in my hat.' I let him take the five-shilling piece out of my hand: as soon as he had taken it, I snapped my pistol at him; it did not go off, he staggered back, and held up his hands, and said, 'Oh, Lord! oh, Lord!' I jumped out of the chaise; he ran away, and I after him, about 600 or 700 yards, and there took him. I hit him a blow on his back; he begged for mercy on his knees, I took his neckcloth off, and tied his hands with it, and brought him back to the chaise; then I told the gentlemen in the chaise that was the errand I came upon; and wished them a good journey, and brought the prisoner to London. Question by the Prisoner: Ask him how he lives? Norton: "I keep a shop in Wych-street, and sometimes I take a thief." The post-boy stated on the trial that he had told Norton if they did not meet the highwayman between Knightsbridge and Kensington, they should not meet him at all—a proof of the frequency of these occurrences in that neighbourhood.

Again, at Kensington, within the memory of man, on Sunday evenings, a bell used to be rung at intervals, to muster the people returning to town. As soon as a band was assembled, sufficiently numerous to insure mutual protection, it set off; and so on till all had passed. George the Fourth and the late Duke of York, when very young men, were stopped one night in a hackney-coach, and robbed, on Hay-hill, Berkeley-square! Happily, these things are matters of history, and gas-lighting and an efficient police have made the suburbs as safe as the "heart of London."



"THE HALF-WAY HOUSE," BETWEEN KNIGHTSBRIDGE AND KENSINGTON.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, AUGUST 29, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 227.—Vol. IX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1846. [Sixpence.

THE END OF THE SEASON.

SOCIETY agrees, by one common consent, to call London empty in September, the metropolis at large being supposed to be on the "Moors." But a remnant of the dwellers of the close City still remain in it; a very large fraction, too, it will be found on computation. But they are only the people—the masses, as they are called—and count in genteel circles for nothing. The world, the "twice two thousand for whom Earth was made," and the ten times that number who think it ought to have been, have certainly vanished from the ways of men. There is a visible ebb in the stream of life Westward: crossings are passable, and sundry of the Clubs are very "despoblados." But, in the East, there are human beings yet surviving—actually existing, and daringly walking up and down, as if Fashion, and her sentence of temporary exile from Town, did not exist; as, for them, happily, they do not, whereby Cheapside still looks busy; and in the Poultry, there are signs of life. A simple observer, merely making use of his eyes, would say, perhaps, that, to all appearance, London is just as full, as active, and as noisy, as ever. But he must be cautious of avowing his impression; not to miss the élite when they depart, is a confession that you do not belong to them, and a suspicion of such a fact is equivalent to exclusion from decent society for ever after. So people go about complaining that "London is so empty," who would be puzzled to prove that their own circle is diminished by a single unit. But it looks well to be cognisant of a diminution. It shows that, though a man can't afford to go to the Highlands for grouse, or Baden for excitement himself, he has friends who can; which, to some extent, is a negative consolation. When our country friends, then, hear from all quarters assertions of the silent void which London at this moment exhibits, they must be careful to interpret the phrase in a figurative rather than a literal sense. The Great Babel is not quite desolate; it is such an immensity that an ordinary city or two might be carved out of it bodily, without causing any very sensible decrease of buildings or people. And when it is said there's "absolutely nobody in Town," it must be remembered, that, though several, indeed, many individuals, in easy or uneasy circumstances, as the case may be, have really quitted it, there is still a trifling residue of a million and a half or so left behind. It is afflicting to think that so many fellow-creatures have to support life from September to Christmas amid all the luxuries and occupation of a great capital! But they do effect it; they actually do survive through the gloomy interval; as a proof of how nature accommodates itself to circumstances, they do so too with a considerable amount of contentment and satisfaction, and the return of the Pantomimes and the "Polite Circles" finds them vivacious and in good condition. Indeed, many of them think with Horace Smith, that London is "the best place in summer, and the only place in winter." But when we know that Laplanders and Esquimaux feel a bigoted attachment to their respective countries, this endurance of "Life in London" when "all the world" finds it insupportable, must be classed with the delusions with which nature compensates those who cannot escape from her most unhappy regions.

Nevertheless, there is one deficiency felt at the "Close of the Season," which falls upon the fixed or permanent dwellers in this brick and mortar nation with peculiar severity. It is the dearth of their great article of consumption—News. The Ministers take flight from their well-feathered nests in Downing-street, like a select party of swallows, leaving, perhaps, one Secretary in town, to receive deputations (light work during the vacation), read despatches, and be at hand, in case of a rebellion at Birmingham The House of Commons is locked up, and the mace safely deposited in the Speaker's plate closet; the Speaker himself is getting used to the luxury of a "quiet evening," spent without his wig; and, though the drowsy hum of the debates can be scarcely out of his ears, yet he begins to remember the whole Session as something like a bad dream, in which he was always hearing some one abusing somebody else, or apologising and explaining for having done so. The cessation of all this is a very serious loss to the public, to whom Lord George Bentinck and Disraeli were actually becoming daily necessaries of life. Lord Brougham, too, was very valuable; but we are deprived of him just as he is most wanted. "All, all are gone;" and the old familiar names greet us from the morning columns no more.

This is, indeed, the great deprivation of which London has to complain at the "Close of the Season." It is not so much the departure of the inhabitants generally as of the politicians in particular: the thinning of the streets might be borne, but what shall supply the space left by the topics that drop out of the newspapers? Happily there are no limits to human ingenuity: what is not born of the time, can be made for it; what is kept in the back-ground during the season can be lent prominence out of it; and when matter fails at home, the fishers of men who manage those great drag-nets of intelligence, the morning papers, can sweep the Continent with a closer mesh, and land a draught of minor incidents which in the "Season" would have been rejected.

END OF THE SEASON—1846—OFF TO PARIS.—(SEE PAGE 151.)

Has the reader never remarked the importance foreign intelligence assumes immediately after the prorogation of Parliament? Take the past week, for instance, and what does it present, but the answer of Sir Robert Peel to the address from the merchants of Ebling, a small port on the Baltic; from which we learn that the Income-tax was meant to be perpetual. Truly is it said we should go abroad to hear news of ourselves. Then we have had, at full length, the protest of Sleswig and Holstein in favour of a repeal of the union with Denmark; and the wearying controversy respecting the marriage of the Queen of Spain, a question at last brought to an end.

The disappearance of familiar names from our chronicles, and the increased volume afforded to the sayings and doings in other lands, is one of the surest signs of the close of the "Season." Like a garrison, when their stock of provisions is consumed, we are driven to resort to what we should never otherwise think of meddling with.

The present article is, indeed, a specimen of the expedients which a journalist may, at this period, be reduced to.

GOOD NIGHT TO THE SEASON.

Good Night to the Season! 'tis over—
Gay dwellings no longer are gay;
The Captain, the Gambler, the Lover,
Are scattered like swallows away!
There is nobody left to invite one,
Except my good uncle and spouse;
My Mistress is bathing at Brighton,
My Patron is sailing at Cowes.

Good Night to the Season!—the building,
Enough to make Inigo sick;
The painting, the plastering, the gilding
Of Stucco, and Marble, and Brick.
The orders deliciously blended
For love of effect into one;
The Club-houses only intended,
The Palaces not yet begun.

Good Night to the Season!—the dances,
The filling of hot little rooms;
The glancing of rapturous glances,
The fancying of fancy costumes;
The pleasures which Fashion makes duties,
The praising of fiddles and flutes;
The luxury of gazing at Beauties,
The tedium of talking to mutes,
The female diplomatists—planners
Of matches for Laura and Jane;
The ice of her Ladyship's manners,
The ice of his Lordship's Champagne!

Good Night to the Season! the Flowers,
And the Grand Horticultural Fête!
When Boudoirs were quitted for Bowers,
And the fashion was not to be late;
When all who had money and leisure,
Grew rural o'er ices and wines—
All pleasantly toiling for pleasure,
And hungrily pining for pines!
The making of beautiful speeches,
The marring of beautiful shows,
The feeding on delicate peaches,
And treading on delicate toes!

Good Night to the Season! Another
Will come, with its trifles and toys,
And hurry away, like its brother,
In sunshine, and perfume, and noise
Will it come with a Rose or a Briar?
Will it come with a Blessing or Curse?
Will its Bonnets be lower or higher?
Will its morals be better or worse?
Will it find me grown thinner or fatter?
Or fonder of wrong or of right?
Or married, or buried? No matter
Good Night to the Season! Good Night!

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

THE OVERLAND MAIL.

A telegraphic despatch was received yesterday from Paris, announcing the arrival of the Overland Indian Mail at Marseilles, on Wednesday. The only news which it brings is as follows: "The cholera prevailed in Scinde from the 11th to the 23rd of June. There had died upwards of 8000. Among them are 895 Europeans, of whom 815 belong to the army, 595 Sepoys, and 7 000 natives. The disease had, however, entirely abated, and the navigation of the river had been resumed. A bad fever had broken out among the European soldiers, which was fatal in six hours; 70 had died, and upwards of 100 were sick."

FRANCE.

The trial of Joseph Henri, for the attempt upon the life of Louis Philippe, was not concluded when we went to press last week. The Débats has since published the finding and sentence of the Court of Peers. The accused, according to custom, was not present. M. Baroche, his advocate, was the only barrister in attendance The President, amidst the most profound silence, read the following judgment

"The Court declares Joseph Henri guilty of an attempt against the person of the King a crime provided for by the articles 86 and 88 of the Penal Code; and, therefore, condemns Joseph Henri to the penalty of hard labour for life. The Court condemns him, moreover, to the expenses of the trial, to be liquidated according to law, as much for that portion to be borne by the convict as for that portion to be defrayed by the State"

The Journal des Débats adds, that when the judgment was read by the Registrar of the Court to Joseph Henri, he appeared confounded and dejected "That was not what I expected," said he, after a moment of silence. "I wished for a capital conviction; and I implored to be put to death as a favour and as an act of grace."

The Paris journal the Constitutionnel has been sold for a sum of 336,000f to M. Mosselman, brother to Countess Lehon. The friends of M. Thiers had offered 322 000f.

The potato disease has begun to develop itself in the neighbourhood of Paris. The esculent is likewise attacked in the department of the Oise. Letters from Cressy mention that the potato fields, which hitherto had a magnificent appearance, are all attacked with that scourge.

Accounts have been received in Paris of the death of the Rev. Bishop Luscombe, for many years Chaplain of the British embassy in Paris. He died suddenly, at Lausanne, on the 24th ult., of disease of the heart.—Our contemporaries, in announcing this fact, fall into the error of calling Mr. Luscombe the Right Rev. Bishop Luscombe, as if he had a right to a seat on the episcopal bench, forgetting that Bishops do not act as Chaplains to Embassies. Bishop was Mr. Luscombe's name, and not his title

The Chamber of Deputies having finished the formal business usual at the commencement of a Session, has proceeded to the election of President and the officers. The office of President was first balloted for, and the result was as follows

For M. Sauzet	233 votes.
Odillon Barrot	98 „
Dupin	9 „
Dupont de l'Eure	4 „
De Lamartine	2 „

The President pro tem. declared M. Sauzet to be duly elected.

The Chamber of Deputies afterwards proceeded to ballot for the four Vice-Presidents. The result was the election of M Bignon, by 201 votes; M. Lepelletier d'Aulnay, by 183; and M. Hebert, by 176. The next on the list was M. François Delessert, who, having obtained only 129 votes, or 52 less than the required majority (one more than a moiety of the members voting), was balloted for anew on Tuesday, with M. Billaut, the Opposition candidate. M Delessert, however, was successful, his election having been obtained by a majority of 147 votes to 86 given to M Billaut M. Vatout had obtained 25 votes, and M. Debelleyme 20, and three others were lost.

The proceedings in the Chamber of Deputies on Monday were more than usually interesting. A question as to the validity of the election of M. Drault for the arondissement of Poictiers raised a discussion as to the legality of pledges, in the course of which M Guizot gave his opinion at considerable length, declaring that Deputies should come to the Chamber free and unfettered, and that as M. Drault had chosen to bind himself imperatively to vote in a certain manner on certain subjects, he was no longer a free agent, and his election ought therefore to be annulled. M. Odillon Barrot replied to M. Guizot, and contended that M. Drault had only pledged himself to support opinions which were his own, and that he was perfectly justified in doing so. The majority of the Chamber, however, joined in opinion with M. Guizot. On a division a majority of 17 of the members present decided against the validity of the election, the members voting for annulling the return being 151, and against it 134. M. Drault was consequently unseated.

The report made to the Chamber by the bureau to which the election was referred was a curious one. It stated that the bureau would give no opinion as to the mandat imperatif, which it would leave to the decision of the Chamber; but it proposed the annulling of the election, on the ground that M. Drault had given a pledge to the Legitimist party, which he did not inform the whole of his political friends that he had taken, the consequence of which was, that the electors were deceived, and gave their votes for a Legitimist, while they thought they were giving them to a member of the centre gauche. Consequently, the bureau found that there was "surprise, and that the election was not sincere," and on these grounds, it was proposed that the election should be cancelled The utter absurdity of the ground taken by the bureau seemed to be felt by the Chamber, for, in the whole course of the debate, it was not once alluded to The election was annulled—not on the ground that M. Drault had taken the Liberal electors by surprise, but that he had given written pledges. The decision of the Chamber has roused a perfect storm among the Opposition journals

The Sémaphore de Marseilles of the 29th ult., brings accounts from Oran of the [illegible]th. The entire province enjoyed the most perfect tranquillity, although Abd-el Kader still continued, with his deira, on the neighbouring frontier.

SPAIN

Our accounts from Madrid inform us that the important question as to the marriage of the Queen of Spain has been settled:—

"It is decided that her Majesty Queen Isabella shall marry her Majesty's cousin, the Duke de Cadiz (eldest son of Don Francisco de Paula), and that the Duke de Montpensier, youngest son of King Louis Philippe, shall marry her Majesty's sister, the Infanta Maria Luisa Fernanda.

"It is further settled that the Duke and Duchess of Montpensier are to leave Spain immediately after the marriage, and pass some time in France"

The Times contains the following letter, dated Madrid, August 28, confirmatory of the above intelligence.

It is said that the ceremony of betrothing was performed last night at the Palace between the Queen and the Infant Don Francisco de Assis. I am also assured that it was done in the most mysterious and surreptitious manner, and that not more than four or five persons were present. It is unnecessary to dwell on the importance of this news. I have just learned that at two o'clock this morning the Minister of Grace and Justice, M Caneja, was summoned out of his bed to a Council of Ministers. At the same time several employés of the Ministerial offices were summoned, and in particular the Keeper of the Archives of the Department of Grace and Justice."

THE UNITED STATES.

The Great Western arrived yesterday at Liverpool, with New York papers to the 20th ult.—five days later than the last. They do not, however, contain any news of importance, either respecting the United States or Mexico. The Mexican people appear to be indifferent as to the result of the war.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

Visit of the Board of Admiralty to Portsmouth.—The leading members of the Board of Admiralty are on a visit of inspection at Portsmouth. On Wednesday morning, the Earl of Auckland held a levee at the Admiralty House, when a great number of naval and military officers had the honour of interviews with his Lordship, who received them with his usual courtesy and urbanity. The stay of the Board will be four days, during which time a thorough inspection of all the naval departments will be made

The Army in Ireland The army in Ireland for August, 1846, consists of seven regiments of dragoons—viz., 2nd Dragoon Guards, 1st Royal Dragoons, 2nd Royal North British Dragoons (Scots Greys), 6th Inniskilling Dragoons, 8th Royal Irish Hussars, 12th Light Dragoons, and 17th Lancers. Royal Horse Artillery, 2 troops. Royal Artillery, detachments of battalions. Officers Royal Engineers. 16 Regiments of Infantry.—5th Northumberland Fusiliers (under orders to embark for England), 6th Royal Regiment (under orders for the Cape of Good Hope), 26th (Cameronian), 41st (Welsh), 44th (East Essex), 47th (Lancashire), [illegible]th (Princess Charlotte of Wales), 59th (2d Nottingham), 64th (2d Staffordshire), 67th (South Hampshire), 68th (Durham) Light Infantry. 70th (Surrey), 75th, 83d, 85th, Light Infantry, and 92d Highlanders 20 Depots of Infantry.—1st battalion 1st Royal, 7th Royal Fusiliers, 15th, 16th, 19th, 33d, 34th, 35th, 38th, 48th, 54th, 66th, 72d (Highland), 73d, 77th, 79th (Highland), 82d, 88th, Connaught Rangers, 93d (Highland), and 95th; with two companies of the 30th Regiment under orders to embark for England; forming an effective force of 22,000 men of all arms.

POLICE.

THE CHAIRMAN OF A RAILWAY COMPANY CHARGED WITH FORGERY.

We last week stated that a cheque of Messrs. Coutts, of a small amount, had been altered to £5000 The result of inquiries has been the apprehension of Captain William Richardson, the Chairman of the Tenbury, Worcester, and Ludlow Railway Company, who has undergone two examinations at the Mansion House

The circumstances are of a remarkable description. In the month of July a cheque signed by the Chairman and two of the Directors of the Company, had been presented, and paid at the counter of Coutts's bank. It was subsequently found that, although the signatures were genuine, the amount had undergone a very important change. A most strict investigation was, of course, immediately commenced. The cheque, it appeared, had been drawn as payable to No 11, and had been signed, first by the Chairman, and soon afterwards by two of the other Directors of the Company, and then returned to the Chairman, to be paid away to some individual who had a claim upon the Company The agents of the Company communicated with Messrs. Bush and Mullens, the solicitors to the Committee of Bankers for Protection against Forgeries and Frauds, upon the subject, and Mr. Bush adopted measures without delay. The Chairman of the Company was the person upon whom his suspicion at once fixed. The account given by Captain Richardson was, that he had signed a cheque for £10, which was also signed by two other Directors, that he had paid that cheque away to a party, and that he had never seen or heard of it since, until he was informed that the amount had been altered. Mr Bush managed to find out the person to whom Captain Richardson declared that he had paid the cheque, and by that person was informed that no transaction of the sort had taken place at all between him and the Chairman of the Railway Company. The result of the inquiries made at Coutts's bank and at the Bank of England corresponding with the suspicions thus roused, Mr. Bush put Captain Richardson into the custody of Russel. (No. 36), of the City Detective Police, having called together a meeting of the Directors, which the Captain attended, upon the subject of the affairs of the Company

Upon the first examination Mr. Bush said his object was to produce just as much evidence as would justify the magistrate in remanding the prisoner until the important and complicated evidence in support of the very serious charge he had to make should be prepared He (Mr. Bush) attended as agent to Messrs Fry and Co., the agents to the Tenbury, Worcester, and Ludlow Railway Company, and he charged Captain Richardson with having altered the amount of a cheque originally drawn for £10 to £5000, and with having received and applied to his own use part of the proceeds of the cheque so altered. Mr. Bush: I hold the cheque now in my hand. The prisoner stated to me that he filled up and signed a cheque for £10 on the 7th of July, drawn upon Messrs. Coutts and Co., and that he signed the same, and that the same afterwards was returned to him, signed by two other Directors of the Company, namely, Thomas Stevenson and William Letchmere Whitmore, and that the same cheque had afterwards been paid by Messrs. Coutts and Co., being altered to the sum of £5000. I had the copy of the cheque before me at the time, but that was the statement made to me by the prisoner

Mr. Robert Hare, clerk at Coutts and Co.'s bank, said (examining the cheque): I paid the cheque on the 20th of July, at the counter, to a person whom I do not know. I paid the amount in five notes of £1000 each, namely, one numbered 96,087, dated 13th February, 1846, and four notes of £1000 each, consecutive numbers from 96,091 to 96,094, of the same date as the first. I produce these notes as notes which I paid in giving the amount of the cheque.

Mr. Bush: Have you reason to believe now that cheque is a forgery?—Witness: It bears the proper signatures

Mr. Bush: Have you heard what induces you to believe that this cheque is forged in part? Witness: I have.

Evidence was then given by a clerk of the Bank of England that he had changed three one thousand pound notes on the 20th of July to a person who gave his name and address as Mr. Jones, Linen Hall, Dublin

Mr. William Higman, of the Issue Department of the Bank, said: These notes, being sent for gold, were brought to me by the last witness, who said that the gentleman required gold for them. I went to the place at which the gold is paid, and seeing only the address "Dublin," I asked the gentleman, who I have no doubt is the prisoner, what part of Dublin. I think I said Dublin is a large place. What part of Dublin do you reside in? He said "the Linen Hall." I asked him to write it on one of the notes, and I handed him a pen to do so. He appeared very nervous and requested me to do it for him. I wrote on one of the notes "Linen Hall," and asked him his address in London. He said Furnival's Inn Hotel, which I also wrote on the note. As the sum was a large sum for gold, I went to consult Mr. Marshall, the chief cashier. I think I asked him from whom he received the notes; indeed I am certain I asked him, and he said from Coutts and Co. I stated this to Mr. Marshall when I took the notes in, and Mr. Marshall requested me to trace to whom the notes had been first issued. I did so, and found that they had been issued to Coutts and Co. On coming from Mr. Marshall's room, I found the prisoner had left the Bank, and I told Mr. Ager, who reckoned the gold, to fetch him back. It was while I was tracing the notes I found that the prisoner had quitted the hall. Mr. Ager brought him back under pretence of checking the gold

William Thomas Ager, clerk in the Issue Department of the Bank of England, said: I was present during the whole time, and I have not the slightest doubt that the prisoner is the person. I had to call him back, in order to have the money he had received re-weighed. As there was a large amount of gold, and as some little suspicion was attached, I was sent after him, and I went to the cab which he had waiting for him, and said, "I am sorry, but we must have the money back to re-weigh it." He said, "Oh, its all right;" and he came back, and the gold was re-weighed. At last Mr. Higman told me to let him go.

At this stage, the prisoner was remanded.

On Tuesday last he was again brought up, and the following additional evidence was adduced

The first witness was Mr. Robert Hare, clerk in the bank of Messrs. Coutts, who repeated his former evidence as to the payment of the cheque.

Mr W. Pulsford: I am secretary to the Tenbury, Worcester, and Ludlow Railway Company, and have been so since its formation in 1845. The office is No. 5, New Palace-yard, Westminster. On the 7th of July there was a meeting of the Directors; the prisoner presided as Chairman, and signed the minutes and resolutions. One of the resolutions was that £10 be paid to the manager and foreman, Mr. Howell, for services rendered. I saw the entry made of the cheque for £10 in the cheque-book. Some of the Directors wished to give a sovereign each out of their own pockets to Mr. Howell's messenger, instead of drawing on the funds of the Company; but that was overruled, and a cheque drawn. I afterwards received a cheque from the prisoner for £10; it was dated 7th July, payable to No. 11, on order; at that time it was only signed by Captain Richardson. The cheque now produced is for £5000; it ought to be for £10. At the request of the prisoner, I obtained two signatures of Directors to the cheque for £10. When the cheque was given to me by Captain Richardson there was not a 1 before the 7, as appears now. The handwriting in the body of the cheque does not at all resemble the handwriting of the prisoner. The £10 cheque was sent, with two other cheques for £20 and £100, to Mr. Letchmere Whitmore, enclosed in a letter; and, having been signed by that gentleman, were returned by post to the Company's office, in Palace-yard. I am quite confident that, after the £10 cheque was regularly signed, I gave it to the prisoner; that was on the 16th of July. I have not seen the cheque since. When I gave it to Captain Richardson, it had not been altered in any way. I was present at Mr. Bush's office on Wednesday last, when Captain Richardson said he had delivered the cheque to a person with thin mustachios, sallow complexion, and about the middle stature. I think Captain Richardson said he had never seen the person to whom he gave the cheque, before; but that he called at his (Captain Richardson's) private house. I knew nothing of the cheque after it went out of my hands, until the forgery was found out at the bankers'.

In answer to a question by Mr Woulfe, Mr [illegible] cheque for £5000 until the prisoner [illegible]

Mr. Baines, another solicitor to the Company, said: I was present on Tuesday last at Mr. Bush's office; I was there in the capacity of a spectator. I did not attend professionally. I remember a statement made by the prisoner relating to the cheque for Messrs. Coutts for £5000 The prisoner stated that he had seen that cheque before, and referred to a conversation he had with [illegible] bankers in relation to it.

Mr. W. M. Coutts examined: I am a partner in Messrs. Coutts's banking-house. I remember Captain Richardson, Mr. Barnes, and other gentlemen, calling at the bank. I remember the prisoner, in the presence of one of the clerks, applied for leave to take away the paid cheques. I refused the application as irregular; the account had not been signed, and it would be necessary to get the sanction of parties. The prisoner said he had originally drawn the cheque of £5000 for £10, and the signatures were genuine; that the other writing on the cheque was his, except "five thousand," and the figure of 1 before the date The prisoner said he gave the cheque to a person in the employ of a gentleman in the Stock Exchange.

Cross-examined: I am not aware that the prisoner knew that it is the habit of our house not to give up paid cheques.

Joseph Longland examined: I am a clerk in the banking-house of Messrs. Coutts. I remember the prisoner coming to the bank, on Tuesday last, in company with three other gentlemen; he asked for the vouchers in the account of Richardson, Stevenson, Whitmore, and others; and wished to have the paid cheques given to him, but that was refused, unless the parties appeared and consented.

The witnesses connected with the Bank of England were next called and reiterated their previous statements, as to the payment of three £1000 bank notes in gold to the prisoner.

Mr. Payne: I am an inspector of notes at the Bank of England; the three notes for £1000 each were brought for my inspection on Monday last. I am quite certain it was the prisoner at the bar who had the notes. I am positive he was the person.

[illegible] Early, examined: I am a porter at the Bank of England. About the middle of July I remember the prisoner coming in a cab. I put some gold into it for him; he afterwards got in, but was requested to go back, as it was necessary to re-weigh the money. The cab was at the door about 20 minutes. The cabman said he took the prisoner up at Furnival's-inn.

Leonard Dean: I am a porter at the Bank I carried the gold to the cab for the prisoner at the bar. I heard the prisoner tell the cabman to drive him to Furnival's-inn.

James Dyne, cab-driver, examined: On the 20th of July, I was hired by a gentleman very much like the prisoner, to drive him to the Bank, which I did, and assisted to put the money into the cab I was about to drive off, when I was told to stop, and the money was taken back. In about ten minutes afterwards, however, the bags were replaced in the cab, and the gentleman told me to drive him to Furnival's-inn As I was about to drive into the arch, the gentleman told me to go on to Russell-square. On arriving there he told me to drive on to Montague-place, which I did, when the prisoner stopped at a house on the right-hand side. I do not know the number. I lifted the bags out of the cab for him, and placed them in the passage of the house. The gentleman paid me 4s. for the fare. I am not positive that the prisoner is the gentleman.

Mr. Howell, examined: I reside at Kensington. I have been largely connected with railway companies. I have known the prisoner ever since his being Chairman of the Tenbury, Worcester, and Ludlow Railway Company I never applied to, or received from him, a cheque for £10 on behalf of the company.

Mr. James Davis, another Director of the Company: I was present at a meeting of the Directors on the 21st of May, when a resolution was agreed to, which rendered it necessary for the prisoner to sign all cheques along with two of the Directors. The Chairman took the chair on that occasion. I was present at a board of Directors held on Tuesday last, the 25th August, in Palace-yard. I was there before the prisoner took the chair. The secretary produced the banking-book of the company with Messrs Coutts. The book was handed to Mr. Richardson; there was an entry of £5000 on the debit side, when the prisoner was asked "Do you know anything of this?" He replied that he did not; and added, "I think the first thing to be done is to see our bankers, but, perhaps, we had better wait until Mr. Fry, our solicitor, arrives." It was at that meeting that the cheque for £10 was found to have been altered into £5000; it was then agreed to adjourn the meeting to the office of Messrs. Fry, the solicitors. The prisoner did not object to such a course

George Russell (policeman 34). I apprehended the prisoner at the office of Messrs. Mullen and Bush, in St. Mildred's-court. On Saturday last, he was given into my custody by Mr. Fry on a charge of forging a cheque for £5000. In the Mansion House, last Saturday, the prisoner said to me, "Let the Bank clerks swear what they will, what does it matter to me, it was my own money." I did not ask him to make any statement; he did it of his own free will. Prisoner told [illegible] this morning that his solicitor said there was no case against him.

Daniel Douglass [illegible] Messrs. Bush and Mullen's clerks [illegible] were packed up and sent away. I remained at the prisoner's house till about six o'clock; when Mr. Mullen came, we could not find a key to open one of the cupboards, so we forced the lock

Mr Mullen examined.—I was present at a second search of the prisoner's house on Saturday night. In the cupboard, which was broken open, I found the cash-box now produced. None of the keys taken from the prisoner would fit it. The prisoner afterwards, however, gave up a key, observing that nothing would be found in the cash-box; but, upon opening it, there were some packages, containing fifty sovereigns each

Mr. Bush deposed to being present when a pocket-book was found, containing four £50, one £10, and three £5 notes; and in another book was found two other £50 notes. The numbers of all the notes were taken down. The total amount of bank notes and bank post bills amounted to £3225, and he should be able to prove that other notes to the amount of £800 had been exchanged for gold by the prisoner at the Bank of England, and another sum to an equal amount from a country bank

Mr. Woulfe said, he did not intend, on the present occasion, to make any statement on the part of the prisoner; he should only ask that he should be at liberty to have access to all papers necessary for his defence, which was ordered.

After a short discussion, the prisoner was remanded until the 9th of September.

The Attack upon the Workmen at the London and North-Western Railway Station.—On Tuesday, the Irish labourers, charged with the brutal attack upon the English workmen at the Camden Town Station of the London and North-Western Railway Company, were re-examined at Marylebone Office. They made no defence; and the whole of the prisoners (eighteen) were committed for trial, not merely for an "assault," but for "feloniously wounding, with intent to do some grievous bodily harm." They were conveyed to Newgate.

Museum of Economic Geology.—The new building for the museum, the site for which is in Jermyn street, Piccadilly, is to be commenced forthwith. The deposits at the present building, at Craig's-court, have, some time past, outgrown the means for their accommodation.

Viscount Hardinge.—As it has been mentioned by some of our contemporaries, that Lord Hardinge wishes to quit the Government and return home, we have much pleasure in communicating to our readers his own words upon that point, as written to a relation, from Simla, 19th of June, 1846:—"Yesterday was the 31st anniversary of the battle of Waterloo. How impetuously time flies! The reminiscences of bygone days flash across my mind, when I used to receive from you and my cousin many acts of friendship. It makes me feel that I am getting very old, and from the incessant work I have to encounter here I shall be glad when I can retire with honour; but you are all so generous in your distinctions and rewards, that I must not abandon my post whilst my duty is unperformed"

Sir Robert Peel's Explanation of His Policy.—The inhabitants of the town of Elbing, in Prussia, having some time since addressed a letter of congratulation to Sir Robert Peel, on the successful termination of the efforts of the late Premier for the establishment of Free Trade, have recently, as we learn from the Berlin journals, received a memorial, in which the following passages occur, explanatory of Sir Robert Peel's views on various points of policy. The memorial is dated Aug. 6, and says, "Your address, in which you express your approbation of the great measures of financial and commercial reform which I have considered it my duty to lay before Parliament, I have received with very great pleasure. The object of the Income-tax was not only to make good a deficit, but also to lay the foundation of a more just system of taxation, by putting an end to duties before levied on raw materials, as well as those vexatious regulations of the excise and the duties on many kinds of produce necessary to the comfort of the working classes" After passing a remark upon the currency question, the memorial proceeds to say:—"That part of your address wherein you admit the principle of commercial legislation, which, by order of Parliament, is now in force, has afforded me, above all things, the most lively satisfaction. The measures proposed for the diminution of Custom-house duties have been brought forward without any similar concessions having been offered by foreign countries; they have been proposed because the general interest of the country demanded it. Their effects are sufficiently advantageous to fully justify the steps we have taken, for it is contrary to the spirit of political economy to purchase at a dear rate articles of inferior value; and the authors of this measure have thought, without entering into negotiations and minute details, that the principles of their commercial legislation would be adopted by other nations." The memorial concludes with a denunciation of the Protective system:—"The social condition of that country which maintains with the greatest rigour the Protective system will be opposed to the state of another which has adopted liberal principles, and the conviction of the value of such principles will not obtain, unless by the encouragement of the freedom of exchange amongst all the nations of the world: the well being of each individual will be increased, and the will of Providence will be fulfilled—that Providence which has given to every country a sun, a climate, and a soil; each differing one from the other, not for the purpose of rendering them severally independent of each other; but, on the contrary, in order that they may feel their reciprocal dependence, by the exchange of their respective produce, thus causing them to enjoy in common the blessings of Providence. It is thus that we find in commerce the means of advancing civilisation, of appeasing jealousy and national prejudice, and of bringing about a universal peace, either from national interest, or from Christian duty."

The late Sir Charles Wetherell. Sir Charles Wetherell died intestate. The personal funded property is estimated at upwards of £200,000, principally invested in Venezuelan, Chili, and other foreign stock; and, there being no surviving children, one-half of the amount will be Lady Wetherell's share. The remainder will be equally divided among the brothers and sisters of the deceased. The landed and other property is valuable, and goes to the heirs-at-law before mentioned. For many years Sir Charles took a warm interest in agricultural matters, but, on the passing of the Corn-Law Repeal Bill, he expressed considerable fear as to its probable effects on the landed interests, and determined upon selling the farms which he possessed; but his fears after a short time subsided, and he resolved not only on retaining them, but on purchasing others, and it was while in the act of carrying out such intention, that he met with the accident which in such a short time afterwards terminated so fatally

COUNTRY NEWS.

DERBY ELECTION.

The nomination for Derby took place on Wednesday morning. Mr. Strutt, who vacated the seat in consequence of his acceptance of the office of Commissioner of the new Railway Board, was again a candidate. Mr. J. B Compton proposed the re-election of that gentleman. The nomination was seconded by Mr. Fox. W. L. Newton, Esq , then nominated Sir Digby Mackworth, and Mr Josiah Lewis seconded the nomination.

Both candidates having addressed the electors, the Mayor took a show of hands. A large number were held up for Sir Digby Mackworth, but the preponderance was greatly in favour of Mr. Strutt, and the announcement of the Mayor to that effect was received with several rounds of enthusiastic cheering.

Mr. Lewis, on behalf of Sir Digby Mackworth, demanded a poll, which took place on Thursday morning. At the close, at four o'clock, the numbers were—

Strutt	848
Mackworth	564
Majority for Strutt	284

The Cobden National Testimonial Fund.—On Tuesday evening the weekly meeting of the Manchester Committee for the Promotion of the Cobden National Testimonial Fund was held in that town. Mr. George Wilson presided. The Chairman reported an increase in the general subscription, since the last meeting, of £2000, and upwards. In this sum was included a sum of £630 from the Messrs. Darby, of Coalbrookdale. The report from Glasgow was, that £400 additional had been collected during the past week, making the total subscribed in that city £3400. The total subscription had reached about £71,000. A letter was read from Mr. Alderman Kay, requesting his name to be added to the subscription-list for £20. Mr. Nodal reported that the sum received since the last meeting, from small subscriptions in Manchester, was £106 6s. 10d., making a total of £203 11s. 7d. The amount promised within the last week was £39, making the total amount promised, £66 8s. 6d., and the whole amount of small subscriptions, £270. It was stated that the fund was progressing satisfactorily throughout the kingdom

British Association for the Advancement of Science.—The arrangements for the ensuing meeting, which commences on Thursday next, are nearly complete, and promise an occasion of much interest to the members and visitors which it will draw together For this, however, they are chiefly indebted to the Directors of the South Western Railway Company, who have not only placed all their available rooms at the service of the Association, for its meeting, &c., but subscribed £100 towards the reception fund, being nearly one half of what has been subscribed for this purpose. The reception room will be at the terminus of the railway, and the meetings will be held as follows:—Section A, Mathematics and Physics, under the presidency of Sir John Herschel; and D, Zoology and Botany, with Dr. Richardson, the celebrated Polar traveller, at its head, at the Natural History Society's Rooms; sections E, for Physiology, and F, for Statistics, under the respective presidencies of Professor Owen and Mr G. R. Porter, will occupy the Bugle Hall of the Railway; Section G, for Geology, under Mr Leonard Horner, F.R.S., will hold its sittings at the Upper Archery Rooms; Section B, for Chemistry, under Doctor Faraday, at the Polytechnic Institution and Section G, for Mechanics, with Professor Willis at its head, and the sub-section of Ethnology, at a large house recently occupied as a club-house The Local Committee have been very successful in making arrangements with lodging-housekeepers, to prevent exorbitant charges during the week. The South Western Steam Navigation Company have liberally placed at the disposal of the Council one of their steam vessels, for the purpose of conveying the members on a marine geological excursion to the Isle of Wight; and the Ordnance authorities have granted to the members a free access to all the stores, &c., at Portsmouth and Gosport. No arrangements have as yet been made for the evening meetings, with the exception of those of the first and last days, when the general meetings of the Association will take place. Among other distinguished savans whose presence have been announced, are, M. Elie de Beaumont, the President of the Institute of Paris; M. Oersted, the discoverer of electro-magnetism; M. Struve, the Astronomer Royal of St. Petersburgh, sent over to this country on a special mission for scientific investigation by the Emperor of Russia; M. Mattucci, the eminent physiologist from Modena; M. Dumas, the eminent French chemist, &c.

Consecration of a Catholic Church at Cheadle.—The consecration of St Giles's Catholic Church at Cheadle, Staffordshire, took place on Monday. This building has occupied nearly six years in its erection. The service was strictly private on Monday, but on Tuesday the grand opening took place with great pomp and solemnity. The church has been erected at the sole cost of the Earl of Shrewsbury, from the designs of Mr. A. W. Pugin. It consists of a western tower, surmounted by a lofty spire, richly adorned with statues, crockets, and pinnacles; a nave of five compartments, with north and south aisles and porches, a "Ladye Chapel," a "Chapel of the Blessed Sacrament," and a chancel, with sacristies and organ loft on the north The style is that which prevailed during the reigns of the Edwards, commonly called the decorated.

Six Houses Consumed at Chard.—A serious fire occurred at Chard, Somersetshire, on Sunday last, which destroyed the King's Head Inn and six adjoining houses occupied by tradespeople. It broke out in a range of stabling in the main street, fronting the church, and extended rapidly to the King's Head Inn and the other buildings, all of which within an hour after the commencement were totally destroyed. The amount of property consumed is reported to be little short of £1,000

IRELAND.

Address to the new Lord-Lieutenant.—On Monday an appropriate Address was presented by the Corporation to the Earl of Besborough, the new Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, in which gratification was particularly expressed that her Majesty should have appointed a resident proprietor. His Excellency, in his answer to the Address, said:—"In accepting the important office to which her Majesty has been graciously pleased to appoint me, I am conscious of the deep responsibility of the duty which I have undertaken. I rely, however, with confidence on the support that I shall receive from my fellow-countrymen, who, in different parts of this kingdom, have so kindly come forward to express their approval of the appointment that her Majesty has been pleased to make of a resident proprietor as Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. The interest I have always felt in the prosperity of this country makes the appointment most gratifying, as it gives me the opportunity of more immediately directing my attention to those measures of internal improvement which must tend to the tranquillity and welfare of the kingdom. I deeply regret the distress that prevails in many parts of the country from the failure of the potato crop, and you may rely on my immediately carrying into effect those measures which the Legislature have adopted for relieving the poorer classes under this heavy dispensation of Providence."

The Repeal Association.—The proceedings at the Repeal Association on Monday were rather flat, and unprofitable also to the Repealers. Mr. O'Connell repeated all his conciliatory expressions towards Mr. Smith O'Brien, and proceeded to argue that the "Young Ireland" party were all guilty of treason, by referring to the publications in the Nation newspaper; he referred to "Blackstone's Commentaries" in proof of his definition of the law, and went on to say, that, as counsel for Ireland, he could not permit a few young men to make the entire Association liable to death upon the scaffold. (Cheers.) At four o'clock, Mr. John O'Connell announced the week's rent to be £104 1s. 6d

Mr. Smith O'Brien on Physical Force.—Two Addresses have been presented to Mr. Smith O'Brien, at his house at Cahermoyle, one from Rathkeale, and the other from Newcastle. Considerable enthusiasm was manifested on the occasion. The assembly numbered from 7000 to 8000, among whom were several parties of ladies. In answer to those addresses, Mr. Smith O'Brien, in returning thanks, entered into a long explanation of his quarrel with the Repeal Association, and referred to his imprisonment. Mr. Smith O'Brien, in conclusion, gave his opinion of the course which ought to be adopted by the Repealers, and also in regard to physical force. The hon. gentleman said—"I have always endeavoured to impress on the people, whenever I have addressed them, that an appeal to arms would be disastrous to Repeal; and, perhaps, throw it back for half a century. (Hear, hear.) But, at the same time, I will say that if the whole of the people of Ireland are unanimous in their demand for the Repeal of the Union; and if England, in reply to that demand, should proceed to extremities, and endeavour, by force, to put down the expression of public opinion—I say, in that case, resistance would be not only lawful but necessary. (Loud cheers.) I told Mr. Macaulay, when he talked to me of resorting to arms to put down the expression of public opinion in Ireland I said I could tell him that the Irish people had arms too. (Tremendous cheering, and cries of 'Ay, and we could use them.')"

The Total Failure of the Potato Crop in Ireland.—The Times says:—"The accounts we continue daily to receive from all parts of Ireland leave no room to doubt the failure of the potato crop. From the Giant's Causeway to Cape Clear, from Limerick to Dublin, not a green field is to be seen. The disease having attacked the plant at a much earlier period this year than it did in 1845, the root has been arrested in its growth, and prevented from arriving at maturity. Thus, what was last year but a partial destruction is now a total annihilation; and it is become a very general belief that the month of December will not find a single potato in the country. Ireland is, therefore, doomed to suffer a recurrence (if it should not rather be called a continuance) of that distress which has well nigh pauperized the whole population."

Visit of the Duke of Wellington to Plymouth.—His Grace the Duke of Wellington, as Commander-in-Chief of the Forces, and the Marquis of Anglesey, as Master-General of the Ordnance, have been to Plymouth, on an official visit to the garrison to inspect the port defences. The Duke arrived at Plymouth on Friday (last week), and the Marquis arrived in his yacht, The Pearl. His Grace posted from Exeter; and, on his arrival at Ivybridge, finding that it would take half-an-hour to get horses ready to continue his journey, determined to walk on The crack coach, the "Tally-ho," in the meantime passed the village, and Hardcastle, the coachman, having obtained information of the Duke's having set out towards Plymouth on foot, hastened to overtake him; and, having come up with his Grace, invited him to ride. The Duke, however, declined, saying, "God bless you! Good bye. I'd rather walk; besides, I have company," which consisted of a farmer and two "navies," with whom his Grace was keeping up a busy conversation, his humble companions, of course, ignorant of his exalted rank. His Grace has not visited Devonport since 1822, when he at once put a stop to the useless and expensive construction of the lines around that town. On Sunday morning his Grace left Plymouth for Teignmouth, whence he came by the South Devon Railway to Exeter, reaching the station about 12 o'clock. There being no other ordinary train until the mail train in the evening, a special train was dispatched for his Grace's accommodation, and he reached London shortly after five o'clock that evening.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD.

Aug. 29

The following members of the University have been ordained by the Bishop of Norwich

Deacons—W. L. Pope, Pembroke College; J. G. Hawkins, Pembroke College; H. T. Glynn, New Inn Hall.

Priests—Rev. B. E. Watkins, Wadham College; Rev. C. H. Angell, Queen's College; Rev. J. E. Gladstone, Magdalen Hall; Rev. J. L. Johnson, St. Edmund Hall.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

A Fight on a Railway.—On Saturday evening, when the 6h. 30m. a.m. mixed train from Bristol was between Steventon and Didcot Stations, on the Great Western Railway, a quarrel arose between the engine-driver (Temple), and Poole, the stoker. A fight ensued on the engine, and, if both had fallen off, the consequences must have been dreadful, as the train was going at the rate of nearly thirty miles an hour, and there was no possibility of the guards getting to the engine to stop it, the high third-class carriages being between them, nor were they aware of the fight until Temple, finding himself worsted, stopped the engine, to endeavour to throw Poole off, when the guards alighted, and succeeded in obtaining a cessation of hostilities, until their arrival at Didcot, when they were reported to Mr. Bishop, the superintendent, who gave them into custody of the guards of the fast train, and conveyed them to Paddington. Their places were supplied by others at Didcot, and the train reached Paddington in safety. On Tuesday, Temple, the engine-driver, and Poole, the stoker, were taken before Mr. Gooch, the superintendent of locomotives, when, it having been ascertained that Poole was the aggressor, he was immediately discharged. Temple was fined a sovereign.

Fatal Accident on the Gravesend and Rochester Railway.—On Friday afternoon (last week) William Woodford, a plate-layer, employed on this line of railway, lost his life by the half-past three o'clock up-train passing over him, the injuries being such as to cause instant death. The deceased, with others, was employed in the tunnel for the purpose of examining the rails, and remedying any defect that may arise, every time the trains pass. James Brenchley was employed with the deceased at the time, and had just left him to procure a fresh candle, the one they were using being nearly burnt out, and on his return he found his companion a mangled corpse. Previous to leaving him, they had heard the whistle, and as the train passed Brenchley, he had posted himself in a place of safety, which deceased also might have done, as there was sufficient notice An inquest was held on Saturday afternoon, and the Jury returned a verdict, "That the deceased was killed by being accidentally run over by the train, the Jury expressing their full conviction that the accident did not occur through the negligence or mismanagement of the superintendent, or any other person connected with the management of the line, but solely by accident."

The Convict Smith. The wretched convict, John Smith, has been visited by Mr. Alderman Sidney, and other civic functionaries, who are adopting strenuous measures to obtain a commutation of his sentence. The culprit is represented as being perfectly reconciled to his impending fate. Some members of his family, including his wife, have been permitted to see him. The convict perseveres in his statement, that he was goaded to commit the fearful crime by the deceased. Petitions in favour of a mitigation of punishment have been numerously signed, and the most sanguine expectations are entertained that the wretched man's life will be spared, although no hope is held out to him. It is stated that the Premier, as one of the representatives of the City of London, and the other members, will be solicited to add the weight of their influence to the evidence to obtain a commutation of the sentence. The Sheriffs have fixed the execution for the 21st inst., thus affording the friends of the convict the longest possible period allowed by law, to exert themselves in his favour. The Jurymen who pronounced the verdict of Guilty have signed a short memorial, again pressing their recommendations to mercy. A deputation offered one of the petitions for signature to Mr. Alderman Wilson, the sitting Magistrate at Guildhall. The Alderman, after reading it, affixed his name. The Lord Mayor has also intimated his willingness to sign it.

Shocking Suicide.—On Tuesday morning Mrs. Charlotte Glanby, a widow, about fifty years of age, who carried on the business of a dressmaker, at No. 14, Queen-street, Finsbury-market, destroyed herself under very shocking circumstances. From the statement of a young woman named Sarah Bennet, who was in her service, it appears that, during the morning, there had been nothing unusual in her manner, but, shortly after eleven o'clock, she went up stairs, saying that she was going up to her mother, a very aged woman, who lay bedridden in an upper apartment, and she had no sooner entered the room, than she opened the window, and threw herself out, and the noise of the fall being heard, her mangled remains were found lying in the yard. An alarm being given, Policeman Smith, 171 G, was called in, and Mr Davis, a surgeon, living nearly opposite, was in immediate attendance, but death must have been nearly instantaneous. The deceased had fallen direct upon her head, which was literally dashed to pieces, the brains being scattered upon a wall more than a yard distant from the spot where she fell, and amongst them Mr. Davis, the surgeon, found one of the eyes.

Suicide of a Colonel in the East India Company's Service.—Last Saturday morning, Colonel Charles Walter Thornton, of the East India Company's Service, committed suicide in the station-house of the Marylebone district. It appears that he had been given in charge for having offered at the shop of Mr. Bennett, watchmaker, of Oxford-street, a £5 note, supposed to be a forged one. Inquiries were at the same time made, and Mrs. Harding, jeweller, of Holles-street, Cavendish-square, and Mr. Bishop, boot-maker, of Connaught-terrace, identified the prisoner as having passed £10 and £5 forged notes upon them Two other similar charges were established, and these were found to form portions of an extensive system of fraud which has been for some time in practice. On the prisoner being searched at the time he was taken into custody, a forged £5 note and two genuine £5 Bank of England notes were found upon him, and £9 in gold. At his lodgings a quantity of valuable jewellery was discovered. Shortly before one in the morning, on a police-constable entering the cell, he was found quite dead, having strangled himself with his pocket-handkerchief. The deceased was about forty years of age, and had at one time held a commission in the East Indian army. At the Inquest, the above facts were reiterated—Mrs. Mary Thornton, the widow of the deceased, was examined The unfortunate lady was deeply affected. She said she had been married to the deceased six years, and resided at 3, Hartland-terrace, Kentish Town. Deceased was a Colonel in the East India Company's service, but had only recently returned from Egypt, where she had been with him. She knew nothing of his affairs, but always understood that he was a gentleman of independent property. He was at home all day on Friday up to five o'clock, when he went out, saying he should go to billiards He was then in excellent health and spirits He had never complained of pain in the head, or threatened or attempted to destroy himself. He was a very temperate man. He had no relatives living. They had all died in India. She could not account for his possession of the forged notes.—The Jury returned a verdict, "That the deceased hung himself; but, in what state of mind he was at the time, there was no evidence to show."

The Bank Robbery at Berwick.—The authorities of Berwick have completed their investigation into this extraordinary case, and have determined upon committing Mrs. Thompson, the wife of the manager, for trial at the next Northumberland assizes. A very strong feeling of sympathy is manifested in her behalf by the inhabitants of Berwick, more especially in the more respectable circles, with whom she and her husband have very extensively mixed. Few of the circumstances connected with the case have been allowed to transpire beyond those already published, the magisterial inquiry having been conducted with closed doors. It is understood, however, that various points have been discovered, which, though trivial in themselves, are important when considered in connection with other facts. For instance, black thread exactly corresponding in colour and quality with that with which the bedding had been re-sewed after the money had been secreted, has been found in Mrs. Thompson's workbox; and it also appears that on the night of the robbery she deposited the keys of the bank in a box, or safe, in her bedroom, and placed the small key in her pocket. The female servant, who slept in the same room, and who at first professed ignorance on the subject, now positively states that her mistress was absent during the night, for about an hour, and on returning washed her hands. Mr. Burdis, one of the Directors of the Bank, has been engaged in an examination of letters found in Mrs. Thompson's possession, and one expression used by her husband, in a letter written some time ago, has been much dwelt upon: it is, "Burn my letters, or they will tell tales." As soon as the unfortunate woman can be removed, she will be sent to Morpeth gaol.

Lamentable Death from Destitution.—On Wednesday an inquest was held by Mr. William Carter, at the Huntsman and Hounds, Park-place, Walworth, on Francis Mowley, aged 37 years, a costermonger, lately living in Park-row, East-lane. The body gave unmistakable testimony of extreme destitution. His wife deposed that in consequence of ill health and the want of employment, they had suffered great privation, being often in the want of the common necessaries of life. The witness was hardly able to stand, which she assured the Coroner and jury arose from the want of proper nourishment. (She was allowed to sit, and received a glass of wine.) That the only means they had of living were by selling and pawning their goods, &c. They had not tasted any meat for three weeks, and the only food they had was a little bread and tea daily, for witness, the deceased, and three children. On Monday morning last the deceased went out in search of work, and returned about 11 o'clock, very exhausted and weak, and after a short time he was seized with a fit. Witness became alarmed, and called in a neighbour, who raised the deceased from the ground, but he was quite insensible. A surgeon was sent for, but life was quite extinct. A juror—Why is it you did not make an application to the parochial officers? Witness—(crying bitterly)—Because my husband would rather put up with anything than do so.—Brooks, the relieving officer, said he had known the deceased for some years, he was a very sober steady man, but latterly he had been much reduced.—Verdict "Death from natural causes."

Fatal Accident on the South Eastern Railway.—A distressing accident occurred on Thursday morning at the Reigate station of the South Eastern Railway, which resulted in the death of a young man named Frederick Eldon, a[illegible]d in the service of the company. Eldon was the guard of the up mail train, arriving in London at 4. 30. a.m. On nearing the Reigate station the unfortunate man, having applied the break, was about descending from his seat on the roof of the carriage, when his leg struck against the dwarf wall running between the "up" and "down" lines, which had the effect of fracturing his thigh and throwing him under the wheels of the carriage on which he was riding. The skid having been applied the wheels did not pass over the poor fellow's body, but before the train was stopped both his legs were completely crushed and one of his feet torn off. In this state he was conveyed to Guy's Hospital, where he lingered in a state of excruciating suffering, retaining his senses to the last, up to one o'clock, at which hour he expired. The unfortunate man has left a widow and one child.

OUR MAGAZINE COLUMN FOR SEPTEMBER.

HINTS TO DINNER-GIVERS.

How many do we see who sacrifice all their domestic comfort, and eventually their prospects, in the foolish pursuit of society, believing most fondly that they are making hosts of friends, and that all the shaking of hands and after-dinner speeches are beautiful and affecting traits of friendship, and that the crowds who come and eat their dinners, and dance their wax-lights to a snuff, are their staunch friends? No such thing; friendship is not made to music; dining opens the mouth, not the heart; after-dinner affection is only a voice from the cellar; the people who swear eternal friendship over the dinner-table, must not be called upon the next day to fulfil their promises. As long as people give good dinners and grand soirées, so long will they find a host of diners and dancers, who will have a great esteem for their feeding and their music; but, as to any personal esteem, they have no more than the pastry-cook who brings the supper, or the man who plays on the cornopean. "I weeded my friends," said an old eccentric friend, "by hanging a piece of stair carpet out of my first-floor window, with a broker's announcement affixed. 'Gad! it had the desired effect I soon saw who were my friends. It was like firing a gun near a pigeon-house; they all forsook the building at the first report, and I have not had occasion to use the extra flaps of my dining-table since." Alfred Crowquill, in Bentley's Miscellany.

THE AUTHOR OF "TEN THOUSAND A YEAR."

If ever Mr. Macaulay's half-prophecy should come to pass, if ever the time should really arrive when some traveller from New Zealand shall, in the midst of a vast solitude, take his stand upon a broken arch of London Bridge, to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's,—then, when the learned men of Oceania are poring over the fossils of our civilisation, and the fashionable novelists of Auckland are summoning up before the astonished eyes of their contemporaries the departed glories of Regent-street and Westminster Hall,—then, to such enquirers, and to such writers, few of the productions of our present literature will be more welcome, more fitted to afford a true, a vivid, a profound insight into the social system of England in the nineteenth century, than the works of Mr. Warren.—Dolman's Magazine.

CHARACTER OF WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR.

The character of William has been a good deal blackened, but scarcely more than it deserves, for there is no doubt that he was cruel, selfish, and unprincipled. It is, however, a curious fact, that what receives blacking from one age gets polished by the next; and this may account for the brilliance that has been shed in this country over the name of one who introduced the feudal system, the Game Laws, and other evils, the escape from which has been the work of many centuries. Though a natural son he was an unnatural father, and the result was, that being an indifferent parent, his children became also indifferent. He had a violent temper, and was such a brutal glutton that he aimed a blow at Fitz-Osborne, his steward, for sending to table an under-done crane, when Odo interfered to check his master's violence. Of his personal appearance we have an authentic record in a statue placed against one of the pillars of the church of St. Stephen, at Caen; but as the figure is without a head, we have tried in vain to form from it some idea of the Conqueror's countenance. From the absence of the face in the statue, we can only infer that William wore an expression of vacancy.—Comic History of England.

M. ARAGO.

Of all scientific men now living, there is none whose fame is so universally diffused, and whose authority is so often invoked as M. Arago. The squatter on the banks of the Mississippi is as familiar with his name as the dweller of the Quai Voltaire. His dicta are as often quoted in the Delta of the Ganges, as in the city washed by the Thames; and this reputation is not among the followers of science, or even its would-be votaries; it is strictly popular. All who look forward to a coming eclipse, or an approaching comet—all who endeavour to prognosticate the vicissitudes of weather, and look for the lunar phases all who are exposed to the visitations of the hurricane, or endeavour to avert the falling thunderbolt—all appeal to the name of Arago: rightly or wrongly, they quote his supposed or imputed predictions, and profess to pin their faith on his oracular voice. In short, there is no savant living whose name is at once so universally known, and whose authority is so universally popular as M. Arago.—Dublin University Magazine.

A "GREEN SPOT" AT PRAGUE.

Reader, should you ever visit Prague, forget not to go to the Sophien Insel, there, twice or thrice in a week, plays the Palombini band. This little island has really a magical appearance on a fine autumn evening, when, at the cool hours, numbers of well-dressed, cheerful people sit in the open air, under the little grove of pollard chesnuts, and regale themselves and their friends with [illegible], coffee, chocolate, &c.; the most substantial suppers may also be had. As the [illegible]ing draws in, lamps and chandeliers, suspended from the trees, add a beauty to the scene, and it assumes the most friendly and social aspect. Should you prefer it, you can saunter round the little island, adorned with well-kept paths and beds of flowers; or, on the edge of it, close to the water, guarded by a row of trees, growing on the brink, you may choose a resting-place. Through the stems and branches, some of them dipping into the water, brightly gleams the Moldau, quivering in the sun's declining rays, and the eye then, finding an opening, may look out afar, and watch the changing hues and softening blue of land and water in the distance, while the heart muses on futurity. Meanwhile are heard, played with the greatest precision and beauty, the finest overtures and sparkling po[illegible]: these last not the dull imitation fashion has lately produced, but the true children of the soil, combining so strangely sadness and mirth—Sehnsucht and Heiterkeit—that one knows not which predominates. Fraser's Magazine.

AN ANCIENT ENGLISH VILLAGE.

If we still go into really old-fashioned districts—into those which the modern changes have not yet reached, where there are no manufacturers into the obscure and totally agricultural nooks we see evidences of a most ancient order of things. The cottages, the farm-houses, the very halls are old; the trees are old; the hedges are old; everything is old. There is nothing that indicates change or progress. There is nothing, even in furniture, that may not have been there at least five hundred years; there is much that induces you to believe that eight hundred years ago it existed. In common labourers' cottages, before the late rage for old English furniture, which led the London brokers to scour the whole empire, penetrate into every nook, and bring up all the old cabinets, hall tables, old carved chairs, carved presses and wardrobes, and retail them for five hundred per cent., besides importing great quantities of similar articles from Holland, Belgium, and Germany, I have myself seen old, heavy, ample arm chairs, with pointed backs, in which one might imagine an Alfred or an Edward the Confessor sitting, with the date in great letters on their backs, of 1300 or 1400. There are plenty of houses so ancient, that in the roofs and woodwork, the ends of the great wooden pegs with which their framing is pinned together, are not cut off. But without, how old is everything! The trees are dead at top, and hollow at heart; there are ancient elms and oaks standing, whose shadow is said to have covered their acre of ground, but which have now neither head nor heart; huge hollow shells, so capacious, that whole troops of children play in them, and call them their churches, and whole flocks of sheep or herds of cattle seek shelter from the summer sun in them These old villages, too, are lost, as it were, in a wilderness of ancient orchards, where the trees produce apples and pears totally unlike any now grown in modern plantings. The villages are surrounded by a maze of little crofts, whose hedges have evidently never been set out in any general inclosure, for they do not run in regular squares and straight lines, but form all imaginable figures, and, with the true line of beauty, go waving and sweeping about in all directions. They are manifestly the effect of gradual and fitful inclosure from the forest in far-off times, many of them long before the Conquest, when this dense thicket and that group of trees were run up to and included as part of the fencing. These old hedges have often a monstrous width, occupying nearly as much in their aggregate amount as the aggregate amount of the inclosed land itself. They are often complete wildernesses of stony mounds, bushes, and rank vegetation. The hawthorns of which they are composed are no longer bushes, but old and wide-spreading trees, with great gaps and spaces often between them, having ceased to be actual fences between the old pastures, and become only most picturesque shades for the cattle. In the old crofts still flourish the native daffodils, and the snow-white and pink primroses, now extirpated by the gathering for gardens everywhere else.—William Howitt, in Jerrold's Shilling Magazine.

THE DUDDLESTONES.

Prince George of Denmark, in passing through Bristol, went to the Exchange, accompanied by one of his attendants, and remained there until the merchants had pretty generally withdrawn, none of whom had sufficient resolution to address his Highness. At last, one Duddlestone, a boddice maker, mustered courage, and inquired of the Prince if he were not the husband of Queen Anne. Having received an affirmative reply, Duddlestone, expressed the deep concern he felt that none of the merchants had invited his Highness home, assured him that the neglect arose from no disrespect to the Queen, but from a diffidence of their means of entertainment, and finished by entreating the Prince and the gentleman who was with him, to accompany him to his house, "where," added Duddlestone, "a good piece of beef and a plum-pudding, with ale of my dame's own brewing, and a welcome of loyalty and respect, await your presence." Prince George was much amused with the boddice-maker's request, and although he had ordered dinner at the White Hart, cheerfully accepted the invitation. Duddlestone, on arriving at home, called his wife, who was up stairs, desiring her to put on a clean apron, and come down, for the Queen's husband and another gentleman were come to dine with them. In the course of the repast, the Prince requested the boddice maker to return the visit at the Palace, and to bring his wife with him, giving him a card to facilitate his introduction at Court. A few months after, Duddlestone, with his wife behind him on horseback, set out for London, where they soon found the Prince, and were introduced to the Queen. Her Majesty received them most graciously, and invited them to an approaching dinner, telling them that they must have new clothes for the occasion. Dresses of purple velvet, the colour they selected, were consequently prepared, and Duddlestone and his worthy dame were introduced by the Queen herself as the most loyal persons in Bristol, and the only ones in that city who had invited the Prince, her husband, to their house. After the entertainment was over, the Queen desired Duddlestone to kneel, laid a sword on his head, and to use Lady Duddlestone's own words, said to him, "Ston up, Sir Jan." He was then offered money, or a place under Government; but he would not accept either, informing the Queen that he had £50 out at interest, and he apprehended that the number of people he saw about Court must be very expensive. The Queen made Lady Duddlestone a present of her gold watch from her side, which her ladyship considered so great an ornament, that she never went to market without having it suspended over her blue apron. Sir John Dudd[illegible] rising still higher in Royal favour, was created a Baronet, 11t[illegible]nuary, 169[illegible], but the sun of his prosperity soon set. In the great storm of 1704, [illegible] lost more than £20,000, and was sadly reduced, so much so, indeed, that his [illegible]ndson an[illegible] Sir John Duddlestone, the second Baronet, held an humble [illegible] at Bristol, and was living in the year 1727, in a very low condit[illegible]. Patricians.

STATE CARRIAGE OF KING LOUIS PHILIPPE SENT TO CONVEY TO THE TUILERIES, THE MARQUIS OF NORMANBY, THE NEWLY APPOINTED AMBASSADOR.

RECEPTION OF THE MARQUIS OF NORMANBY BY THE KING OF THE FRENCH.

We stated last week that the Marquis of Normanby, the new Ambassador to Paris, had been received by Louis Philippe to present his credentials. The noble Marquis, accompanied by the leading members of the Embassy, was received by the King at a special audience, in order to present the letters which accredit him as Ambassador at the Court of France. We hear that his Majesty received the noble Marquis with much courtesy and warmth of feeling.

His Majesty sent one of his carriages to the Embassy in the Rue du Faubourg St. Honoré for his Excellency, and the noble Marquis was conveyed back in the Royal carriage to the Embassy. The Marquis of Normanby has since been invited to a soirée given by the King, at which several other foreign Ministers and persons of distinction were present.

RURAL FETE AT OSBORNE.

(From our Correspondent.)

On Saturday last, his Royal Highness Prince Albert's Birth-day was celebrated on the Royal Estate at Osborne, in the Isle of Wight, by the whole of the workmen and labourers in her Majesty's employ, in the true spirit of old English hospitality; when about three hundred persons sat down to a bountiful spread of beef, mutton, vegetables, and bread, from the Royal kitchen; and a plentiful supply of beer, pipes, and tobacco, at the conclusion of the repast.

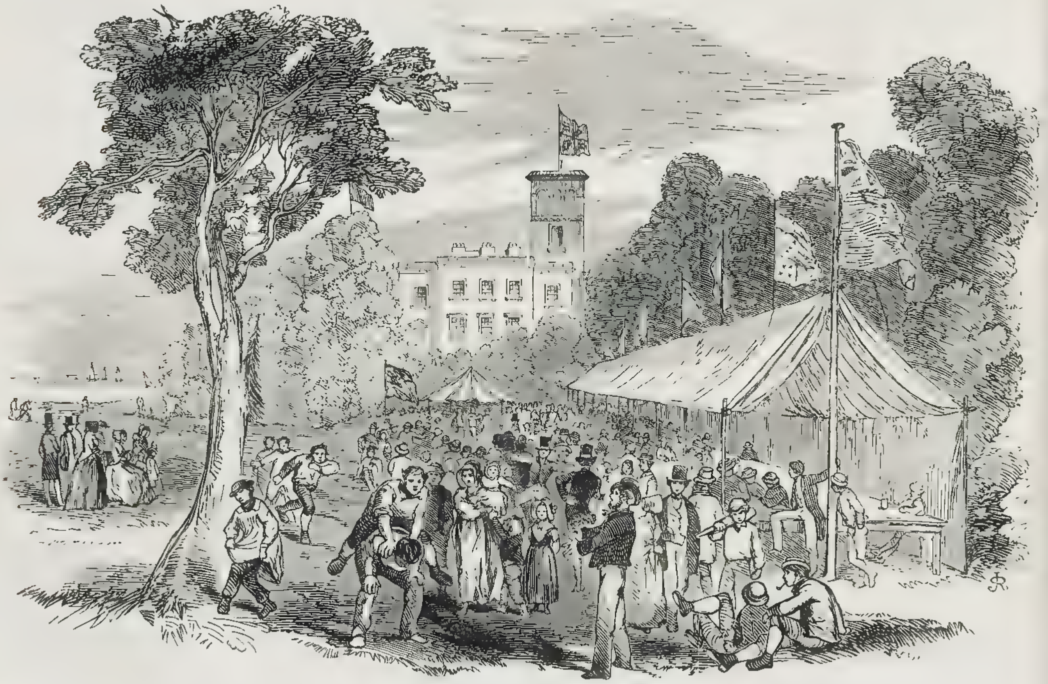
This Festival, such as the Island had never been witness to before, took place on the lawn near the north-eastern side of the new wing, or rather between the new building and the porter's lodge Here was erected a capacious, covered shed or tent, beneath which was a double table to receive the "Queen's bounty." Over the tent, mingled with the breeze, were various national flags.

The party having been seated, her Majesty, accompanied by the Royal children, proceeded to the spot, and witnessed the joyful countenances of her rustic servants.

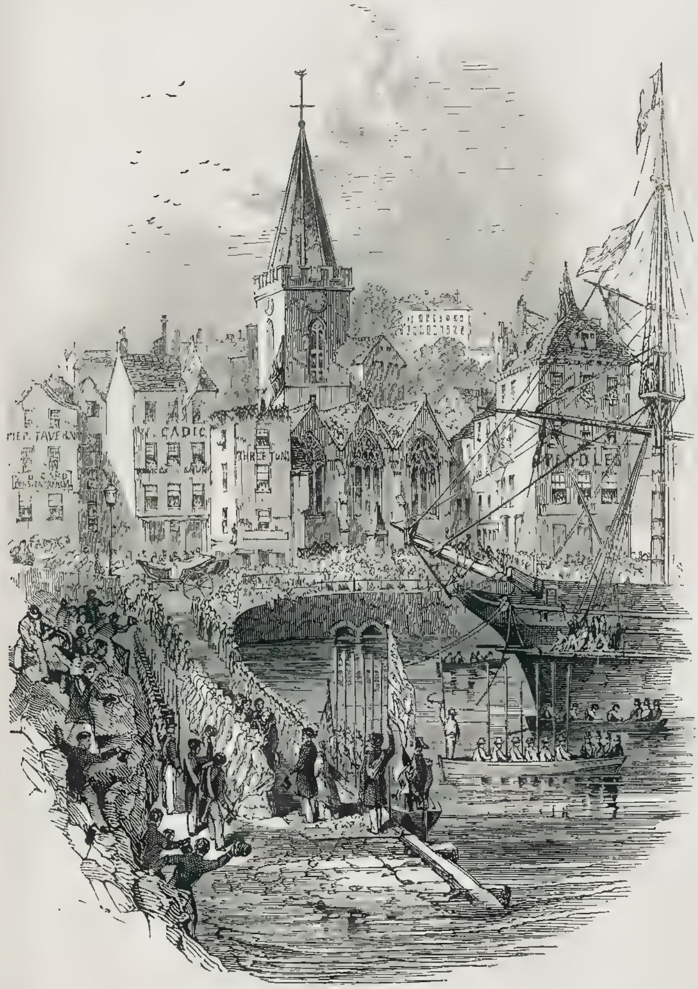
All being in readiness, the Lord Bishop of Oxford, who had that morning arrived at Osborne on a visit to her Majesty, said Grace, and the operations commenced. The Band of the 74th Regiment, under their able conductor, Mr. Hans Hartung, played several airs and favourite selections throughout the Dinner. After the men had substantially regaled themselves, her Majesty and the Royal family having previously retired to their tent, at one end of the lawn, the cloth was removed, and "Her Majesty's Health" was drunk, the band playing "God Save the Queen." "The Health of his Royal Highness Prince Albert" next followed, with the "Coburg March"; then, "The Prince of Wales and all the Royal Family"; air, "Rule Britannia"—the men, at the conclusion, giving three hearty cheers, with "one cheer more." Her Majesty then left the grounds for a short time, with the Royal party and suite; while the humble guests enjoyed themselves over their pipes. After an absence of about three quarters of an hour, the Royal family returned and took up their positions at some little distance off, seated on camp stools, in order that they might the better observe the rustic feats which were about to follow. Country dances, waltzes, the "Highland Fling," and various other capers among the rustics, followed each other in rapid succession. One poor "wight" looked grievous at finding himself without a partner, betook himself to a tree, round which he danced and danced in high glee, something between a double shuffle and a fandango, while his partner remained stationary: this amusement to himself, afforded rare fun to the Royal children, and her Majesty seemed highly to enjoy it. There was now a series of prizes got up for the rustic sports; at a short distance off, a game of cricket was played; and, upon the lawn, between the Royal party and the shed, quoits, jumping in sacks, leap frog, foot-races, hopping, and running, were resorted to with much spirit. While all this was going on, the Royal children were skipping and dancing; the whole of them, from the Princess Royal to the Royal babe "in her nurse's arms," being present.

The fêtes occupied from four till half-past seven o'clock, and were witnessed by the Royal party; at which latter hour, her Majesty, and the ladies and gentlemen of her suite, retired. The leader of the band then seized the Coburg flag, which had been placed in front of the Royal tent, and, followed by the band, marched on; when the whole of the group, to the number of nearly 400 men, women, and children, marched or rather danced and capered about in high glee, following the band out of the grounds; thus terminating one of the most "glorious days" which the labourers have ever experienced.

We understand the fête will be continued annually, her Majesty being highly pleased with the good conduct and bearing of the guests.



RUSTIC FETE, GIVEN BY THE QUEEN TO THE WORKMEN AND LABOURERS AT OSBORNE HOUSE, TO CELEBRATE HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT'S BIRTHDAY.



HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO GUERNSEY.—THE DEBARKATION.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO GUERNSEY.

ALTHOUGH in our Journal of last week, we detailed this event in the recent Royal Cruise; from the extreme interest which it has excited among all classes of her Majesty's loyal subjects at Guernsey, we have been induced to commemorate the Royal Visit, graphically; and this we are enabled to do with considerable effect, by the skill of an Artist who witnessed the animated spectacle of the Queen's Debarkation at the Harbour of "the privileged Island;" and has commemorated the most striking point in a very spirited sketch—the original of the annexed Engraving.

We need not repeat the details of the Royal arrival on Sunday evening; but subjoin an account of the Debarkation on Monday, which we have received from a Correspondent.

Immediately after the Lieutenant-Governor had announced to the assembled thousands on Sunday evening that her Majesty would land next morning, orders were issued that the militia regiments of the island should be under arms by seven in the morning. The houses along the pier were rapidly illuminated, and fireworks let off until a very late hour; and hundreds spent the whole of the night in preparing flags, garlands, festoons, and devices of every shape and description. At the early hour of four next morning, a large crowd had assembled on the piers anxious to secure places from which they might see her Majesty disembark. At eight o'clock, a guard of honour, commanded by Captain Williamson, 27th Regiment, was marched down to the quay, with a band of music, and they were drawn up on the South Pier Slip, which was carpeted, this being the intended landing-place of her Majesty. The militia regiments were placed next to the 27th Regiment, on each side of the road, from the pier to the top of the Grange, a distance of nearly a mile; through which the Royal cortège was to pass. About sixty young ladies, the élite of the island, (dressed in white, and bearing bouquets,) arranged themselves close by the intended landing-place. At nine precisely, the Queen and her Royal Consort, accompanied by the Hon. Miss Napier and Lady Jocelyn, Lord Alfred Paget, Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, and Sir James Clarke, embarked in the Royal barge from the Victoria and Albert yacht, under a salute from Fort George. Nothing could be more animating than the scene at this moment; flags and banners floated in the air from every ship in the harbour, while the genuine English loyalty burst from the assembled thousands. Her Majesty was handed from the barge by Prince Albert, and received by his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, Colonel Ward, and Captain Munday, R.A. Major Goodman, and the officers of the 27th Regiment. Immediately the Queen placed her feet on the shore, a Royal salute was fired, and the ladies sang the National Anthem, and strewed her Majesty's path with flowers.

The Queen then, leaning on the Prince's arm, and followed by her attendants, the Lieutenant-Governor and suite, walked up to the top of the slip, where two of the Royal carriages were stationed. Her Majesty and Prince Albert, together with the Viscountess Jocelyn and the Honourable Miss Napier, took their places in the first, an open barouche drawn by four horses; and Lord Alfred Paget, Sir James Clarke, and Mr. Anson, occupied the second carriage; the magistrates, the clergy, the law officers, and the advocates of the Royal Court being assembled close to the carriages to make their obeisance to their Sovereign. The Lieutenant-Governor then, on behalf of himself and the other authorities of the island, presented an address, which was received by Lord Alfred Paget.

The bells struck up a merry peal; the bands played "God Save the Queen; and thousands shouted "Welcome to the 'Island Queen!'" His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, Col. Ward, Major Goodman, and Capt. Munday, R.A., uncovered, preceded the Royal carriage, as it moved slowly up the town; where, amidst festoons, flags, and flowers, the Queen was received with shouts and salutations long and loud; the waving of hats and handkerchiefs, and the most enthusiastic demonstrations of affection. The Royal cortege proceeded up the Grange, through Petite Marché, Colborne-road, to Fort George, where his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor presented to her Majesty the keys of the fort. The Royal party then returned to the harbour, where the ladies again strewed her Majesty's path with flowers. The Queen and suite embarked in the Royal barge at half-past ten, under another Royal salute, and the bands playing the National Anthem, amidst the deafening cheers of her loyal and patriotic subjects.

The barge was quickly rowed to the Royal yacht; and her Majesty, the Prince, and party having gone on board, the glorious standard of England was again spread to the breeze; and, a little after eleven, the Royal squadron (with the exception of the Garland, which remained to embark the carriages) was on its way to Portsmouth, where it was expected to arrive at night. Mr. James Rouget, of the Vale, was engaged to pilot the squadron. He first went on board the Black Eagle, which took the lead, followed by the Victoria and Albert and Fairy. Mr. Rouget, was subsequently ordered on board the Victoria and Albert, which then became foremost. Having been consulted by Lord A. Fitzclarence as to the safety of the passage, Mr. Rouget took the squadron through the Swinge of Alderney; passing close to that island, from which a salute was fired. The squadron then proceeded onwards, and arrived safely at Cowes at a quarter before nine o'clock.

Although the Royal visitors left Guernsey at the early hour above mentioned, the public jubilation did not cease with their departure. During the whole of the day, thousands of happy people were promenading the streets talking over the joyous events of the morning, and congratulating one another on the auspicious visit of their Sovereign, and the gratifying manner in which every thing had passed. The shops and different houses of entertainment, which had been previously closed, were now reopened, and a brisk trade carried on in refreshments of all sorts. In the evening the officers of the Guernsey Artillery sat down to a handsome dinner at Marshall's Royal Yacht Club Hotel; and a large party, consisting of the police officers of the town parish and their friends, met at an equally excellent repast which had been ordered at Renier's Crown Hotel. Later in the evening the streets were still crowded, and at night a profusion of fireworks was let off in all parts of the town. Exuberant as were the feelings which prevailed, not the slightest disorder occurred during the whole of this busy day.

We learn from the Guernsey Star that her Majesty and the Prince expressed themselves highly pleased with their visit and reception. On entering High-street they seemed agreeably struck with the profuse display of decorations which were there observable, and with the thousands of faces which were beaming welcome on them from the houses. On approaching the entrance to the Fort the Prince, appeared delighted with the beauty of the surrounding scenery, and asked, with much interest, of one of the special constables, who were near the carriage, the names of the Islands in sight. When the French coast and Cape La Hogue were pointed out to his Royal Highness, he spoke to the Queen, who appeared to take an equal interest in the scene, and the Prince was heard to say that he was not surprised that General Napier had chosen that view for their inspection.

Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Princess Royal were on board her Majesty's yacht, but did not land.

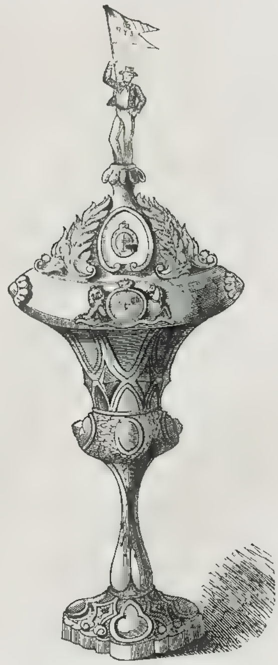
On Monday, an order was issued by the Lieutenant-Governor, communicating that her Majesty, at the moment of re-embarkation, personally expressed to the Lieutenant-Governor her pleasure at the reception she had met with, and her entire satisfaction with the arrangements made.

In the early part of Monday morning, the Royal squadron took a variety of supplies from the shore. The steamers Black Eagle and Garland were provisioned with a considerable quantity of coals by Messrs. John Guilbert and Son; Mr. Frederick Thompson furnished a supply of meat; Mr. William Hancock, hothouse grapes; Mr. John Fergnso groceries, &c., and Mr. George Payne, fancy-bread, &c., for the Royal table.

The Royal Court has resolved to cause this auspicious event to be commemorated by the erection of a fitting memorial.

The Address from the Royal Court has the following passage:—"Your

ANGLING NOTES FOR THE MONTH—THE GRAYLING.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)



PRINCE ALBERT'S CUP.—(SEE NEXT PAGE).

Majesty is the first British Sovereign since the days of King John who has deigned to visit this island, which in the reign of King Edward II., and long subsequently, was termed the 'Holy Isle;' and our most gracious Queen will easily comprehend the feelings of enthusiastic affection, loyalty, and gratitude with which its inhabitants are prepared to greet her Majesty's appearance among them—feelings which will not only animate them through life, but be imbibed by their children's children."

THE ISLE OF WIGHT REGATTAS.—PRINCE ALBERT'S CUP.

This splendid Cup was sailed for on Wednesday, the 19th ult., as detailed in our Journal of the 22nd. It appears, however, that the Heroine fouled the Intrepid when rounding the flag-vessel off Yarmouth. To this, the Duke of Beaufort, the owner of the Intrepid, objected, as did also, the owner of the Drift, on the ground that the Heroine was adrift before the starting gun was fired, and he also claimed to have the owner of the Heroine put on his word as to shifting ballast. These two points not being established, they were consequently over-ruled, while the objection of the Duke of Beaufort, on the evidence of Captain Gordon and Captain Claxton, R N, and also of the sailing masters, was so established as to lead the Committee to decide that the Cup should be again sailed for; and Friday, the 21st ult, was the day fixed for the match to take place. By the hour appointed his Grace's vessel, the Intrepid, was the only yacht which appeared at the starting buoy, and she was left to walk over the course by herself, which she did under six hours, a distance of fifty six nautical miles. It is said the Duke of Beaufort has declared his intention of giving the Cup to be sailed for again by cutters of 60 tons and upwards.

By the way, Yachting is in the ascendant, as we glean from a clever paper in the Sporting Review for the present month, wherein the Editor says:—"During the last two or three years yacht-clubs have been springing up all round the coast (Royal yacht clubs for the most part), for these societies have very fitly been held worthy of the Sovereign's countenance. Foremost among them is the Royal Victoria Yacht Club, to which I had in some wise the honour of being sponsor. When first the idea was entertained of establishing an amateur sailing society at Ryde, it was proposed that it should be called the Osborne Yacht Club, in honour of her Majesty's residence in the Isle of Wight. I suggested that the name of the Queen would be a far more euphonious title, and one more likely to reflect dignity upon such a Club; and thence the designation under which it has at present the high honour to hail. Last year the Club had its opening Regatta—a very spirited beginning. In the present season, as will be seen anon, the Regatta at Ryde was one of the best, both as regards sport and support, that has ever been celebrated in the kingdom. We will, however, come to it under easier sail. First, it shall be told, that after a most pleasant summer in its native waters, the Royal Thames Yacht Club ported its helm for the westward, having fresh fields of glory open almost from Beachy Head to the Land's End The Mersey sent forth its fleet for the Needles; Erin, her best barks across the Channel towards another tight little island; and early in the autumn a brilliant pleasure squadron had brought up inside the Wight; Cowes Roads and Southampton Water being literally white with the canvass that crowded them. Till very late years these noble estuaries were, so far as relates to a pleasure marine, solely tenanted by the vessels of the Royal Yacht Squadron. It was but three seasons ago that the Royal Thames Yacht Club established for itself a local habitation at East Cowes. The Royal Southern Yacht Club only opened its Clubhouse at Southampton last month; and that intended for the head-quarters of the Royal Victoria Club is at present in process of building at Ryde—to be opened, according to the contract, early in the ensuing summer."

ANGLING NOTES FOR THE MONTH.

In our last Notes, we gave a brief account of the Pike—preliminary to an account of the most approved modes of capturing him with hook and line. Though fishing for Pike—successfully, be it understood—is very pleasant sport, yet it cannot be denied that the operation of fixing the bait, whether dead or alive, on the hook, is extremely unpleasant, and such as no continuance of practice can render agreeable to the operator. With respect to the live bait operated on, whether frog or fish, we cannot believe that its sufferings when impaled on the hook—with its tail tied to the shank, "not harder than necessary," and its mouth neatly stitched up besides—are in any degree alleviated by the salvo which the Angler applies to his own conscience, namely, that he has used him, the frog or fish impaled, "as if he loved him." This is the anodyne which Father Walton suggests, in his explanation of the mode of fixing live bait on the hook, and which has obtained for him a passing cut from Lord Byron:

> The quaint, old, cruel coxcomb, in his gullet
> Should have a hook, and a small trout to pull it.

Father Walton's brotherly love towards the live-bait does certainly savour of cant; and we are afraid that his reason for using the bait tenderly—namely, that it might live the longer on the hook—was stronger than his fraternal affection When Walton says that the back fin of a perch may be cut off "without hurting him," we agree with the old worthy, but with an especial qualification; not hurting him, for the purposes of bait: indeed, as a bait for Pike, we consider a perch with his back fin cut off much improved.

The three principal modes of Angling for Pike are distinguished as Trolling, Live-bait Fishing, and Snap Fishing. To begin with Trolling, which, in its most restricted sense, means Fishing for Pike with a dead bait fixed on a gorge hook, whether single or double. With respect to the etymology of the word, doctors differ. Johnson derives it from the Dutch Trollen, to roll; and another doctor, whose name we are not at liberty to mention, derives it from the old French Troller, to run about here and there, like a questing hound. Whatever may be its origin, there can be no doubt of its being the same word, though different in spelling, which, in the active meaning of to circulate, or pass round, occurs in the chorus of an old song:—

> Come, trowl, trowl, trowl, the bonny bonny bowl,
> Come, drink and trowl to me, boy!

In Trolling, the rod commonly used is from about twelve to fourteen feet long, having the top piece stouter and much less elastic than that of a fly-rod, and provided with rings for the line to run through. The line should be a strong one, of at least forty yards long: either of silk, or of silk and hair, the last being preferable, as least liable to kink or run into snarls; and a winch to wind it upon at the butt of the rod, is necessary. The hook mostly used is a double one, of the kind called "eel-hooks," which have the points standing more outwards than others. The shank of the hook is fastened to a piece of twisted brass wire, of about two or three inches in length; and the hook, from about half-way down the shank, and the wire, to within about an inch of the eye or loop, at the top, is covered with lead, which is usually of a lozenge form, with the thickest part towards the hook. To the eye of the brass wire, a piece of gimp about nine inches long, is fastened, and the gimp, after the hook is baited, is fastened to a swivel at the end of the line The bait may be any small fish, such as roach, gudgeon, trout, dace, or bleak. A large Pike usually is only tempted with a large bait; but, in trolling generally, where Pike are seldom caught exceeding seven pounds, a bait about six inches long is sufficient; and, in our opinion, there is none better than a roach. It is of importance that the bait be fresh, and that the skin be as little broken as possible; for, though a Pike may be as likely to seize a stale bait as a fresh one, he is much less likely to gorge it.

In order to draw the bait upon the hook, a baiting needle is required: this is a kind of long bodkin, sharp at the point, and having at the other end a small hook instead of an eye. The loop of the gimp being passed over the hook of the baiting needle, the point of the latter is entered at the mouth of the bait-fish, and brought out near the fork of the tail. The gimp is then drawn through until the bends of the hooks lie in each corner of the mouth, with the points towards the tail. The tail being next tied to the gimp with a piece of thread, to prevent the bait slipping, and the gimp being made fast to the swivel at the end of the line, the Angler may proceed to make a joint trial of his luck and his skill. Some writers on the art of Angling direct that the mouth of the bait-fish in trolling should be sewed up, though for what purpose we have never been able to discover, and shall not venture to guess.

The bait being cast into the water, where Pike may be expected to haunt, and allowed to sink till near the bottom, is then to be drawn obliquely upward with a gently jerking motion, so as to cause it to spin or twirl round as it approaches the surface; occasionally allowing it to sink, and then drawing it up again. In casting the bait, it will be frequently found more convenient to throw it with the hand, with a sufficiency of slack line, than to swing it at full stretch from the top of the rod. When a Pike seizes the bait, he is to be allowed line freely, for, as he always seizes the bait transversely, or across his mouth, any check given while he is making off with it, is much more likely to cause him to drop it than to fix the hook in his jaws. When the Pike has run out as much line as he appears inclined to take, he should be allowed seven or eight minutes to gorge the bait; and at the end of that time the Angler should strike, in the direction opposite to which his head seems to lie. Should the Pike be fairly hooked, let the Angler land him as quickly as he can with safety to his tackle: to play with a fish, instead of earnestly endeavouring to get him ashore, is like giving away a chance of capture for the sake of enjoying the pleasure of a protracted contest In our opinion, the object of Angling is to catch fish, not to enjoy pleasure in their struggles for life. Such is the nature of man—"half dust, half Deity"—that his spirit of antagonism is roused even by the pull of a gudgeon at his line; feels vexed at the escape, and exults in the capture of so feeble a prey, after it has once entered, though unwittingly, into a competition with him, whether of cunning or of strength. The "dust," however, must greatly predominate in the composition of that mortal who could feel pleasure in protracting, for the mere sake of sport, the dying struggles even of a Pike.

In what is called Live-bait Fishing, as distinct from Snap Fishing, the Pike is allowed time to gorge the bait, the same as in Trolling. In Live-bait Fishing a float is used, below which the bait swims, shot or a bullet being attached to the line, in order to keep the bait at a proper depth. The simplest mode of Live-bait Fishing is with a single hook, passed either through the lips of the bait-fish, at the side of the mouth, or through the skin of the back, just under the fore part of the fin. The most approved mode is with a double hook, or two single hooks whipped back to back, to about a foot of gimp The mode of baiting the hook is as follows:—The loop of the gimp being passed over the hooked end of the baiting needle, the point of the latter is entered under the skin, a little behind the gills, and above the pectoral fin, and is brought out a little below the hind part of the back fin. The gimp is then drawn through till the shank of the hooks be entered nearly as far as the bend. The points thus lie flat on what is called the shoulder of the fish, and are directed towards the tail. The gimp being next looped on to the line, the bait is ready for use. As the Pike gorges or swallows the bait head foremost, this is a more certain mode of capturing him than with the single hook passed through the lips, or through the back, as, in the latter cases, from his being more likely to feel either the gimp or the projecting hook before he has fairly pouched the bait, he is more likely to blow the bait out of his mouth.

In what is called Snap Fishing, the Angler strikes immediately that the Pike descends or turns on seizing the bait, without allowing him time to gorge it, as in Trolling and in Live-bait Fishing. In Snap Fishing, sometimes a dead, and sometimes a live bait is used; and it is advisable to use stronger tackle than in either of the other modes. We shall only describe one of the various kinds of hooks used in Snap Fishing, referring such of our readers as require further information to "Salter's Angler's Guide," which contains more practical information on this subject than any other work that we are acquainted with. Whip two hooks, No. 4 or 5, or even larger, if thought necessary, to about a foot of gimp, in such a manner that the shanks may diverge from below the whipping, and the points be distant about a quarter of a circle from each other. This kind of hook is to be used with a dead bait, which is put on in the following manner. The gimp being passed in at the vent and brought out at the mouth, by means of a baiting needle, is then drawn up till the hooks lie close to the body, diverging about a finger's breadth at the bends, and with the points towards the head. A leaden bead is slipped down the gimp into the mouth, and the mouth being sewed up, the bait is ready. Snap Fishing with the dead bait is mostly practised in Spring. For trolling, the best months are March and April, in Spring; and September and October, in Autumn; the latter month being decidedly the most favourable, as Pike not only bite more keenly then but are also in better condition. The best time of the day for Pike Fishing is, in our opinion, from an hour after sunrise till about an hour before noon, in Autumn; there are others, however, who maintain that the best time is from three in the afternoon till sunset. Pike are also caught in the Winter Season, in open weather; and the best time to angle for them is from ten in the morning till two in the afternoon. In calm weather, when the water is smooth, Pike are shy of taking the bait; the Angler's best chance of success is when the water is ruffled by a brisk wind.

We must now look after the Grayling, a fish which is now coming into season, and will be better at Christmas than at Michaelmas. It is of the same genus as the salmon and the trout, as it has the same kind of teeth and the same number of fins, the second back fin, which is one of the generic marks, being also fleshy and without spines, as in all the other species included in the genus Salmo. It is a very beautiful fish; the general colour of the upper part of the body is of an olive brown, becoming lighter towards the belly, and displaying hues of green, yellow, and blue, as seen in different lights; the principal back fin is marked with dusky and reddish square spots; and the sides seem to be streaked with dusky longitudinal lines, an appearance which is caused by the junction of the rows of scales. In shape it is more hog-backed than the trout, and tapers more towards the tail. It does not grow to so great a size as the trout: grayling, exceeding two pounds weight, are not common, though there are instances of their having been caught weighing from three to four pounds. A grayling about sixteen inches long, and weighing about a pound, may be considered as a fair-sized fish of the species.

Grayling are not common in our island. They are not found, we believe, in Scotland; nor in any of the four northern counties of England. The principal rivers in which they are caught are the Ure, the Wiske, the Rye, the Derwent, the Wharfe, and some of the tributary streams of the Ribble, in Yorkshire; the Dove and the Wye, in Derbyshire; the Blythe, in Staffordshire; the Clun, in Shropshire; the Wye, in Herefordshire; and the Avon, and some of its tributaries, in Wilts and Hampshire.

The same kind of flies that will tempt trout will also tempt grayling; and the only advice that we have to give on this point is, "Use fine tackle and small flies." In the latter part of the year, after the middle of October, grayling are not to be caught with the fly, except about mid-day. Grayling lie deeper in the water than trout, and seem to spring upwards from the bottom to seize the fly They take the fly boldly, and are not so readily scared as trout; but when once hooked, they soon give in. Grayling also take cad-bait, grubs, grasshoppers, worms, and gentles; and are angled for with these baits both at bottom and mid-water.

X. Y.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, Sept. 6.—Thirteenth Sunday after Trinity.
Monday, 7.—Jupiter rises at 9h. 48m. p.m.
Tuesday, 8. Nativity of the Virgin Mary
Wednesday, 9. William the Conqueror died, 1087.
Thursday, 10.—Mungo Park died, 1771.
Friday, 11.—Thomson (Seasons) born, 1700.
Saturday, 12.—Length of the day 12hm. 50m.

High Water at London-bridge, for the Week ending September 12

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday		Saturday.
M	A	M.	A.	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A
h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m
2 51	3 15	3 37	3 57	4 2[illegible]	4 40	5 0	5 23	5 43	6 4	6 30	6 53

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Bell."—The Great Britain steam-ship is now under examination in the Graving Dock, at Liverpool: she will sail from the Coburg Dock, in that port, on the 22nd inst. The fare, if we mistake not, is thirty guineas, and one guinea steward's fee.

"A Country Clergyman" assures us that we were in error, last week, in stating a Black Hood, with Blue lining, to designate an Oxford B.C L.; which belongs to M.A. of Dublin, and, if worn by any Oxford man, can only be used through carelessness or accident

"A Three Years' Subscriber," Rothmullan.—There are six distinct varieties of the Farthings of Queen Anne in the British Museum, but one sort alone really circulated, the others being pattern pieces. The current farthing is scarce, and brings from 7s. to 12s., and even one guinea. The pattern pieces have brought from £1 to £3, and even £5. The notion that Queen Anne struck only three Farthings is exploded in "Popular Errors Explained and Illustrated," pp. 181 to 184.

"A. E. D." complains that Acts of Parliament are charged in Dublin, by the Queen's Printers, at three and four times as much as they are sold at in London. We regret that we have not room for the Abstract.

"Lector."—The price of "Mill's Logic," 2 vols., is 30s. A small introductory work is published in Dublin, entitled "Outlines of Mental and Moral Science." (Orr and Co., London.)

"A Watchman" should complain to the Commissioners.

"Perplex."—A person born June 20, 1748, is in his 99th year.

"An Ilminster Subscriber" does not state whether a County History, or small work.

"Alpha," Nottingham.—The subject is scarcely capable of picturesque illustration.

"G. W. G." need not be alarmed.

"M. A. F."—Leigh's Picture of London, to be had, by order, of any bookseller.

"A Subscriber," Richmond Green, does not specify by whom the Attorneys were engaged. upon that party the expense will fall.

"N C," Knowle.—The Birmingham Town Hall is 140 feet in length, by 65 feet wide: Exeter Hall, London, is 136 feet, by 76.

"Query," 301, Strand. The Parliamentary Returns of 1827.

"An Annual Subscriber."—"The Illustrated New Testament" is in the press, and will be published at No. 198, Strand.

"A Sufferer by Paint."—Kalsomine, the inodorous paint, may be obtained of any Colourman or House Decorator.

"J. B.," Driffield.—The reverence paid to trees is of great antiquity, and has been the subject of learned disquisition. Pliny records it of the Gauls

"A Trump," Kent.—The Song, "The Return of the Omnibus," in our last week's paper, is from the facile pen of Mr. Albert Smith.

"A Would-be Knowing One." "Taylor's Short-hand, improved by Harding."

"A Subscriber," Glasgow.—Writing may be effaced by chloride of lime.

"Von Wodenblock."—Engraved on Wood.

"W C J"—Address the letter for Mr. Hallam, to the care of Mr. Murray, Albemarle street.

"Enquirer," Shotover, had better not meddle with the medicine, which is but rarely employed, and is, moreover, dangerous.

"A. P. F.," Christchurch, is thanked for the Sketch.

"M. A. C." will not be liable to duty on the chaise.

"S. F. X."—The "Dictionary of the Farm," 1 vol., and the "Book of the Farm," 4 vols., are very useful works

"Trophyplerotes" suggests that the Jerusalem Artichoke is a good substitute for Potatoes, and may be cultivated by every cottager. We cannot enlighten our Correspondent as to Dr. Lettsom's "Scarcity Root."

"Cupid," Dublin.—The Gretna Green marriage is not celebrated by a Clergyman, still, it is in all respects binding; in Scotland, nothing further being necessary to constitute a man and woman husband and wife, than a declaration of consent by the parties before witnesses, or even such a declaration in writing, without any witnesses. Still, a marriage in Scotland, not celebrated by a Clergyman, (with the exception of the Gretna Green, and other Border marriages), is rarely or never heard of. In 1815, the number of marriages celebrated at Gretna was stated, in Brewster's "Edinburgh Encyclopædia," at 65, which produced about £1000, at the rate of fifteen guineas each.

"Reconnoissant."—We think the vacancies will expedite the Commissions of those who are on the Commander-in-Chief's list. The application to Lord Fitzroy Somerset should be made through the party who recommended our Correspondent.

"Plebs."—There is no regulation against the admission into the Army of the sons of persons in trade: nor would the height mentioned be a barrier.

"Gulielmus." The grandfather of the Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay was Minister of Cardress, Dumbartonshire.

"Germanicus." A child, born in England, of foreign parents, is entitled to all the rights of the Englishman.

"R. P.," Trinity-street, had better invest in a Savings Bank: £25 is the smallest sum that can be placed in the funds

"A Widow," Bath.—There is no such Institution as that named by our Correspondent.

"A [illegible]" The agricultural surface of Ireland, in 1832, was estimated at [illegible].

"Anglicanus" should consult "Walker's Elementa Liturgica," or, "The History of the Anglican Church"

"Philo-Linnæus" will find some valuable information on the Wasp family in "Westwood's Modern Classification of Insects."

"W. H." The Lines will not suit.

A Correspondent who has applied respecting the Economic Chess-board, is informed that it is not now manufactured by Messrs. De la Rue

"A Mother" is recommended to advertise.

"A Reader," Edinburgh, will find the information he seeks respecting the East India Company's Service, in a work published by Madden and Co, Leadenhall-street.

"J L.," Jerusalem Coffee-house. The recal of the Governor-General of India could not have been made without the sanction of her Majesty's Ministers.

"Level."—Lady Grenville's town address is 33, Charles-street, Berkeley-square; Lady Ann Grenville's, 91, Pall Mall.

"A Constant Subscriber," Goole.—We think the step to be unjustifiable by authority; but, to set the matter at rest, our Correspondent should apply to the Secretary of the General Post Office.

"W. S," Boston, wins one ball.

"A Constant Subscriber," Farnham.—If our Correspondent will order the latest edition, he will always find in it "a correct statement of Friday's Market in Mark Lane."

"Louisa Mary." The passage,

> "Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,"

is from Shakspeare's "Macbeth," act v, sc. 3

Ineligible. Lines by "M." (Farewell.) Verses sent by "E. A."—Song for the Sporting Season. "Scorn not the Vilest."—"The Lover's Farewell."

 Replies to a few Musical Queries are, of necessity, deferred.

Our Subscribers and the Public are apprized that from this date, the Numbers comprised in Vols. 1, 2, and 3 of the Illustrated London News, (Nos. 1 to 87, inclusive,) cannot be sold separately, but only in volumes. This alteration, rendered imperative, by the constant demand for back Numbers, will, we trust, suggest to our Subscribers the necessity of keeping their Sets of our Journal perfect, in order to insure its entirety as an unique Illustrated History of Our Own Times.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1846.

The position of a small, or comparatively small state, in the vicinity of powerful neighbours, is always a difficult and anomalous one; it may be independent, but only nominally so; the moment it attempts to act, it discovers its own weakness, if its policy in the slightest degree inconveniences the powers around it, either in its effects or by its example. If it has what is called a "guaranteed" independence, its state is still worse; there is nothing from which a minor nation should pray to be delivered so much as the "protection" of a large one. It is one of the fictions with which politics as well as the law abounds. Under the name of "protection," is hidden absolute rule, or such an overwhelming influence, that it amounts to the same thing. Poland is an instance of protection being converted into possession, and possession degenerating into despotism and extermination. But there is always a remnant of hypocrisy in the dealings of absolute States; at the treaty of Vienna was enacted the farce of establishing an independent republic in Cracow and its territory; a State that contains one-twentieth part of the population of London, was very likely to be a striking example of independence, surrounded by the territories of three such powers as Russia, Austria, and Prussia! The frailest boat locked between three enormous icebergs is just as "independent" of their motion as the State of Cracow of the will of its protectors; the slightest motion of either of the heavy masses grinds its social fabric to atoms. How statesmen can, with a grave face, talk of such "independence" as a reality, is one of the most curious phenomena of office. Who have a more perfect knowledge that the whole thing is a cheat and delusion, acted in the face of Europe, than Metternich and Palmerston? And, yet, if occasion arose, they would to-morrow by note and protocol, discuss it with all the gravity with which they would treat a reality.

It is but little better with States that have a clearer claim to the title of "independent" than Cracow. In Italy, for instance, the predominant power is that of Austria; the race of the North has made good its footing in the sunny south; and the Land of the Romans has never completely shaken off the bondage beneath which it fell, during its decay. A Teuton is the inheritor of the throne of the Cæsars. Thus, though Italy is divided into several states, they are all chilled into inaction by the shadow cast over them from beyond the Alps. No matter what the interests of the people may require, or how uneasily the Princes may sit on their thrones, change and innovation is dreaded by Austria, and she will permit none to be made, even by the Sovereigns who see their necessity. She fears the example. The greatest sufferers from this extraneous influence have been the inhabitants of the Papal States; they were the worst governed of Italy; every abuse of secular power that can be conceived was there in full operation, resulting in the double disaster of a decreasing revenue and an impoverished people. The late Pope was an amiable man, a pious priest, and a good theologian; but his "Kingdom was not of this world," for of worldly wisdom and capacity he seemed totally destitute. His proscription of gas and railroads made him the laughing-stock of Europe; but to his own subjects this absurd obstruction of all progress was not merely ridiculous; it was a calamity. And what made it more mischievous was, that his policy had the countenance of Austria! Not that she would imitate it in her own dominions. Metternich has all the worldly wisdom that the Pope was deficient in, and though the suppression of all political freedom is the principle of the Austrian Government, it did not systematically destroy the physical welfare of its population; on the contrary, it studiously promoted it; it levied its taxes carefully, encouraged cultivation, aided the development of railroads, and fostered the amusements of the people; the Austrian provinces of Italy are as well governed as any part of that peninsula; with a well-fed and contented population, the want of liberty is better borne; if it has never been enjoyed, it is, indeed, scarcely missed. But, when in the same fettered condition, there is physical distress, heavy and unequal taxation, official corruption—in short, a Government sitting like an incubus on the inhabitants—then there is danger of violence. The criminal duplicity of Austria consists in this, that, though it condemned the Papal system, by pursuing quite an opposite one itself, it would have lent its enormous military power for the suppression of any movement which the incapacity and blindness of the Papal Government might have provoked. But, even the dread of this coercive power was wearing out; discontent was becoming deep and general; and, had Gregory XVI. lived much longer, he must have preserved his temporal authority by bloodshed. His successor, Pius, has changed the whole state of affairs. He has no childish dread of change, and seems able to grapple with difficulties like a statesman. He began his reign with clemency; he is continuing it with wisdom. He affords the moderate and prudent part of his people hopes of improvement, and thus weakens the violent and revolutionary, whose strength lies in universal despair of anything better. And, more than all, he defeats—we fear he cannot defy—the jealousy of Austria.

A popular movement, however justifiable it may be, can easily be called dangerous, and, as such, suppressed with the strong hand. But, reforms and changes proceeding from the head of the State cannot be so impugned; they are the deliberate acts of the Ruler. At the present moment Austria feels this embarrassment. She is alarmed at the liberal tendencies of the Pontiff, and protests against them. Her representations are disregarded, but even Austria dares not with open power enforce them. She cannot march an army against the Vatican. A mob of revolters she would shoot, bayonet, and exile, without scruple; but a Sovereign and his Council are, in a manner, invulnerable. This is especially the case with the Roman Pontiff. Had he no influence beyond his own States, Austria might venture to take him under her protection, and politely occupy his capital with an army. But, as it is, we imagine the Pope will be allowed to work out his reforms, and time will probably prove that, extensive as they may be, they will not quite uproot the established order of things from the Tiber to the Danube.

POSTSCRIPT.

WARWICK RACES.—Thursday.

The Foal Stakes, of 10 sovs each, and 25 added, for 3-yr-olds. Colts, 8st 9lb; and fillies, 8st 4lb.

Mr. Skerratt's Romance (h b)	(Marlow)	1
Mr. Wreford's West Countryman		2

Won in a canter.

The Castle Park Stakes of 10 sovs each, and 25 added

Sir J. Gerard's Morocco, 3 yrs, 7st 8lb	(E. Edwards)	1
Mr. Meesom's Dart, 4 yrs, 8st 8lb		2

Won by a neck.

The Selling Stakes of 5 sovs each, and 25 added. Winner to be sold for £200.

Mr. Bristow's Carissima, 4 yrs, 7st 11lb	(Denman)	1
Mr. Barton's Reliance, 4 yrs, 7st 4lb		2

The Two-yr-old Stakes of 10 sovs each, and 50 added, colts, 8st; and fillies, 8st 3lb; winners, 4lb extra. T.Y.C.

Lord Caledon's c by Simoom, out of Cassandra	(Marlow)	1
Lord Warwick's Aliwal		2
Sir C. Cockerell's Congress (h b)		3

Match; 500 guineas, h ft. Three miles.—Mr. Collett's Pal, 3 yrs (Whitehouse), beat Mr O'Brien's Jonathan Wild, 3 yrs, 8st. 7 to 4 on Jonathan Wild. Won by a length.

County Stakes of 15 sovs each, 10 ft, and 5 only if declared, with 50 added.

Lord Chesterfield's Jenny Wren, 4 yrs, 6st 12lb	(W. Abdale)	1
Lord Exeter's Sis. to Pergularia, 3 yrs, 5st 5lb		2
Mr. Waller's Columbus, 4 yrs, 6st 12lb		3

Won by a head.

The Warwick Cup, by subs of 10 sovs each, with 100 added. Four miles.

Mr. G. Moore's Wolf Dog, 4 yrs, 8st 3lb	(Nat)	1
Mr O'Brien's Jonathan Wild, 3 yrs, 6st 5lb		2
Mr Waiter's Regalia, 3 yrs, 5st 8lb		3
Lord Exeter's Sis. to Pergularia, 3 yrs, 6st 1lb		4

Won by a neck.

Fire at a Cotton Manufactory.—On Tuesday evening last a most alarming fire broke broke out at the cotton manufactory of Messrs Mellor and Roberts, New Mills, seven miles from Stockport, which was attended with considerable loss of property, but, most providentially, without any sacrifice of human life The fire was caused, it is supposed, by the friction of the fans.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS

France.—The Presse contains a letter which gives a very desponding account of the condition of France in regard to provisions. It says: "We are about to enter on one of those calamitous years in which the ordinary resources are not sufficient for the food of the people. The crop of 1845 (adds the Presse) is entirely exhausted, and that of 1846 has produced less than a fair average The rye harvest has so completely failed throughout France, that it will scarcely produce sufficient for seed for the ensuing year. Some farmers have not thrashed their crop, as they found it would not pay the expense. Wheat is in general of good quality, but, contrary to the sanguine expectation of the farmers, the produce is less than that of the year 1845. The oats have been scorched by the sun in several departments. They are inferior in quantity and quality everywhere, but particularly in the departments where they serve for the food of the inhabitants. Dry vegetables, such as peas, beans, and lentils, will not produce a sufficient supply for the ensuing winter. Cabbages and carrots are exceedingly scarce. Potatoes have been attacked with the prevailing disease in twelve departments, and cause serious apprehensions for the future So much for France." The letter then notices the scarcity which is likely to prevail in various continental cities, alludes to the deficiency of the potato crop in Ireland, and argues that the whole of Europe will be placed in a position of difficulty as regards food for its population. A private letter from Paris alludes to the same subject thus:—"Fish appears not in the market. Meat is extravagantly high. The finest piece (filet d'aloyau, the "Sunday side" of the sirloin) costs 36 sous (18d.) the pound; good veal, 22 sous. Bread is rising, vegetables beyond price—the best potatoes, for example, are three francs (half-a-crown) the boisseau, or stone of 14lb., eggs, 14d. the dozen; everything else in proportion; and, bear in mind, that we are yet only at the commencement of September"—Mr Richard Cobden reached Bordeaux on the 30th ult., and went immediately to the private residence of the Mayor, where he was to stay for a few days. A grand banquet was to be given to him on Tuesday last—The Chamber of Deputies met on Wednesday, for the purpose of installing their newly-elected President, Vice-Presidents, and Secretaries The Secretaries for the Chamber of Deputies are Messieurs Oger, Busieres, Saglio, and Lanjuinas. The Session was to close on Thursday.

Italy.—Private letters from Leghorn announce, that on the 27th ult., at fifty minutes past nine o'clock in the morning, another shock of an earthquake was felt in that city, which caused considerable damage. The weather was intensely hot and cloudy, and further mischief was apprehended. As a measure of precaution, the authorities had ordered several houses to be abandoned which had been more or less injured.

Spain.—Important accounts have been received from Madrid, to the 29th ult., confirmatory of the information given in page 146, respecting the marriage of the Queen of Spain. El Heraldo published a supplement last night (the 28th), stating that the Queen had selected the Infante Don Francisco de Assis for her Consort, and had communicated her choice to the Council of Ministers, who met yesterday in consequence, and were still sitting at five o'clock, P.M. The Gazette publishes a decree, signed by the Queen, and counter-signed by the Minister of the Interior, announcing that she has determined to contract matrimony with her cousin, the Infante Don Francisco de Assis Maria, and commanding that the Cortes be convoked for the 14th of September next, in conformity with the 47th Article of the Constitution. El Espectador says that the moment the Carlists see all hope lost of the Count of Montemolin marrying the Queen, they will rush forth to the street, appeal to arms, and renew the civil war. El Espanol declares that the British Cabinet declined to propose a Coburg as its candidate, saying that the Queen's marriage was purely an affair pertaining to the Spanish nation to decide on, and that an intimation to that effect has been received. It asserts, as most positive, that it has been decided that the Queen's sister shall be married to the Duke of Montpensier. The Progresistas intend publishing a manifesto to the nation and to Europe, protesting, in the most decided manner, against the marriage of the Infanta with the Duke of Montpensier. They demand Don Henrique for the hand of her Royal Highness.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Westminster-bridge.—A meeting of the inhabitants on the Surrey side of Westminster-bridge was held on Tuesday night, at the New Inn, Bridge-road, Lambeth, for the purpose of considering the best means to be adopted for protecting their interests in the event of the bridge being pulled down. It was resolved to memorialize the Lords of the Treasury in favour of adhering to the old site. A good deal was said of the present inconvenience sustained by various classes of the public, and it was stated that omnibuses went over the bridge 630 times a day, and 730 in summer; these were now paying £15 15s. a day in tolls, or above £5000 a year.

Bartholomew Fair. On Wednesday, the usual proclamations for holding the fair were issued from the Pie-powder Court, but the preparations presented the prospects of a very sorry realisation of the pleasures of this once favourite and popular place of metropolitan resort. The Pie-powder Court, one of the most expeditious, if not one of the most ancient courts of law in the kingdom, and to which the administration of the law on all matters pertaining to the fair, or offences committed in it, was confided, is now almost limited to Bartholomew Fair, where its duties are confined to the receipts of piccage, stallage, and tollage. The Court, whose proceedings are now merely nominal, is still held at the Hand and Shears, public-house, in Cloth Fair

The London Dock.—During the last three months the business in this great commercial establishment has very much increased in consequence of the great influx of shipping. The Wapping basin, the great basin, and the Hermitage basin are now crowded with vessels of all nations. The warehouses are crammed with goods of every description, and a great number of lumber sheds have been cleared out and appropriated to the stowage of merchandise. The quantity of wool, silks, tea, sugar, spices, wines, and flour is unusually large; indeed the warehouses were never so full of goods since the erection of the dock. The immense tea warehouses opened last summer are all filled with chests of tea. Another range of warehouses of similar height and dimensions is now building to meet the increasing wants of the tea trade. For the last six months there have been, on an average, 1500 extra men employed in the dock, and this extension of employment has been a great relief to the large population of poor labourers in the parishes of St. George-in-the-East, Shadwell, Wapping, Stepney, and Aldgate, and has caused a sensible diminution in the poor rates.

Baths and Wash-houses. The baths and wash-houses in Euston-square were opened for the first time on the 3rd of August, and up to the 29th of the same month, not fewer than 12,315 persons have made use of the baths, showing an average of 462 a day. During the same period 764 women have washed 18,783 articles of wearing apparel in the wash-houses.

Births and Deaths in the Metropolis The Registrar-General reports that there were registered in the metropolis during the week which ended last Saturday, 889 deaths. This number is above the average of that of the corresponding weeks in the six preceding years by 53. In looking for the causes of this excess, attention is naturally directed to the "prevailing epidemic," the severity of which is, however, on the decrease; for although 128 persons are reported as having died of diarrhœa, and the weekly average of deaths from that disease of the last five summers is only 33, yet, during the three previous weeks the numbers were respectively, 195, 149, and 145. Of the 128 fatal cases, not fewer than 105 occurred to persons under 15 years of age.—The number of births during the last week is reported to be 993 males, and 696 females; in all, 1382

The Registrations for London and Westminster.—In the Livery list for the City of London, the Whigs have objected to 283 names; the Conservatives to 560, total, 843. Several of the objections are made by both parties for misdescription, change of residence, &c. The objections made to the householders are, by the Whigs, 1515; by the Conservatives, 2800, total, 4315. The claims on the Livery list were only two Liberals and one Conservative. On the householders' list, the Whig claims are 304. The Conservatives have made none whatever The number of new claims in the City of Westminster is 247, and the number of objections 267.

THE END OF THE SEASON.—1846.

OFF TO FRANCE.

If there is anything that depresses us in writing the following paper upon so agreeable a subject, it is the apprehension that there will be nobody left in England to read it. For the great rush from home—that flight of the soul of the departed season—is now at its height. Everybody who has not already gone, is going: for nobody will own to staying in town even if compelled to do so. Houses are shut up, blinds newspapered, and furniture tied up in bags to make a wretched joke, whilst the family is on the Rhine, the lamps and ottomans are all in holland. There are no more carriages whirling about the West-end streets; no more thundering knocks at doors echoing all day, and night, too, for the matter of that, in the squares. You write letters and get no answers; you make calls, and find nobody at home but a servant on board wages, who runs out into the area to look at you before she answers the door, in great astonishment, you think it almost disreputable to be seen about; and you slink home, where, if you are musical, you may sing the following song to the tune of "The Charming Woman," or any other that it will go to:—

THE SEASON IS OVER.

The season—the season is over;
Its glories have come to an end;
And every one's rushing to Dover,
For Calais, Boulogne, or Ostend.
With crowds from Southampton to Havre,
From Brighton to Dieppe they throng,
Or any port rather than London,
The voyage is so terribly long.

Young Herbert has been up Mont Blanc,
And pass'd a whole night on its snows;
But when he got down to Chamouni,
Had lost all the skin from his nose.
And Howard has cross'd the St. Bernard,
And purchased a dog; but they say
They're terrible monsters to manage,
And oft bolt a baby per day.

And Saunders has gone off to Cairo
To see if "Eothen" is true;
And Bedford is trying the brunnens,
And Hall is at Wiesbaden too.
The Paynes are at Nice, and are thinking
Of never again coming home;
And Laura and Kate are creating
A mighty sensation at Rome

The season is over. No longer
You puzzle your brains out to think,
Ere breaking the seal, who has written
The rose nuance note in blue ink.
No longer the chance of a party
Reminds you, you want some white gloves,
Not having receiv'd those you wager'd
At Ascot, with one of your loves.

The Opera is clos'd; the gold curtains
Are all cover'd up till next spring,
The leading Soprano and Tenor
Have gone to the country to sing.
The Haymarket's silent and dreary;
You don't even hear a street band;
And cabmen and horses are weary
Of being all day on the stand.

And Hyde Park is wretchedly lonely,
Deserted by all but the few
Who go there from habit, and only
Because they have nought else to do.
And Middle row's falling to pieces,
And Fleet-street is only half paved,
Victoria Tower don't progress,
And Westminster-bridge can't be saved.

The Wenham Lake ice was exhausted
Full two months ago—(by-the-by,
You'd think, from still being imported,
The lake froze again in July).
And fruit is uncommonly scanty;
Of apples we've scarcely had any,
But cucumbers flourish in plenty,
And walnuts are eight for a penny.

And Rosherville's Baron is charming
All hearts by his twirls and his curls;
And Ramsgate is really swarming
With bevies of beautiful girls;
And if you are tired of living
Alone, and in search of a wife,
Just now, 'tis the place of all others
To find a fair partner for life.

THE PASSAGE

"Which way shall we go?" is the first question to be settled by "persons about to travel," and the answer is generally determined by the capabilities of the travellers, as respects the endurance of sea-sickness. For the Channel is no joke, after all. Weather-beaten old gentlemen who have been backwards and forwards to India—as though Calcutta had been Herne Bay—a score of times, and have experienced all those wonderful tumblings about in the Bay of Biscay as imitated, in little, on the clockwork sea under a glass shade, where the ship, like the Flying Dutchman, is perpetually rolling and pitching without moving from where she is—who have also been up and down the wave mountains off the Cape, which Mr. Daniell delighted to paint, and the journey over which can only be compared to sitting in a swing at the Antipodes, or being impelled over a succession of montagnes russes—these tough, red-parchment faced, ancient mariners, have told us, that crossing the channel always made them ill. They accounted for it in some nautical fashion that we are not clever enough to explain properly. There was always a "side swell" or an "oblique trough" or something of the sort. But, we suspect, after all, they never felt at their ease in a steamboat—that they looked upon it as a contemptible tub, that ought not to be mentioned in the same breath with an Indiaman, and were prejudiced accordingly.

Nevertheless, the transit tries the strongest-minded individuals; and, therefore, Boulogne is the usual port chosen to land at, the journey from Folkestone being, as ladies say, who wish to make it, "a mere nothing." For our own part, commend us to the route of Brighton, Dieppe, Rouen, and Paris. You have eight hours' sea-passage, to be sure; but then you have a lovely ride from Dieppe to Rouen—it is even something to know you are, all the while, in Normandy—and, at Rouen, you are lifted up on a crane—diligence, passengers, and all—and put on a railway truck, being taken off your old wheels only to be put down on a new set, with horses attatched to them at the Paris terminus, in the Rue St. Lazare. Coming home, the Seine trip from Rouen to Havre, with Caudebec, Jumiéges, Robert the Devil, Quillebœuf, the Telemaque, Tancarville, Harfleur, Honfleur, and the rest of it, distances all the others to chalks—which means to our own cliffs back again.

But the drawling monotous ride from Boulogne to Paris is enough to pull the life and soul out of the most joyous traveller. The Amiens Railway, to be sure, has lessened it; but, even now, nothing, in our opinion, can compensate for the tedium of so much of the road as remains. But of this anon.

The sea-passage is not now a very dreadful affair. There is none of that long dismal work in the dark, when the dim cabin lamp glimmered for so many hours over the worn-out inmates of the close saloon; and people used to hold tight as they crawled up the stairs, to ask the captain "what time he thought they should get in," or to look out for Boulogne lights. There is little of that tendency to tumble about all ways at once, as the boat rolled, creaking, straining, and surging, through the black leaping waters, and all the wine-glasses appeared to be fighting among themselves in the steward's bar, as the paddles hit the sea, whenever they got the chance, and then turned round in the air clean out of it. Now, the Channel is crossed in broad daylight, and frequently in that state of weather-conviviality which preceded the "return of the Admiral," when the morning was all sunshine, and the wind was blowing free; and you are not long enough on board to be tossing and tumbling just the same all night afterwards, as if you were out at sea during a storm in a French bed. Still, even now, there is a great deal of qualmishness, especially amongst your old conventional invalids, who think it an absolute necessity to be sick, and make ready for it the minute the boat starts, contriving cloaks and pillows out of carpet bags and leather trunks in that curious fashion that only steam-boat invalids can invent. And everybody is delighted, more or less, when the packet turns from the open sea into the still water between the two long barricades of piles which bound Boulogne Harbour.

Ten to one but the first object of attraction is the French soldier—the real French soldier—at the end of the pier. All the passengers scramble up on deck. Faces appear from unknown cabins, that have not been visible before during the voyage. Clusters of douaniers and sturdy, thick-legged women, mark the position of the Custom-house; touters are collecting from hotels; and visitors keep pace with the steamer, as they run along the pier, by its side, looking after their friends. Even the fashionable family who own the handsome travelling carriage on board, and who have shut themselves up in it all the journey—not so much as to fancy they were still riding along the road, as to keep up a proper degree of exclusiveness consistent with their position in Belgrave-square—begin to show upon deck, and, in two minutes more, the steamer is brought up alongside the Quai de la Douane; and then breaks forth the babel of tongues, which we may throw into doggrel as follows:—

Well, thank goodness, here we are at last, and the "perils and dangers of the deep are past;" for while that horrid sea-sickness hung around me, I would have paid the captain anything to have thrown me overboard and drown'd me; but now I think, perhaps, it's as well that he wouldn't.

I don't see anything, however, just yet, like France, where I thought the people did nothing all day but go about in ballet dresses and dance, and wreath long festoons of vine trees about the road, and sing beautifully, as they offered you grapes, smiling beneath the luscious load—as I had seen in a great many operas, and a greater number of ballets; but now here's nothing but a crowd of dirty soldiers, dreadful old women, surly gendarmes, and jabbering valets; no, I couldn't have believed it; that I couldn't.

And that is Boulogne, which I have heard so much about; and now appears in reality to be little better than a "sell;" nothing but a lot of tall, gawky houses, with white Venetian shutters; and every other house an hotel. "Now, if you please, Ma'am, this way." "Par ici, Madame, s'il vous plait." "You must leave that carpet bag on board, mum, if you please; and have the goodness to deliver up your keys." "Hotel des Bains, Madame!" "Hotel du Nord!" "Hotel Bedford, Madame; tout pres de port." "Leave the lady alone, François, this minute; don't you see that I spoke to her first, and have got tight hold of her; and she's going along with me." "Oh, Mr. Gendarme, speak to these people, I pray." "Pardon, Madame. Je ne parle pas Anglais." "Have mercy, or you'll pull me in halves."

My gracious! Can I believe my own eyes? No, really, I think I can't. After all I have heard about the French nation being so exceedingly gallant: why, there are women! actually women! carrying boxes, hampers, tubs, and sacks; piled up upon one another in a manner that would break all the London porters' backs; and really, bless me, what very extraordinary folks!

Such may be the sentiments upon first landing. Romantically inclined individuals feel affected by planting their foot for the first time upon French soil; enthusiastic ones hum the Marseillaise, or begin to respect the memory of the Emperor. We, ourselves, having landed, sit on one of the posts on the Port, and sing as follows, to the tune of "Beautiful Venice":—

SONG.

Beautiful Boulogne,
I laud thee in song;
Home of the stranger
Who's done something wrong.
Doorway to Europe,
Though Calais deplore;
Making of Folkestone,
Ne'er heard of before.
Ramparts commanding
A beautiful view;
Billiards and beer,
In the Rue de l'Ecu.
I know some Directors
Turn'd stags, who, to thee,
Beautiful Boulogne,
Cut over the sea!

Beautiful Boulogne,
I laud thee in song;
What memories of old
To thy paved streets belong.
I think on Miss Cruikshank's
Fair liveried girls!
Miss Burton's young ladies,
Their eyes and their curls!
And the pastry-cook's shop
Up the Grand Rue, half-way,
At that corner, so dear,
Of the Rue 'Neuve Chaussée.
I've wander'd about,
But the bathing for me
Is at beautiful Bologne,
Two hours by sea!

BOULOGNE.

With all its annoyances, there is something very pleasant in arriving at a French hotel. The perfect novelty of everything about you, even in the houses termed English the unwonted feel of the tiles on the floor—the white crockery—the comical iron-work of the locks and window-fastenings; and the windows themselves, which always open with a gust that blows you out of the room, if the door is open—the walnut-tree bedstead—the rustling mattress—the pie-dish and milk-jug toilet apparatus—the black marble mantel-piece, and tawdry flowers—the very ludicrous key, with its little brass number-ticket hanging to it—the trim chambermaid speaking a language so fluently, that you only associate in its purity with almost patrician refinement—all this is very pleasant. And most comfortable are the French beds; only you cannot get to sleep well the first night. The mere fact of being in a foreign land keeps you awake.

In the morning, you hear strange noises in the street—perfectly different to the out-of-door sounds of England. Odd, unnatural carts go jingling by, taking the wrong side of the road; the women are again at work carrying their loads about, like ants, with no perceptible object; the steamer that fought with the sea so lustily the night before, is lying quietly alongside the Quai, guarded by a soldier who looks as if he had walked out of a box of toys, and is put there to keep the bottles of stout and British manufactures from marching on shore; and the "shatter-go-dan" carts are scuffling backwards and forwards to and from the bathing establishments. Then, after breakfast, the visitors turn out. Armed with a "Handbook" and a human guide, they commence sight-seeing; and it is hard to say whether, in general, they do not afford quite as much amusement to the natives, as they derive from them.

The first thing they stop at is a diligence, dozing after its all-night journey, in the yard of the Messageries. It is possible, amongst all our readers, that there may be one who has never seen a diligence—not even M. Philippe's, with which he advertised his conjuring. We will give them the receipt for making one, after M. Soyer, whose union of cookery, literature, and illustration, is marvellously amusing. Here goes, then:—

TO MAKE A DILIGENCE.

Take a broad-wheeled waggon, and separate carefully the wheels from the body, which put by. Then catch the body of an old headed gig, as well as those of a post-chaise, a stage-coach, and a thick slice from the hinder part of an omnibus, two persons in breadth. Truss the back of the post-chaise to the front of the coach, the boots being carefully removed; and at the back of all, skewer on the slice of omnibus. Set carefully on the wheels, and then add the headed gig to the top of the post-chaise, securing it by whatever attelettes you please. Bake for twenty-four hours on a dusty road; garnish with bits of cord and a screw-jack, and serve up with whatever sauce you may hear on the road. Your diligence is then completed.

ANOTHER WAY.

Divide an omnibus into three parts, and turn the middle one sideways, making such doors as occasion may require. Place an old private cab on the top, and cover with a tarpaulin. Finish with a crust of gypsum dust and rain water

The next lion is the Column—the pillar set up to celebrate the victory over England by Napoleon, which we will celebrate in a song. Only do not sing it in France, or they will throw stones at you.

BONAPARTE.

Air—"Guy Fawkes."

I sing Napoleon Bonaparte, the prince of all invaders,
Who play'd with bones just like the Ethiopian Serenaders—
That is, I mean, with flesh and bones—no sportsman e'er was prouder—
And look'd on all his faithful men as so much food for powder.
Bang! bang!! bang!!!
Riddle raddle, fiddle faddle, bang, bang, bang.

He went to Moscow with his army, winter drawing nigh, Sirs,
And conquered all the Russians in the twinkling of an eye, Sirs—
That is, he would have conquered them, but Alexander sold him,
And Moscow and the Kremlin made too hot by half to hold him.
Bang! bang!! bang!!! &c.

He built a floating battery, and in it soon came over,
And drove all England into fits, and sunk the port of Dover—
That is, he would have checked our King, and make a game of chess of it,
But only upon second thoughts he feared to make a mess of it.
Bang! bang!! bang!!! &c.

He built the column at Boulogne, and all in celebration
Of those tremendous victories o'er our shopkeeping nation—
That is, he meant to gain them, on our throne that they might set him,
And would have done so if "F. M. The Duke" had ever let him.
Bang! bang!! bang!!! &c.

The Cathedral is not imposing, but worth a visit, especially if it be

THE END OF THE SEASON—1846—OFF TO PARIS.

LANDING AT BOULOGNE.

the first French church you have seen. You do not have to wait for the keys, hunting up the clerk or sexton, and tagging round after him, wherever he pleases to take you. The doors are always open, and people go in and out just as they please—from the market, the promenade, the sea, or the country. They cheat and bargain: put down their baskets—go in and pray, and come out again: and commence cheating and bargaining as before. When you have seen one French church, you have seen all. Old women and young girls make up the congregation: and a sprinkler of holy water at the door, guards the entrance with a little broom. Quantities of tiny candles, like the "Christmas candles" of the children, flare, gutter, go out, and smell of triangular metal stands about the interior. You will not be noticed by any one, unless you take a chair, and then the owner emerges from behind some pillar, and is pretty soon down upon you. Or, if you look in want of a valet de place—and our English visitors always appear to be—the beadle, or Suisse, in his full dress, is there to act as cicerone.

The Diligences, the Column, and the Cathedral, are, to our minds, the lions of Boulogne to strangers. But, for sojourners, there are the shop-windows, with their attractive stores. The delicately carved ivory of Dieppe, in brooches, studs, and buckles; the cognac at a franc a bottle; the large tin gloves, and novel signs to the shops; all these are matters for amusement "to the stranger and observant pedestrian," as the guide-books say But our travellers are on to Paris. En route! thus :—

LUGGAGE PORTERS.

THE ROAD TO PARIS.

"She only said, it's very dreary
Change cometh not, she said;
She said, of this long ride I'm weary,
I wish I were abed!"

The sentiments of Alfred Tennyson's exquisite "Mariana in the Moated Grange" may, with a little change, apply to the traveller on the grand route from Boulogne to Paris. For nothing can be

COURIER AND TRAVELLING CARRIAGE.

THE FEMME-DE-CHAMBRE.

THE END OF THE SEASON—1846—OFF TO PARIS.

VIEWING THE COLUMN, AT BOULOGNE.

so dismally depressing as the long, monotonous journey which it is necessary to accomplish before you can arrive at the French capital. Indeed, the whole poem might be parodied with effect: beginning, for instance:—

> With whitest dust the living load
> Was choked and coated, one and all,
> And all the border of the road,
> Was edged by either ditch or wall.
> The villages looked dull and strange,
> The doors were void of bolt and latch,
> And years had mouldered all the thatch,
> But yet they never thought of change.
> He (or she) only said, &c.

Indeed, the original, in some places, would require but little alteration, as follows:—

> Hard by, some poplars shook alway,
> All silver green with gnarled bark,
> For leagues, no other trees did mark,
> The level waste, the rounding grey.

It is, indeed, a dreary journey. Those long, long, roads—the best compromise between mud and granite ever effected, excluding even MacAdam: the hedgeless country; the thin, greyhound-looking pigs; the utter absence of all that constitutes our English notions of rural life; and the almost daguerréotyped similarity of the straggling villages weary one to death.

Posting or diligence, it is all the same. For the Courier is but a Conducteur in private life; about whom, for all particulars, we refer you to "The Brave" of Mr. Dickens—a type of the class—feeling assured that, after that portrait, nothing more can be said upon the subject. Every hotel looks like the last you left; and all the beggars who swarm round the carriage are evidently of the same family. "Pour la Charité, Madame;" "Pour l'amour de Dieu, Monsieur," is uttered in the very same tones at every relay, by the beggars, who imagine that all English travellers carry the celebrated purse of the Fairy Tales, which was always filled with money.

The inmates of our travelling-carriage will, possibly, rest on the road. Abbeville, Amiens, or Beauvais, may all be taken as sleeping places. But herein they miss several points in the journey, which always present themselves so vividly to those who have been accustomed to travel on the Continent. The clattering through the narrow, silent streets, and dark deserted Place of the large towns, until the diligence stops at the bureau of "Laffitte, Caillard, et Compagnie, Messageries Generales Rue St. Honoré, No. 130,"—the clumping about of the stable-people in their wooden shoes—the wild, unintelligible conversation of the postilion and conducteur—the fighting and neighing of the horses, and the tremendous job of putting them to the start again, as the crack of the whip rouses the sleeping inhabitants, and the "Hi! hi! Djack en! Hue blanc! Allume ir-r-r-r-r donc!"—as near as English letters can give the sounds—of the postilion, keeps on continuously through the night to the "jing! jing! jing!" of the bells on the head-piece—all these things are peculiarly characteristic of the night-journey. And the turnout at daylight to breakfast—the blinking eyes, and unshorn chins, the strange head-dresses, and pale faces, are things only witnessed under these circumstances.

At Paris we leave our travellers; for there, we might fill volumes of our paper with descriptions. But we will bid them farewell in a restaurant's of the first class. It may be Verey's, or Vefour's, or the Trois Fréres Provençeaux, or any other of the leading houses. Now, if you

(Continued on page 160.)

VISIT TO THE CHURCH.

GOSSIP OF THE WEEK.

Breathes there the man so Cockney-bred,
That never to himself hath said,
"This is September's glorious First,
When men in sporting science versed,
O'er stubbles range, and hedges burst,
While for the death of birds they thirst,
And aim their best, and do their worst;
While coveys are with shot disperst,
And lawless pointers freely curst?"

In sober prose (as if all verse was intoxicated) is there a man or a partridge in England to whom the coming of the First of September is a matter of indifference?

The Lords of the Creation, considered relatively to partridges, may be classed in four divisions. First, those who shoot and are fond of shooting. Secondly, those who are not fond of shooting, but who shoot as they hunt and do many other things, because they think it correct. Thirdly, those who have the will but not the means to shoot. And, fourthly, those who have no skill, little pretence, and less zeal in matters of gunpowder and fowling pieces. To this last class we confess to belong; but it does not follow that the season of partridges is to us an epoch, which we regard carelessly and coolly, as we do those of the Monsoons, or the Mahometan fast-days.

No, though we appreciate not the game in its feathers, we respect it when plucked and roasted. We are indifferent to it when lurking in the corn-field, but we are fully alive to its merits when duly shrouded under pie-crust.

De mortuis nil nisi bonum;

and the adage is fully applicable to partridges, though we should be sorry to have the last words translated—

Give us nothing but a bone.

Still it is a fearful thing for a non-shooter to be "sub iis-dem trabibus," with devotees of the detonator, about this period of incipient autumn. As The First approaches, your nostrils are assailed by the odour of gun-wash; you see extraordinary vestments brought forth from strange lurking places, and furbished up, until you think that your friends are preparing to put themselves in uniform for the Yankee Regiment that is to take California. Their talk is of pointers; and, from its subject and its wearisomeness, it unavoidably reminds you of Ovid's "Epistolo ex Ponto." On the eve of the eventful day, the "gentlemen-sportsmen's" tempers grow atrociously fractious and ungentle. Either the gunsmith has not altered the faulty nipple, and "the cap won't fit," or the breaker has not brought home the young dog, or the bootmaker has not new-healed the heavy highlows, or the promised leave to shoot over farmer Stubbins's turnips has been withheld, or some similar mishap has occurred to rumple the serenity of the ocean of their minds; and the house is one scene of complaint—calling, bawling, and even direr sounds, till daybreak on The First calls the watchful bearers of fire-arms forth, and you rejoice in an interval of calm until their return in the evening, with the invariable annual response to your enquiry about there being plenty of birds—"Oh, yes, there are birds enough; but they are so wild, that there is no getting within shot of them."

Probably before a week or two of the season has passed, you are deluded into joining the shooting party, and trying your skill. Most men, however little generally addicted to such things, make the experiment once. We did it in early youth, and never shall we forget the day—

Still it lingering haunts the greenest spot
On Memory's waste.

That is to say, we look back on it as the greenest thing we ever did. We first had to wrestle into a shooting-jacket calculated for far different dimensions; and then, with gaiters painfully buttoned round our extremities, with a felt hat jammed upon our brows, with a quantity of powder fastened about us, which we feared every minute would explode, with a heavy old single-barrelled gun (we were not trusted with double barrels) thrust into our hands, we were marched through stubble, turnips, fallow, and hedge-row,

From morn to dewy eve;

and very dewy indeed the Swedes were. As our gun went off several times at a curious angle, while we were vainly endeavouring to obey orders and gently lower the hammer upon the cap, our companions kept us a little in advance of their line, so that their shots whizzed by our ears all day. Now and then a number of brown feathered things started up before us with an audible startling whirr, and disappeared over the hedge before we could poise the gun upon our shoulder. These we were told were partridges. Now and then we fired sternly and steadily at tempting birds that were perched near us. These we were told were larks.

Double, double, toil and trouble,
Barrels single, barrels double,
Seemed to us all toil and trouble:
Sporting joys we hold a bubble.

But there was one brief period of enjoyment in that long, long day: we need hardly say that we refer to the luncheon hour. Oh! how welcome was the sight of the trysting-tree, 'neath which John was to await us with the creature comforts, fluid and solid. Oh! how we appreciated the kindness of those fair friends, who came themselves to meet us, and see that the weary sportsman's wants were duly cared for.

There was One—
One whom we oft had loved to meet,
  Whom long we did adore;
But, oh! she never looked so sweet,
  So beautiful before.

We composed (but did not show her) the following genuine effusion of our sentiments on the occasion, which will, we believe, come home to the feelings of many of our gentlemen-readers this week.—

THE SPORTSMAN'S SONG AT NOON.

AIR—"Oh! come to me when daylight sets."

Oh! come to me when luncheon's set—
  Sweet, then come to me!
When limbs we rest, and throats we wet,
  Beneath the greenwood tree;
When draughts of "Bass's Pale" begin
  To chase mute thirst away;
And no one thinks a fib a sin
  About the game we slay.

Oh! then's the hour for those that shoot,
  That shoot, at least, like me
How blithe I quit the game's pursuit,
  When your approach I see
With warmest love and coldest punch
  I'll drink a health to thee
The charming girl that brings our lunch
  Beneath the greenwood tree.

The English public, Sporting as well as Non-Sporting, has been hugely diverted this week, by a letter purporting to come from Cannes, and to describe the preparations of a certain Ex-Lord-Chancellor, and a member for Westminster, for such stag-hunting as never before had been witnessed in France or England either. There were to be Sardinian stags, and English dogs, and "six keepers in handsome liveries of marone coloured velvet, with gilt buttons, bearing his Lordship's crest;" and, last, but not least, the Chairman of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge was himself to officiate as head huntsman, and teach Frenchmen how to go across country. On Thursday, however, appeared a letter from one of the supposed Leaders in the sport, denouncing the whole as a wicked hoax. We felt the disappointment keenly, for we had set our hearts on a visit to the Forest of La Croix de Gardy to see the Baron Brougham turn out:—

Our heart was at Cannes, our heart was not here,
Our heart was along with Lord Brougham and his deer,
To hear him Tantivy, and follow the roe,
But our heart is half-broken, for we find 'tis no go.

One little piece of news from abroad remains, however, uncontradicted; that is, the late Premier's quiet intimation to some Prussians who had been eulogising his financial measures, that his Income-Tax was to lay the foundation of a new system of taxation. He told us, that it was a mere temporary depletion of our purses. Now we learn the truth. The information is interesting, but not quite calculated to make us wish Sir Robert once more empowered to dip official fingers into our pockets.

MARGATE.—A letter from Margate says the season has been a very gay one at that town. The theatre has been well attended. On Monday night Mr. Henry Betty appeared in "Macbeth," before a crowded audience, with great success.

ROBBERY AT THE NORFOLK RAILWAY.—A very serious robbery was committed on Monday, at the terminus of the Norfolk Railway, in Norwich. Immediately after the arrival of the first down train, it was discovered that the cash box of the company, which was kept in the office attached to the station, had been emptied, and its contents, amounting to upwards of £800 in gold and silver, had been carried off. The key was still remaining in the lock, but the cash was gone. A general opinion seems to prevail that the robbery must have been committed by some party connected with the office; and Mr. H. Bollingbroke, one of the city magistrates, and who is the resident Director, was engaged the whole day in e[illegible] the servants of the Company and the premises, but without arriving at any satisfactory conclusion. The spoil weighed nearly half a cwt., and, consequently, its removal must have been a work of much difficulty.

MUSIC.

THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

We brought up our report of this meeting, in our last number, to Thursday morning. The second and last concert, on that evening, was fully attended, and the scheme afforded the highest gratification. Mendelssohn conducted his Overture and Music to the "Midsummer Night's Dream," which created an immense sensation, the "Wedding March" being encored. A Duo on Two Pianofortes, the "Hommage à Handel" played by its composer Moscheles, and Mendelssohn was a great treat; it is rarely that two such accomplished pianists are brought together in one piece. Weber's "Preciosa" Overture was the other instrumental piece. The vocal selection comprised no novelty; the well-known concert-room répertoire was resorted to. Miss Bassano acquitted herself ably in Mozart's "Non piu di fiori," with the Corno-Bassetto Obligato, played with a nice tone by Mr. Williams. Machin sang Czapek's (Mr. Hatton) song of "King Sifrid" with spirit. Miss Hawes, Messrs. Hobbs, Lockey, and H. Phillips, were encored in Callcott's glee "With sighs, sweet rose;" Grisi in Verdi's "Non fu sogno," and in the duo with F. Lablache, "Oh guardate;" Mario in Cimarosa's "Pria che spunti;" and Mdme. Caradori Allan and Staudigl in Mozart's "Giovanetti."

On Friday morning was the last performance of sacred music. The programme opened with Mehul's overture to "Joseph," and was followed by the 93rd Psalm (Dr. Broadley's version), set by Moscheles. This was written sec. art, but was destitute of all inspiration. Madame Caradori gave the "Let the bright Seraphim," with Harper's trumpet obligato, but both were at fault as to intonation. Miss Bassano, Mario, and F. Lablache sang Cherubini's "Benedictus," and then Miss Bassano gave the tenor air of "O Liberty," with the patriarch Lindley's violoncello obligato. A portion of Beethoven's Mass in D succeeded; but, save the "Kyrie Eleison," was miserably executed, and the best pieces, the "Credo" and "Dona nobis pacem," &c., were excised. Beethoven's "Hallelujah Chorus," from the "Mount of Olives," came next in rotation, half the audience believing that it formed part and parcel of the Mass. Dr. Gauntlett's organ performance was a wondrous development of its powers, such as they are; but his great skill was impeded by the heavy touch. Mendelssohn for this season declined to play on the unwieldy instrument. The wind was let off the great trumpet stop, during Bach's fugue, but Dr. Gauntlett managed to display all the stops in the "Harmonious Blacksmith." Spohr's hymn, "God thou art great," made no impression. Mario was encored in Handel's air, "Lord, remember David," sung with Italian words. Miss Hawes was called upon to repeat Handel's "Holy, holy," and Staudigl was encored in the air from "The Seasons." Owing to the hoarseness of Grisi in the first part, when she sung Marcello's aria, "Il cieli," Mendelssohn's quartet from the "Elijah," "Every one that thirsteth," was substituted for the "Gratias agimus." Mendelssohn was much cheered on his entrance. He scored a tenor recitative for Mr. Lockey, in the coronation anthem of "Zadok the Priest" within a few minutes, the original parts by Handel being missing. The achievement was not remarkable, but it was quickly done. A more curious incident came under our notice, and this was Benedict the composer, who, at the "Elijah," without having heard a note previously, took down in notation on his programme the motif of every piece, its key, its time, its form, and construction—a most marvellous exercise for the ear, when it is added that he did not make a single mistake.

The Dress Ball at the Theatre in the evening was well attended, but a dispute took place between M. Jullien and the Committee, the latter having refused to engage certain artists at exorbitant terms, M. Jullien having offered his own services gratuitously. The firm tone of the members of the Committee induced M. Jullien to apologize at the early part of the ball, and he did his "spiriting" right well at the conclusion. Although the Festival finished on Friday night, Mr. Simpson, the manager of the theatre, gave additional éclât to the week by engaging Grisi, the Misses Williams, Mario, F. Lablache, John Parry, Benedict the pianist, and Hayward the violinist, for a Concert on Saturday night. The house was crowded in every part, the encores were numerous, and the receipts such as to pay Mr. Simpson for his spirit.

The Festival has produced £11,500, the largest of any meeting except that of 1834, when the Town Hall was first opened. Upwards of £1,500 were taken at the doors in donations. It is anticipated that between £4000 and £5000 will be the net amount for the General Hospital. On the whole, the musical attractions have been great. It was a mistake, certainly, to have engaged Moscheles as a conductor, but the success of Mendelssohn's new work was so great, as to outweigh all defects. The exertions of the Committee, of Mr Munden, the sub-conductor; of Mr. Stimpson, the chorus-master; and of Mr. Stevens, the secretary, deserve every eulogium. Lord Wrottesley, the President, has addressed a very handsome letter of acknowledgment to the chorus-singers for their exertions, and the Committee, at their meeting on Saturday, voted special thanks to all concerned. The inhabitants of Birmingham maintained their fame for hospitality. The Press received every attention from the Stewards at the Hall. Nor must we omit that the number of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS of Saturday last, containing the splendid engraving of the interior of the Town Hall, met with universal admiration.

GRAND MUSICAL PERFORMANCES AT MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

MANCHESTER, Thursday.

Two Concerts on a grand scale were given on Monday and Wednesday last, in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester. It was the spirited undertaking of four persons, who coalesced for the purpose of affording amateurs here the opportunity of hearing music by the best masters of the old school, with a band and chorus of 200 performers, and with leading artists of the Italian, German, and English style. Although the result has not been successful in a pecuniary point of view, the musical triumph has been immense, and an example has been set to the members of the various local societies and clubs how much may be achieved for art by unity and coalition. There can be no doubt that these two concerts will have the best effect hereafter, and that Manchester will renew the glories of 1836, when the last great Festival was held. The melancholy death of Malibran in that year, at the Mosley Arms, from over-excitement, and also probably from the homœopathic treatment to which she was subjected, had, no doubt, some weight in the non-renewal of the triennial meetings, but the chief reason was the want of a large Music Hall.

For the Fancy Ball, given in 1836, several streets were covered over with passages. The Free Trade Hall will hold 4000 persons, seated; and, with alterations, might be adapted for grand gatherings. On the Monday there were upwards of 2000 persons present; and, on the Wednesday, more than 2500; but the outlay had been so great that even at the prices of 7s. 6d., 5s., and 2s. 6d., the balance is on the wrong side. An excellent band was provided, comprising the best orchestral talent here, with Mr. C. A. Seymour as first violin; and strengthened by Howell, double bass; G. Cooke, oboe; the two Smithies and Healey, trombones. Benedict was the conductor, and Mr. Waddington, jun., chorus master. The most celebrated Lancashire choral singers had been selected. On Monday the programme consisted of Weber's "Freyschutz" and Rossini's "Guillaume Tell," the latter being encored. Mr. Benedict played the pianoforte obligato, Beethoven's Choral Fantasia, Op. 65. It went well: the wind instruments took up their points firmly, and the stringed ones were full of vigour and precision. The choralists distinguished themselves in this piece in Rossini's chorus from "Semiramide," "Belus;" in Lord Mornington's "Here in cool grot," rapturously encored; and in the two choruses, "Disperse, disperse," and "Come with torches," from Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night." The light and shade of their colouring and nice observance of the pianos—the fortes, as usual, taking care of themselves—were very conspicuous. The solo singing was first-rate, although Grisi, at the first concert, was still suffering from a relaxed throat. She sang the "Qui la voce" from the "Puritani," and the "Ah! rammento" from Mercadante's "Leonora." Mario created a great sensation in Donizetti's "Fra poco," which was demanded a second time. He also sang the "Da pescatore ignobile," from Donizetti's "Lucrezia." Rossini's "Zitti" from "I. Barbière," was encored; it was executed with much vivacity by Grisi, Mario, and F. Lablache. Staudigl's impressive "Battle Prayer" of Himmel was another encore, as also F. Lablache's lively "La Danza." Miss Hawes sang Lindpaintner's "Standard Bearer," and her own ballad of the "Genius of the Spring." She has been very indisposed since the Birmingham Festival, but she maintained her fame, although both she and Staudigl were out of their element in the "Bella image" from the "Semiramide." Mario's impassioned interpretation of Beethoven's "Adelaida," with Benedict's elegant accompaniment, was one of the greatest treats at this concert.

In the second scheme, on Wednesday, the overtures were Weber's picturesque "Preciosa," and Rossini's melodious "Semiramide." The choruses were Haydn's "Come, genial Spring," from the "Seasons;" the "Hymn to Bacchus," from Mendelssohn's "Antigone," and Handel's "Haste thee, Nymph," the solo by Staudigl, who, however, was not so happy as Phillips, in this laughing effusion. The finale from "Norma" was also executed with the chorus, Grisi, Mario, F. Lablache and Staudigl having the soli. In the "Sanctus" and "Hozanna" of Mozart prior to the "Benedictus" sung by Grisi, Miss Hawes, Mario and F. Lablache, the choralists performed their functions right well. There were eight encores; Grisi, who was in fine voice, in the "Dolce Guidami," from Donizetti's "Anna Bolena," and in the "Non fu sogno," from Verdi's "Lombardi;" Mario in the "Tutto è sciolto" from Bellini's "Sonnambula," and in the "Com' è gentil la notte," the Serenade from the "Pasquale." For the "All is lost now," Mario substituted the second time the "Ange si pur," from Donizetti's "Favorite." Staudigl was encored in Schubert's "Der Wanderer"—in Benedict's "Rage thou angry storm," and in Weber's "Revenge" from the "Freyschutz." Miss Hawes was called upon to repeat Wallace's "Scenes that are brightest," from the "Maritana." She also sung Smith's "Full Fathom Five," and Moore's "Minstrel Boy," most splendidly. The Quintet from Rossini's "Il Turco in Italia," "Oh guardate," was rendered excellently by Grisi, Miss Hawes, Mario, F. Lablache and Staudigl.

Both concerts were great musical treats; the talent was all of the first order, and there were no mediocrities to disturb one's equanimity. Commencing at seven o'clock, all was over at half-past ten, and extra trains were put on, for the adjacent towns.

MR. ISAAC'S CONCERT AT LIVERPOOL.—On Tuesday night, Grisi, Mario, F. Lablache, John Parry, and Benedict, were engaged for the concert of Mr. Isaac, a pianist, and associate of the Royal Academy of Music. It was given at the Royal Amphitheatre, the pit of which was converted into stalls for the occasion. The house was well attended. Mr. Isaac executed pieces by Herz and Mendelssohn in excellent style, and played a duo on two pianofortes with Benedict, Moscheles' "Hommage à Handel." Herr Zeugheer Heermann led the band, which was, however, but indifferent. The Italian singers were encored in nearly every piece, as also John Parry in his comic ditties, although he lost the words in "Matrimony" and was obliged to substitute another song. It is not generally known that this facetious and unrivalled buffo singer is one of the most nervous of artists, and never comes before the public without trepidation.

MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.—Mr. T. Romer, a tenor, who has been singing in Italy under the name of Signor Traversi, has just returned from that country, where he has had a successful career.

The two expeditions out of the Drury-Lane Company have been very successful in the provinces.

One party consists of Miss Rainforth, Mr. Allen, and Mr. Stretton; and the other, of Miss Romer, Mr. Harrison, and Mr. Borrani. Ireland, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, &c., have been visited in turn; "Maritana" and the "Bohemian Girl" being the principal operas.

Grisi, Mario, F. Lablache, John Parry, and Benedict, had a morning concert at Buxton on Thursday, and yesterday (Friday) were to sing at Leeds.

Fornasari, Castellan, Corbari, Marras, Kellermann, and Orsini, after concerts at Manchester and Liverpool, have departed for Ireland.

Lablache has arrived at his villa, in Naples, where he will remain until the end of October; and will then join Grisi, Persiani, Ronconi, Coletti, Mario, &c., at the Italian Opera, in Paris.

THE THEATRES.

The present month is proverbially the dullest in the dramatic calendar. The principal houses are closed; and the minor ones scarcely think it worth their while to put forth any very great novelty, seeing that a large proportion of their supporters—more especially, perhaps, as regards their private boxes—has left London. Still, the Managements are not altogether idle. The PRINCESS' announces a three-act comedy in active rehearsal; and a new farce by the author of "The Trip to Kissengen" is underlined at the LYCEUM, where Mr Dance's "Magic Horn" is drawing very good houses, and bids fair to continue to do so. The business over the water is also very fair, looking to the powerful opposition which the Surrey Zoological Gardens prove to the transpontine theatres every fine evening. The sisters Cushman have been going through their most effective parts at the SURREY, to full and attentive audiences; and the "Merchant's Steed," at ASTLEY'S, although not a new piece, from being very carefully put on the stage, and in some instances improved, is a judicious revival. We wish, however, some "creative mind" would invent a few new feats of horsemanship not at this house in particular, but in arenas generally. The old performances are terribly hackneyed, and the clinging to the oldest "rapid act" that of leaping over the bands and poles—is as devoted as ever. It is nothing to see, and nobody ever thinks anything of it when it is done; the "diffusion of useful knowledge" teaching people that, by the laws of motion, the great difficulty would be in not coming down upon the horse again. Ducrow threw more variety into his scenes in the circle than any other artiste has ever done: in this respect he outdid Franconi.

SADLER'S WELLS.

It is a very long time since we have been so much gratified at any theatre as we were with the performance of a young lady, new to the London boards, at this house, on Wednesday evening, in Sir Edward Lytton's ever-charming play of "The Lady of Lyons." Miss Laura Addison is, we believe, from the provinces. Her acting is said to have attracted the attention of Mr. Macready when he was playing in the country; and it was reported that he had made an engagement for her to play with him at the Surrey. How she comes to be at Sadler's Wells we know not; but this we do know, that Mr Phelps has been most fortunate in securing a young and clever actress for the impersonation of his leading female tragic characters, and one to whom we predict a bright career. Our readers know the delightful play of "The Lady of Lyons" too well to require any new description of its story or action. But we may say that we hold it to be the type of what our modern drama ought to be. We should hear little of the decline of legitimacy were our leading dramatists able to furnish us with similar pieces, of the same admirable construction and graceful natural writing. The interest of the play commences in the very first scene, and never once flags. Its progress is so simple, yet so enchaining, that it fixes the attention of the lowest-minded of the audience; and it may be seen again and again, and ever with renewed delight.

Miss Addison performed Pauline des Chapelles. In the earlier scenes of the drama she has little to do; but towards the close of the third act, where Melnotte returns with her, as his bride, to his poor cottage, her genius had full scope; and she threw such impassioned energy, and, at the same time, such truthfulness into her acting—her pourtrayal of the conflicting passions that convulsed her was so vividly powerful—that long and loud bursts of applause broke from all parts of the house almost continuously; and these, at the close of the fourth act, were continued long after the curtain had fallen: indeed, the audience seemed desirous of calling her before it: and the same satisfaction was manifested up to the close of the performance, when she was led forward by Mr. Phelps, amidst loud acclamations. Miss Addison has everything in her favour. She is young; her appearance is exceedingly prepossessing; her voice clear, and capable of nice modulation; and her figure unexceptionable. Her few faults—and they are very few, even for the most rigid critic to discover—can all be easily amended; since she has evidently intelligence and a nice perception to guide her in correcting one or two provincialisms, which, in a good school, she will soon get quit of.

The play was performed, generally, in a manner that would have done credit to any theatre in London. Mr. Phelps was admirable as Melnotte, and shared the applause with his fair young colleague; and Mr. A. Younge's Damas, was a fine portraiture of the sturdy, frank old soldier. Indeed, there was not a part, down to the humblest, that was not carefully played, in that spirit of uniform excellence which we have so often had occasion to commend, when speaking of the plays produced under this praiseworthy management. The scenery and dresses were perfect; the entr' acte music was capitally played by the orchestra, and we are happy to add that the house was crowded, literally to the ceiling.

Miss Addison plays this evening in the "Patrician's Daughter"; and we can, advisedly, recommend our theatrical readers to witness her performance.

"THE WILD MAN OF THE PRAIRIES."

The attempt made to hoax the gentle public by the exhibition of this pseudo-monster has turned out a failure; and there is a forlorn look in its portrait, still posted on the walls of the metropolis, that is absolutely sad to behold. The question of "What is it?" has been simply solved in the Times, by a cunning visitor, who finds it is Mr. Hervey Leech, the "Signor Hervio Nano" who played in the "Gnome Fly," during one of poor Yates's splendid gags at the Adelphi. We suspected as much when we first saw the picture of the Wild Man; and should have recognised our old friend the instant we saw him. But, on going to the Egyptian Hall, on Monday afternoon, we found he was invisible. The question of "What is it?" immediately induced another of "Where is it?" and this led to our asking "Why is it?" and "Who is it?" to all of which we in time found a solution. The man told us that What's-his-name had been taken ill, and was expected to die; and at the same time a person with whom an arrangement had been entered into for some advertising vans was informed that one of the visitors had given Thing-'um-bob an apple stuck with pins, and that the doctors had been called in, but had said that poor What-d'ye-call-him could not live throughout the day. This was all very painful—to those who believed it; but we were not of them. We still clung to our notion of Hervey Leech, and the letter the next day in the Times put our mind at rest upon the subject. So that we suppose "The Wild Man of the Prairies," so savage to strangers, as the bill said, went quietly home to dinner in a cab, and slept that night in his usual second-floor wigwam.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

ANOTHER ROYAL CRUISE.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal children, suite, and servants, left Osborne House at half-past seven o'clock on Tuesday morning, and embarked in the state barge from Mead's Creek, got on board the Victoria and Albert yacht at ten minutes before eight, and immediately put to sea. The Royal yacht was accompanied by the Fairy, in charge of Lieutenant Crozier; Black Eagle, Mr. Cook; and the Garland, Mr. Smithet. The Lord Chamberlain went on board the yacht in attendance upon the Queen. The Lady in Waiting, the Maid of Honour in Waiting, the Hon. Miss Kerr, and the Equerry in Waiting, the Hon. Colonel Grey, were in the Royal Suite. The yacht proceeded across the Channel to Jersey.

THE QUEEN DOWAGER.—In our late impression last week, we announced the return of the Queen Dowager, accompanied by her Royal Highness the Princess William of Prussia. Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, accompanied by the Princess of Prussia and his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, left her residence, Marlborough House, on Wednesday, to pay a visit to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, at Richmond. On Thursday her Majesty the Queen Dowager and her Royal Highness the Princess of Prussia, attended by a numerous suite, left town for Cashiobury Park, Herts.

THE MARQUIS AND MARCHIONESS OF LANSDOWNE.—The Marquis and Marchioness of Lansdowne intend to be absent from this country about nine weeks, having gone on a tour of the German spas, for the benefit of the noble Marquis's health. On the return of the noble Marquis and Marchioness they repair to Bowood-park, where they will receive company till after Christmas.

THE MARQUIS OF WATERFORD.—The health of the above-named nobleman is so far restored as to remove all uneasiness as to his ultimate recovery.

PROPOSED ARISTOCRATIC MARRIAGE.—Active preparations are being made at Powis Castle for the appoaching marriage of Lady Charlotte Herbert, second daughter of the Earl of Powis, to Hugh Montgomery Esq., of Grey Abbey, Ireland. It is understood that the marriage will be solemnised at St. George's Church, Hanover-square, early this month. Great rejoicings are expected in Welshpool and other places where the noble Earl's estates are situated.

WINDSOR, THURSDAY EVENING.—(From our own Correspondent)—It may now be pretty confidently stated that there is no probability of the Court returning to Windsor until the early part of next month. Indeed, it is inferred that her Majesty may not arrive at the Castle until even a later period. The Duchess of Kent took an airing this afternoon, in an open carriage and four, attended by the Baroness de Speth, Lady Anna Maria Dawson, and Lady Cowper.

CITY OF LONDON GENERAL PENSION SOCIETY. The Secretary of this Institution, Mr. H. F. Richardson, has been honoured with a communication from his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, consenting to preside at the next Anniversary Festival of this valuable Charity. Amongst numerous donations lately received by the Society, may be named, from the Marquis of Breadalbane, £50; Thomas Dickinson, Esq., £52 10s.; the Worshipful Companies of Goldsmiths and Drapers, each £50; Joseph Baxendale, Esq., £52 10s., in addition to 80 guineas; Mrs. H. F. Richardson, £10 10s.; Luke J. Hansard, Esq., £60, in addition to £110; Mr. and Mrs. Braithwaite, £21; Mr. Uzielli, £21; &c. &c. It is anticipated that, after the next Festival, the payments to the Pensioners will be at their maximum amount, as resolved on in 1818, the date of the foundation of the Society.

THE HOME OFFICE.—On Tuesday preparations for the demolition of this building commenced: the structure to be raised on its site will form the northern wing of the Treasury.

LITERATURE.

The Struggles and Adventures of Christopher Tadpole. By Albert Smith. Illustrated by John Leech. Part I. Bentley.

A Cyclopædist has cleverly defined the Novel, as distinguished from other narrative works of imagination, to be in effect a tolerably faithful but somewhat exaggerated reflection of the favourite ideal objects and pursuits of the reading classes of the day. To this variety of publications, the work before us promises to be a sparkling and attractive contribution. To our thinking, it betrays no falling-off in the author's rare talent for observation, or his aptitude for describing scenes of familiar life; notwithstanding his rapidity of production during the few years that have elapsed since he started in "the literary world:" and, it is no partiality towards a Contributor to our columns that induces us to point to his position as one alike both of admirable performance and promise. The school of writing in which his genius has developed itself, may not satisfy the more scrupulous admirers of the historical and antiquarian, or even of the sentimental novel; but, it meets the ceaseless current—the insatiate demand—of a large proportion of the reading masses for life-like sketches of scenes and events which are continually taking place around them; and of characters who are constantly flitting before their eyes. The fragmentary mode of publication, too, in such works, requires that each portion should be highly wrought, and be sure to leave the reader on the tenters of suspense as to the incidents of its successor. Their narrative partakes of the startling realities of newspaper history, skilfully worked up with a fair share of the tendresse of domestic life—familiar, yet not common-place—humorous, with "indelicacy suppressed"—and seasoned with just enough of retributive justice in the story to accord with popular notions of right and wrong. Such are the broad characteristics of the novel of the day, to which class belong the "Tadpole Adventures."

The tale (of our own times) opens with a vivid picture of the fine old city of Chester, and a capital scene at one of the inns, where the hero is born. Ten years elapse, and, in the next chapter, we have a "Great Soirée" at a scientific institution in a small town, teeming with sly shafts of humour, let fly at our over-crammed age, and introducing a Chester legend, giving rise to the proverb which the good citizens still use, of "When the daughter is stolen, shut the Peppergate," an adage, which by popularly varying the positions to that of a steed and a stable-door, is not unknown all over England. The third chapter shifts to London, and shows a vulgar upstart, thrusting himself into fashionable life; with many a glimpse of the ring of folly and life-wasting. We have only room to quote from one of the opening pages:—

"A marvellous city is commercial, every-day, common-place Chester—that is, if it can be so. For the passenger's footway lies right through the first floor fronts of the houses—which are cleared away altogether, and above the shops of ordinary normal position, by the road-side; and thus, the back drawing-rooms, or whatever else they may be, are turned into more shops; and great is the puzzle of the stranger as to whether the road-way is down in the cellar, or he is up stairs on the landing, or the house has turned itself out of window; affording a literal proof of that curious state of domestic affairs so often spoken of. And first he fancies the 'row'—as it is termed—is like the Quadrant, with the road excavated a floor lower, and shops made under the pavement; and then it reminds him of a Thames-side tavern, with all the shutter wainscots, that divide the large convivial room into so many little philandering ones, drawn away, and the windows knocked out. And, finally, he arrives at the conclusion that there is nothing else in the world at all like it, except the lithographs published by the enterprising librarians who live there.

"But very convenient is this arrangement for old ladies of weak minds who quail at meeting cattle; and young ladies of extravagant ones who dote on shopping, in spite of the weather. For it raises the first above suspicion even of danger; and shelters the second from being favoured with the visits of the clouds, who cannot here drop in upon them. And so, we opine, that umbrellas are yet unknown in Chester; and clogs and pattens are things to look and wonder at, worthy of a place in the museum of the Water Tower. One only inconvenience do the rows present: convivial gentlemen, who won't go home till morning, under ordinary social circumstances, must be apt to descend suddenly into the valleys, which here and there break their continuity in the shape of bye-streets. But this may be amended in time by the good gentlemen, who pay such pen-and ink attention to the sanatory condition of large towns, and form a grotto for Hygeia at the bottom of an inkstand."

The work is illustrated with two characteristic plates by Leech.

Letters to a Bride. By Emma Pessina. Sharpe.

The amiable object of the author of this volume is to lay down a rule of conduct as regards "the absorbing duties, pains, and pleasures of married life." The purpose deserves high encouragement, and the mode in which it is carried out in these gracefully yet earnestly written letters, is entitled to great praise. They are written in a tender and endearing spirit, seeking to inculcate the importance of woman in the social scale, and her influence upon the well-being of every sphere.

The tone of the work is healthy, impressive yet not gloomy, and cheerful without lightness or frivolity; whilst, in every page we trace an elegant turn of mind, a purity and delicacy, yet homeliness of precept, which must render the volume a treasurable present to all of the class to whom it is specially addressed. The "Letters" are "On Woman's Mission;" "On the Cultivation of the Mind;" "On Motives of Action;" "On the Use of Wealth;" "On the Employment of Time;" "On the Choice of Acquaintance;" "On Conversation;" "On the Affections under the influence of the Christian Religion;" "Conclusion." We are glad to perceive that the work is published under high patronage; its long list of subscribers being headed by her Majesty the Queen Dowager. It is, in every respect, worthy of such honourable introduction.

A New Universal Etymological and Pronouncing Dictionary of the English Language. Parts I to X. J. Gilbert.

Of the making of English Dictionaries there is no end; nor do we see how there can be any limit to the lexicographer's labours, whilst every twenty years add thousands of technological words to our language. "Constant Readers," and "Old Correspondents," are inveterate seekers after etymons and roots of words, and the pursuit is an amusing one, if it have even no higher aim and result. This class of word-hunters, we opine, will be gratified with the work before us as far as it has yet been proceeded with. It is based upon the Dictionaries of Johnson and Walker; with the addition of the principal terms which have been introduced and established since their day to the present time in literature, natural and mechanical science, arts, and manufacture; the Greek, Hebrew, and other ancient roots being printed in Italics. Obsolete words from old English authors are given and denoted as such, and illustrated by quotations. The Editors have set themselves a Herculean labour, and have, hitherto, worked stoutly; the Tenth Part extending but to the end of the letter C. We can scarcely examine such a work more than cursorily: indeed, the only way to test a Dictionary is by frequent use or reference. We can but look for definitions in the most common use of the term in the work before us; and, though we reluctantly find fault with such an attempt to offer to the reading masses an extensively serviceable Dictionary, we are bound to protest against the vast number of technical terms in this new Dictionary, and especially to those very rarely used. Neither are some of the definitions so clear as we could wish: for example, under "Anchovy" is this passage:—"It so closely resembles the common sprat, that it is often pickled and sold under that name." Again, under "Anchusa," the popular name, "Alkanet," is not given. These are discrepancies which we hope to see obviated in the progress of the work. The printing of the technicals requires greater vigilance: thus, under "Alkanet," we have "tinctorea," and under "Anchusa," "tinctoria"; the latter being correct. These may appear to be minor faults; but they are blots in a Dictionary, where every word is expected to be an authority. Such mechanical defects as we have pointed out are of easy prevention; and the work promises to be acceptable to so large a class of inquirers, that we cordially wish it both literary and commercial success.

A Treatise on Practical Arithmetic. Part 2. By A. Nesbit. Longman and Co.

The first portion of Mr. Nesbit's work contains all the Rules of Arithmetic that are considered strictly commercial. The present Part, completing the work, comprises the higher and more intricate branches of the science, commencing with Vulgar Fractions, very extensively treated. These are followed by Decimal Fractions, the Application of Logarithms, Alligation, Simple and Compound Interest by Decimals, the Purchasing of Freehold Estates, Life Annuities and Assurances, Interest Tables, the Stocks, or Public Funds, Foreign Exchanges, &c. To nearly every department of the work are appended Practical Questions for grounding the learner; and there is much practical information conveyed in the Notes, Remarks, and Observations throughout the volume, which is wound up by a concise Commercial Dictionary of Terms, useful in mercantile pursuits.

It would scarcely be possible to convey to the reader the vast amount of labour and calculation requisite to produce such a work as the present: the Author assures us that the information which he has collected from the Government offices and other great establishments of the metropolis "form such a mass of important, original, and instructive facts, as never appeared in any other work upon Arithmetic." The volume is accompanied by a Key, the general methods of solution in which will be found well adapted for the improvement of the student in his knowledge of Numbers, and in different modes of Calculation.

The French School. Part I., L' Echo de Paris. By M. Lepage. Eleventh Edition. Wilson.

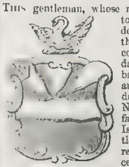
This reprint of "Familiar Phrases, which a person would daily hear said around him if he were living among French people," is especially opportune at this period of Continental emigration; the work being intended to serve as a sort of "royal road" to speaking French. It has been extensively and deservedly popular.

Observations on the Advantages of General Education. By F. B. Ribbans, F.S.A. Whittaker and Co.

This pamphlet is addressed more especially to the Parents, Preceptors, and Pupils of the Youth of the Higher Ranks, and is dedicated, by permission, to the Venerable Archdeacon Bevan. The author, Mr. Ribbans, is Head Master of Sir Thomas Powell's Grammar School at Carmarthen, and the greatest portion of his life has been devoted to the instruction of youth. Within the few pages before us, he attractively sets forth the best course of study, and shows that "good education does not consist merely in a knowledge of the Classics, or any branch of Mathematics or Natural Philosophy; but that it should discipline the mind, cheer the heart, and govern opinion—give to genius its wing, and to our capacity an interpretation. It should establish moral principles, afford a relish to the purest perception of human learning—to piety, persuasion, and permanency—and render information the handmaid to endless felicity."

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

SIR JUSTINIAN VERE ISHAM, BART.



This gentleman, whose melancholy death, caused by his own hand, took place on Tuesday, the 25th ult., at his residence, Pittville, Cheltenham, was elder son of the late Sir Justinian Isham, Bart., of Lamport, county of Northampton, by Mary, his wife, daughter of the Rev. Samuel Close, of Drumbanagher, county Armagh, and represented an ancient and highly-respectable family, which derived its name from the Manor of Isham, in Northamptonshire, at a very remote period. So far back as the reign of Richard III., William Isham was one of the Northamptonshire gentlemen to whom that Monarch sent a letter requiring a loan of £40; and, in less than a century after, his descendant, John Isham, Esq., became Governor of the English Merchant-Adventurers in Flanders. Sir Justinian Isham, the second Baronet, married Vere, daughter of Thomas, Lord Leigh, and granddaughter maternally of Thomas Egerton, Viscount Brackley, the celebrated Lord Chancellor. The unfortunate gentleman, whose death we record, had not quite completed his 30th year. He was not married, and is, consequently, succeeded in the Baronetcy by his only brother, the present Sir Charles Edmund Isham, Bart., of Lamport.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. C.," Stonehouse.—"If I move my Queen, crying 'check,' but have not removed my fingers from the piece, may I recall the 'check,' and move my Queen to another square, or can my adversary compel me to adhere to the first move, as a penalty for pronouncing the word?" This is a question of frequent occurrence, and has been answered by us twenty times at least. There is no penalty whatever incurred by your calling "check," provided you have not left the piece; and you are at liberty to play it where you please.

"P. T."—We have not the back Volumes to refer to, but we believe the Laws of Chess will be found in Volume two of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle."

"J. H.," Worcester.—In all such cases, when practicable, we refer to the Author of the Problem: we have done so in this, and shall abide his reply, being anxious to show him the courtesy "J. H." will not extend to us.

"J. G."—We have submitted your suggestion to the constructor of the Problem. The result you shall know directly it reaches us.

"F. P. G."—Half a column would not suffice to answer all the questions you put. The moves of the pieces, Laws of the Game, &c., should be acquired from some friend, or by the assistance of an Elementary Treatise on the Game. Get Lewis's "Chess for Beginners."

"S. B.," Hull Chess Club.—Thanks: they shall be examined shortly.

"Chesso-Mania."—We have no back Numbers at hand to refer to. Please send the position.

"T. H.," Chester Chess Club.—They have accumulated so rapidly of late, that we have at present some hundreds on hand awaiting examination. Yours shall be reported on shortly.

"A Subscriber."—What is the position to which you allude?

"Marazion."—We very much prefer Heydebrant, Jaenisch, or Lewis.

"H. P.," Newcastle.—It shall be attended to immediately.

"Rustic."—You will find competitors of every calibre at Reis's magnificent establishment, the Grand Divan—certainly the finest school for Chess-playing in all Europe.

"B. D. N."—"W. R."—"G. P."—"Juvenis."—The Matches between Messrs. Staunton and Harrwitz are not yet concluded. Up to the present time, the German has won three Games of the Match in which he receives the Pawn and move—one Game in that wherein he receives P and two moves, and none in the even match. His opponent has won three Games even, and one of those in which he gives P and two moves.

Solutions by "A. Z.," "B. C.," "Arthur S.," "Sopraccita," "R. W. B.," "Juvenis," "Sam Slick," "R. W. D.," "T. H.," "P. W.," "Marazion," and "T. B.," are correct.

Solutions.

To No. 134.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1 Q to Q Kt 7th	K to Q 5th or (a)
2. Kt to Q Kt 3d (ch)	K takes P
3. Q to K 4th—mate
	(a) 1. B to K 6th
2. Kt to K 4th	K to Q 5th
3. Q to her 7th—mate

There are other modes of play for Black, but none that will prolong the mate beyond three moves.

To No. 135.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R to Q Kt 4th	K takes R or (a)
2. R to Q 5th dis. checkmate
	(a) 1. Q to K 5th (ch) or *
2. R to Q 3rd—dis. checkmate
	*. 1. Q to K Kt sq
2 Kt to Q 3rd—mate

To No. 136.

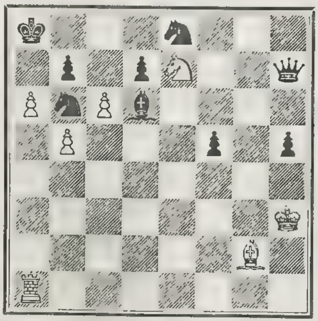
WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R to Q 7th (ch)	K to Q B 5th
2. B to his sq	P to Q 8th (becoming a Q) (best)
3. Kt to K sq (dis ch)	K to Kt 5th
4. R to Kt 7th (ch)	K takes P
5 B to Q Kt 5th (ch)	K to Kt 5th
6. B to K 2nd (dis ch)	K to R 5th
7. B takes Q—mate

Problem No. 138.

By Mr. Hodgson, of the Bengal Civil Service.

White to play and mate in five moves.

BLACK



WHITE.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 46.—By Mr. Brede.

White.	Black.
K at Q 3rd	K at Q 4th
Q at her R 8th	Q at K Kt 7th
Kts at K Kt 8th and Q 7th	R at Q B 3rd
P at K 3rd	Kt at K B 2nd
	P's at K Kt 5th, K 4th, & Q 3rd

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 47.—By the Same.

White.	Black.
K at his R 3rd	K at his B 5th
Q at her B 5th	Q at her Kt 7th
R at K 8th	R at K B 7th
Kt at K 7th	B at K Kt 8th
P at K R 4th	P's at K R 4th, K 3rd and 6th, and Q B 6th

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 48.—By the Same.

White.	Black.
K at Q R sq	K at his R sq
Q at K Kt 4th	Q at her B 7th
B at K R 4th	R at Q R sq
Kt at K 7th	R at Q R 2nd
P at K Kt 5th	Kt at K Kt 7th
	P's at K B 2nd and Q R 7th

White to play, and mate in four moves.

Experiments with the Hydro-electric Machine.—On Saturday morning last, a number of distinguished savans, including Professors Œrsted, of Copenhagen; Mattucci, of Pisa; and Schomberg, of Upsal, met in the theatre of the Royal Polytechnic Institution, for the purpose of carrying out a series of experiments upon the gigantic hydro-electric machine of that establishment. From the eminent character of the philosophers there assembled, and their high reputation as electricians, the experiments were of a most interesting nature. On the day previous the condition of the boiler was carefully tested by hydraulic pressure up to 180lbs on the inch, which is more than double the working pressure of the engine. The experiments were conducted under the direction of Professor Bachhoffner.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Letters from Bologna of the 19th ult., state that the amnesty granted to political offenders had been celebrated in that city by fêtes of two days' duration. A vicious spirit had, however, been displayed by the revolutionary party, who committed outrages of various kinds for the purpose of expressing their dissent from the general satisfaction. It was rumoured at Rome that Prince Borghese would be appointed Treasurer; Prince Altieri, Minister of War; and Prince Piombino, Minister of Police and Governor of Rome.

Sir George Grey has appointed Mr. Richard Budden Crowder, Q.C., as Recorder of Bristol, in the room of the late Sir Charles Wetherell.

Accounts from Constantinople dated Aug. 12, state that disturbances of an alarming nature having broken out at Hadjara, in Lazistan, under the influence of the famous Kurdish chief, Kior Hussein, the few troops that were collected at Trebisonde were sent to the spot to quell them, and an addition of 1500 men has been expedited from Constantinople. It is stated that another insurrection had taken place at Livada, and that it was deemed necessary to forward thither a couple of thousand troops from Erzeroom. It is further added, that things are by no means quiet on the Persian frontier, the Persians having fortified certain points there.

The horrible crime of parricide was committed on Sunday night at Versailles, by a journeyman, named Chevillon, who suffocated his father by means of the fumes of charcoal, in order to obtain possession of a sum of 200f., which the son was aware he had just received. Information having been given to the police, he was arrested with the money in his possession, as was another young man, presumed to have been his accomplice.

A letter from Leghorn, of the 22nd ult., states that the shocks of earthquake had ceased. The accounts received there from various quarters carry the number of deaths to 70, and that of the wounded to 180. Above 4000 persons have been deprived of shelter by the falling of their houses. Subscriptions for the relief of the sufferers have been opened, and the Grand Duke had come from Pisa to visit the wounded in the hospitals.

A Trieste letter of the 15th ult., says:—"The last accounts from Jerusalem represent all Palestine to be a prey to the horrors of famine, caused by the rivers and streams being dried up. At Safet many persons had already perished from want of food."

The ceremony of laying the first stone of the viaduct of the Liverpool and Bury Railway was performed on Saturday last.

It appears that this has been a dreadfully hot summer in Turkey. The heat has been quite tropical, but the public health has been excellent. All kinds of fruit are in the greatest abundance, and of good quality. The crops in general have also been admirable in all directions.

A silver groat of David II., King of Scotland, was found near Redcar, a few days since. It is in fine preservation. Obverse—bust in profile, crowned, with sceptre on the right—"David Rex Scotorum." Reverse—cross, with radiating stars of five points in the quarterings—"Edinburgh," with some minter's name, having been minted there. Edward III. first struck groats in 1354.

La Presse has advices from Venice which state the typhus fever to be raging at Milan. From the same communication we extract the following:—"In circles always well informed, considerable attention is bestowed on the report that the Count de Chambord (the Duke de Bordeaux) is to be married to the young Princess of Mecklenburg, who was at Vienna when the Empress of Russia and the Grand Duchess Olga passed through that capital."

At a meeting of the Swiss Diet, which was held at Zurich on the 25th ult., the question of the Jesuits was put to the vote with the following results:—For the abandonment of the question, 8½ states; to declare the question a federal affair, 10½ states; to summon all the states to repel the Jesuits, 9½ states; to invite only Lucerne to expel them, 8½ states: to invite the three other states to adopt that measure, 7½ states; to prohibit any further reception of the Jesuits, 10½ states.

The Augsburg Gazette of the 27th ult., states that expectations are now entertained of the settlement of the differences between Austria and Sardinia. The late Pope had been appointed arbitrator in the affair, and after his death the two Cabinets named the Emperor of Russia to that office. He at first refused, but has now yielded to the request of the Austrian Ambassador, and is about to act, not as arbitrator, but as mediator.

The Bishop of Calcutta embarked on Monday evening, at Portsmouth, on board the Prince of Wales, an East India ship, to return to his diocese.

Accounts from Tarnow of the 16th August state, that the peasants of Walga, near Dambetza, to the number of 200, excited by an Israelite emissary, had attacked and plundered the Castle of Walga. The lord of the manor effected his escape with considerable difficulty through a back staircase. On receipt of that intelligence a detachment of the regiment of the Archduke Stephen left Dembetza, for Walga. The peasants dispersed on its approach, but the judge, who headed the party, and 26 peasants, were taken prisoners. The principal leader, however, escaped. This event spread such a terror amongst the nobility, that they all abandoned their country residences, and sought refuge in the towns. Tarnow is filled with refugees.

The German Gazette of Frankfort, under date of the 23rd ult., states that a report was prevalent that the sequestration which had been placed on the property of the Princess Czartoriski, in Gallicia, had been taken off on Prince Czartoriski signing a written engagement not to interfere with the affairs of Poland. In case of his breaking it, all his property would be confiscated.

The rich convent of Servites, near Prague, has lately been destroyed by fire. Not a single book of its extensive and valuable library could be saved.

A notice has been received at Lloyd's, reporting a serious accident to the French ship Cecilia, which had put into the Mauritius, on the 8th of June last, almost a wreck, from the effects of lightning, and with a loss of four men. For a moment, it is said, the ship appeared in a blaze of vivid light, and every timber in her shook as if the ship had struck on a rock. The poor seamen who lost their lives were standing forward close to the chains. They were burnt dreadfully; when found their clothes were on fire.

The Berlin papers contain elaborate accounts of the ascent of Mr. Green, son of the celebrated aeronaut, in a balloon 38 feet feet in diameter, and 67 feet in length from the top to the bottom of the car. This is about a middle size between Mr Green's sen.'s large and small balloons. The spot from which the balloon ascended was granted for the purpose by the King of Prussia, who honoured the expedition with his patronage. About 40,000 spectators were assembled. Mr. Green was accompanied by Count Schafgotsch and Herr Kuhnel. The balloon alighted on the plain of Gross-Beeren, and it is a remarkoble coincidence that this was on the anniversary of the victory gained on that spot by the Prussians over the French.

The first experimental trip on the Rouen and Havre Railway took place on Sunday last, and proved to be a remarkably successful one. The extent of the trip was from the station at Havre to the magnificent viaduct at Mereville, a distance of about 18 English miles. The train ran at the rate of 20 miles an hour, stopping at Harfleur, and at Etainhus, the first station on the line from Havre. Everything bids fair to see the line permanently opened, according to the present intentions of the company, in the course of the month of October.

Advices from Launceston to the 17th of April, viâ Sydney, mention the failure of Messrs. Henty and Co., of that place, who, it is stated, have stopped for £90,000.

A letter from the Havannah informs us that the cultivation of tobacco is increasing immensely in Cuba, in consequence of the great demand for Havannah cigars, whilst in many districts of the island the cultivation of coffee is on the decrease. The crop of this year is most prolific, but there is a prejudice against the quality in certain cases, as the buildings for drying, sorting, and packing the tobacco were too small in proportion to the quantity, and the tobacco was brought to market in an immature state. Still the demand continues to exceed the supply.

The line of railway between Manchester and Rawtonstall will be opened on the 23rd inst.

The German Journal of Frankfort states, on the authority of letters from the Roman States, that Don Miguel is making preparations for an expedition to Portugal. This report is in some measure confirmed by a letter in the Heraldo, of Madrid, which states that Don Miguel is only waiting the arrival of the vessel which is to convey him to Portugal, in order to carry his plans into execution.

Mr. Joseph Locke, the engineer, is said to have become the purchaser of the manor of Honiton, including the whole of the borough. The purchase money, it is believed, exceeds £80,000.

The Prussian Government has just decided that all the waste ground in the interior of the country shall be cleared, and the marshes drained, for the purpose of preventing emigration, and of fertilising the country. It is in contemplation to employ the said land to form colonies of the poorer classes similar to those near Strasburg.

Intelligence has been received that the blocks of sculpture lately found in the ruins of Nineveh have been safely got on board the Cormoran at Bassora. The vessel sailed from that port on June 1, on her way to France.

The Cork Examiner says that assurances have been received from several parts of the country that cholera has followed the use of diseased potatoes.

The Post Ampt Gazette, of the 30th ult., states that the negociations between the Duke de Modena and the Pretender to the Crown of Spain are still going on, relative to the marriage of the younger son of the latter with the sister of the Duke. Don Carlos is in want of money, and the lady is, it is said, richly endowed in that respect.

The entertainments attending Prince Albert's recent visit to Liverpool cost the Corporation of that borough three thousand pounds.

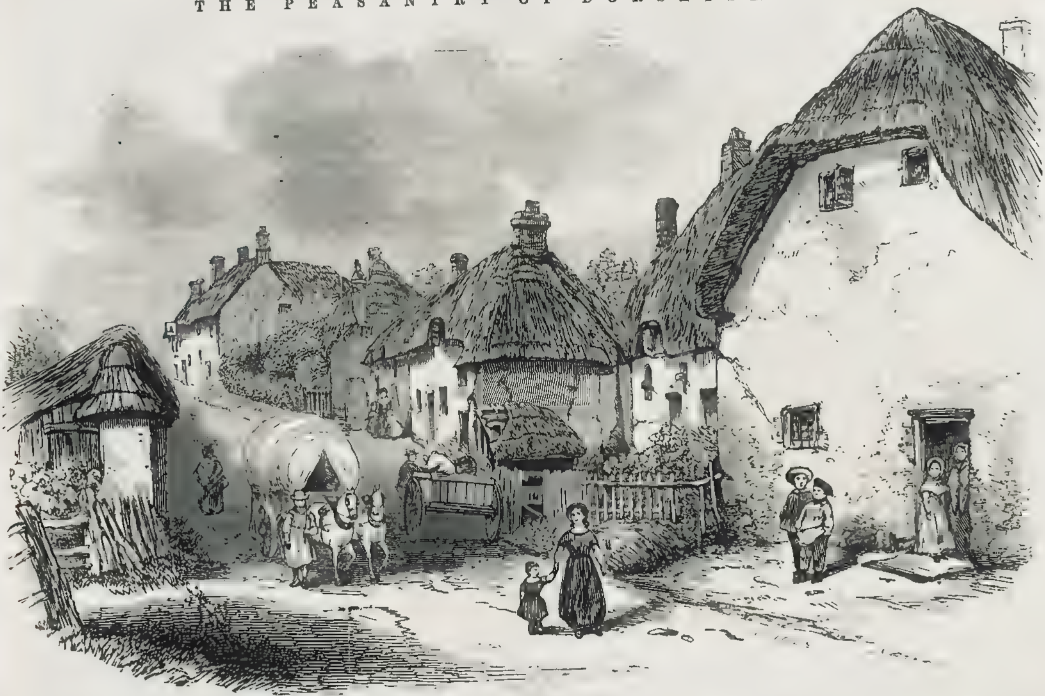
A deputation from the Society of British Artists, consisting of Messrs. Hassell, Clint, Stevens, Tennant, and Hill, waited on Sir George Grey on Wednesday, at the Home Office, with reference to the application of the society for a Royal Charter of Incorporation.

A petition is in the course of signature at Brighton, praying the Queen and the Government that the Pavilion may be preserved as a Royal residence.

The Augsburgh Gazette, in a letter from Inspruck, 21st ult., states that the works on the railroad, which will facilitate the transit of the English Overland India Mail, are rapidly advancing. The road goes direct from Trent to Bregentz. Eighty millions of francs have been voted for its completion.

Some Chinese bricks have been imported into Liverpool. The parcel comprises the large number of 15,000, which are intended for actual use in this country for the general purposes to which they are applied.

THE PEASANTRY OF DORSETSHIRE.



VILLAGE OF WHITCHURCH, DORSET.

The attention of the public has of late been drawn to the condition of the labouring population of Dorsetshire, by a series of graphic Letters, which have appeared within the last three or four months in the Times journal. The inquiry is a subject of paramount interest at a time when the increase of the comfort of the labouring classes is largely occupying the consideration of philanthropists; and the careful collection of such information as is contained in these documents must, doubtless, prove of beneficial aid towards this great work of social improvement.

Several passages in these Letters promised fit opportunities for the Artist's skill; and the Illustrations which we now submit to the reader are the result of a short journey in one of the districts visited by the Times' Correspondent, and described, though rather fiscally than as to the precise localities, in his communications.

The first of our Illustrations is a fair specimen of a village in Dorset—Whitchurch, on the road from Blandford to Dorchester; and, as an inscription upon one of the cottages states "109 miles faom Hyde Park Corner." The scene has attracted our Artist by its picturesqueness. The cottages are built with mud walls, composed of road scrapings, chalk and straw: the foundation is of stone or brick, and on this the mud wall is built in regular layers, each of which is allowed to dry and harden before another is put over it. Every dwelling is thatched, as are also the garden walls: these are frequently built of the above cheap materials, the top being protected from the weather by the small roof of thatch, which extends a few inches over each side. A specimen of the thatched wall, not entirely peculiarly to Dorset, is shown in the left-hand corner of the Engraving.

The exterior view of the Cottage, upon the adjoining page, is sketched from the same locality as the preceding—the village of East Morden, in the neighbourhood of Blandford. This is a charmingly picturesque bit for the painter; though its propped-up walls and decaying thatched roof, but too closely indicate the privation and suffering of the inmates.

Of one of the villages, Stourpain, about midway between Blandford and Sturminster Newton, the Times' Correspondent gives this lamentable account:

"The first feature which attracts the attention of a stranger on entering the village, is the total want of cleanliness which pervades it. A stream, composed of the matter which constantly escapes from pigsties and other receptacles of filth, meanders down each street, being here and there collected into standing pools, which lie festering and rotting in the sun so as to create wonder that the place is not the continual abode of pestilence: indeed, the worst malignant fevers have raged here at different times. It may be sufficient to add for the present that the inside of the cottages in every respect corresponds with the external appearance of the place. The wages here in very few instances exceed seven shillings per week.

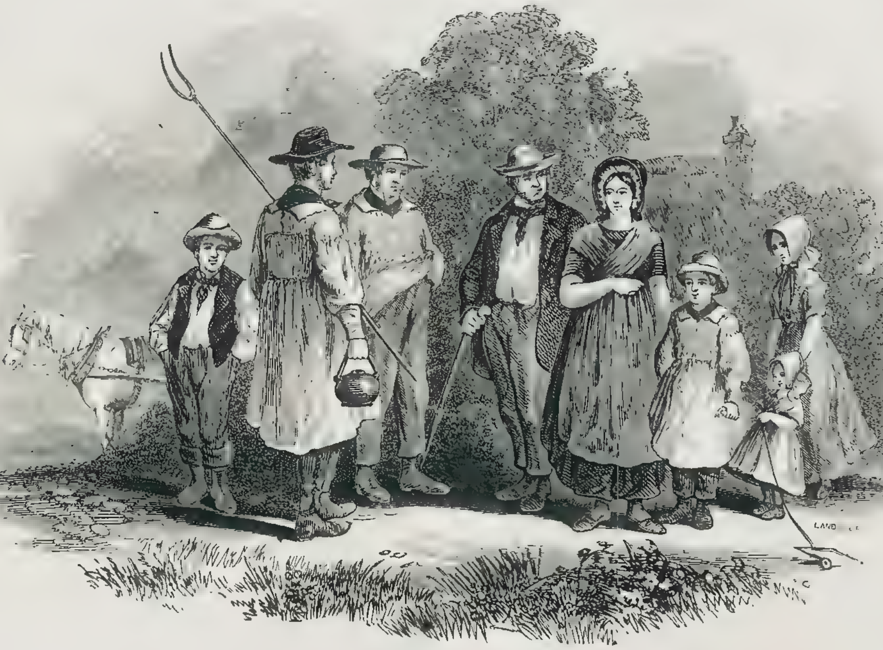
"Another fruitful source of misery, as well as immorality, is the great inadequacy of the number and size of the houses to the number of the population, and the consequently crowded state of their habitations, which in Dorsetshire generally, and in Stourpain particularly, afford the most limited accommodation.

"The want of proper ventilation in these houses must be to the last degree detrimental to the health of the inhabitants; the atmosphere, especially of the sleeping apartments, to an unpractised nose is almost insupportable. It is, perhaps, worthy of remark that dishes, plates, and other articles of crockery, seem almost unknown; there is, however, the less need for them as grist bread forms the principal, and I believe only kind of food which falls to the labourer's lot. In no single instance did I observe meat of any kind during my progress through the parish. The furniture is such as may be expected from the description I have given of the place—a rickety table and two or three foundered chairs generally forming the extent of the upholstery. Want, famine, and misery, are the features of the village, and yet I am credibly informed that the peasant of the Vale of Blackmore and the western parts of the country is as hungry, emaciated, and squalid a being as the denizen of Stourpain.

"From this picture of a Dorsetshire parish, it may be readily gathered that apathy and indifference on the part of the landed proprietor, and the grasping and closefisted policy of the farmer, are the causes of the prevailing distress. The default of the one is apparent in his neglect to provide proper habitations in which the labourer may bring up his family in comfort and decency. In no county, notwithstanding the universal increase of population, is the want of new cottages so apparent, and the neglect of the landlord, in this point at least, so conspicuous. The latter, in withholding from the man who serves him a just and reasonable reward for his services, is acting neither wisely nor honourably. Both seem to have forgotten, or at least to have shut their eyes to the undoubted fact, that one of the surest methods of consulting the public advantage, is to secure to the lower class comfort and competence."

INTERIOR OF A DORSETSHIRE LABOURER'S COTTAGE.

THE PEASANTRY OF DORSETSHIRE.



DORSETSHIRE PEASANTRY.

Of the parish of Handley, in the same district, the Correspondent gives the following details:—"Some of the cottages in the village, from continual neglect and the total absence of repair, are rendered insecure to that degree, that the inmates must be in a continual state of 'fear and trembling.' One of these tenements, the property of the parish, deserves particular attention. A labourer and his family—in all, eight persons—are the occupiers of this hovel, in which there is but one bedroom for their accommodation. There is a small opening, about a foot square, in this apartment, which is unglazed, and serves the purpose of a window. The numerous cracks and fissures in the walls, which on every side present themselves, denote that at no very distant period this disgrace to the parish in which it stands will effectually remove itself. The furniture in the lower room, which, in every respect, corresponds with the upper one, consists of one chair, of most antique and unsafe appearance; two tables, which may be referred to an equally remote period; and a rude wooden bench, "about four feet long. The rents of most of the houses in this parish vary from 1s. to 1s 6d. per week."

Our interior Illustration is a specimen of a labourer's cottage, in the Blandford district, with somewhat nearer approach to comfort than the above. Still, the furniture is poor and scanty; and the cradle, in which the infant is asleep, consists of rough boards, clumsily nailed together. The walls and ceiling, too, have wide fissures. The little girl seated in the chair is a portrait, and the neatness with which her hair is arranged, is by no means singular among the children of the poor in this county.

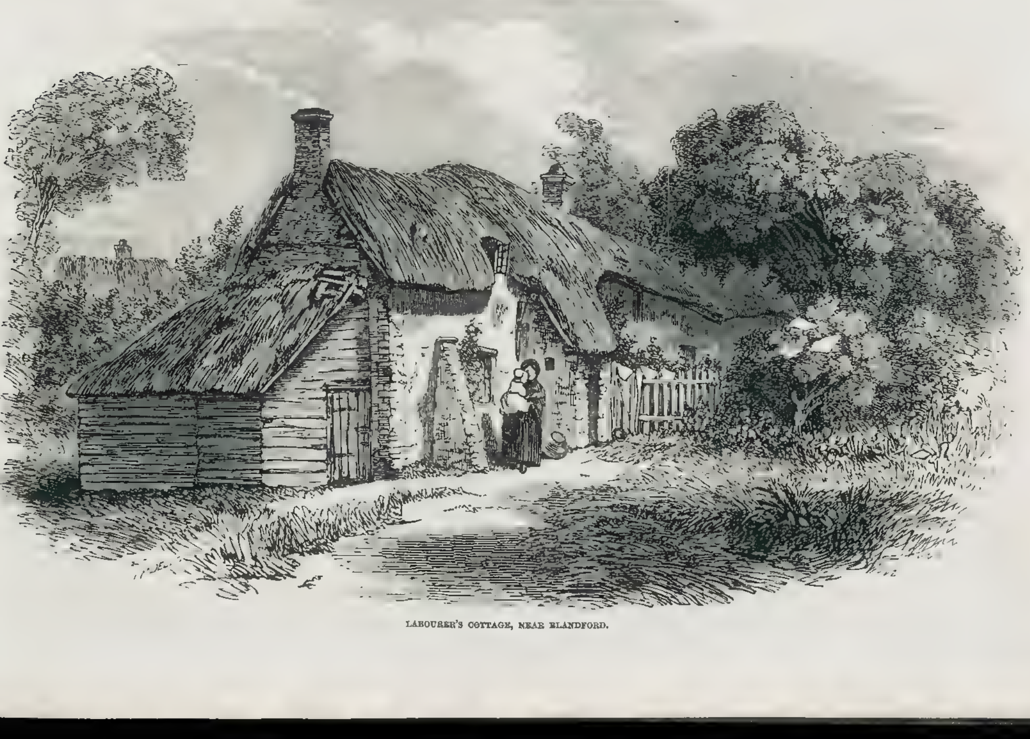
The Blandford district is, however, far from an unfavourable specimen of Dorsetshire and its labouring classes; and the Times Correspondent found Corfe in a much worse condition: he thus speaks of the cottages:—

"Judging from the filthy appearance of the walls, which are black with age and dirt, one feels disposed to imagine that the art of making whitewash, like that of staining glass, is lost. Here and there the bare laths of the partitions, which have been long denuded of their coat of plaster, are to be seen, and contribute to the comfortless and wretched appearance of the place. I may here observe, and the remark will apply to every part of the county I have hitherto visited, that nowhere, especially among the younger part of the population, have I met with so many cases of personal deformity, as well as other natural defects, such as deafness, dumbness, and idiocy, the causes of which I think may clearly be traced to the want of proper and sufficient food, and the general mode of life which prevails among the lower classes."

Nor are the roadside characteristics more promising:

"In passing through the different villages which lie scattered along the road the attention is often arrested by the frail and miserable appearance of the cottages, many of which are supported by props, and, in fact, every contrivance for keeping falling and tottering walls together seems to be resorted to; and occasionally an open door, which reveals a mud floor and the usual heap of squalid half clothed children rolling upon it, serves to remind you that you are in Dorsetshire."

The Group of Labourers in the annexed page, is an average specimen of the Peasantry. We quote a few details:—



LABOURER'S COTTAGE, NEAR BLANDFORD.

"There is one custom which prevails among the farmers of this country which seems extraordinary. It is the repugnance they exhibit to regard a young and unmarried man (with respect to his wages) in any other light than that of a mere boy. Those who, to use the words of Bardolph, are not 'accommodated with a wife,' are usually paid at the rate of 5s. or sometimes 6s. per week. Not that there is any difference in the nature of the employment, or in the amount of exertion expected from him; in this respect, at least, he is on a par with his married competitor; he works as hard and as many hours in the day, and is at all times, and for all purposes, considered as a person of mature age, with the exception of the day on which he receives his wages. On that occasion he descends from man's estate, dwindles into a mere boy, and is paid accordingly.

"The shepherds and carters generally, but by no means universally, enjoy some trifling privileges. In some instances, they live rent-free, and have 8s. per week, which is 1s. more than the ordinary run of wages. This is intended as a compensation for their being debarred from the benefit of 'tut-work,' which the nature of their employment, and the additional time required for the performance of their duties, prevent their undertaking. 'Tut-work' is regarded as one of the principal advantages of the Dorsetshire labourer; and here it will be proper to enumerate the privileges he enjoys, first, however, premising that they are similar to those enjoyed by the labourer of other counties, where his exertions meet with a much more substantial reward in 'hard money.' 'Tut-work' is, in other words, working by the piece or job, of which the labourer sometimes avails himself, when he has the opportunity, in order to increase his pittance of wages. In some instances the labourer is allowed a small piece of ground by his master, for the purpose of raising a crop of potatoes, &c., but this is far from an universal privilege."

One of the county newspapers, however, lately cited a more "Arcadian picture" from Corfe Castle and its vicinity:

"We thought it was a good opportunity to interrogate several of the working labourers as to the wages they received, &c. To satisfy ourselves we took three or four as an example, and were highly gratified and pleased at the happy and contented manner in which they answered the different questions put to them. They all said their earnings throughout the year were eight shillings per week, and that many in the villages earned extra wages in hay and corn harvest. They each had a good cottage to dwell in (wind and water tight), and always kept in good repair; added to this was a good sized piece of garden-ground well stocked; each had also a quarter of an acre of potato ground, and so much fuel as they could burn by going after it. For all these comforts they paid but £2 per annum, and expressed themselves as being perfectly happy and comfortable."

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Timeo Danaos, et dona ferentes.

When "the Greeks" seem most liberal to "the Pigeons,"
Then should they specially eschew the Phrygians.—Liberal Translation.

SOME five-and-twenty years ago, a certain philanthropist writ a volume yclept "The Pigeons and the Greeks," concerning whose fate nothing satisfactory was ever heard from that time forth. Various rumours, indeed, were afoot as to what had become of him; the most popular being that he was pounded to powder in a mortar, and gathered to his fathers in the dust of a subsequent Derby at Tattenham Corner. This may only have been a fable; but fables have their morals, and the natural deduction from the foregone premises is, that care should be had how we meddle with sharp tools. The story of the author of "The Pigeons and the Greeks," notwithstanding, we proceed to fulfil our promise of last week by giving a plain unvarnished view of the philosophy of pastime called "betting," which is vulgarly regarded as a passage in the doctrine of chances. . . .

Adopting the fashion of Aristophanes, Dean Swift, and such like grave authorities, with your leave, we will identify our personages by the titles selected by the sage referred to as aforesaid. The Greeks, then, are the betting circles—professors of the ring those who have taken their degrees as masters of art The Pigeons—we "blush as we give it in," (oh, printer, plunge your types in red ink!) are our well-loved public. As example is a thousand per cent. better than precept, we beg to offer a scene from the last farce performed by these dramatis personæ. It is laid in the Subscription Room at York: time, the first day of the late meeting. Enter "a young gentleman, apparently fresh from the dinner-table." (This description we quote from a contemporary, because the best of valour is said to be discretion.) Enter a young gentleman, apparently fresh from the dinner table

"Who says Pyrrhus is worthy the confidence of the Greeks? Lo! I am the Orestes that do proclaim it a 'lame and impotent conclusion.' Pyrrhus be—hiccuped: ten talents to one against Pyrrhus; 20 to 1 thank you, Sir; 30 to 1—that's a Trojan; 40 to 1 never say die. Any more bidders for all that could perish of this immortal Greek? Friends, countrymen, and brothers, what in the name of Mercury do ye stare at?

I came to bury Pyrrhus—not to back him.

Exit, singing—

I have found out a gift for my fair—
I have found where the wood pigeons breed.

Once more to the prose of our purpose. In the quarter of a century following the publication of the pamphlet of "The Pigeons and the Greeks," a system has grown up, as if to show that the martyr by whom it was written was a true prophet. Betting is now the most popular of all our National Sports: who talks of the Golden Age? Point out the epoch since the Deluge that furnished such an arch-imperial refuge for the destitute as that Utopia of the nineteenth century the Ring? Who would have houses and lands?—let him go thither and pick and choose his castles and his manors? Who quotes the days in which the lion and the lamb met on familiar terms?—let him go into the Ring, observe the intercourse between the Lord and the Leg, and hide his diminished head. The good old times, quoth he! when piglings ready roasted offered themselves to the hungry, and laid the cloth for those who desired to eat them are not these glorious new times, when those who have money run after those who have none, and bid them to gorgeous Olympic festivals, whereat they are entertained on the express condition that they help themselves to any amount of cash for which they may have occasion or caprice? Is this written in a mocking spirit? far from it—but painted in bold colours, as who should say "they that run may read." Racing is a stirring pastime—and a characteristic—Betting—followed as a system—and upon the principle now recognised a positive libel upon the sanity of those by whom it is supported. Something more of this as an appropriate prologue to Doncaster Races.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—The most exciting portion of the afternoon's proceedings was the declaration that Pyrrhus the First would not start for the St. Leger; this was followed by a similar cue with regard to Mount Callan, and an offer of 1000 to 15, tantamount to a declaration against Dolo! The field, therefore, must be very small. The subjoined quotations will show a rise in Sir Tatton Sykes and Grimston, and a decline in Brocardo, who, nevertheless, had a good many friends.

LEAMINGTON STAKES.

4 to 1 agst Camera Obscura (t)
10 to 1 agst Pantasa (t)

ST. LEGER.

11 to 2 agst Sir Tatton Sykes
6 to 1 —— Traverser
9 to 1 —— Fancy Boy
9 to 1 agst Brocardo
10 to 1 —— Grimston (t)
10 to 1 —— Iago (t)
17 to 1 agst Poynton
18 to 1 —— Free Lance
20 to 1 —— Sting (t)
40 to 1 Joanna c.

YORKSHIRE HANDICAP.

8 to 1 agst Quadruped (t)
8 to 1 agst Bravissimo (t)
10 to 1 agst Jano (t)

WARWICK RACES.—WEDNESDAY.

The Trial Stakes of 12 sovs each, and 25 added. One mile.

Mr. Wall's Crown Prince, 3 yrs, 7st 5lb	(A. Day)	1
Mr. Mytton's Auricula, 3 yrs, 7st 2lb	..	2
Mr. Roit's Evenus, 6 yrs, 8st 4lb	..	3

Betting: 5 to 4 on Auricula. Won by a length.

The Guy Produce Stakes of 50 sovs each, h ft. Mile course. 8 subs.

Mr. Wreford's West Countryman, 8 st 9lb . walked over.

The Leamington Stakes of 25 sovs each, 15 ft, and 5 only if declared, with 100 added. Two miles. The second receives £50, and the winner pays £15 to the Judge. 59 subs, 38 of whom declared.

Lord Brooke's Gwalior, 4 yrs, 6st 9lb	(Crouch)	1
Mr. Mostyn's Camera Obscura, 3 yrs, 4st 12lb	..	2

The Maiden Plate of 50 sovs; for three-yrs-old, 7st; four, 8st 3lb; five, 8st 9lb; six and aged, 8st 13lb; winners, 3lb extra; mares, &c., allowed 2lb. Heats, the two-mile course.

Mr. Skelmerdine's Rolla, 4 yrs	(Whitehouse)	1	1
Lord Chesterfield's b c by Don John, out of Game Lass, 3 yrs	..	2	2

Won in a canter.

The Queen's Plate of 100 guineas. Heats, two miles.

Mr. John Day's The Hero, 3 yrs, 8st 2lb .. .. walked over

The Welter Stakes, of 15 sovs each, 10 ft, and 15 added. Heats, two miles.

Sir J. Gerard's Parthian, 6 yrs .. .. .. walked over

THE GREAT CRICKET MATCHES IN THE NORTH.—The first of the series of grand matches with the North was commenced on Monday, at Sheffield, the match being entitled "Eleven of all England v. Twenty of Sheffield." The ground was crowded. All England went in first, and made 80 runs. The match was resumed on Tuesday morning. The innings of the Sheffield party was not favourable, and their runs amounted to 72, or 8 less than that of "All England" "All England" had made 89 in their second innings, when time was called, and had lost six wickets. On Wednesday morning the match was resumed and concluded in favour of Sheffield by five wickets.

THE FIRST DAY OF PARTRIDGE SHOOTING.—On Tuesday last, the 1st of September, the early trains of the several railways conveyed masses of metropolitan sportsmen, with their Mantons and pointers, to various parts of the country, with the pleasing anticipation of abundance of game and good sport. The reports from the crack manors are satisfactory, partridges being plentiful and strong on the wing, and, feeding on the ripening grain, are in prime condition. In many parts of the country there appears to have been a second hatch or brood, but the birds are not yet sufficiently strong to rise, and it is to be hoped that these coveys will not be considered "fair game" by the sportsman. Hares are also reported to be in first-rate condition, fat and active, from the abundance of pasture both on plains and preserved covers. The trains at night brought up an immense quantity of game, which had been killed in the early part of the day. The birds were both large and plump. Accounts from the moors state that the sport, although good, is not equal to that of last season, the grouse on many of the moors being affected with a disease. The birds are also represented to be remarkably wild. Blackcocks are numerous.

GOLD; OR, THE HALF-BROTHERS.

BY CAMILLA TOULMIN.

CHAPTER VI.

IT is not worth while to do more than briefly explain how the intended marriage was stayed. Among the strange contradictions which startle a thoughtful observer, and show how completely the habit of viewing things through a selfish medium, blinds and warps the moral sense, is the fact that we often hear of so-called "respectable" individuals lending themselves to promote the mercenary marriages of male friends or relatives, by those sinister yet effectual means, which, if pursued by others towards their daughters or sisters, would draw down a torrent of vindictive reproaches. Thus Mr. Drayton had found a lady, a married cousin, ready and willing to assist him by making her house the rendezvous of the lovers; and, finally, by throwing the ægis of her protection before the fair fame of Catherine, by accompanying her on that eventful morning to a certain church in a distant parish, where for the last three Sundays, their bans had been published.

Long and wearily the two ladies waited for the would-be bridegroom; and when at last he appeared, crest-fallen and out of temper, it was to apprise them, that Mr. Joyce was following on the instant, the driver of the carriage he had hired having yielded to a golden persuasion, and revealed whither he was to have conveyed him. An inexpressible sense of shame came over the heart of poor Catherine. Only now was she thoroughly conscious of the unwomanly step into which she had been led by her self-willed temper and imprudent passion. She trembled from head to foot, and large hot tears chased each other down her cheeks. The lady "friend," to whom the scene was too indifferent to arouse any feelings or expressions of real sympathy, chinked the false metal of common-place set phrases in her ear; and Frederick Drayton, angry with himself and the whole world at the defeat of his scheme, was too much absorbed in his own egoism to play the part of consoler with any effect to her he had misled and deluded.

Meanwhile Margaret Clifford found herself, she hardly knew how, beside Mr. Joyce, rattling through the streets of London, in the first cab he had been able to find. She had an indistinct recollection of angry words passing between the gentlemen, and of a brief parley with the coachman at the door; but it was only now that she had time and power to reflect in what manner she dared use the knowledge she possessed of Mr. Drayton's unworthiness.

"Explain, my dear Miss Clifford," exclaimed Mr. Joyce, "what it is you know; I beseech you tell me, how you will prevail on my unhappy child to relinquish this worthless man."

"Alas! alas! I feel now that you must trust me," she replied, "that she must believe my word. I know the story of his heartless betrayal of another—but her name I cannot, will not mention: unless, indeed this other victim give me free permission, and she is generous and may do so."

Perhaps Mr. Joyce thought youthful confidences needed not so much respect: but since Margaret, at any rate, felt sure she could serve his cause, he strove to be content that she should do it in her own way.

Mr. Joyce was a warm-tempered man, and when he arrived at the church he found it difficult to conceal his indignation. Contrasted with her father's anger, her lover's selfishness, and the ill-concealed indifference of her new acquaintance, there is no wonder that Catherine appreciated the heartfelt sympathy of Margaret Clifford; for in this hour of shame and anguish she gave her pity, not reproaches; and when she had but hinted that she had a tale to tell which would unmask the deceiver, Catherine fell upon her neck and murmured—"Take me home—take me to your home—I cannot go to mine. My brain reels at the thought of returning to the house which I believed I had left for ever."

Perhaps, under all the circumstances, this was the best thing to do. Mr. Joyce himself made but few objections to the plan; for he knew the influences by which she would be surrounded in Margaret's humble home were the ones he would most covet. Mrs. Clifford was "charmed" to receive her; but, perhaps, had this tribulation come upon some poor dependent acquaintance of her daughter the case would have been wholly different. As it was, she made "great allowances" for the fault of the heiress, and behaved accordingly. But it is a remarkable fact that when we are in the depths of anguish, "the black hoof of care" pressing upon the spirit, we are peculiarly alive to the sincerity of the sympathy expressed by those about us. It is as if the highly wrought brain rejects all medicine less pure than Truth, deriving solace even from this in its most unpalatable form, rather than from sugared cheats and sophistries.

Margaret Clifford only did her sister justice when she called Susan generous. Now that revealing the tale of her own error and folly, with every faithful detail, might be of use in arousing Catherine from her dream, she confided it to her without scruple. It would have been a strange sight for Mr. Frederick Drayton, could he have witnessed the conference which was held between the three girls that very evening. Wholesome, in one sense, for him, or such as him, to know the scorn and contempt in which he was held by all; but, on the other hand, too deeply gratifying to a coxcomb's vanity, to find how well and how warmly he had been loved by both his trusting dupes. Had been—for it was all over. But even in yielding up its idol—the idol it cannot, will not longer worship—the heart is terribly torn; and that revolution in life which suffering commonly effects, was working in both cases. With Susan Clifford, those inly bleeding wounds were developing powers, which had hitherto only been guessed at. With Catherine, the spoilt child, impatient to endure, and little accustomed to slights or contradiction, the process was different. Mortification, anger, a dying love that was transmuting, by some strange alchemy, almost into hate—these passions were warring in her soul, sending the blood quickly to her throbbing temples, flushing her cheeks, and flashing her eyes. Once or twice she raised her hands to her head, and spoke of pain; and when, at last, she shared Margaret's chamber, and sought sleep, she sank only into a fitful slumber, disturbed by half delirious dreams. Before twenty-four hours had passed, Catherine Joyce was in a brain fever!

I have often thought that it must be necessary for mental anguish to lead sometimes to disease and death, to point a warning to those who have passed unscathed, or to show to the less sensitive that such things are. And yet, an event of this kind is but as a lightning-flash that shows for a moment the depth and darkness of the thunder-cloud! We never know the myriad sorrows which all but reach the weight beneath whose burden life and reason bend. Herein, too, is the physician often sorely taxed—seeing the results of suffering, and having to guess vaguely at the causes.

It was very natural that Mr. Joyce should wish to conceal from the world the lengths to which his daughter's infatuation had carried her. Nevertheless, he found it necessary to communicate some of the circumstances to Dr. G——, the physician who had been called in, and who was a friend of the family.

On her first attack of illness, Trevor Sefton, being in the house, had been consulted; and so prompt and judicious had been his measures, that he won by them the high consideration of Dr. G——, who generally saw him, and reported to him the progress of the case, whenever he visited his patient.

"I am obliged to leave town for a couple of days," he exclaimed one morning, soon after the dangerous crisis was passed, "but I leave our patient in your hands, Mr. Sefton, with the greatest confidence. I wish, too, you would keep your eye on her kind and gentle nurse—that sweet girl to whom, I believe, she owes much more than you know, or than I am at liberty to tell you."

"You mean Marga——, Miss Clifford," said Trevor, colouring, he knew not why.

"Yes," continued the kind-hearted, but somewhat eccentric, doctor, "though she tells me she is quite well, I presume to think that I know better than herself. And, really, when I reflect what would have happened but for her energy and presence of mind, I feel an admiration and interest for her beyond description."

The words of Dr. G—— seemed to roll away a mist from the mental vision of Trevor Sefton. The shock he had received on seeing Margaret at Mr. Drayton's door, and the circumstance he had witnessed there, had blinded his judgment, and suffered a cruel suspicion to have birth. It is true, he knew nothing of Catherine's story: all that it had been thought necessary to mention was that she had disagreed with her family and had consequently left home for a time. But Dr. G——'s words showed that there was some mystery, and a mystery of which Margaret was cognisant; and this gave a different complexion to the whole affair. He was conscious now of what amid his more selfish sorrow he had scarcely observed, that her cheek was paler and her countenance altogether more expressive of suffering than could be accounted for, even by her anxious watching, especially now that her friend was pronounced out of danger. Could her evident grief have arisen from the change in his deportment towards her? He asked himself this question with a keen heart-thrill, in which were mingled bitter self-reproach, and yet a sense of recompense and satisfaction.

Trevor Sefton determined on that plan which in real life is always the best to adopt—to seek an explanation. True that novelists have been greatly indebted to the continuation of the misunderstandings into which they plunge the personages of their creation for the interest of their plots, and the "regulation" quantity of paper they have been enabled to cover; but the moral to be deduced is one of warning, not of example; and they who are wise will never be too proud to ask the meaning of a word or action they do not like, and cannot comprehend, from friend or lover.

(To be Continued.)

HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST.—From the fifth annual report of this excellent institution, just published, it appears that during the past year 63 in-patients were admitted and 1511 out-recipients, of which there are at present under treatment, 335. The total number treated since the present Hospital was established is, in patients, 273; out-patients, 4893. The arrangements of the new Hospital at Brompton are such, as to accommodate, when completed, upwards of 200 in-patients, exclusive of the treatment of the out-door applicants.

THE WORCESTER, TENBURY, AND LUDLOW RAILWAY COMPANY.—An adjourned meeting of the scripholders in this Company was held at the London Tavern on Wednesday, at which a report was read giving some explanation bearing upon the charge of forgery against Captain Richardson (See our Police Report). The report, after noticing various proceedings connected with the Company, says:—"The minutes of the meeting on the 21st of May stated that cheques should be signed by certain directors and countersigned by the secretary. When the minutes were read for confirmation, that portion relating to secretary's signature was erased, and on examining the cheques signed after this period none of them bore that officer's signature. The secretary having been requested to give some explanation on this subject, stated that the account was taken to Coutts and Company, to avoid an attachment, there being law proceedings pending at the time, and that during a fortnight he was ignorant of the bank to which the account had been transferred when the money was received from the Accountant-General. The chairman (Capt. Richardson) declared that the reason the secretary's signature was excluded was that Messrs. Coutts's house would receive none other than a private account. On the 7th of July the following resolution was passed.—'That a cheque be drawn for £10, and given to Mr. Howell, messenger, for his services.' This cheque was signed by the chairman, and handed over by him to the secretary to procure the signatures of Mr. Whitmore and Mr. Stevenson. Having obtained these, the secretary returned the cheque to Captain Richardson, the chairman. The committee feel reluctant to allude to the painful circumstances which have arisen in reference to this transaction, as they are already in course of judicial investigation. They deem it, however, their duty to observe in terms of censure upon the very improper and unjustifiable conduct of the directors in voting a sum of money, under the head of services, to a messenger, although they were well aware at the time that the statement was fictitious, the individual in question having no claim upon them whatever, and having never been employed as a messenger, nor indeed for a long period in any other capacity. The loose manner in which the signatures of the directors were obtained, and the recent habit of dispensing with the services of their executive officer in such respects, appear to have afforded unusual facilities for fraud."

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—Since Monday the arrivals of English wheat have been somewhat on the increase, and we had a fair average number of samples of that article on sale to-day still, however, the demand was very steady, at prices fully equal to those obtained on last market-day, and at which a good clearance was effected. The imports of foreign wheat have been small. Holders were very firm, and would not sell, except at 1s per quarter more money The amount of business doing was, therefore, limited. No new barley at market. Old qualities were quite as dear. We had a good demand for malt, which went off as it came to hand, at rather improved currencies. Oats—the supply of which was small—were in fair request, at full prices. Beans, peas, and flour as last advised.

ARRIVALS.—English. wheat, 3710, barley, 880, oats, 1510. Irish. Wheat, ——; barley, ——, oats, 390. Foreign: wheat, 2000; barley, ——; oats, 13,050. Flour, 2210 sacks; malt, 2160 quarters.

English. Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 43s to 50s; ditto white, 48s to 56s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 42s to 50s, ditto white, 48s to 55s, rye, 30s to 34s; grinding barley, 24s to 27s; distilling, 26s to 28s; malting ditto, 30s to 32s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 62s, brown ditto, [illegible]; Kingston and Ware, 62s to 63s; Chevalier, 63s to 64s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 23s to 26s, potato ditto, 31s to 34s, Youghal and Cork, black, 23s to 26s; ditto, white, 24s to 29s; tick beans, new, 36s to 37s; ditto old, 37s to 39s; grey peas, 35s to 37s; maple, 33s to 36s; white, 36s to 40s; boilers, 40s to 43s, per quarter Town-made flour, 42s to 46s; Suffolk, 36s to 38s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 35s to 37s, per 280 lbs. Foreign—Free wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, 44s to 52s; ditto white, 49s to 57s per quarter.

The Seed Market.—The best linseed cakes and white mustard seed are in good request, at higher prices. In all other articles very little is doing

Linseed, English, sowing, 55s to 60s; Baltic, crushing, 38s 9d to 41s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 41s to 42s Hempseed, 36s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 14s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 11s to 15s, white ditto, 10s to 13s. Tares, 5s 6d to 7s 0d per bushel. English Rapeseed, new, £21 to £22 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 to £11 5s., ditto, foreign, £7 10s to £8 10s per 1000; Rapeseed cakes, £5 0s to £5 2s per ton. Canary, 46s to 52s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, 45s to 50s; extra, 25s to 55s, white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign, red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis, are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5½d to 6½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat 47s 10d; barley, 29s 1d; oats, 23s 0d; rye, 31s 10d; beans, 39s 9d; peas, 38s 6d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 46s 11d; barley, 27s 5d; oats, 23s 5d; rye, 30s 1d; beans, 39s 5d, peas, 36s 6d

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 10s 0d; barley, 4s; oats, 1s 6d; rye, 4s; beans, 4s 0d; peas, 4s 0d.

Tea.—This market continues in a very inactive state, yet we can notice no alteration in value.

Sugar.—All kinds of raw sugar command very little attention, and prices have a downward tendency. Refined goods are heavy, at 62s to 62s 6d for brown, and 63s per cwt for [illegible]

Coffee.—This market is firm, and, in some instances, the quotations have an upward tendency.

[illegible] We have very few sales to report in this article, and prices are not supported

Provisions. Irish butter is in good request, at a further advance in the quotations of from 1s to 3s per cwt. Waterford, landed is selling at 90s to 92s; Cork, 92s to 94s; Clonmel, 82s to 88s per cwt. On board, very little is doing. English butter commands the same amount of improvement. Best Dorset, 100s to 104s; inferior and middling, 94s to 98s; Devon 92s to 96s per cwt, and fresh 10s 6d to 12s 6d per dozen. Foreign butter is firm, at 100s to 104s for the best marks, and 72s to 76s per cwt, for other qualities. Bacon steady, at last week's prices All other kinds of provisions are quite as dear, with a very steady sale.

Tallow.—There is a good demand for P.Y.C., at a trifle more money The price on the spot is 41s 9d to 42s for old, and 42s 6d, for new from the scale. Town Tallow is firm, at 41s net cash

Oils.—This market is steady, at about last week's prices.

Hay and Straw.—Old meadow hay, £3 0s to £4 0s; new ditto, £2 5s to £3 12s; old clover, £4 10s to £5 10s; new ditto, £3 10s to £4 16s; oat straw, £ 8s to £1 10s; wheat straw, £1 10s to £1 12s per load.

Wool.—This market is very dull, at almost nominal currencies. Public sales of colonial will commence on the 9th inst.

Potatoes.—The supplies of potatoes are very abundant, and a good business is doing, at from 40s to 100s per ton

Hops (Friday).—Nearly 1000 pockets of new hops have already reached us from Sussex and Kent in excellent condition The demand, however, is by no means active; and the duty is called £190,000. Old and yearling hops have declined quite 5s per cwt The following are the prices obtained for the new samples:—Kent pockets, £5 10s to £6 10s, Sussex ditto £5 [illegible] to £6 0s per cwt

Coals (Friday). [illegible] 3d; Haswell, 17s, Shotton, 16s 3d [illegible], 16s 6d, South Durham, 15s 6d, Lambton, 16s 6d, Wylam, 15s 3d, and Wharncliffe, [illegible] 3d per ton

Smithfield (Friday.)—The supply of home-fed beasts on offer to-day, was very limited—that of foreign stock, large. Prime Scots, Devons, &c., commanded a very steady sale, at fully Monday's quotations; otherwise, the beef trade was in a sluggish state, at previous [illegible]. We had on sale 270 oxen and cows, 1460 sheep and lambs, and 36 calves from abroad. The numbers of sheep were small, while the mutton trade was very firm, and, in some instances, a trifle more money was obtained for the best old Downs. Lambs moved off readily at an advance of 2d per 8lb. The veal trade was rather active, and prices were the turn higher. In pigs, a steady business was doing, at late rates. Milch cows were dull, at from £16 to £18 each, including their small calf.

Per 8lb to sink the offal.—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 10d to 3s 0d; second quality ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; prime large oxen, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime Scots, &c., 4s 0d to 4s 2d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; second quality ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 4d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; prime South Down ditto, 4s 8d to 4s 10d; large coarse calves, 3s 10d to 4s 6d; prime small ditto, 4s 8d to 4s 10d; large hogs, 3s 8d to 4s 6d; neat small porkers, 4s 8d to 4s 10d; lambs, 4s 8d to 5s 8d. Suckling calves, 18s to 29s, and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 20s each. Beasts, 809; cows, 87; sheep and lambs, 8300; calves, 331; pigs, 261.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a very active trade here to-day, and prices had an upward tendency.

Per 8lb. by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; middling ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; prime large ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime small ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; large pork, 3s 6d to 4s 2d; inferior mutton, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; middling ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; prime ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; veal, 3s 8d to 4s 8d; small pork, 4s 4d to 4s 10d; lamb, 4s 8d to 5s 8d. Robt. Herbert.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Although an improved tone has been evident in the English Market during the week, no material alteration in prices has occurred. In fact, towards the close of the weekly transactions a slight tendency to reaction was visible; but it was more attributable to an absence of business than any other cause. At this period of the year, and for another month, transactions are usually upon a very limited scale, unless some political event of stirring interest gives an impetus to speculation. Some good purchases, however, have since restored the Market, and prices again improved. The Exchequer Market, it will be seen from our list of prices, has advanced, the last quotation being about 18 to 21. This may be always considered as a sort of barometer of the Money Market, and evidences the increased facilities of accommodation. Bank Stock continues firm at 209½ to ½; Reduced, quotes 96¾ ⅞; Long Annuities, 10 7-16; India Stock, 259; India Bonds, 25 30; and Consols, 96½ to 96½ for money, and 96⅝ to ¾ for account.

Unusual animation has prevailed in the Foreign Market during the past week. Mexican, in which the improvement was remarkable in our last week's impression, again advanced at the beginning of the week, quoting 26⅝. This price again improved on Tuesday, to 26⅞ to 27. Realisation has, however, since caused a slight reaction, and the closing quotation is 26¾ to ⅞. Portuguese, on Monday, stood at 43⅞ to 44½, improving on Tuesday to 45, and has since advanced to 46½ for money, and 46½ to 47 for account. In Spanish also a marked improvement has occurred, from the marriage of the Queen of Spain having been definitively agreed on. The Active Bonds close at 27½ to ⅝, being an advance of nearly one-and-a half per cent. The Three per Cents 38⅞ to 39. Passive 6⅝ ⅞. Dutch are 59⅞ to 60 for the Two-and-a-half per Cents. Five per Cents, 95. Buenos Ayres, 43. Venezuela Bonds, 42.

The Share Market has been well supported during the week, but prices, from the absence of business, have not much varied. At the various meetings of the dividend-paying Companies, an increased traffic has in every instance been shown, resulting from the reduction of fares. No speculation at present, however, exists; and this accounts for the little change that occurs in quotations. The Market closed buoyantly, at the following prices:—Aberdeen, 9½; Ambergate, Nottingham, Boston, and Eastern Junction, 2; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 6½; Bristol and Gloucester, 50½; Buckinghamshire, ½ dis.; Caledonian, 16; Do., Half-shares, 1½; Cambridge and Oxford, 1⅜; Churnet and Blythe, 2⅜; Cornwall, 1⅝; Dublin and Belfast Junction, 4; Eastern Counties Perpetual, Five per Cent, No. 1, ⅝ p.; Ditto, York Extension, 2½; East Lancashire, 23½; East Lincolnshire, ½; Edinburgh and Glasgow, Half-Shares, 18½; Edinburgh and Northern, 10½; Exeter, Yeovil, and Dorset, 3; Great Southern and Western (Ireland) 31 x int; Great North of England, 230; Great Western, Quarter Shares, 22½; Hull and Selby, 104½; Leeds and Bradford 69½; Leicester and Bedford, ⅝ dis.; Leicester and Tamworth, &c., ½ dis.; London and Brighton, 63½; London and North Western, 205½; Ditto, Quarters, 24; London and South-Western, 71½ x d; Ditto, New, 26½; London and York, 2½; London, Salisbury, and Yeovil, 1⅛; Lynn and Dereham, 13½; Manchester and Leeds, Fifths, 11; Ditto, Extension, 2⅞ pm; Manchester and Birmingham, 78; Ditto, Quarters (B), 13⅞; Ditto, Quarters (C), 8⅞; Manchester, Buxton, and Matlock, 1½ pm; Manchester and Southampton, 1¼; Midland, 140; Ditto, Birmingham, and Derby, 1.4; Newcastle and Berwick, 28; Norfolk, Tenths, 2⅛; Ditto, Extension, 2½; North British, 38½; Do. ½ Shares, 16¾; Northern and Eastern, Scrip (iss 5 dis.), 67; North Staffordshire, 3⅞ pm.; Northampton, Banbury, and Cheltenham, 1⅛; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 8½; Portsmouth Direct, 5⅝; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 1½ dis.; Scottish Central, 20; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 2¾; Shropshire Union, par; Shrewsbury, Wolverhampton, and South Staffordshire Junction, 2½, South Eastern and Dover, No. 1, 25¾; Do., No. 2, 17; Do., No. 3, 19¾; Do., No. 4, 3⅞; Staines and Richmond, 1; South Wales, 4⅝; Vale of Neath, 1; West Riding Union, 3 pm.; York and Carlisle, ¾; York and North Midland Extension, 38½; Ditto East and West Riding Extension, 12⅝; Central of Spain, ½; Direct Bombay and Madras, ⅝; Dutch Rhenish, 6⅛; East Indian, ¾; Great Indian Peninsular, ⅝; Italian and Austrian, 1¾; Louvain à la Sambre, 1½. Luxembourg, 1¾; Northern of France, Constituted, 13⅝; Paris and Lyons, Constituted, 5⅞; Rouen and Havre, 27½. Mines—Real del Monte, Unregistered, 3⅞.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, SEPT 1

WHITEHALL, AUG. 29

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Edward Strutt, Esq., to be one of the Commissioners of Railways, and also President of the said Commissioners.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, A[illegible] 28

Royal Artillery.—Major General J W Tobin to be Colonel Commandant, vice Lord Bloomfield; Major General R[illegible] Brough to be Colonel Commandant, vice Wulff.

ADMIRALTY AUG 28.

Corps of Royal Marines.—First Lieut. A S. S. Walsh to be Captain, vice Captain G. Hollingworth; Second Lieut. W M Mansell to be First Lieutenant, vice Walsh.

BANKRUPTS. J. RUSSELL, junior, Whittlesea, Cambridgeshire, builder. [illegible] PHILLIPS, Birmingham, japanner. J BARKER, Sheffield, joiner. T YATES, Bolton-le-Moors, cotton-manufacturer. R CROMPTON, M PRICE, and T. CROMPTON, Shrigley, Cheshire, brickmakers. J. PRYTHERCH, Wrexham, Denbighshire, grocer. J. GILL, Liverpool, wine-merchant.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS. L. FLEMIN[illegible], Edinburgh, tobacconist. W. OSWALD, Ladysauick, Clackmannanshire, lime-burner. J. DRYSDALE, Alva, Stirlingshire, machine maker. G. D. CHOMAR, Glasgow, merchant.

FRIDAY, SEPT 4

WHITEHALL, SEPT 2

The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Knight of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto David Pollock, Esq., Chief Justice of the [illegible] at Bombay.

BANKRUPTS.—R. F BARBER, Bishopsgate-street Without, licensed victualler.—W LAKE, Henfield, grocer.—J MORTIMER, Bradford, Yorkshire, woolstapler.—T WAINWRIGHT, Barnsley, Yorkshire, surgeon.—J. HALL, Leeds, chemist.—J. FIRTH, Sen., Standand, J. FIRTH, Jun., Booth Town, J. DUGDALE and W. STOTT, Soyland, Yorkshire, cotton spinners.—G LEWIS, Wrexham, Denbighshire, apothecary.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—C. SIMPSON, Glasgow, agent.—J. CALLENDER, Linlithgow, tanner.

BIRTHS.

At Brimington Hall, Derbyshire, Mrs. William Coke, of a son.—At Mulgrave Castle, near Whitby, the Countess of Mulgrave, of a son.—At Streatham, Mrs. William Senhouse Gaitskell, of a son.—On the 31st ult., the wife of the Rev. W. Harrison, of a son.—At Chesham-place, Mrs. William Stopford, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

At Wingham, Kent, George Elgar Toomer, to Priscilla, daughter of Edward Tindale, of Limehouse.—At Broadway, Dorset, Charles Gosnell, Esq., to Anna Martha, eldest daughter of John Furmidge, Esq.—On the 29th ult., at St. George's, Hanover-square, Edward H. Greene, Esq., to Julia, eldest daughter of Francis Forester, Esq., of St. James's-place, widow of the late Captain Flower, and niece of the Duke of Cleveland.—The Hon. Charles A. W. H. Noel Hill, youngest son of the Right Hon. and Rev. [illegible] Shropshire, to [illegible] Mary [illegible] Esq. [illegible] Esq., to Anne, third daughter of the Rev. [illegible] Walker.

DEATHS.

At Gre[illegible], near Market [illegible], Michael [illegible] Clements, Esq., in the 78th year of his age.—At Stoke Park, Suffolk, Frances, wife of the Hon. Lindsey Burrell, aged 67.—In London, Caroline Elizabeth, the wife of John Longe, Esq., of Spixworth Park, Norfolk.—At Castlewarden, county of Dublin, Hugh Palliser, Esq.—On the 29th ult., at Lymington, Hants, in the 81st year of her age, Jane, the widow of the late James Brown, Esq., of that town.—In Baker-street, Elizabeth, wife of John St. Leger, Esq., and daughter of Sir John Dashwood King, Bart.—On the 30th ult., at Whinstead Grove, George William Warwick, infant son of G. M. Hawkins, Esq.—At Fulham, Susanna, the widow of the late Alexander Mundell.—On the 31st ult., the Rev. Charles Mayor, M.A., one of the Assistant Masters of Rugby School.—At Chesham-place, Sarah, widow of the late William Randall, Esq.—At Brixton-hill, Alexander Hugh Macsween.—At Norwood, Mary, the second daughter of the late Samuel B. Searle, Esq.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

VAUXHALL OPEN EVERY NIGHT EXCEPT SATURDAY, with Tourniaire's Extraordinary and Unrivalled Equestrians! An entire Change in the Circle. The performance of the American Brothers, the rivals [illegible] Concert—Vocalists, Mrs. John Roe, Mr. Sinclair, Mr Field, and Mr J W Sharp, the best [illegible] singer of the day. Conductor, Mr. A. Lee. The Devil's Descent. Palace of the Golden Bells. Gorgeous Chinese Procession. Splendid Illuminations. Magnificent Fireworks.—Admission, 2s.; Doors open at half-past 7.

VAUXHALL.—On MONDAY, the 14th, GRAND VENETIAN CARNIVAL and MASQUERADE (the last of the season), on which occasion the Ball Room will be again thrown open, brilliantly illuminated, and tastefully decorated.

The Band of the Grenadier Guards will perform in the Orchestra. The Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c., by Musard, Jullien, Lanner, Labitzky, Strauss, &c. &c.

The Rotunda Theatre will be most beautifully illuminated, and the Gardens will have the appearance of a Sylvan Grove.

The Quadrille Band, conducted by Alexander Lee, will play in the Grand Orchestra, and the Brass Band before the Pavilion.

Tickets will be ready for delivery on Monday, the 7th, and may be had at the Gardens, and [illegible] Costumier to the Royal Property, Castle-street, Leicester-square. [illegible] 7s. 6d.; Ladies, 5s.

THURSDAY, the 10th, THE TREASURER'S NIGHT.

VAUXHALL.—GREAT ATTRACTION.—On THURSDAY, the 10th, A DOUBLE DISPLAY of FIREWORKS, at Nine and Half-past Eleven, with the Ascent of a MONTGOLFIER BALLOON, fac-simile of the destruction of the JOHN O'GAUNT, by WARNER'S SHELL. Only appearance of PAUL BEDFORD (by permission of Benjamin Webster, Esq.) Mr RANSFORD, Mr. GEORGE ROBINSON, and Mr. W H WILLIAMS, and other novelties, for the [illegible] of Mr Thomas Holt, Treasurer. Tickets 2s., to be had at the Gardens, and 15 [illegible] street, Strand.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr W BATTY. Patronised by her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Royal.—Immense hit of the new Spectacle of STEED OF SYRACUSE, nightly hailed with tumultuous acclamations. On MONDAY NEXT, SEPT 7, will be presented the highly successful Drama of THE MERCHANT STEED, or, the Flight of Damon; with all the extensive resources of the Theatre. New and magnificent SCENES OF THE CIRCLE, by the French and British Riders. The whole concluding with, for the first time, the Necromantic Ballet entitled THE VINE DRESSER'S DAUGHTER; or, the [illegible] of the Vineyard.—Box-office open from Eleven to Five. Commence each evening at Seven. Stage Director, Mr. T Thompson.

COLOSSEUM.—THE DAY EXHIBITION consists of the Panorama of London, Museum of Sculpture, Arabesque Conservatories, Gorgeous Gothic Aviary, Classic Ruins, Swiss Cottage and Mont Blanc, with Mountain Torrent, &c.—From Ten till Five.

EVENING EXHIBITION.—The new and extraordinary Panorama of London by Night, with additional atmospheric effects every half hour, Museum of Sculpture, Conservatories and Gorgeous Gothic Aviary, &c., brilliantly illuminated; Swiss Cottage, Mont Blanc, and Mountain Torrent, represented by Moonlight.—Open from Seven till Half-past Ten. The whole projected and designed by Mr. W Bradwell.—The Grand Mexican Aloe still in Bloom, no Extra Charge.

INVENTORS and DEPOSITORS of WORKING MODELS, and of other Specimens of the Useful Arts (as well as the Visitors of the ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION) are respectfully informed that the Directors have given their anxious consideration to the new appointment of DEMONSTRATOR in MECHANICS, whose duty will be to explain to the Visitors the Principles and Uses of the above [illegible] with clearness and simplicity. The Lectures now comprise the ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH, as well as other objects of present interest. The beautiful Optical Exhibitions, &c. &c. Admission, 1s., Schools, Half-price.

MR JAMES'S NEW WORK.

This day is published, in 3 vols. Post 8vo., price £1 11s. 6d.

HEIDELBERG: A Romance. By G. P. R. JAMES, Esq.

Author of "The Stepmother," "The Smuggler," "Arrah Neil," &c. &c.

London, SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 65, Cornhill.

PRICE EIGHTEEN PENCE.

A COMIC PANORAMA

By "LEECH."

ACKERMANN and CO., Strand, and all Booksellers.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, AND AVOID, addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic.

By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c.

SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; CARVALHO, 147, Fleet-street; HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street; MANN, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 10, Argyll-place, Regent-street.

THE MODES PARISIENNES is the Journal patronised by elegant society, and the guide for really fashionable toilettes. It is the Journal of the Fashions which has the largest circulation among the best society of Paris and St. Petersburgh. It arrives in London every Tuesday. Subscriptions for the MODES PARISIENNES are received by M. FREDERICK, 40, Albemarle-street. Price, for six months, 12s.

Just Published, one handsome volume, royal 8vo., price £1 4s.,

BEAUTIES OF CHESS. A Collection of the Finest CHESS PROBLEMS extant; including upwards of TWO THOUSAND CURIOUS POSITIONS won or drawn by brilliant "Coups." Selected from the works of the first Chess writers, past and present. By A. ALEXANDRE.

BARTHES and LOWELL, Foreign Booksellers, 14, Great Marlborough-street, London.

NEW EDITION OF THE GUIDE TO PARIS.

Just Published, 18mo, 7s. 6d., roan embossed, with a Plan of the City; or with 56 Views 10s. 6d., roan embossed, GALIGNANI'S NEW PARIS GUIDE, corrected to the present time; containing a description of all the Institutions, Public Edifices, &c., of the Capital, Comparative Tables of French and English Weights, Money, &c.; French and English Customs' Duties, Information for Travellers; and a Banking and Trades' Directory. With a Description of the Environs: the whole carefully verified by personal inspection.

Paris: A. and W. GALIGNANI and Co. London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co.

PROTESTANT CHURCH IN ALEXANDRIA.—In addition to important Articles on the Official Referees, the Houses in New Oxford-street, &c. &c., THE BUILDER, of SATURDAY, the 5th of SEPTEMBER, price 3d. only, will contain a Plan, View, and Description of the English Church now being erected in Alexandria on land given by the Pacha. Owners of house property, Architects, Builders, &c., will find much advantage in subscribing to THE BUILDER.—Office, No. 2, York-street, Covent-garden, and of all booksellers.

THE NEW WEEKLY JOURNAL OF CHEMISTRY.—THE PHARMACEUTICAL TIMES of to-day, Price FIVEPENCE, contains Courses of Chemistry applied to the Arts by Dumas, and of Pharmacy by Messrs. Soubeiran and Warrington. Original Papers by Drs. Ure, Ryan, Scoffern, &c.; with numerous Editorial Papers on Agriculture, Chemistry, Pharmacy, &c. Price Fivepence, Stamped Sixpence, or Free by Post £1 [illegible]s. 0d. per annum in advance. JAMES ANGERSTEIN CARFRAE, 49, Essex-street, Strand.

SMITH OF DEANSTON'S BIOGRAPHY, WITH A PORTRAIT. Price 2s.

THE FARMER'S MAGAZINE for SEPTEMBER will contain a beautiful PORTRAIT and a BIOGRAPHICAL MEMOIR of this distinguished [illegible], whose celebrity in draining has attracted such universal attention. [illegible] STEEL ENGRAVING of Three Leicester RAMS, bred by Mr. Robert Smith, of Burley-on-the-Hill, with 192 columns of Letter-press on Farming and Grazing, from the pens of the first writers in the Kingdom.

May be had of all Booksellers. Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand.

THE SPORTING MAGAZINE for SEPTEMBER, 1846. Embellishments: Mendicant, Winner of the Oaks, 1846; by J. F Herring, with Description. "Take them while they're in the Humour," by J. Bateman, with Description. Diary for September. The Handbook of the Chase—By the Editor. Letters from a Devonian—The Highlands. The Regatta Week at the Isle of Wight—By Craven. Doncaster Prospects—By Petard. The Racing in August. By Craven. A Week on the Kennett—By "The Old Fly." A Letter from New Brunswick—By a Subaltern. Adventures of a Hunter—By Himself. The Sportsman in Wales. The Retreat with Ten Thousand. By the Oxonian. Literature. Public Amusements of the Metropolis. Sporting Intelligence; Yachting, Cricket, &c. State of the Odds. Turf Register, &c. London: PITMAN and C[illegible]

13, Great Marlborough-street.

MR. COLBURN'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

I.

VOL. VI. of MADAME D'ARBLAY'S DIARY AND LETTERS. (Just ready.)

II.

THE HISTORY OF MARY ANNE WELLINGTON, the Soldier's Daughter, Wife, and Widow. By the Rev. RICHARD COBBOLD, M.A., Author of "The History of Margaret Catchpole." Dedicated, by permission, to her Majesty the Queen Dowager. 3 vols., with Illustrations, 31s. 6d., bound.

III.

BURKE'S HISTORY OF THE LANDED GENTRY OF ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, AND IRELAND, complete in 2 vols., royal 8vo., price £2 10s.

IV.

VOL. IX. of AGNES STRICKLAND'S LIVES of the QUEENS of ENGLAND; comprising MARY of MODENA, Consort of James II.

V.

THE NELSON LETTERS and DISPATCHES; complete in 7 vols., 8vo., price £5 11s., bound.

VI.

TRAVELS and TRAVELLERS. By Mrs. TROLLOPE, Authoress of "The Barnabys," &c. 2 vols., 21s., bound.

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

DANCING TAUGHT, in the most fashionable style, by Mr. WILLIS, 41, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private Lessons in the Polka, Cellarius Valse and Valse à Deux Temps, at all hours, to Ladies and Gentlemen of any age wishing privacy and expedition. An Evening Class on Monday and Friday. A Juvenile Class on Wednesday and Saturday. Terms may be had on application as above.

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS AND GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM for STOVE GRATES, kitchen ranges, fenders, iron bedsteads, fire-irons, general furnishing ironmongery, tinned copper, iron and best tin cooking vessels, best Sheffield plate and table cutlery, japanned trays, tea urns, ornamental iron and wire works for verandahs, lawns, &c.; flower-stands. Every article is warranted, and marked at the lowest prices, in plain figures, for cash.—Adjoining the Royal Bazaar, 58, Baker-street, Portman-sq.

BANWEN IRON COMPANY, Glamorganshire.—Capital £100,000, in 10,000 shares of £10 each. Deposit £2 per share, payable on complete registration. With two calls of £2 each, beyond which no further calls will be made. (Registered provisionally, pursuant to the 7th and 8th Vict., cap. 110.)

DIRECTORS.

Samuel Boyd Barnet, Esq., 17, Dorset-place, Dorset-square.
Samuel Kentish, LL.D., Llangerry, Carmarthenshire.
Claudius Armstrong, Esq., Pencoed-hill, Kidwelly.
Algernon H Swift, Esq., Crosby-hall-chambers, Bishopsgate-street, iron merchant.
Frederick Fowler, Esq., Windsor.
Charles Frederic Philips, Esq., Adam-street, Strand.
Rowland Jay Browne, Esq., Ynysarwed, Glamorganshire, and the Inner Temple, London.
(With power to add to their number.)

Bankers—Messrs. Spooner, Attwood, and Co., Gracechurch-street.
Solicitor—William Martin Wilkinson, Esq., 44, Lincoln's-inn-fields.
Secretary—S[illegible] P. Harris, Esq.

This Company is formed to work the anthracite coal and iron mine (of the best quality) lying under 573 acres of land, situate 13 miles from Neath, and 16½ from Swansea; the veins of coal are respectively 4, 12, 5, and 3 feet thick, and the iron mine together 8 feet in thickness. Both crop out on the surface and will be worked by level and patching, without pits or machinery of any sort.

Transit to all parts is extremely good.

From the cheapness with which the minerals may be worked, the best pig iron (Welsh) will be made (including wear and tear and expense of management) at £2 10s. per ton; it is now worth £5, but reckoning a sale at £4 per ton, thereby the return will be (see the estimates) above 35 per cent. upon the capital. For a more full detail see the prospectuses and estimates, which may be had at the Offices of the Company, 23, Threadneedle-street, where plans of the property, the mineral surveyors' report, and sections and specimens of the minerals may be inspected.

Applications for Shares, with a reference in the usual form, may be made to Mr. T. Thomas, mining agent, 80, Old Broad-street; to the Secretary, S. P. Harris, Esq., at the office of the Company, 23, Threadneedle-street; and to the solicitor, W. M. Wilkinson, Esq., 44, Lincoln's-inn-fields.

BANWEN IRON COMPANY, Glamorganshire.—Applications for shares in this Company will not be received later than Saturday, the 12th instant, immediately after which the allotment of shares will be made.

By Order of the Directors. S. P. HARRIS, Secretary.

Offices, 23, Threadneedle-street, London, September 1, 1846.

THE PROVIDENT CLERKS' MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION and BENEVOLENT FUND, 42, Moorgate-street.

TRUSTEES.

Thomas Baring, Esq., M.P.
Thomson Hankey, jun., Esq.
W. G. Prescott, Esq.
Baron L. de Rothschild.

Treasurer of the Benevolent Fund—John Abel Smith, Esq., M.P.

Forms of proposal for Mutual Life Assurance, to meet every contingency, annuities, endowments, loans, &c., and the fifth annual report, with every information, may be had at the offices, where donations and subscriptions to the Benevolent Fund are received.

Table of Premium payable yearly, half yearly, or quarterly, by a person of the age of 25, to secure the sum of £100 to be paid at death, or on his attaining the respective ages of 50, 55, and 60, whichever event shall first occur:—

Age next Birth-day	Age Fifty.			Age Fifty-five.			Age Sixty.
	Year.	Half-Year.	Quarterly.	Year	Half-Year.	Quarterly.	Year	Half-Year	Quarterly
25	3 16 4	1 19 0	0 19 8	3 5 5	1 13 3	0 16 9	2 18 2	1 9 6	0 [illegible] 11

Policies may be effected daily.
July 30th, 1846.

By order of the Board.
THOS. MULLINDER, Secretary.

REMOVAL.—DR. CULVERWELL has REMOVED to 10, ARGYLL-PLACE, REGENT-STREET.

COINS of the ANCIENT ROMAN EMPERORS; History of the Succession of the Ancient Roman Emperors, with the Prices of their Coins, bearing Portraits, their Dates and Mottoes, is just published by P WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins, 18, Strand, London, price 1s.; by post, 1s. 2d. Coins sent by post, Bought, Catalogued, &c.

TONIC ALE.—This splendid new description of Bottled Beer is now in high perfection. It is strongly recommended by the Faculty as possessing peculiar stomachic qualities, promoting appetite, &c. Sold in quart and pint bottles, secured by Betts's Patent Capsule. JOSEPH STOCKTON, Sole Agent, 51, Lamb's Conduit-street.

WATCHES and CLOCKS.—A Pamphlet, explaining the various constructions and the advantages of each, with a List of Prices, will be forwarded, gratis, by post, if applied for by a post-paid letter. T. COX SAVORY and Co., Goldsmiths, Watchmakers, &c., 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a Twopenny Stamp.

EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY, (Offices, No. 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate).—Six Pounds of good useful TEA are still sold for 15s., or half-a-crown a pound; other sorts, 2s. 10d., 3s. 6d., and 3s. 10d. Coffee, 9d., 1s., and 1s. 3d.

GLAZIERS WHO WANT WINDOW-GLASS can be Supplied with any quantity, at Manufacturers' Prices, for Ready Money. A Crate, containing 18 tables, £2 10s. All the better qualities proportionably low, and every substance of Sheet Glass in stock. Squares cut to size—R COGAN, 48, Leicester-square, London.

CHUBB'S LOCKS, Fire-proof Safes, and Cash Boxes.—Chubb's New Patent Detector Locks give perfect security from false keys and picklocks, and also give immediate notice of any attempt to open them. Chubb's Patent Fire-proof Safes, Bookcases, Chests, &c.; strong Japan Cash Boxes, and Deed Boxes, of all sizes, fitted with the Detector Locks. C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard.

CHILDREN'S AND INVALIDS' CARRIAGES.—Invalids Wheel Chairs, from £3 to £35, with hoods, second-hand as well as new; Spinal and Self-Acting Chairs, Children's Chaises, vis-à-vis Waggons, Phaetons, Barouches, &c., from 10s. to 20 guineas. Immense and varied collection on sale or hire, at INGRAM'S Manufactory, 29, City-road, Finsbury-square. N.B. Illustrated Catalogues.

DAMASK TABLE LINENS, most Elegant and Durable, at very Low Prices for Cash, by JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linen-Drapers to the Queen, at their Family Linen Wareroom, 26, Regent-street, two doors below Piccadilly Circus. Parcels above £5 sent throughout England carriage paid.

John Capper and Son's General Linen-Drapery Business, established for nearly Seventy Years, is continued in Gracechurch-street, without change.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, Sole Inventress of Teaching the Art of Dress-making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most finished Style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers Wanted.—Millinery Rooms.

HOT WEATHER.—TRAVELLING.—SEA-SIDE.—The REGISTERED PALETOT in London, only at 22, Cornhill, opposite the Royal Exchange; and the chief Llama Cloth Warehouse, 114, Regent-street. Do not be deceived by a similarity of name placed in the windows of a few petty shops in the neighbourhood of the Patentees. Each Paletot is stamped H. J. and D. NICOLL, 114, Regent-street.

BERDOE'S WATERPROOF OVER COATS, and SHOOTING JACKETS.—The reputation of these well-known garments for quality, respectability, and efficiency, has been so long established that they now need no other recommendation. More than seven years' extensive trial has proved beyond all contradiction that they are really completely impervious to the rain. One of the best proofs of their extensive sale exists in the numerous competitors it has produced. By royalty and a long list of noblemen and gentlemen of the highest rank and title they have long been patronized. Made only by W. BERDOE, tailor and over coat maker, 69, Cornhill (north side), and shortly at 96, New Bond-street. Waterproof Cloaks, Habits, &c., for Ladies.

BEAUTIFUL WOMEN.—The Thorn that veils the Primrose from our view is not more invidious in Nature, than superfluous Hair on the Face, Neck, or Arms of Beauty. For its removal HUBERT'S ROSEATE POWDER stands pre-eminent. Beware of Counterfeits. The Genuine has been signed G. H. HOGARD for the last forty years. Sold for the Proprietor by HOOPER, Chemist, 24, Russell-street, Covent Garden, and by most Perfumers. Price 4s.; or two in one parcel, 7s.

GIBBINS' CREAM of ROSES and ROSEMARY.—This esteemed and elegant article is most respectfully offered to the Public, by GIBBINS, Court Hairdresser and Perfumer (from Paris), 7, King-street, St. James's-square, as the most delicate and effectual Preservative of the Hair. Being a pomade, it will be successfully applied in promoting its growth and luxuriance.

GIBBINS' EXTRACT of ROSES and ROSEMARY is a Liquid made from the above-named plants, and when applied in Washing the Hair, renders it soft and glossy; or, after illness, its astringent properties prevent the Hair from falling off.

No. 7, King-street, St. James's-square, London.

CANDLE LAMPS FOR THE ENSUING SEASON.—GEORGE and JOHN DEANE respectfully invite their friends to favour them immediately with a call at their Lamp Show Rooms, 46, King William-street, London Bridge. They have just received a most splendid stock of Candle Lamps, the very first that have issued from the artist's hands. They comprise a costly variety, some with porcelain pedestals, adorned with delicate and elaborate painting, mounted on rich or-molu bases; others of tastefully cut glass, or papier mache, gorgeously emblazoned. These, with a most various stock of cheaper and less ornamented Lamps are all of the latest designs and at the lowest possible prices. Deane's carts are delivering Camphine, Candles, and Lamp Oil, and Lamps on hire, in all parts of the metropolis daily. DEANE'S, opening to the Monument, 46, King William-street, London Bridge.

SILVER TEA SERVICES of New Patterns.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Working Silversmiths, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, respectfully inform their customers that they have recently finished a few new designs, in accordance with the present improved taste, and that they are sold at reduced prices from those customary in the trade:

Uxbridge Pattern.			Thalia Pattern.
Strong Silver	Tea-pot	£10 16 0	Strong Silver	Tea-pot	£13 0 0
Ditto	Sugar Basin	6 14 0	Ditto	Sugar Basin	7 11 0
Ditto	Cream-jug	4 10 6	Ditto	Cream Ewer	5 2 0
Ditto	Coffee-pot	14 10 0	Ditto	Coffee-pot	16 17 0
Complete		£35 12 6	Complete		£42 10 0

A variety of upwards of 50 Silver Tea and Coffee Services may be seen in the Show Rooms, and on application the illustrated price current, containing drawings, with the weights and price of recent designs, will be forwarded to any part of Great Britain, Ireland, India, or the colonies. Drawback on silver plate exported 1s. 6d. per ounce.

WHILST MESSRS. BETTS and CO. are studiously desirous to avoid the imputation of unwarrantably increasing the alarm created by the rumoured prevalence in the Metropolis of that fearful disease, the Asiatic Cholera, they deem it consistent with a due regard to the feelings of the public, to direct attention to the subjoined Testimonials as to the merits of their Patent Brandy. This pure and wholesome spirit has long been in very general use in the most important hospitals and infirmaries in the kingdom, and is deserving of especial notice at the present time, from its peculiar efficacy in arresting the ravages caused by those epidemics that usually prevail at this season of the year; and the same can be procured in quantities, not less than two gallons, direct from the Distillery, at 16s. per gallon, or in single bottles, at 3s. per bottle, from Retailers, in every locality, each bottle being secured by the Metallic Capsule, which Messrs. Betts and Co. have the exclusive right of making, and upon which is embossed the words "Betts's Patent Brandy, 7, Smithfield-bars."

EXTRACTS FROM TESTIMONIALS.—

"58, Aldersgate-street.

"Your Brandy is free from uncombined acid and astringent matter, which exists more or less in most of the Brandies imported from France.

(Signed) "JOHN THOMAS COOPER, Lecturer on Chemistry.

"To Mr. Betts."

"[illegible]

"I am bound to say, and do assert it with confidence, that, for purity of spirit, this cannot be surpassed; and that your Patent Brandy is also quite free from those acids which, though minute in quantity, always contaminate the foreign spirit.

(Signed) JOSEPH HUME, Chemist to his Majesty.

"To J. T. Betts, Esq."

"38, Upper Gower-street.

"I do not hesitate to express my conviction that it is fully as free from anything injurious to health, and contains as pure a spirit as the best varieties of foreign brandy.—(Signed) EDWARD TURNER, Professor of Chemistry in the University of London.—John T. Betts, Esq."

"Grenadier Guards Hospital.

"The two samples of your Patent Brandy I had an opportunity of laying before the Board of Officers, which sat at the Regimental Hospital last Saturday. Every member of the Board approved of the Brandy, and have ordered that it shall be used for the sick.—(Signed,

"Messrs. J. T. Betts and Co." "J. HARRISON, Surgeon-Major, Grenadier Guards.

THE NEW HOUSES OF E. MOSES AND SON.

First, reader, your attention let us fix
On Nos. Eighty-five and Eighty-six
Right facing Aldgate-church are these display'd,
To furnish you with clothing ready made.
Neat, strong, and matchless goods are purchas'd here
And not a single article is dear.
Next your attention we would beg to call
To No. Eighty-four, the "Private Hall."
Here you ascend the stairs of solid oak
To gain the Room where orders are bespoke.
This show-room with its giant chandelier,
Eclipses all that's witness'd far and near.
Here a secluded Habit-room you view,
And here there is a room for Vestings, too.
Other apartments follow in rotation,
To answer one design, ACCOMMODATION.
The next compartment we survey must be
[illegible]
[illegible]
Which casts such lustre on the human crown.
On turning round the corner, you behold
The Warehouse where the Hosiery goods are sold.
This House, whose trade is constantly alive,
Is in the Minories, No. One-four-five.
On passing to the right you'll find, next door,
The Establishment for Outfits—One-five-four.
And here, good reader, our description closes
Our brief description of the House of MOSES.
We trust you'll not omit to give a call—
Not to ONE Warehouse only—but to all.
We mark the prices on our goods in trade,
From which, of course, there's no abatement made.
If anything that's sold is found to lack,
We change the goods or give the money back.
We do, to please you, all that CAN be done,
Do all "YOU" can for MOSES and his SON.

For particulars of Self-Measurement, and other essential information, obtain the new book, entitled "Past, Present, and Future," which may be had gratis, and post-free, of the Proprietors, E. MOSES and SON, 154, 155, 156, 157, Minories, and 83, 84, 85, and 86, Aldgate, City, London.

E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Woollen-drapers, Clothiers, Hatters, Hosiers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen, regret to be obliged to guard the public against imposition; but, having learned that [illegible] have [illegible] those who desire genuine cheap [illegible] disappointment, call at or send to the Minories or Aldgate, opposite the Church, City, London.

NOTICE. The entrance to the Bespoke Department is at 84, Aldgate.—No business transacted at this Establishment from sunset Friday evening till sunset Saturday evening, when it is resumed till twelve o'clock.

THE END OF THE SEASON—1846—OFF TO PARIS.

CHANGING HORSES.

(Continued from page 153.)

please, they are all in their glory, commanding a portion a-piece for each of their party, when every Frenchman knows that one plat is sufficient for two people; scaring the waiter by the strange order of their dishes, beginning with those they ought to finish with; drinking all the expensive wines that can be taken together, and many that cannot; and looking up to the dame du comptoir with feelings of great reverence and admiration. All this you may see, at any time you choose to enter a restaurateur's. For, go when you will, you will always meet some people dining there for the first time; and be amused by the extraordinary menu they will choose. Here, then, we bid them good bye, concluding with a bird's-eye view of Paris, such as may fill their heads after they have made the round of its wonders.—

PARIS.

Houses very tall and white;
Cafés bright, all glass and light;
Barrows fill'd with two sous wares;
Idlers lounging upon chairs;
Cabriolets the kennel spattering;
Diligences loudly clattering;
Stalls of pictures, books and maps;
Women walking without caps;
Soldiers everywhere abounding;
Music of the B[illegible] [illegible] sounding;
Green trees growing over their paths;
Floating washing boats, and baths;
Noble buildings, gilded railings;
Next them, dirty wooden palings;
Open gardens; dashing fountains;
And the Chaumiére's Russian mountains;
Cooling ices from Tortoni's;
Lovely riders, at Franconi's;
"Passages" of fancy trades,
Far beyond our own Arcades.
Such is Paris at a view;
If you doubt it, go there too.

PARISIAN CAFE.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, September 5, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED
LONDON NEWS

No. 228.—Vol. IX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1846. [Sixpence.

ROYAL ALLIANCES.

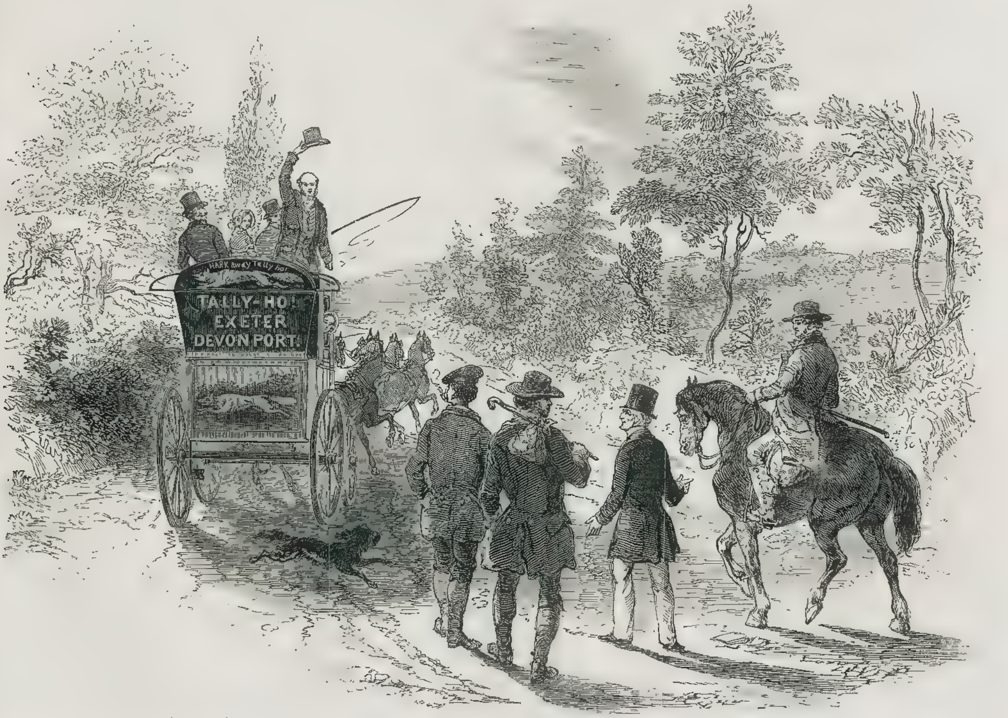
BEYOND all description is the interest taken by French politicians in the marriage of the Queen of Spain. In Paris, say the French journals, all parties wait with "intense interest" the expression of public opinion in England on the marriage of the Queen of Spain. It is painful to think that such intense anxiety should be destined to disappointment; yet, so it must be, when France hears that in England there is no public opinion whatever on the subject. As long as the foreign journals give the question such prominence in their columns, it brings out articles, and speculations, and anticipation of what is and what is not to be; but, to suppose it has, in any manner, taken hold of the public mind here, would be absurd. We doubt if anything so much talked of was ever thought of so little importance. In no part of the Empire could half-a-dozen persons be brought together to discuss this Royal alliance as a question in which England has the remotest interest. A general wish for the prosperity of Spain, for stability to its Government, and personal happiness to the young Sovereign is certainly entertained; but any idea of turning the alliance to the advantage of this country, by supporting this suitor or that, has never been for a moment raised. The day has passed with us when such questions could be made matter of agitation in the minds of men.

The influence of England rests upon far different bases from the intrigues of palaces and the knitting of "family compacts." We have ceased to seek national aggrandisement from such alliances in our own reigning family; how can they affect us when made or broken by others? The steam-engine and the cotton-bale have made the seals and parchments of such treaties useless. Indeed, history confirms our conclusion of the wisdom of renouncing them; perhaps no nation has suffered more than England from the wars and struggles into which such marriages have in former times plunged us. And when we see two countries making more efforts to conclude and bring about a Royal marriage than either of them would think of expending on the material welfare of the people, we cannot help picturing the disappointments they are preparing for themselves. One breath of disaffection sweeping over the surface of popular feeling, will wreck the hopes of the most crafty state pilot who has embarked them in so frail a vessel as these creations of diplomacy. The proudest ship does not govern the storms or sway the currents of the ocean-depth, but is as much their toy as the lightest straw that ever floated on the surface.

The total indifference of the people of England as to the marriage of the Queen of Spain is a curious comment on the continual assertions of the French press, that, as a nation, we are actuated by the most restless and untiring ambition—that we never let pass a single opportunity, however slight, for the aggrandisement of our national influence. Were we what our neighbours paint us, we should be a nation of diplomatists, watching every Royal audience of every European Court with a thrill of apprehension: as to our Governments, they are nothing less than a band of Machiavellis, with more than the Italian's craft, compassing greater than the Italian's ends; and, however greatly differing with each other, one and the same in all that relates to the power, wealth, and supremacy, of "perfidious Albion." We fear the French journalists give us far too much credit for capacity, in the first place, and for zeal, in the second.

Whether it is from a feeling that we have less need of these compacts and negotiations, certain it is we do not trust to them; our diplomacy is about the worst and most unskilful in Europe. Had our greatness depended upon that alone, we should now be at the bottom of the scale of nations. In this much-agitated question we have done much as we are accustomed to do: we have let the affair take its own course, pretty sure that all our actual relations with Spain could not be affected by it, whichever way it was settled. The only candidate for the Royal hand supposed to be supported by England—a Prince of the House of Coburg—has, it now appears, been positively discountenanced by our Government, and refused any aid and influence. It must surprise the French people to find us so very cool on this matter, when in everything we are held up to them as the arch-plotters of Europe.

The fact is, the policy of England has taken quite a different direction. We have had our full share of the evil and the good of political family alliances, and have found the evil certain, the good very doubtful. The brilliant hopes held out by such contracts have almost invariably been disappointed. A very slight knowledge of the world suffices to prove how frequently the ties of blood and relationship fail to secure peace and amity; but between nations, the hope that they will restrain the impulses of ambition or self-interest is the vainest of vain expectations. History is full of broken alliances, oaths forgotten, treaties violated, and wars be-



HARK away Telly ho!
TALLY-HO!
EXETER
DEVON PORT.

"THE DUKE" IN THE WEST.—"GOD BLESS YOU! GOOD BYE. I'D RATHER WALK; BESIDES, I HAVE COMPANY."—(SEE NEXT PAGE) tween the nearest and dearest of human kindred. faith, honour, and affection have been as nothing in the balance against territorial and personal interests. It would be scarcely too much to affirm that the alliances of the Sovereigns of Europe, and the conflicting claims that have grown out of them, have been the curse of nations. The long and bloody wars between France and England, which ruined both countries, and engendered a national hatred between them, not yet extinct, sprang from the claims made by English Sovereigns to the throne of France. After the Reformation, alliances between the Sovereign of England and the Great Catholic Courts of Europe became difficult and impolitic, and, whenever they were entered into, were fatal.

The long negotiations which James I. carried on with the Court of Madrid for a marriage between Prince Charles and a Spanish Princess, roused the fears, and alienated the respect of the English people; the Armada was still fresh in men's recollections: the secret articles of the treaty, which oozed out, as all secrets do, rendered the Commons furious, and embarrassed the whole reign of the successor of Elizabeth. And when, at last, Charles married Henrietta of France, the alliance proved a source of endless mischief; the influence of his Queen is believed to have had no small share in bringing the King to his unhappy end, and overthrowing the dynasty of the Stuarts. The marriage of the sister of Charles to the Elector Palatine, involved England in the Thirty Years' War, that changed the whole German Empire into a desert and a slaughter house, the traces of its devastation remaining to the present day. In more modern times, the Royal alliances from which the best effects were hoped, have proved sources of weakness or disaster. The marriage of Louis XVI. with a daughter of the House of Austria, was considered a triumph of State policy; but it precipitated and embittered the convulsion that destroyed the Monarchy of France. When Napoleon descended to the miserable vanity of allying himself to the old Monarchies of Europe, by marrying a Princess of the same family, he lost half his influence; and so far was he from obtaining the object he had in view by his cruel and unprincipled divorce from Josephine, that Austria proved one of his greatest enemies. The truth is, these alliances are often disliked by the subjects of the "high contracting parties," and frequently prove a source of trouble and weakness instead of strength. At the present moment, the Spanish people are tolerably quiescent as to the marriage of their Queen with a Spanish Prince; but, by the last accounts, it appears that all classes are in a ferment of dissatisfaction at the French alliance with the heir presumptive, which is supposed to be the main negotiation. England has long abandoned the system. Marriages between the Sovereign of this country and the great Courts of Europe are now studiously avoided, and the nation with the widest empire in the world prefers to "ally itself in marriage" with the smallest and least influential of States. We are thus more free to deal with the greater Powers on the footing of equals, untrammelled by considerations of "compacts" and relationships. Indeed, had such things been absolutely essential to the well-being of a State, Holland would never have risen, nor America existed; for to Federations and Commonwealths these particular negotiations are things altogether unknown.

"THE DUKE" IN THE WEST.

A characteristic incident in the recent visit of his Grace the Duke of Wellington to Plymouth, will be found illustrated in the preceding page. It is trifling, indeed, in comparison with the exploits and great events of the Duke's long and glorious career, which have been commemorated by the engraver's art—to decorate thousands of dwellings throughout the British Empire. Still, the incident we have here pictured well bespeaks that simplicity of character which has won for the Duke a large portion of the public esteem in his later life; and we are persuaded that our readers will rightly appreciate this illustrated reminiscence. We quote these details chiefly from the Plymouth Herald:—

His Grace the Duke of Wellington arrived at Plymouth, on an official visit, on Friday evening, the 28th ult. He left London on Friday morning by the express train, his carriage having been sent off by an earlier train; and proceeded to Teignmouth by rail. On his arrival at the terminus, intimation having been given through the means of the electric telegraph of his approach, the gallant Duke was received with loud cheers from a great number of persons who had assembled round the station at Teignmouth. Post-horses were obtained, and he set off in his carriage for Plymouth. On coming to Ivybridge, a delay was experienced from the horses not being ready, when his Grace walked on, preferring a walk to waiting at the hotel. Having got some distance, he was overtaken by the Tally-ho coach, the coachman of which, Hardcastle, invited the Duke to ride. "No, I thank you," said the Duke, "I am waiting for my carriage." Guard: "It will be delayed some time, your Grace, as they cannot get horses: we can carry you on very well." The Duke replied, "Oh, thank you, never mind, they'll get horses to take me on. God bless you; good bye. I'd rather walk; besides I have company," which consisted of a farmer and two "navvies," with whom his Grace was in conversation, they, of course, being ignorant of his exalted rank. With this intimation, the coachman touched his hat, which the Duke returned: he left his Grace to pursue his walk, and took his station on the Tally-ho, which proceeded on its journey.

Another incident of the Visit may be added. On Saturday, the Mayor of Plymouth, Mr. B. Parham, summoned a meeting of the members of the Town Council, who unanimously resolved to present an Address to the Duke, provided it were agreeable to his Grace. Messrs. G W. Soltau and N. Lockyer, the members of the Corporation who waited on the Duke to ascertain his wishes, were, however, courteously informed that he must decline the proposed compliment, but that the reception of an Address would have been highly gratifying to his Grace if his time had permitted. Subsequently his Grace wrote a letter to the Mayor, of which the following is a copy: —"Plymouth, August 29, 1846 (at night). Field Marshal the Duke of Wellington presents his compliments to the Mayor of Plymouth. He has been much flattered by the declaration of the Mayor and Corporation to present him an Address. Having been out on horseback all the morning, he was changing his clothes when the deputation reached the Royal Hotel to announce that his worship intended thus to honour the Duke, and he regrets that, being under the necessity of returning to London to-morrow morning, he cannot have the satisfaction of receiving in person the record intended for him.—The worshipful the Mayor of Plymouth."

The Queen's Visit to Guernsey.—The Royal Court of Guernsey has ordered that a block of granite shall be inserted in the pier wall, opposite the place of her Majesty's debarkation, with the following inscription:—

"HERE HER MAJESTY QUEEN VICTORIA,
ACCOMPANIED BY HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT, HER CONSORT, LANDED ON THE 24TH AUGUST, 1846."

Singular Bequests The will of Mary Anne Johnson, late of Well-walk, Hampstead, spinster, who died on the 6th ult., passed the seal of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury on the 1st instant. The personal estate of the testatrix is sworn under £25,000. The will contains the following bequests:—"I give to my black dog Carlo an annuity of £30 a year during the dog's life, to be paid half-yearly. Unto each of the cats, Blacky, Jemmy, and Tom, I give an annuity of £10 a year for the three cats, to be paid half-yearly. Margaret Potson and Harriet Holly, my mother's old servants, to take charge of the dog and cats."—Query: What will the authorities at the Legacy Duty Office do? As it respects "Legacy Duty," the legatees are certainly "strangers in blood" to the deceased, and in that capacity are liable to a duty of 10 per cent. on the value of their life interest; but the Legacy Duty Act, on the other hand, says nothing about duty payable on legacies bequeathed to dogs and cats.

Will of Mrs. Fry.—The late Mrs. Elizabeth Fry, wife of Joseph Fry, Esq., of Upton, Essex, enjoyed a life interest over certain trust property, under the respective wills of her sisters, Priscilla Gurney and Rachel Gurney, with a power of disposition over the same, by deed, will, or otherwise, and of which there was remaining unappropriated, and at her disposal, a sum of £11,000; this she has directed to be applied for the benefit of her family, in the following manner.—The interest of £6000 to her husband for li[illegible]wards the principal to be divided equally amongst her children. To [illegible] daughter Katharine Fry, who has always lived with her, but to whom no provision has hitherto been made, she leaves the interest of £4000 and £2000 on her marriage, and the remaining £1000 to her son Daniel Henry Fry. The bequests are entirely confined to the trusts under which she was empowered by the deeds of disposition. She executed her will in 1840, appointing her sons, John Gurney Fry and Joseph Fry, Jun., Esqs., executors, to whom special letters of administration with the will was granted, the husband consenting. She was in her 66th year.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

The marriage of the two Royal Sisters of Spain has created the greatest sensation both in the fashionable as well as diplomatic circles in Paris. It is considered the greatest triumph of French diplomacy, since the expedition to Ancona. Yesterday I was dining where there were Marshals and Ministers of State, and men, by reputation and by power, the objects of the greatest obsequiousness; but when, after dinner, the young and handsome Countess Bresson, the wife of the French Ambassador at Madrid, came in, all the grandees present sunk into insignificance: a conqueror, after a hard-fought battle, could not be the object of more homage, or appear with greater triumph. To the ladies there was a subject of paramount importance—the decision of the costumes for the Queen of Spain and her sister; for the young Countess has the superintendence of the momentous choice of the two trousseaux, and corbeilles de mariage. By this marriage, another young and handsome Princess will be added to the Court circle. Such a galaxy of Royal beauties, and so richly endowed, no other Court in Europe can present; and their young Consorts are the handsomest Princes in Europe—the new bridegroom, the Duke de Montpensier, is not the least remarkable. All rival Governments have wisely dissembled their indignation at this stroke of French policy, which has come upon them totally unexpected, like a thunder-clap in a summer's sky; however, the secret of this success of the French Cabinet is easily explained. It was Donna Carlotta, the mother of Don Francisco de Assis, the Queen Isabella's bridegroom, who fir[illegible] at work on the mind of Ferdinand VII, whose dissolution was then approaching, to drive him to change the organic Salic Law, and transfer the Crown to his daughter. When her scheming had succeeded, Donna Carlotta claimed too large a share of power as her reward, and the Princesses quarrelled; but when, in her turn, the mother of Don Francisco felt the hand of death upon her, she sent for Queen Christina, and made her swear on the Gospel, no one but her son should marry Queen Isabel. So much for the Queen's marriage. As regards that of the Duke de Montpensier, it is explained still more easily—by the wish of Queen Christina, and Munoz her husband, to come to Paris, the abode of their predilection, where their amours and their marriage have been legitimated. She must leave Spain and her daughter to their own guidance, on the marriage of the latter; and Donna Luisa marrying another Prince, she would be ill received at the Tuileries. Now she is coming herself, to present her young and lovely daughter at the French Court.

It is only within the circle of the Court, thus adorned by the youngest, most beautiful, and the most richly endowed Princesses of the globe, over whom presides that most virtuous lady Queen Amelia, that there still exists anything that can be called society in Paris, in the old French meaning of the term. Elsewhere society is so mixed, that all prudent persons only venture in it as they do in a promiscuous crowd. There is no criterion of rank and no criterion of respectability. Any one, according to the new French law, may assume a title, which many persons of real substance and character do not blush to do; whilst of course all the "would-be's" and sharpers do not hesitate to follow the example. The only indispensable condition of admission to society is the possession of fortune, of which the reality appears less essential than the external appearance; and any man who can dine sumptuously at the Café de Paris for a time, whilst he drives a brilliant equipage, and goes to the races with his curricle and outriders, can pick up acquaintance with the brilliant incautious beaux of Paris, and get introduced. To this add that there are no leaders of fashion; and that Madame Aguado, the richest lady of finance, and the Duchess de Montmorency, the first in rank, are on a level with all the rich parvenus, and their society the same and promiscuous in its habits. I have laid the more stress upon this subject, as this week two young sharpers of good education have been taken to prison, whose story is a very good lesson to our English visitors. One of them passed himself off as a Count; the other, his equal, acted as his valet: they had drawn lots to decide the parts each was to assume. By the means I have pointed out, they managed to mix in the best society; and if they had not pushed their swindling to an outrageous extent, they would still circulate in Paris—the handsome soi-disant Count, in his splendid equipage, dressed in the first style of fashion—the object of general admiration. Although they are imprisoned, they have already managed to swindle some English people, and destroy the domestic peace of others.

The sale of the Constitutionnel to M. Mosselman has met with great obstacles in the settlement of details, and is not yet achieved. In the meantime, it has drawn the attention of the public to the state of the Parisian press; and it is proved that all the journals—if you set aside the subventions some received, and the political influence and "fleshpots of Egypt" enjoyed by the others—are in a state where it is doubtful whether they can pay their expences. Those that enjoy a circulation of twenty to twenty-five thousand numbers, are indebted for this vogue to the Roman feuilletonistes; and if Dumas or Eugene Sue remove from one journal to another, he takes with him fifteen thousand subscribers. In the meanwhile, the Roman feuilleton has totally extinguished literature; and it has now been found that the utmost number of copies of a new novel, from the first of writers, which can now be sold, is 700. The circulating libraries cut out the novels from the newspapers, and circulate them amongst their customers, to the exclusion of other volumes. The only literary trade that flourishes out of the pale of the newspapers, is that of the dramatist. Each time a vaudeville is performed, the manager pays ten per cent. to the author on the profits: even when performed in villages and in barns, the playwright derives two or three francs profit. At the Académie de Musique, the director pays a hundred francs per act of a grand opera every night it is performed; and as lyrical dramas are in general in five acts, authors thus get £20 a night. A society is established, with agents all over France, for the collection of these dues, deriving, for their pay, two per cent. on the amount collected; and even secondary vaudevillists, totally unknown to fame, receive thus from a thousand to two thousand pounds a year for dues derived from their humble productions

FRANCE.

The French Chambers have been prorogued by Royal ordinance. The following is the reply of the King to the address presented to him by the Chamber of Deputies

"Gentlemen Deputies—I gratefully receive this new proof of the sentiments which animate you. It is a valuable pledge of the continuance of that happy accord between all the Powers of the State which is at once the guarantee of our liberties, and that of the repose and prosperity of France. I am much affected by the wishes you have expressed in favour of my family and myself. Having devoted ourselves from our earliest youth to the service of our country, the sweetest recompense of our devotedness is to have well deserved of France, and obtained from the nation that affection and confidence of which you have just given me so affecting an assurance."

The banquet given to Mr. Cobden by the Free-Traders of Bordeaux, took place on the 1st inst., in the Salle Franklin, which was fitted up for the occasion with great taste and elegance. At seven o'clock upwards of 300 guests took their seats at the tables. The chair was taken by M. Duffour-Dubergier, having on his right hand the guest of the evening, Mr. Cobden. At the same table were seated Baron Sers, Peer of France and Prefect of the Gironde; M. Roullet, First President of the Cour Royale; M. Dosquet, Secretary-General of the Prefecture, and M. Durin, one of the Vice-Presidents of the Societé des Libres-Echangistes. The galleries were filled with elegantly dressed ladies, and the whole salle presented a most striking and animated scene

The health of Mr. Cobden having been proposed, was received enthusiastically; and the hon. gentleman, in reply, said he seemed to breathe a freer air in that atmosphere of freedom of commerce in the midst of men participating in his commercial creed, the soul appeared to dilate, and man's energy to acquire a new vigour. Free-Trade was a principle of expansion; whilst, on the other hand, Monopoly was an attempt to confine within narrow limits the energy of men, and subject them to make superfluous efforts, in order to acquire the ease and the comforts of life. "If," continued the hon. gentleman, "I wanted to express in two words the tendency of these two opposing principles, I should say that Free-Trade is association, and that Monopoly is competition. There is an argument now much used in France to which I must refer. It is said that the English Free-Traders maintained Protection as long as it was necessary to them, and now abandoned it when they found it advantageous to do without it. To that I reply, that in England we have made the application of our principles to that article of our produce which had most to apprehend from a foreign competition—namely, corn. Let me be permitted to affirm that these persons are completely mistaken if they believe our good friends of the Protectionist school in England abandoned their principles for such a motive. Far from that, they are Protectionist to the very marrow, and they continue bravely to maintain that our country will be ruined if the good old régime of Protection does not return. I have, perhaps, some right to speak in the name of the Free-Traders with some authority, and I can declare, that, far from thinking that commercial restrictions have ever been necessary to England, we are convinced that they have always been prejudicial to her. We do not admit that our manufactures, our agriculture, and merchant shipping ever reaped any advantage from what is called Protection. Nay, we believe that they would have been more flourishing without it. But, to destroy every suspicion which may have arisen relative to any pretended arrière-pensée attributed to our Free-Traders, I shall be more explicit. Let it be then known that their conscientious opinion is, that at no time, under any circumstances, can a nation become enriched by the interference of its Government by means of restrictive laws. We wish it to be distinctly understood that we apply this maxim without reserve to every country, to every circumstance, and to every age. Whatever may be the condition of a country, we maintain that Free-Trade is better than restriction. Show me any point on the surface of the globe, whether it be of a fertility as unlimited as that of Egypt, or a barren rock like Malta—let it be placed under the tropical sun, or near the polar—I think I can demonstrate that it is the interest of the inhabitants to keep up the most unrestricted communications with their brethren spread over the earth. But has not this verity been already demonstrated by all great political writers—by Adam Smith in England, Say in France, Storch in Russia, and other eminent writers in Italy, Spain, and Switzerland? Have they not all agreed in declaring that Free-Trade is equally applicable to all countries, all climates, all races, all Governments? I have also to remark that, on another point, the range and importance of the English agitation have been falsely appreciated. The Repeal of the Corn-Laws has been represented by some persons as the sole aim of the League. That is not the case. I have one hundred times publicly declared, in the course of our agitation, that we were driving at the Repeal of the Corn-Laws as a means to attain a more general and more elevated end—that we considered those laws as the keystone of the arch of monopoly, and that, when once it was torn down, the whole edifice must fall to the ground. A month had not elapsed after our triumph, when our predictions began to be realised by the abolition of the Sugar Duties; and I do not fear to say that I consider this second triumph as more important than the first, regarded for its moral and social consequences, for it involves a complete revolution in our colonial system" The honourable gentleman concluded a brilliant speech in these words—"Gentlemen, I cannot doubt that, in France, Free-Trade will find worthy interpreters. Without doubt, some one of your eminent men with the eagle glance of genius, will perceive the glory which will be attached to him who carries out such principles, and will join his name to the noblest revolution of modern times. The spirit of the age calls nations to a fraternal union. Physical sciences, steamboats, railways, post-office reform, are preparing the way for it, and it is reserved for Free-Trade to complete the fusion. Already the banner of Free-Trade is floating victoriously over my own country, and, with the aid of Providence, nations will pass it on from hand to hand until the world is enveloped in its folds!"

This speech was received with thunders of applause.

A private letter from Paris states, that so anxious were the French Government to see properly executed the order of the Queen-Mother for the trousseaux of her Royal daughters, that a superior workman, confined by illness in the hospital of La Pitié, had been carried home, to work upon a casket of rare beauty for the [illegible]

The Duke de Montpensier is about to return to Paris; and, after stopping a few days in that capital, he will leave for Madrid on the 18th inst. The Prince is to be accompanied to Spain by the Duke de Nemours. Preparations are already in progress at the Tuileries for their journey.

General Narvaez left Paris for Madrid on Monday, accompanied by his wife.

The Epoque states that a petition presented to the King from Joseph Henri, praying for a commutation of the sentence pronounced by the Court of Peers, having been referred to the Council of Ministers, it was determined, after a long consultation, that the sentence should be carried into effect.

The result of the harvest in France causes considerable anxiety. The official returns of the crops had not yet been received from all the departments, but it was already ascertained that, in those situate to the south of the Loire, the harvest, generally speaking, had failed. In the other parts of France, wheat had been rather abundant in produce, and the quality of the grain was excellent. On the whole, however, it was calculated that there would be a deficiency of ten or twelve days' provisions, and that it would require an outlay of about 150,000,000f. to supply the wheat necessary for the consumption of the country B[illegible], rye, oats, peas, beans, &c., had afforded an inadequate stock, and serious fears were entertained for the potatoes, which were extensively diseased in twenty-two departments.

SPAIN.

The announcement of the intended marriage of the Queen of Spain has created very great excitement at Madrid. The news of Queen Isabella's marriage with her cousin the Infant Don Francisco has been received by all parties in a manner that leaves no doubt on the fact of the marriage being satisfactory to the great majority of the nation. Papers of all shades of opinion, and representing all parties excepting the ultra-Carlists, express their unreserved joy at a solution of this difficult question in a manner that unites the great body of the people in its favour. Even the Carlist papers, though evidently annoyed that the great hope of their party, the Count de Montemolin, should be thrown over, speak in terms of moderation, which shows that they feel the necessity of subscribing to the national will.

On the other hand, the intended marriage of the Queen's sister with the Duke de Montpensier, has elicited very angry discussions. The papers are entirely occupied with it. The Tiempo, which is considered the organ of the Moderate opposition, is as opposed to the project as the Clamor Publico itself and the other papers of the Progressista party. The Heraldo, which is the leading journal of Madrid, most warmly supports the intended union. The Espanol, in an article which report says has thrown the capital into a flutter, declares that the marriage cannot take place at all.

The opposition is not confined to the Progressista party alone. The Carlists have declared that they will join the Progressista party in the most strenuous opposition to this marriage. There is even a large branch of the Moderado party who have expressed their dissatisfaction at the French connection. It is believed that in the Cortes, which is to meet on the 14th of September, a fierce opposition will be made to this marriage.

M. Isturitz has resigned his post as Prime Minister, and goes to London as Ambassador, in the place of the Duke de Sotomayor, who is recalled. Further changes in the Ministry are expected.

The successor of M. Isturitz is not yet known, but it is supposed that General Narvaez will be appointed. General Narvaez was daily expected in Madrid. He goes back at the request of the French Government

The Heraldo says that "the marriage of the Infanta, as well as that of the Queen, will take place on the 10th of October next, the Queen's birth-day (when she will be sixteen), and that the Infanta will leave immediately afterwards for Paris, where she will reside with her august husband" The French papers, however, assert that the marriage of the Duke de Montpensier with the Infanta Donna Louisa, will be solemnised on the 24th instant.

A letter from Madrid of the 3d inst., says: "A note, which may be considered in the light of a protest, was sent in yesterday by Mr Bulwer to Senor Isturiz on the subject of the Infanta's marriage with the Duke de Montpensier. The substance of the note is believed, on good authority, to be as follows: Mr Bulwer expresses his astonishment at receiving official intelligence from the Spanish Minister of Foreign Affairs, that the marriage of her Majesty with the Infante Don Francisco de Assis was to take place simultaneously with that of her sister the Infanta Luisa Fernanda with a son of the King of the French. By the laws of Spain and its Constitution, such a marriage as the latter mentioned could not in any sense be considered as a private event, only affecting the individuals most interested. It was an event of European importance; in fact, one of the most important that has taken place in Europe for some time. He regretted to be obliged to express his fears that the marriage of her Majesty's sister with the Duke de Montpensier would be likely to endanger the relations of amity which had so long subsisted between Spain and those Governments who had done most to preserve the honour, nationality, and independence of this country. Mr. Bulwer is said to have received a private communication from Isturiz, the purport of which has not as yet transpired. It will be necessary to observe that Mr. Bulwer has acted entirely on his own responsibility, as it would appear, in communicating the above mentioned."

PORTUGAL.

Our letters from Lisbon, which are to the 30th ult., inform us that the Government had at length brought forward its important financial measures for the restoration of public credit. The Royal decree ordaining those measures sets out by stating that a vast deficit on the last estimates exists; that the imposition of new taxes on the industry of the country is impracticable; that reductions and augmentation of the Income-tax to the extent of 2209 contos, to enable the Government to keep faith with the public creditor, must take place. The measures for this object are the imposition of a new decima tax on all salaries of officers of the State, military and civil, for one year, so that such salaries will henceforth be subject to two decimas, the imposition of two decimas (or 20 per cent) on the interest of the debt, foreign and domestic, with some extension of the time for its imposition for the same term in the case of converted bonds; and some reduction to be made in the civil list, but to an amount little in accordance with the necessities of the times and the embarrassments of the nation. It will be seen by this outline that the bondholders have been sacrificed A Miguelite disturbance had taken place near Braga, but was immediately quelled, according to the official paper the Diario. Government have collected a large military force in the province of Minho, of which Conde das Antas, lately Military Commandant of Lisbon, had been appointed Commander-in-Chief, as also of all the troops in the northern provinces.

THE ISLAND OF MADEIRA.

It appears by a letter from Madeira, dated August 17, that the religious agitation which has been carried on in that island for some years, has at length led to the committal of the most serious outrages on British persons and property. On Sunday, August 2, a body of Portuguese subjects being assembled for religious purposes in the house of Miss Rutherford, a crowd collected and demanded that their countrymen (the Calvinistas) should be given up to them. This, of course, was refused; the mob maintained their position, and at length, at eleven o'clock at night, broke into the house, searched it thoroughly, and, having found their countrymen in the kitchen, violently assaulted them. At this moment the police and soldiery appeared, and at once dispersed the rioters, taking several of them into custody. These men were, however, discharged from confinement the next morning, on the pretext that no one had appeared to make a complaint against them.

During the following week, it became generally known that more serious attacks on British residences were meditated; and on Sunday, August 9, at midday, a crowd collected round Dr. Kalley's house. The Governor, the Administrador do Concilho, and the British Consul, were on the spot with a guard of soldiers, but no opposition appears to have been offered to the entrance of the rioters, who, having searched the house in vain for Dr. Kalley, proceeded to burn and destroy his books, prints, medicines, &c. Dr. Kalley, who had been much alarmed during the previous night by various occurrences, had left the house at three A.M., and was, during the early part of these disturbances, concealed in the house of a friend; but, on the arrival of the Royal mail steamer in the Bay, escaped to it disguised as a female. The mob having missed their prey, threatened to search the British Consulate, but desisted from this on the Consul consenting to go off in his boat at their head, and show them that Dr. Kalley was actually on board the steamer. That gentleman was shortly joined by his family, and proceeded in the ship to the West Indies. Numerous other British families have been threatened. The Misses Rutherford, Dr. Miller, and Mr. Tate, with their families, are living on board a British vessel in the Bay, the Consul having declined to answer for their safety, even in his own house. Mr. Dyster and Mrs. Freeman and families are living at the Consulate.

A letter, numerously signed, has been presented to the Consul, requesting him to apply for a British man-of-war to protect British persons and property in the island during the present state of anarchy and avowed powerlessness of the Local Government.

INDIA.

A special Overland Mail arrived on Thursday with letters and papers from Bombay to the 5th of August. The occasion of this unlooked-for arrival appears to have been the despatch for England of a special steamer with Sir George Arthur, (the state of whose health rendered his immediate return home imperative) and his family. As might have been expected, other parties availed themselves of the opportunity to return home. The news from Calcutta, which is of no political interest, comes down to the 18th of July. From China we have no dates later than were brought by the last mail. The brief interval which has elapsed since the last advices from India does not supply any intelligence of importance, unless the fact that a rain of fourteen days' duration at Bombay, at precisely the season when it was most likely to be useful, may be so considered.

The chief political news is, that the spirit of dissatisfaction with the Government at Lahore, of the Queen Mother, and of Wuzeer Lall Singh, threatens to explode in acts of violence. The notorious fanatics, called the Akhalees, were collecting in the neighbourhood of that capital, and fears were entertained of their commencing a bloody struggle.

The Arabs, it appears, made an attack on some of the grounds near Aden on the 10th of last month, but were gallantly repulsed, with a loss of seven killed, and a considerable number wounded.

Scinde continues tolerably quiet, but much sickness, of a very malignant type, seems to exist all over the country. Cholera has quitted the army at Kurrachee, but lingers among the population of the town.

A letter from Bombay of the 5th of August, calculates that betwixt the 14th and 30th of June, ten thousand human beings were cut off by cholera at Kurrachee. It has since then been fleeting up the river, and is at present making fearful havoc in the city of Hydrabad. Our troops appear, hitherto, to have escaped.

Sir Charles Napier, who has gained golden opinions by his kindness to the sufferers, has ordered the old walls of Kurrachee to be demolished, and the town to be improved. His nephew and Secretary, Capt. John Napier, of H.M. 62d Regiment, has fallen a victim to the relentless malady; he is much regretted. The only officer who died at Hydrabad was Lieutenant A. D. Campbell, of the 17th Regiment Native Infantry. Fever had abated at Sukkur. Her Majesty's 17th Regiment, which had suffered much there, were stated to be about to come to the coast, in order to embark either for the Cape of Good Hope or for England.

Amongst the recent deaths in India, that of Meer Sohdar, an ex-Ameer, must be mentioned. He had passed almost the last thirty years of his life in bed, as a cripple. The old intrigues respecting Scinde are still at work, and every means are used to mislead the British people in this matter.

The Governor-General and Lord Gough continued at Simla, whither all the politicals on the north-west had been summoned to a consultation—of what nature had not transpired. Messrs. Lawrence and Greathed, and Majors Lawrence, Mackeson, and Mills, were at the hills with Lord Hardinge at the date of latest advices, and were not to disperse till the end of July.

COUNTRY NEWS.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE.

On Wednesday afternoon, the preliminary business of the Association commenced with a very numerous attendance of members of the General Committee, which was held at the Guildhall, Southampton. The chair was taken by Sir John Herschel, Bart., the President of the last meeting at Cambridge, who was supported by Sir Roderick Impey Murchison, F.R.S., the President elect; the Marquis of Northampton, the Earl of Hardwicke, Sir John Richardson, the Rev. Dr. Robinson, of Armagh; Colonel Sabine; Dr. Lee, F.R.S.; Major Shadwell Clerke, G. B. Greenhough, Esq., F.R.S.; Professor Baden Powell, the Mayor of Southampton, and many of the leading members

Colonel Sabine read the Report of the Council, which commenced by referring to the success which the representations of the magnetical Congress held at Cambridge last year, and which, pursuant to the resolutions at the general meeting held there, had been submitted to Sir Robert Peel by the Presidents of the British Association and the Royal Society, had met with. Through their interference, the observations at Greenwich were to be continued, as were those of the Cape of Good Hope, Bombay, Madras, and Paramatta. At Van Diemen's Land, St. Helena, and Toronto, they were to be continued until 1841, whilst the magnetical survey of India was to be continued by the East India Company, and Lieutenant Moore would resume the prosecution of those for which he had long been employed in the Hudson's Bay district. From representations which had been warmly seconded by the Earl of Aberdeen, whilst Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, magnetical and meteorological observations were being prosecuted with activity in Russia, Prussia, Austria, Belgium, and Spain, by the means of their respective Governments. The plan which they had adopted of offering premiums for improvements in registering apparatus had worked well, and the Council of the Royal Society had appropriated £50 to Mr. Rona, of Kew, to that purpose. The recommendation for the discontinuance of the observatory at Kew, which had passed at the last meeting, at Cambridge, had received the serious consideration of the council, who had appointed a committee for the purpose. After a long and careful inquiry into all its details, they had decided that it should be maintained in its present state of efficiency, on the grounds that it gave to the Association a local habitation for the deposit of its books, manuscripts, and instruments; that it afforded opportunities to the members for making interesting physical investigations, and which otherwise they would not be possessed of; that it was almost the first instance of her Majesty's patronage to science, and which, if given up, such an opportunity could not be recovered, and that it had given a great impetus to meteorological and magnetical investigations, the effect of which was shown by its observations being repeated by the Greenwich Observatory. The report concluded by stating, that invitations for holding the next meeting for 1847 had been received from Oxford, Norwich, and Swansea, and that the town of Cheltenham had withdrawn that which they gave last year.

The reception of the Report was moved by the Marquis of Northampton, and seconded by the Mayor of Southampton, and carried unanimously.

Mr. John Taylor, the Treasurer, next read the accounts. The total receipts of the past year were £2509 0s. 2d., of which £407 was from annual tickets, £172 from life tickets, £[illegible] from book compositions, £225 14s. 6d. from dividends, £956 15s. from the sale of stock, &c. The items of expenditure were considerable, and there was a debt due to the Treasurer of £125 3s. 1d. The disbursements for scientific purposes in the past year were, for completing the catalogue of the stars, £211 15s.; the publication of the researches of fossil fishes in the London clay, £100; the inquiries into different varieties of the human race, £7 6s. 3d.; for the Gaussian constants of 1839, £50: the expenses of the Kew Observatory, £146 16s. 7d.; experiments on the strength of materials, £[illegible]0; researches on asphyxia, £6; the vitality of seeds, £10 5s.; the marine zoology of Cornwall, £20, &c.

The President stated that, on account of the occasion of the visit of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, he would propose his election as an honorary member. This was seconded by the Marquis of Northampton, and carried by acclamation; and thanks having been voted to the Chairman, the meeting adjourned.

The proceedings in the sections were very flat on Thursday, as a proof of which it may be stated that in Section F (Statistics), at the hour of meeting, the audience consisted of two persons only. Prince Albert attended the first general meeting of the Society, held in the Victoria Assembly Room in the evening, when a very interesting inaugural address was made by Sir R. Murchison upon the progress of science under the auspices of the Association. Sir R. Murchison succeeds Sir J. Herschell as President. Lord Palmerston also addressed the assembly upon the advantages of the Association.

Thunder-storm in Yorkshire.—Leeds and the greater part of the West Riding of Yorkshire were visited by a tremendous storm on Monday afternoon last. Rain for a short time fell in torrents, accompanied by vivid lightning and loud claps of thunder, which followed each other in rapid succession. The storm approached from the south, and crossed the country in a south-easterly direction. As it was but of short duration, less damage was done than might have been expected from its fury. Harvest operations, where carrying on, were stopped for the day, and, in some few instances, considerable damage has been done to the second crops of hay, which are in the course of being obtained pretty generally throughout the county, and on the old meadow lands as well as on those of "seeds" or clover. A poor woman, who had just returned from attending a funeral, and was in the act of undressing herself in her own house, near Pudsey, about four miles from Leeds, was struck by the electric fluid, and killed on the spot.

Distressing Accident at Middlethorpe, Lincolnshire.—A melancholy accident occurred at this retired watering-place on Monday afternoon. Mr. Rogers, the master of a very respectable boarding-school at Louth, brought his boys (in number between 40 and 50) to Middlethorpe, for the purpose of giving them a holiday, and, up to four o'clock in the afternoon, they were in high spirits, playing at cricket and other manly games. About that hour several of the boys proceeded to bathe in the sea, and five of them got out of their depth, and were overtaken by the tide. Of these five, two were saved by the exertions of Mr. Rogers, who, at the risk of his own life, rushed into the sea, but the three remaining were drowned. The unfortunate sufferers are children of respectable parents belonging to that part of the county, of the names of Mackender, Gunness, and Wakelin, and were of the respective ages of 17, 16, and 15. The latter is represented as being the only child of very fond parents The bodies were found at eleven o'clock on Monday night, very near the spot where the accident happened.

The [illegible] Bank Robbery. The proceedings before the magistrates in reference to this affair terminated on Friday (last week), when Mrs. Thompson was committed for trial on a charge of felony at the Berwick October sessions. Bail to the amount of £2000 was taken for Mrs. Thompson's appearance at the sessions; and, as she had only been under surveillance in her own house up to the period of bail being entered into, she can hardly be said to have been in custody. The charge was preferred by Mr. Burdis, the Bank Director, and the magistrates, it is understood, had some doubt as to whether any offence in law was made out by the evidence. Mr. Thompson, the husband of the lady, was accepted as bail in the amount of £1000, and the Rev Mr. Witham, and Mr. David Macbeath, merchant, in £500 each. Throughout the investigation Mrs. Thompson, though much agitated, conducted herself with remarkable firmness.

English Taste and Science.—Dr. Ferguson, in the Pharmaceutical Times of Saturday, says:—"I have been desirous for some time of expressing my feelings relative to an absurdity, under the garb of science, which disfigures an otherwise passable monument of art in this city. I allude to the lightning conductor which transfixes the bronze effigy of the Duke of York. Now, as the statue is all bronze, I should like to know what can be the use of that ugly pointed iron rod which projects through the head of his Royal Highness like the spit through a dressed turkey? Surely, if a metallic communication be established between the statue itself and the ground, so unsightly an addition must be unnecessary. Our works of art, on account of their architectural blunders, are already the laughing-stock of foreigners. We cannot desire any adjunct of false philosophy to add another eye-sore to our list."

Awful Instances of Sudden Death.—Mr. W. Carter, on Wednesday, held two inquests on the bodies of persons whose deaths were awfully sudden. The first was at the George and Dragon, High-street, Vauxhall, respecting the death of Eliza Cowper, aged 42, a single lady, lately residing at No. 9, New Bridge-street, in that neighbourhood. It appeared that on Sunday last whilst the deceased was in the act of dressing for dinner, one of the vessels near the heart gave way, and she died almost instantaneously. The second inquest was on the body of Abraham Monk, who had been residing at 11, Pleasant-place, Kennington Oval. The inquiry took place at the Clayton Arms, and the evidence proved that, whilst the deceased was driving one of the Kennington omnibuses, he was taken unwell. He returned to his home, and a medical gentleman was sent for, but the deceased died in the space of two hours afterwards. Verdict, in each case, "Natural death."

GOSSIP OF THE WEEK.

The Spanish Marriage is now the great theme of European small talk. One would think that the throne of that land of perpetual revolutions, pronunciamentos, civil wars, insurrections, and massacres, was no very enviable seat; yet intrigue is as busy to secure it, or even to acquire a contingent remainder in it, as if the Peninsula were the chosen region of halcyon tranquillity. Louis Philippe manœuvres as eagerly to win for a Prince of his House the chance of a Spanish sceptre, as Louis XIV. did about a century and a half ago. Swift's and Arbuthnot's jokes about old Louis Baboon's schemes against Lord Strutt's inheritance might be quoted, as if written for the present moment.

The other news from the Peninsula is the pleasing intelligence to Portuguese fundholders of their interest being taxed twenty per cent. Loud and dire are the groans at this clipping of the per-centages.

"The Bulls and the Bears all fall a sobbing
At the Lisbon Government's taking to robbing."

But, as has been well remarked, when will English speculators learn the folly of trusting foreign Principalities, ay, or Republics either?

We subjoin some very pithy and profitable

"ADVICE TO CAPITALISTS."

East, North, South, and West! for investments you may roam,
But if you look for payment, there is no place like Home.
The Consols may sound humble, and a little they may fall;
But what's the use of Foreign Funds, that never pay at all?
Home, sweet Home!
Keep your cash at Home—
There is no place like Home, there is no place like Home!

They are taxing off the interest on coupons Lusitanian;
I don't like your Mexican, nor yet your Pennsylvanian.
The Spaniard says he cannot pay, the Yankee says he won't;
And as for South Americans, I only know they don't.
Home, sweet Home!
Keep your cash at Home—
There is no place like Home, there is no place like Home!

Your speculator's splendour tries to dazzle me in vain;
Oh, give me my sum in the Three per Cents. again.
The Bank Clerk that answered half-yearly to my call;
And oh, buy back my Foreign Stock, the dearest of all!
Home, sweet home!
Keep your cash at Home—
There is no place like Home, there's no Market like the Home!

Canning's South American "New World" is not exactly redressing the balance of the Old, as that statesman designed it to do; but it is furnishing employment for the arms of the two most powerful States of the Antique Hemisphere, near Monte Video. England and France are sending their steamers and marines to frighten away a terrible monster called Rosas from besieging that city. If all we hear of Rosas be true, he must be an unexampled specimen of atrocity; yet his countrymen seem to like and wish to retain him. Indeed, the Argentine Republic of which he is the chief might address England, that attacks her ruler, in Martial's well-known line—

A te vexatas malo tenere Rosas.

At home, Science is the order of the day. Those peripatetic philosophers who make up the British Association for the Advancement of Science, have this year chosen Southampton as the centre for the gathering of the sages. We admire their taste. Indeed it would be difficult to choose a pleasanter trip for an autumn week's holiday, than the Hampshire coast now offers. There is the Southampton river, with its water just rippled enough for a gentle sail, but not rough enough to discompose unpractised mariners. There is Netley Abbey, with its romantic ruins, and the New Forest, with its pleasant rides, all easily accessible. And for bolder adventurers there is the Isle of Wight, with its thousand beauties to explore. Of course all this is independent of the intellectual treats which the sections of the Association itself are to provide. But to do its members justice, they have always shown great skill in combining the "Utile" with the "Dulce." The gravest of its professors have betrayed no scorn of the concert or the ball-room. "The feast of reason and the flow of soul" have never been found incompatible with somewhat more earthly banquetings; and the sagest explorers of the realms of science have been the merriest on the excursion parties that have been planned at previous meetings near Cambridge, York, and elsewhere.

There is a glorious programme for this year's meeting, but there are somewhat ominous hints of a falling off in funds. We regret to hear this; and being resolved to contribute liberally, we have prepared the following INAUGURAL ODE ON THE MEETING OF THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION AT SOUTHAMPTON, 1846.

Air.—"Sure such a day so renowned and so glorious."

Run to Nine Elms—take your tickets at the station there—
Science and Southampton now are all the go.
See, there goes a special train to join th' Association there:
Four-and-twenty wise men all of a row.
There's great Professor Storfancoff, the Muscovite geologist;
Baron Periwinkle, the Bavarian conchologist;
Doctors Gubb and Guffry (a'nt you glad that you have seen the two?)
With their brains all full of fossils, and one carpet-bag between the two.
See, there comes Herr Schinbehind, who great about caloric is:
He's in a rage at being late, and very broad his Doric is.
Run, neighbours, run, to where the Hampshire tree of knowledge is Planted for a week for a raree-show.
Big-wigs from Germany, great guns from foreign colleges,
Are with our English Solomons all in a row.

Come and learn the points of our British-bred Mammalia,
How elephants in London dwelt a long time ago.
Come and learn what dialects are spoken in Australia,
And catch the proper accent of the Blacks in Borneo.
They'll lecture on Ethnology, likewise Palæontology,
And heaven knows what else besides, that terminates in o-lo-gy.
They'll teach the way to know the tide, with science blend diversions,
And, if they are not sea-sick, round the Island take excursions.
Won't they also honour'd with the presence be of Royalty?
So, if you have not learning, come at least and show your loyalty.
Run, neighbour, run! let each be a philosopher,
And subscribe for the week to the Wise Men's Show.
Cheer the worthy Treasurer, who reckons now his loss over,
For Science may be plentiful, but Cash run low.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

Grand Entertainment at Osborne House.—Arrangements have been making for some time past for a grand entertainment to be given by her Majesty at Osborne House, on Friday, the 25th inst.

Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar. His Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar left town on Wednesday morning for Cashiobury Park, Herts, the residence of her Majesty the Queen Dowager.

The Princess of Prussia. Her Royal Highness the Princess of Prussia, accompanied by his Excellency the Chevalier Bunsen, the Earl of Denbigh, and the ladies and gentlemen of her suite, partook of a dejeûner in the Tower of London on Monday afternoon, on the return of her Royal Highness from her excursion on the Thames.

Visitors to the Queen Dowager. Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and the Hereditary Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, are on a visit to the Queen Dowager at Cashiobury Park.

The Duchess of Kent.—Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent entertained a small party to dinner at Frogmore House on Tuesday evening.

Aristocratic Marriage. It is reported at the West-end that the Hon. Adolphus Chichester, brother of Lord Templemore, and grandson of the Marquis of Anglesey, is about to wed the daughter and sole heiress of one of our wealthiest commoners. The gentleman has just completed his twenty-first year.

Fatal Accident on the Lancaster and Carlisle Railway.—A fatal accident occurred on the above line on Saturday last, to a person of the name of William Solomon, a labourer employed a short distance from Kendal. An inquest was held at Hyena on Monday, when James Dixon, a railway labourer, gave the following evidence, showing how the accident occurred. He said—On Saturday morning last I was at work on the Lancaster and Carlisle Railway, near Mr Bainbridge's house, in the township of Natland. The deceased, William Solomon (who was also a labourer on the line), was working beside me at the same place. He was bringing a waggon down the line to be coupled to one which he assisted to fill. The waggon was laden with sand and stone, and was moving down an incline, towards our waggon, and deceased was to stop it by the use of the break. We thought the waggons were coming too quick, and we called on deceased to use the break, and when he was stooping for the break another waggon, which was behind him, overtook the one he had charge of, and jammed his head between the two waggons, and crushed his skull. No one was to blame. The deceased was about 23 years of age, and his death was caused entirely by accident. A verdict to this effect was given.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Why doth my blood thus mantle to my heart,
Making itself unable for itself,
And dispossessing all the other parts
Of necessary fitness.... ."—Shakspeare.

How unendurable is suspense! "Strike!" cried Raleigh to the headsman, who dallied with the axe in a false humanity: "strike!" for even to the adept of the sternest philosophy, the worst is better than its anticipation. How spake Ravaillac when passing to his unutterable tortures—"Ce sera une dure journée—mais il finira." These worthies had their trials, and, of a verity, so have their successors. "Vixere fortes ante Agamenona," says Horace; "and patient since Job," say we, and not without experience. What was the sword of Damocles but an allegory of suspense? "If you preachee, preachee," entreated Sambo of the overseer, who was giving him good advice as well as the cat o' nine tails. "if you preachee, preachee; but no preachee and floggee too." Not out of any natural dislike, peradventure, to wholesome counsel, but from an anxiety to get the immediate business over as speedily as possible. Thus it is with many (we can vouch for one) at these instant presents. Thus it is with those whose hearts stand still, waiting for hope deferred, the cruellest of all our watchings—

Dispossessing all the other parts
Of necessary fitness!

All this is apropos of Doncaster, the courteous reader concludes, and so let it be; pro tanto, as the lawyers say. In a few days, the Leger and its legerdemain will be as a tale that is told, and a queer history, unless we are more deceived than ordinary. The great event of the great northern meeting has so long enjoyed the bad pre-eminence of being the most diplomatic of all the issues of the turf, that people as naturally look to some exceeding passages of sharp practice connected with it as they expect——the same from their legal advisers. Nobody has an idea, or assumes he has an idea, that the Leger will be a fair race. He hasn't thought so within our memory; and, to judge from present appearances, he never will have the occasion. Sporting gentlemen flock annually from every quarter of the empire—indeed, one might say from every quarter of the globe to immolate themselves in the ring, with as much foregone conclusion of being done for as the poor prepense Pagan that throws himself under the wheels of Juggernaut. They tell you in the streets, at the Rooms, on the course everywhere—that it will be a robbery, just as naturally as your French valet assures you he can dress hair, and never tell the truth when it is inconvenient. And not only this, but, with one consent, all the authorities recognise the privilege. There's not a fount of type in the United Kingdom would hurt the feelings of this carte blanche meeting on any account. It is rarely alluded to in print, save in the most "genteel" terms; and, should some very startling incident occur, you just read how a Mr. A—— is supposed to have laid rash odds, and that Mr. B——took them, "going a begging;" or that it was whispered, Mr. C—— had "dropped his mare," and Mr. D—— had found it. . .

Elsewhere will be duly given the betting of the closing day before the St. Leger at Tattersall's. Our province is to prelude it with a brief prologue of the gossip. And first of the premier. Sir Tatton Sykes is a great mystery: nobody knows to what party he belongs, or what may be his policy. Somebody said that Jem Robinson would ride him, but somebody was premature: our version is that Will Scott will ride him, for many reasons. Brocardo may be good, but we opine he is "not the card-o." The Traverser has earned enough money already: what good would his winning do? Fancy Boy used to go on the toe action we don't [illegible] in a horse: will he go on the flat—in Yorkshire? Grimston was the companion the close companion—of Wolfdog; for that we like him not. Iago, "O villain, villian," why don't you tell us what they're going to do with you. Cranebrook is at small odds, and we wonder—as when contemplating a reel in a bottle—"how the d——l he got there." Free Lance his noble owner declares to be a true knight. What, ho! there; see that he do his devoir. Tom Tulloch—"occupat extremum scabies." These high names must serve this week to embellish our recitative: next week, out of our proper materials, we will "point our moral."

ROCHESTER AND CHATHAM RACES.—Tuesday.

The Marden Plate of 40 sovs, three-year-olds 7st 4lb, four 8st 7lb, five 9st, six and aged 9st 4lb. Mares and geldings allowed 3lb. Heats, once round. Seven subs.

Mr. Nunn's f by Samarcand, out of La Fille mal Gardee, 4 yrs	(Hornsby)	5	1	2
Mr. Bainbridge's Sir Peter Laurie, 3 yrs		1	2	2
Mr. Hawkes's Primrose, 3 yrs		2	3	dr
Mr. Spong's Norma, 6 yrs		4	4	dr
Mr. Jenkins's Pug, 6 yrs		3	dr

First heat won by half a length, the second by two lengths, and the third easy.

The Rockingham Stakes of 5 sovs each, with 50 added, three-year-olds 7st 8lb, four 8st 12lb, five 8st 5lb, six and aged, 9st 9lb. Mares and geldings allowed 3lb The winner to be sold for 300 sovs. Heats, one mile and a half. Nine subs.

Mr. Dockeray's Polka, 3 yrs	(Hornsby, jun.)	1	1
Mr. Booth's Tit-bit, 3 yrs		2	2
Mr. Ramsbottom's Pine Apple, 6 yrs		3	3

A Handicap of 10 sovs each, h ft, and only 2 if declared, &c., with 50 added. The second to save his stake.

Mr. J Bentam nd Pimento, 5 yrs, 7st	(Garnell)	4	0	2	1	1
Mr. Dockeray's Lady Charlotte, 5 yrs, 8st 9lb		2	0	1	3	2
Mr. Smith nd Tell, 3 yrs, 6st 8lb		1	3	4	2	dr

First heat won by a head; the second, a dead heat between Pimento and Lady Charlotte, the third, won on the post by a head; the fourth, by two lengths, and the fifth, easily by six lengths.

Wednesday.

The Gold Cup, by subscription of 5 sovs each, with 40 added. Three-year-olds, 7st 4lb; four, 8st 10lb; five, 9st 2lb, six and aged, 9st 5lb. Mares and geldings allowed 3lb. The second to save his stake. Heats, one mile and a half. (5 subs.)

Mr. Booth's Titbit, 3 yrs	(Planner)	1	1
Mr. Dockeray ns Polka, 3 yrs		2	2
Mr. Darrien's Laird o'Cockpen, 4 yrs		3	3

First heat won by a neck; the second by a length

The Railway Plate of 35 sovs, added to a Sweepstakes of 3 sovs each. Once round and a distance.

Mr. Nunn's f by Samarcand, 4 yrs, 7st 2lb	(Hornsby)	1
Count Bathyany's Master, 3 yrs, 5st 12lb		2
Mr. Dixon's Devil Among the Tailors, aged, 8st		3

Won easy by a length.

The West Kent Stakes of 2 sovs each, with 25 added. Three-year-olds, 7st 4lb; four, 8st 7lb; five, 9st; six and aged, 9st 4lb. Mares and geldings allowed 3lb. Winners extra. The second to receive 5 sovs from the fund. Heats, once round. (Six subs.)

Mr. Dixon's Devil Among the Tailors	(Hackett)	4	1	1
Mr Hawkes's Primrose, 3 yrs		1	2	2
Mr. Nunn's Dalesman, 5 yrs		2	4	3
Mr. E. Haworth's York, 4 yrs		3	3	r

First heat won cleverly by a length, the second by a neck, and the third by three lengths.

TATTERSALL'S

Monday. Business was uncommonly flat this afternoon; only Brocardo, Fancy Boy, Free Lance, and Cranebrook, being backed with any determination. Poynton went out of the market, and the prices against the other favourites were nominal.—

ST. LEGER.

3 to 1 agst Sir Tatton Sykes
6 to 1 agst Brocardo
8 to 1 —— The Traverser
9 to 1 agst Fancy Boy (t)
10 to 1 —— Iago
10 to 1 —— Grimston
12 to 1 agst Cranebrook
20 to 1 —— Sting
40 to 1 —— Tom Tulloch
50 to 1 agst Romance

GREAT YORKSHIRE HANDICAP.

6 to 1 agst Quadruped
6 to 1 —— Juna
8 to 1 agst Morpeth
8 to 1 —— Ennui (t)
[illegible] to 1 agst Cranebrook

DERBY.

1000 to 30 agst Liberator (t)

Thursday.—A great deal of money was laid out on Brocardo, Fancy Boy, and Iago, and left off "looking up." Sir Tatton also improved, although the amount of the investments was small. All the other favourites were more or less on the decline. The following is the last quotation on the race that we shall have to make from "The Corner."

ST. LEGER.

5 to 2 agst Sir Tatton Sykes
5 to 1 —— Brocardo (t)
8 to 1 —— Fancy Boy (t)
10 to 1 —— Iago (t)
12 to 1 agst Grimston (t)
[illegible] to 2 —— The Traverser
16 to 1 —— Free Lance
16 to 1 agst Cranebrook
17 to 1 —— Sting
20 to 1 —— Poynton (t)

GREAT YORKSHIRE HANDICAP.

6 to 1 agst Ennui (t)
10 to 1 agst Fair Rosamond

Sale of the late Bentinck Stud.—The first division of the leviathan stud, lately purchased by Mr Mostyn of Lord G. Bentinck, was sold on Monday, by Messrs. Tattersall. It was numerously attended, excited a good deal of compet[illegible] a few of the prime lots, and on the whole realised the total of 3,195 guineas. The following are particulars of the various lots:—Nightcap, 4 yrs, by Bay Middleton, out of Chapeau d'Espagne, 49 gs; Alva, 5 yrs, own sist to Mora, 26 gs; The Dutch Girl, 3 yrs, by Bay Middleton, out of Flamande, 30 gs; Lupine, 4 yrs, by Bay Middleton, out of Marrowfat, 52 gs; Yawn, 5 yrs, sist to Gaper, 54 gs; Puke, 4 yrs, by Bay Middleton, out of Price, 41 gs; Ratifa, 4 yrs, by Bay Middleton, out of Camarine's dam, 60 gs; Kitten, 4 yrs, by Bay Middleton, out of Pussy, 40 gs; P[illegible] yrs, by Bay Middleton, out of Bob Peel's dam, 56 gs; Mora, 4 yrs, by Bay Middleton, out of Malvina, 70 gs; Charlotte, 5 yrs, by Liverpool, out of Brocade, 100 gs; Clink, 5 yrs, by Glaucus, out of Jingle, 30 gs; Charming Kate, 5 yrs, sist to Coronation, 90 gs; All-round-my-[illegible] yrs, by Bay Middleton, out of Chapeau d'Espagne, 50 gs; Th[illegible] Orleans, 5 yrs, by Jeread, out of Anchorite's dam, 200 gs; My [illegible], 5 yrs, by Bay Middleton, out of Miss Letty, 54 gs; Phantasima, by Phantom, 15 gs; Skill, 5 yrs, by Bay Middleton, out of Skilful, 39 gs; Souvenance, 7 yrs, by Bay Middleton, out of Souvenir, 62 gs; Discord, aged, by Mulatto, 165 gs; Clumsy, 4 yrs, by Bay Middleton, 150 gs; Pug, 4 yrs, by Bay Middleton, 110 gs; Princess Alice, 3 yrs, by Bay Middleton, 600 gs; Blackbird, 3 [illegible] gs; Marquis [illegible], 3 yrs, by Slane, 260 gs; So[illegible] gs; Comrade, 4 yrs, by Bentley [illegible] Miss Petworth, 100 gs; a bay yearling colt, by Colwick, out of Skilful, 100 gs; a chesnut yearling colt, by Bran, out of Katherine, 17 gs. Of the 17 lots of two-yr-olds put up on Tuesday, Blackcock, Growl, and Master Butler, alone were sold, viz., Blackcock for 250 gs, Growl, for 70 gs, both [illegible], and Master Butler, by private contract for £30, all with their engagements. 5000 guineas each were required for Planet and Slander, 4000 gs for Crozier, 1000 gs for Devil-me-Care, and 800 gs for Bethpage; but no one having bid so much, they were withdrawn. The other lots were bought in.

ENCAMPMENT OF THE CALIFORNIAN LEGION, ON GOVERNOR'S ISLAND, NEW YORK HARBOUR.

THE CALIFORNIAN LEGION.

This fine body of men, about 900 in number, has just been raised in the United States, to proceed to California, whither American enterprise is just now "going a-head." The men are mechanics, farmers, &c.; and they are drilled as soldiers. The New York Herald tells us this regiment has been raised mainly through the exertions of J. D. Stevenson, who ranks as Colonel; and that he has displayed untiring industry and self-denial in the details of its formation. Lieut. Burton is the second in command, and is well known as a superior officer and brave man. Lieut. Hardy, Major of the Regiment, is admirably suited for his command, from his perfect knowledge of military tactics. Capt. Marcy, a son of the Secretary-at-War, has received the appointment of Assistant Commissary; Lieut. Scammon, as Topographical Engineer; and Lieut. Tolson, as Assistant Quartermaster. All these individuals, with the exception of Marcy, are Graduates of West Point, hold rank as officers in the regular army, and have been Professors at the Academy where they graduated; and the account adds, "the officers, generally, are of the right sort to enforce discipline and secure respect. Each company is full, and comprises 77 men; and if to these we add the field-officers, servants, and followers, the whole body will be nearly 900.

Our Artist has sketched this little army of enterprise in their encampment on Governor's Island, which is strongly fortified, and commands the city and bay of New York.

At the date of our Artist's communication, the Legion was expected to sail before the 1st of September; though no convoy was to accompany them, nor was it needed. Three vessels were engaged, stores and equipments were being rapidly prepared; "so that," states the account, "whether peace is declared or not, Government seems determined to be indemnified for expences in the war with Mexico, by the possession of California." The context in the following is droll: "a band selected from the different New York companies, and instructed by a gentleman now attached to the orchestra of Niblo's Gardens, will be raised, and will add much to the military appearance of the regiment."

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN LEIPZIG.

On Saturday evening, the 29th of August, a destructive fire, attended with considerable loss of life, broke out at Leipzig, in one of the most populous and commercial parts of the city. About six o'clock, the fire-signals were given from the church towers, the drums beat, and the civic guard were quickly at their posts. A cellar in a court-yard of the Hotel de Pologne, one of the largest hotels in Leipzig, filled with oil of turpentine, sulphur, and other combustibles, was said to be on fire; but, as the bells in a short time ceased, the alarm subsided, and the danger was supposed to be at an end. About ten o'clock, however, the signals were repeated; and soon the flames, rising above the lofty houses in the inner town, and visible to a great distance, proclaimed that the fire had spread with fearful rapidity. From the courts and back-buildings, which, from the great value of the ground in this part of the city, are here very numerous and intricate, the fire soon communicated to the buildings in the Hayn-strasse; and, notwithstanding the most strenuous exertions, continued its ravages during the whole night. About midnight, a detachment of soldiers was forwarded by the railroad from Wurzen, as a great part of the garrison were absent at the cantonment; and, early on Sunday morning, an extra train brought a company of firemen from Dresden. The whole of the extensive buildings attached to the Hotel de Pologne and the adjacent houses are destroyed. The progress of the flames in the street itself was at length stopped; but, at the time of our Correspondent writing, the fire still continued in the interval between the Hayn-strasse and Catherinen-strasse. It still continued to smoulder in the cellars and courts, which are very difficult of access; and they contained vast stores of inflammable substances. At six o'clock on Monday evening, the two streets above named were still guarded by the civic guards, and the fire-engines were in full activity. We regret to add that six or seven persons have perished, some as victims to their generous exertions to stop the progress of the flames; several were missing; and about twenty persons have been taken to the hospital. This lamentable event will likewise be productive of great loss and confusion to many of the manufacturers and tradesmen during the approaching Michaelmas Fair, as the buildings known by the name of "The Little Cloth Hall" have been consumed; and as, at this busy period, the population of the town is doubled, and every nook and cranny has its long-fixed destination, we fear that some hundreds of industrious individuals will suffer indirectly by the catastrophe.

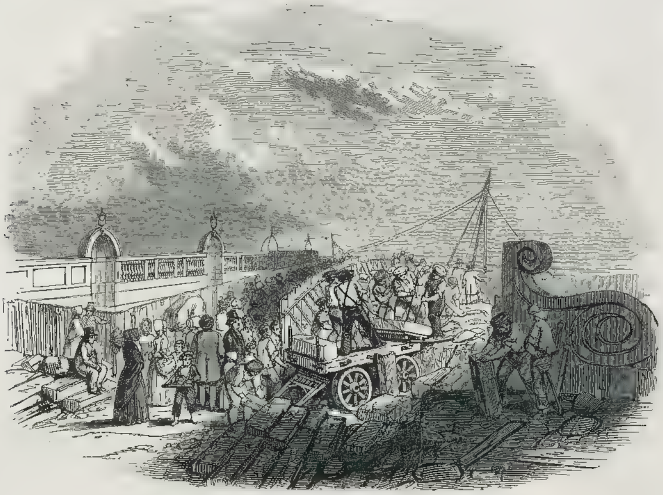
DESTRUCTION OF THE HOTEL DE POLOGNE, AT LEIPZIG, BY FIRE.

The Duke de Montpensier's Bride.—The Infanta Luisa, the destined bride of the Duke de Montpensier, is stated to be one of the richest partis in Europe. Her father, Ferdinand, left at his death a private fortune of nearly sixteen million piastres to his two daughters, to be equally divided between them. It is probable that this sum may have been somewhat reduced during the civil wars which have afflicted Spain, for money has always been found influential throughout their continuance. The fortune of Donna Luisa is, however, estimated at from 24 to 25 millions of francs, or a million sterling; and to this must be added an allowance of three millions of reals, which she receives from the State, though this amount would be cut down if Queen Isabella were to have an heir to the crown.

Murder in Belgium.—A murder, attended with singular circumstances, took place in the night of Sunday last, at the hotel of the Red Lion at Tirlemont (Belgium). The host and hostess were alone, and, having finished the business of the day, were about retiring to rest, when a neighbour demanded admission, and, on entering, said that he had come to spend with them some of the profits of his business. The three sat down to table, and commenced drinking wine. Their sitting, enlivened by jokes and cheerful conversation, was kept up until a late hour. About half-past one they all began to complain of drowsiness. The landlady retired into an adjoining chamber, and was soon asleep. After taking a concluding glass, the visitor, observing that it was then too late to return to his own house, proposed to pass the remainder of the night where he was, in a chair. This, however, the landlord would not allow, saying that he would go up stairs and fetch a mattress for him. While he was absent for this purpose, the man went into the room where the hostess was asleep, and, passing a rope in which he had made a noose over her neck, suddenly pulled it tight, and left her, as he imagined, dead. He then re-entered the room where they had been drinking just as the husband returned. The mattress was arranged, when the man proposed that the landlord should also lie down on it for the night, as, in all probability, his wife was fast asleep, and it was a pity to disturb her. This proposition was unfortunately assented to. The landlord, overpowered by his potations, was soon asleep. Then the man rose, and attempted to strangle him in the same manner as he had before adopted towards his wife. A desperate struggle ensued, but, in the end, the assassin gained the mastery, and his victim lay dead at his feet. He next took a light, and, going up stairs, took away about 900f. in money. He then left the house, closing the door after him. In the morning the inhabitants, finding the house remained closed, became alarmed, and, calling for the aid of the police, the door was forced, when the bodies were found as above described. The poor woman was still alive, and, by the aid of restoratives, recovered sufficiently to state what had occurred, and to declare the author of the crime to be a neighbour named Charles Verbelst, a tobacconist. He was immediately arrested, and sent to prison, denying, however, any connection with either the murder or the robbery. The woman remains in a most dangerous state.

Steam Navigation.—There are several provisions in the Act of Parliament passed on the 28th ult., for the regulation of steam navigation, which will affect the numerous steamers on the river Thames. By the 9th section it is provided that every steam-vessel, when meeting or passing any other vessel, shall pass as far as may be safe on the port side of such other vessel; and every steam-vessel navigating any river or narrow channel shall keep as far as is practicable to that side of the fairway or midchannel of such river or channel which lies on the starboard side of such vessel, due regard being had to the tide, and the master or other person having the charge of any such steam-vessel, and neglecting to observe the regulations, or either of them, shall, for each and every instance of neglect, forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding £50. By another provision, the Admiralty may make regulations respecting the exhibition of lights by steam-vessels. The following provision will, perhaps, by requiring vigilance, prevent accidents: "And be it enacted, that if any damage to any person or property shall be sustained in consequence of the non-observance, as respects any steam-vessels, of the rules contained in the two enactments relative to the passing of steam-vessels, and to the exhibition of lights hereinbefore contained, the same shall, in all courts of justice, be deemed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, to have been occasioned by the wilful default of the master or other person having the charge of such steam-vessel, and such master or other person shall be subject to all proceedings, whether civil or criminal, to the legal consequences of such wilful default." The Act is to take effect on the 1st January.

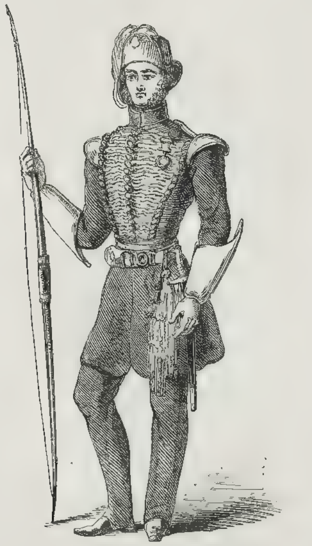
ILLUSTRATED NEWS



WESTMINSTER-BRIDGE, SKETCHED ON MONDAY LAST.

IRVINE ARCHERY MEETING.

The twenty-second anniversary of the Irvine Toxopholite Society took place at Irvine, in Ayr, on Friday, the 28th ult., the anniversary of the Grand Tournament at Eglinton, which this Society has since commemorated by adopting the same day for their annual meetings. The weather was fine, and the concourse of visitors on the ground exhibited a very attractive display of beauty and fashion from the town and surrounding neighbourhood. The archers assembled on the ground a little after eleven o'clock, and, in addition to the members resident on the spot, comprised a large number of representatives from the principal Clubs in the west, viz.—the County Archery and Rifle Club for the West of Scotland, the Glasgow, the Partick, and the Kilwinning Archers, &c, each dressed in their respective uniforms. The shooting at the butts took place in the Academy ground, which is beautifully adapted for the purpose, and which the directors had kindly granted for the occasion: it commenced about a quarter before twelve o'clock, the competitors being drafted into two parties. The first prize that was competed for was the splendid Gold Belt given a few years ago to the Society by the Earl of Eglinton, to be shot for annually, and for which there was, of course, a very spirited competition. The period assigned for the competition was two hours, during the latter part of which the carriages of the Earl drove up, and his Lordship, accompanied by the Countess and a party of ladies and gentlemen, entered the ground, much to the delight and gratification of the archers. His Lordship was dressed in the very handsome uniform of the County Archery and Rifle Club, with the difference of a white plume in his hat instead of a black, and a beautiful white silk scarf, containing the insignia denoting his rank as the President and Captain-General of the Club. The Countess, also, as Lady Patroness of the Club, wore a very beautiful green scarf with silver trimming, and containing similar insignia, and was the admiration of all upon the ground.



UNIFORM OF THE IRVINE TOXOPHOLITE SOCIETY.

On summing up the numbers, it was found that the belt was gained by Mr. William Ferguson, the Secretary of the Partick Archers, who counted 42; Mr Knox and Mr. Tennant, of the "Glasgow Archers," counting 50 and 47 respectively; but, in consequence of being "weighted," as the archers term it, from having won previous prizes, were obliged to suffer a deduction, as we understand, of about a third from the gross number. These gentlemen, however, were successful competitors for the second and third prizes. The belt was presented by the Earl, who complimented Mr. Ferguson on his success. Arrangements were then made for shooting at the elevated target which was erected in the park adjoining the Academy ground. At this target the shooting was most excellent—the noble Earl taking the lead, and showing an example to the less distinguished, though not less keen competitors—and was continued with spirit till four o'clock; when, his Lordship and Mr. B. W. Dods, of the County Club, having had an equal number of marks, it was agreed that whoever should put the first arrow in the target should be the winner; and, Mr. Dods being first successful in so doing, the competition was declared at an end, his Lordship handsomely complimenting him on his success. This concluded this day's shooting; and the archers, being formed into rank and file, with the noble Earl at their head, and preceded by the band, marched from the grounds, accompanied by their friends who were witnessing the sports of the day, and proceeded through the town, amidst an immense throng of spectators, to the Eglinton Arms Inn; where, after some business had been transacted by the Toxopholite Society, they sat down, about seventy in number, to an excellent dinner, joined by several of the ladies, who had come from a distance. Archibald T. Boyle, Esq., advocate, the newly-elected Captain-General of the Toxopholite Society, occupied the chair with his usual admirable tact and ability, and was supported right and left by the Earl of Eglinton · the Provost; Captain Brown, R.M.; Captain Mullen, Senior Captain County Club; Mr. S. Pollock, Secretary ditto; Dr. Brown, of Ardrossan; Mr. Dods; Mr. Lavien, of Oxford, &c.; and Colonel M'Allister (of Kennox), and Captain Ferguson, officiated as croupiers, supported by Captain Fullarton, of Fullarton; Mr. Knox, of Kelvingrove; Mr. Johnston, of Redburn; Mr. Borland; Mr. Moir, of Glasgow; Mr. Irvine; Mr. M'Candlish, of Edinburgh, &c &c. The dinner being finished, and a number of new members enrolled, including the ladies, who were elected honorary members of the Society, several toasts were proposed, among which was "The Lord of the Manor, the Earl of Eglinton," which was drunk with the greatest enthusiasm. The party rose from the table at about nine o'clock; and the room was then prepared for the ball, which was kept up, with great spirit, until between two and three o'clock in the morning.

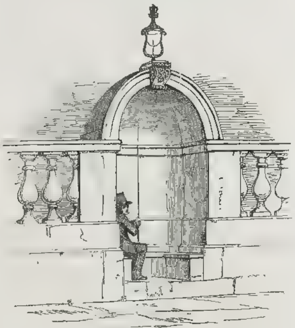
Next day, the sports commenced at twelve o'clock, under the auspices of the Captain-General Boyle. The shooting was at the long range of a hundred yards, and at the elevated target, for both of which prizes had been arranged several months previously. The competition for the first prize at the 100 yards was keen, and at the end of the shooting Mr. Dods and Mr. Borland, of the County Club, being equal, the first and second prizes were presented to Mr. Borland (Mr. Dods being obliged to leave the ground shortly before) to arrange the appropriation between themselves. The third prize was gained by Mr. Pringle, of the Albyn Archers, Edinburgh. At the elevated target there was also keen sport, but here again Mr. Borland was successful, after a competition of about two hours; and thus ended what was said by all to be one of the most brilliant and spirited meetings the toxopholites ever had.

Our Engravings are from sketches made on the ground, expressly for this Journal, by Mr. Mackenzie, W. S. A. One of the Illustrations represents the Shooting at the High Target; the second shows the Uniform of the Club, which is as follows:—A dark green frock coat, braided on the breast and edges, and seams of the back and wings, all according to pattern—dark green trowsers, braided -black stock—Wellington boots—dark green beaver hat, the old English style, and a black ostrich feather in front; the hat-loop fastened by a green velvet rosette with a silver crest of the Club in the centre—long white buckskin gauntlets—black patent leather belt with silver clasp, containing the arms of the Club—short side sword—quiver—arrow pouch—grease cup and tassel. The Lieutenants and the Secretary wear, in addition, a dark green velvet rosette, with crimson centre, and two silver arrows crossed, on the left breast. the Junior Captain wears a crimson silk sash; and the Senior Captain a similar sash, and a silver arrow on each side of the collar of the coat.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE IRVINE TOXOPHOLITE SOCIETY.—SHOOTING AT THE HIGH TARGET.

WESTMINSTER BRIDGE.

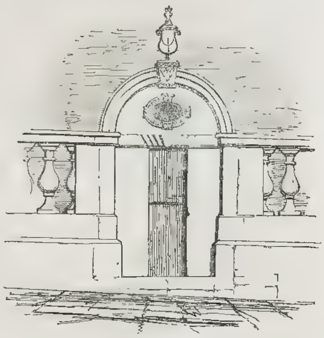
The work of demolishing this ill-fated Bridge, or removing such a portion of it as shall fit it for temporary passage, proceeds rapidly; there being employed on it two hundred labourers. Our Engraving, sketched on Monday last, shows the state of the work at that period; since which nearly every balustrade has been removed, and the workmen are fast stripping the bridge to the cornices.



ALCOVE.

On Thursday week, the levels of the piers were again taken, and the result showed that, although they had not left off sinking, yet still the opinion of the gentlemen conducting the observation was, that the settling was decidedly less, when compared with observation on a previous occasion; and, if the piers sink no further, there is not the slightest doubt but that the bridge will be as secure as ever for foot-passengers till the erection of the new one.

When the whole of the parapets are removed, if the piers are found to be in statu quo, it is intended to erect a light parapet, about four feet high, and the throw open the entire roadway of the bridge to the public. In the meantime, a double enclosure has been erected, as shown in our Illustration, to allow a safe foot passage across the bridge, whilst the works are proceeding.



WATCHHOUSE.

We have also engraved two of the alcoves (now removed); one used as a watch-house, and the other open to the public; together with a few of the flanking balustrades, all of which are now numbered with the things that were. The key-stones of the alcoves, and the oval of the watch-house, are tastefully sculptured.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, Sept. 13. Fourteenth Sunday after Trinity.
Monday, 14.—Holy Cross—Moscow burnt, 1812.
Tuesday, 15.—Saturn rises at 5h. 28m. p.m., and sets at 3h. 4m. a.m.
Wednesday, 16.—Fox died, 1806, aged fifty-seven.
Thursday, 17.—London and Birmingham Railway opened, 1838.
Friday, 18.—Mercury rises at 4h. 8m. a.m.
Saturday, 19.—Venus rises at 3h. 34m. a.m., and sets at 5h. 34m. p.m.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge for the Week ending September 19

Monday		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A
h. m	h. m.	h. m.	h. m	h. m.	h. m.	h. m	h. m	h. m	h. m	h. m	h. m
8 [illegible]	9 10	9 51	10 31	11 9	11 46	0 0	0 15	0 38	1 0	1 14	1 34

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Louisa Mary."—Calisthenics (kallos, beauty, sthenos, strength, Gr.) is training calculated to develop the beauty and grace of the human figure.

"W. M. G." is thanked, but we cannot entertain his proposition.

"A F W"—A Portrait of Ronge, the Catholic Reformer, was given in our last Volume.

"Anglicus," Eton College, will find the Oxford Hoods he names described in the "Oxford Guide" (Slatter's): we have not room to quote them.

"D. V."—Postage not paid.

"J. P.," Dover.—The fault rests with the bookbinder, who should beat but lightly newly-printed sheets.

"C. T. P." is thanked, but we have not room.

"Quæreus."—"Walker's Pronouncing Dictionary, improved by Smart," price 18s. (Longmans.)

"C. K."—"Hints on Etiquette." (Longmans.)

"C. Y. W."—We cannot interfere with wagers.

"Beltonia." "The Seven Wonders of the World" were—1. The Pyramids of Egypt. 2. The Tomb of King Mausolus 3. Temple of Diana, at Ephesus. 4. Walls and Hanging Gardens of Babylon. 5. Colossus of Rhodes 6. Statue of Jupiter Olympus, by Phidias. 7. Ptolemy's Pharus, or Watch-Tower.

"A. Z.," Canonbury.—Damiens, for his attempt to assassinate Louis XV., was first made to endure the most excruciating tortures on the rack, and was ultimately broken on the wheel.

"Clement."—The earliest Royal Autograph of England, now known, is the small figure of a cross, made by the hand of King William Rufus, in the centre of a charter preserved in the British Museum.

"R. P.," Ludlow, should address his complaint to the General Post-Office.

"W. A. M."—In our explanation of the initials R. S. V. P., "Repondez" was misprinted "Reponder."

"G. Q. P.," Cambridge.—The subject is not suited for illustration.

"W. M.," Ryde.—An engraving of the Trowel named, would have been interesting in illustration of the laying of the first stone of the Middlesex House of Detention.

"G. W. G."—Satisfaction is the state of being pleased to the full; Contentment, acquiescence, without plenary satisfaction.

"J. T.," Huddersfield.—The Christian names of the Princess Royal are Victoria Adelaide Mary Louisa.

"R. M." is referred to our Summary of the late Opera Season. We do not know the amount of money collected for the Sufferers by the late Hail-storm.

"Ibrahim Pacha," Liverpool, will find a receipt for Everton Toffie, in "Miss Acton's Modern Cookery," p. 528. We have not room for such matters.

"A Constant Subscriber," Brighton.—Buckingham House, St. James's Park, was rebuilt in 1703; purchased for Queen Charlotte, in 1762; and altered, or rather rebuilt, for George the Fourth.

"W. B. H." (not prepaid.) Messrs. Ackermann's, Strand.

"J T F" "Hints on Etiquette." (Longmans.)

"H. W.," Hackney The English Opera House was completely destroyed by fire, Feb. 16, 1830.

Stanzas by "C. T. P." will not suit. The Lines on Gravesend are as "queer" as the "retreat."

"R. B. G."—We have not room.

"Sans Peur."—See Instructions in Wood Engraving, in Supplement to No. 114 of the Illustrated London News; or, Jackson's large Work.

"Nihil," Jersey. The epigraph to the Tale of "Gold," by Miss Toulmin, will be found in Michelet's work, "The People," Part the 3rd, chapter the 1st; or page 124 of the translation by Cocks, (cheap edition), published by Longman.

"A Constant Reader" should apply to a bird-cage maker or wire worker: say, Duke and Jeffrey, Allen's-court, 387, Oxford-street.

"P." is thanked for the Jersey Sketch.

"J. H. R." should consult a Professor of Singing.

"H. O. P."—Not prepaid.

"A Subscriber," Broseley.—Has your friend the right of shooting over his farm?

"Clio Viator," Chester. The Act of Parliament passed last Session is, of course, printed, and may be had at the Parliamentary Paper Office, in Middle-row, Holborn, or Bridge-street, Westminster.

"An Old Reader," Clifton, has puzzled us; but we will see.

"G. E. D." should consult the Author's Handbook, published by Churton.

"Amicitia," Rougham, is being quizzed by his "friend."

"J. C. D."—Thanks for the three Sketches.

"H. W." The Silver Medal in question, with King Edward VI. on the obverse, was struck as a Badge for Christ's Hospital. The initials and date in the exergue were probably engraved by a possessor of the medal.

"Alpha," Nottingham. The subject is scarcely adapted for illustration; but its progress shall not be disregarded.

"A Constant Reader" is "positive he has discovered the Quadrature of the Circle"! We recommend him to read the article on "this enchanted castle," in the "Penny Cyclopædia."

"A Two Years' Subscriber."—The address of the Guarantee Society is 19, Birchin-lane.

"Amand."—"The German Language, in One Volume." By Falck-Lebahn. (just published.)

"Wappenhum."—A note addressed to "Parker and Co., Military Booksellers, Charing-cross," will, probably, answer the purpose.

"W. J.," Preston. We cannot assist our Correspondent.

"Julia" should address a note to Her Majesty's Theatre.

"D. E. J."—Powdered charcoal is a good non-conductor of heat for a Refrigerator.

"B. P. L.," "L. S. M.," and "Oxted," are thanked for the correction of the error in our last respecting the late Bishop Luscombe. (See the Memoir in our present Number.)

"An Old Subscriber," Glasgow.—The price of "Bob Thin," by W. J. Linton, is 10s. 6d. (Watson, Queen's Head Passage, Paternoster Row.)

British Association for the Advancement of Science.—Next week we shall Illustrate, in a Series of Spirited Engravings, the Proceedings of this important Association, now assembled at Southampton.

Books Received.—The Ship of Glass, a Romance, by Hargrave Jennings, 3 vols.—The German Language in One Volume, by Falck-Lebahn Proceedings of the Archæological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland, at the Winchester Meeting, 18[illegible].—The Heroines of Shakspeare, Parts I. to V.

Our Subscribers and the Public are apprised that, from this date, the Numbers comprised in Vols. 1, 2, and 3 of the Illustrated London News (Nos. 1 to 87, inclusive), cannot be sold separately, but only in Volumes. This alteration, rendered imperative by the constant demand for back Numbers, will, we trust, suggest to our Subscribers the necessity of keeping their Sets of our Journal perfect, in order to insure its entirety as an unique Illustrated History of Our Own Times.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1846

No nation has received such severe lessons as to the necessity of caution in parting with its money as England; and, as if those lessons had been given in vain, no nation has ever parted with it more carelessly. There was a time when any investment for capital seemed preferable to employing it at home; foreign loans especially were favourite objects of competition. No matter what might be the state, the form of government, the character of the people, the resources of the land, if any foreign power wanted a few millions of English money, it had only to ask and have. The funds poured in from all quarters from persons anxious to become the fortunate holders of the bonds of some decrepid and rotten monarchy, or the "securities" (the very word seems a satire) of some mushroom republic, whose place on the map was unknown to the mass of its creditors. The temptation of a higher percentage than could be got in the steady English Money Market was not to be resisted; and a Government of a month old had only to "guarantee" a high rate of interest to command nearly as much money as they liked from the mingled cupidity and gullibility of the English middle classes. It is strange, too, but true, that the persons generally the most cautious in their dealings at home rushed the most readily into the gulf opened for them and their fortunes by the speculations in foreign loans. Cautious people, who never could imagine their money safe enough in England, who would suspect the soundness of every mortgage, and look askance even at Exchequer Bills, were but too happy if they could get their troublesome hundreds taken off their hands by the agents of some Spanish republic, where a revolution once a month was the lowest average.

Any of the European Monarchies, of course, came into the market with still better chances; whether to keep a crown on the head of its holder, or to gain it for a pretender, the wealth of good-natured England was alike available. Yet it may be a matter of doubt, which, among all the various Governments who profited by our mania for plunging into foreign speculation, has behaved with the most unblushing bad faith and dishonesty. Pennsylvania is now an old example; but there being signs of amendment, however slow, we place that State out of the list of defaulters, giving her the benefit of a doubt, which never at any time applied to her ability to meet her obligations. But Greece, Mexico, Spain, Portugal—all and each are still causes of vexation to their too confiding creditors: the foreign loan system flourished most in the days anterior to railroads; whatever may have been the amount of money unwisely or wastefully expended in these undertakings, they have at least kept our capital at home, and under the control of its possessors. Further lessons of the impunity with which the holder of Foreign Stock can be robbed were scarcely needed, but they are perpetually being furnished; the most recent teacher is Portugal; the "financial plan" of the Ministry of that country just announced is simply a robbery of its foreign creditors of one-fifth of their dividends! Should the experiment be successful, their property will doubtless be confiscated at every crisis of "embarrassment," till it comes to nothing—and then some patriotic Portuguese Statesman will doubtless congratulate the Cortes on the freedom of the country from debt! This very loan furnished the money by which the present Queen was placed on the throne; but from any nation of the Spanish blood, whether allied to it, like the Portuguese, or descended from it, like the States of Mexico or South America, it seems hopeless to expect either gratitude, honesty, or good faith. Individually, they are proud, with the keenest sense of personal honour; their Governments do not appear to have a notion of what public honour means. Any one who reads the despatches of the Duke of Wellington, will require no other confirmation of the axiom that no official declaration of a Spaniard or a Portuguese can be depended on. The present instance is by no means the first in which the creditors of these countries have found this to be the case. The past cannot be recalled, but let it at least serve as a warning. Let it be remembered that individuals lending money to another State, have no remedy for a breach of faith. England will not engage in war for the sake of a few score of incautious capitalists; and whether the borrowing State is really bankrupt and unable, or fraudulent and unwilling, to pay its debts, the lenders are alike powerless; they cannot even interfere with their debtors, so as to bring about that better system of management, which, in some cases, would rescue all parties from the difficulty. But the mania for Foreign Loans is pretty well extinguished.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

New Metropolitan Churches.—A new Church is forthwith to be commenced in the extensive and populous parish of St. Mary, Bethnal Green, the Lord Mayor having undertaken to lay the foundation stone in the course of the present month. It will be erected in Hare-street, leading from Brick-lane, and will be dedicated to St. Matthias. The Rev. Joseph Brown, M.A., formerly of Norwood, has been appointed to the incumbency. A new Church in Old Street-road has been erected in the Gothic style, and it is expected that it will be consecrated by the Bishop of London in October.—In Commercial-street, Whitechapel, a spacious Church is in course of erection. It has a noble Norman tower, and will, probably, be ready for consecration in the course of the present year.

Sudden Death of a Clergyman.—On Wednesday the Rev. W. Harrison, one of the canons of Winchester Cathedral, expired at his house in the Close, without any apparent previous illness. The rev. gentleman, who was in his 78th year, went to bed in his usual health, and, finding himself ill the next morning, got out of bed, and dropped dead a few moments after leaving it.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Discovery of a Portion of the Old Palace of Bridewell.—A few days since, as the workmen were excavating on the site of Cogers' Hall, in Bride-lane, they came to a vault or dungeon belonging to the old Palace of Bridewell, which, in the reigns of William I., John, and Henry III., was used for holding their courts. Stow, in his "Survey," makes mention of this place, as extending from the Thames nearly to Fleet-street. The portion laid open, and now totally destroyed, consisted of a series of six groins, of elegant construction, supporting the roof of the apartment, 34 feet long and 17 feet broad, on the west side of which was discovered a window, completely blocked up with rubbish; but, by the judicious suggestions of the British Archæological Association, the work of removal proceeded with care, and, by their well-organised plans, drawings were made of the more interesting portions of the building. The window proved to be of very early work, and retained portions of the iron bars. In the rubbish was found a leaden bull of Pope Nicholas V., a small jutton or abbey piece, besides vast quantities of pottery, glass, and tiles, all of early construction, with human bones, as well as those of animals.

The National Gallery.—This institution was closed yesterday for six weeks, for the place to undergo a thorough cleansing, after which it will remain open till next September.

Thunder-storms in the Metropolis.—Last Sunday forenoon, a bright and sunny sky was suddenly obscured by a dense black cloud, and shortly after eleven a severe thunder-storm took place. The lightning was, for a time, exceedingly vivid, closely followed by very loud and long-echoing peals of thunder. The thunder continued to roll, with but slight intermission, till after three o'clock. A sharp hail shower fell at the commencement of the storm, and produced a singular effect, mingled as the hailstones were with the bright rays of the sun, which descended unobscured by "the war of the elements." Very little rain fell in the metropolis on Sunday forenoon. The storm was singular from the extreme partiality of the showers. A Correspondent, who went down the river to Margate, states that the day was most beautiful. There was not the slightest sign of a storm or of rain, and the sea was as smooth as glass. At Islington, it rained very heavily during nearly an hour, whilst on the south side of the City-road scarcely a drop fell. A severe shower came down in the immediate neighbourhood of Seymour-street, Somers'-town, whilst the back of Mornington-crescent, scarcely a stone's throw distant, was left perfectly dry. Along the line of the Richmond Railway the fall was copious and continuous, whilst in Chelsea, on the north side of the Thames, no wet whatever was observed. There was another storm on Monday at the western suburbs of the metropolis, which appears to have been very severely felt at Windsor, and other places to the west and north-west of London.

Proposed Improvements in the City.—On Tuesday a deputation from the inhabitants of Tower-street and its vicinity, consisting of Mr. Howell, Mr. Barber, Mr. Finnis, and other influential and respectable residents, waited upon the Lord Mayor for the purpose of representing to his Lordship the great danger of life and limb that arose from the narrow state of Tower-street, which had become almost wholly impassable to passengers, in consequence of the vast increase of commerce. The object of the deputation was to induce the Lord Mayor, as one of the Commissioners of Metropolitan Improvements, so to communicate the exact condition of that crowded thoroughfare to his brother Commissioners as would lead to as speedy a correction of the evil as possible. The Lord Mayor stated that a deputation had been received by the Commissioners, and had given evidence before them as to the most advisable means of remedying the evil complained of. He advised the deputation to convene a meeting of the inhabitants, and determine whether the line recommended before the Commissioners should be that adopted in the application to Parliament; and he said he was satisfied that the Commissioners would render all the assistance in their power to procure an improvement which would add so many facilities of trade to that part of the city of London. The improvements suggested consisted of a new street from Trinity-street, passing through Seething-lane, Mark-lane, and Mincing-lane, and coming out near St Margaret Pattens Church, by Rood-lane; it was also contemplated to make a thoroughfare at the Postern-row, which would be a vast accommodation to all the eastern parts of the metropolis, and particularly to the enormous traffic of the docks. His Lordship said that, if the inhabitants assembled and determined upon a plan, means would be at once adopted to prepare a bill for introduction into Parliament. The deputation intimated that the meeting would be called, and the suggestions of his Lordship acted on.

Cost of the City Wellington Statue.—The sum subscribed for the Equestrian statue was £11,619 11s. 11d.; the expenses of Committee meetings, collection, &c., did not exceed £1,120 14s. 11d., and the money paid to Sir Francis Chantrey and his executors was £10,487 17s.; yet the metal was given by Government!

Removal of the Tower Armoury.—On Wednesday, the removal of the collection of ancient arms and armour, hitherto kept within the ante-room of the Tower of London, commenced. They will now be deposited in that part of the fortress formerly used as a menagerie, and which has been fitted up for their reception. The ante-room, old guard-house, and the celebrated canteens, called the Stone Kitchen and Golden Chain, are all being demolished to make way for the improvements.

The Swedish journals represent the potato crop in Scania to be generally attacked by the prevailing disease, and state that the wheat and rye crops are likely to be very inferior this year

We learn from Hamburg that the commercial house of Hincke and Co. of that city, which stopped payment about a month ago, has been formally declared bankrupt. The debts are said to amount to 9,102,635f.

POSTSCRIPT.

Murder and Mutilation at Chesterfield (Derbyshire).—A long inquiry has taken place at Hasland, near Chesterfield, Derbyshire, respecting the supposed murder of a man named George Collis, in December last. The mutilated remains of the body have been found, and some evidence has been given of a noise having been heard in the slaughter-house of a man named Platts, as if a person had been struck with a cleaver. A watch belonging to the deceased has been found in the possession of Platts, who is in custody. The inquest is not yet concluded; and, as the facts are yet but imperfectly known, we refrain from further details.

Serious Fire in Liverpool.—On Thursday evening, at half-past six o'clock, a fire broke out in the extensive sugar refinery of Messrs. Macfie and Co., Bachelor-street, Liverpool, and in three hours destroyed the whole premises and their contents. It originated in the upper story, five minutes after the workmen had descended. The loss will be about £40,000, but is covered by insurance. The representatives of the Globe, Phœnix, Norwich, Liverpool, Royal, and other offices, were present. The fire-police behaved with great skill and courage, and by their exertions saved the surrounding dwellings, which were in considerable danger.

Sudden Death at the Curragh Meeting.—On Tuesday, as the horses for the Anglesey Stakes were coming up to the winning post, at the Curragh of Kildare, Robert Latouche, Esq., of Kilcullen, dropped down dead. A medical gentleman at his side opened a vein, but it was useless, as death was immediate. Mr. Latouche was about thirty-three years of age, and for some time back he had been labouring under disease of the heart, and it is supposed the excitement of the moment was the immediate cause of his death. He filled the office of High Sheriff of the county Kildare about three years ago. Mr. Latouche was not married.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

Italy.—According to official accounts from Leghorn, about the late earthquakes, it appears that two villages, Craona and Lorenzana, were entirely destroyed, and that twenty-seven districts, towns, villages, and hamlets, had more or less suffered. The number of those who perished was 70; of the wounded, 521; and of persons left without asylum through the destruction of their habitations, from 3000 to 4000.

POLICE.

RE-EXAMINATION OF A RAILWAY DIRECTOR CHARGED WITH FORGERY.

The re-examination of Capt. Wm. Richardson, Chairman of the Tenbury, Worcester, and Ludlow Railway Company, on the charge of forging a check for £5000, with intent to defraud Messrs. Coutts and Co., the eminent bankers, was resumed at the Mansion House on Wednesday.

Mr. Bush attended for the prosecution, and Mr. Clarkson and Mr. Wolff for the prisoner.

Mr. Clarkson said the principal question was, whether the prosecutor would be able to establish a charge of forgery. The following witnesses were then called:—

Mr. Henry Skinner examined: I am clerk to the Wexford, Waterford, and Wicklow Railway Company. Captain Richardson, the prisoner, is a Director of that railway company. I have known the prisoner since October last. I remember going to the Bank of England for him with a note for £1000. That was in the month of July last. That was the only note for such an amount that I ever received from the prisoner. At the time I received this note my name was written on the back of it. The note now produced is the same. I changed the note at the Bank of England, as directed, for 500 sovereigns and £500 in notes.

Mr. F. W. Cruse examined: I am clerk in the Bank of England. I remember the last witness bringing in a note for £1000 to the Bank, which was cashed in notes amounting to £500, and 500 sovereigns.

Mr. George Brunn examined: I am clerk in the London and County Bank. I know Captain Richardson, but not previous to the 19th of August last. On that day the prisoner came to the bank and went into the manager's room. He soon came out again and asked for notes to be given to him for 800 sovereigns, which was accordingly done. The notes now produced are the same as those given to the prisoner.

William Abbott, messenger, 26, Cornhill, examined: I know the prisoner, Captain Richardson; I have been employed by him occasionally. In August last he (the prisoner) gave me 800 sovereigns to take to the Bank and exchange them for notes, which I did, and afterwards delivered them to Captain Richardson on the north side of the Royal Exchange. I did not notice the number of the notes.

Mr. Thomas Agar examined: I am a clerk in the Bank of England. The notes now produced are the same that I exchanged for 800 sovereigns on the 19th or 20th of August last. I know the porter who brought them to the Bank, having seen him on several former occasions.

Mr. Archibald Griffith examined: I am a clerk in the Bank of England. On the 26th August notes for £200 were asked to be exchanged for 200 sovereigns, which was done; the notes now produced, which were found at the prisoner's house, are the same.

The next witness was Mr. Fry, solicitor to the company.

Mr. Fry said, I was present at a meeting of the Directors of the company in Palace-yard, in August last, when it was discovered that a fraud amounting to £5000 had been committed. Captain Richardson was in the chair.

Mr. Clarkson: Were you attending the meeting in your capacity as solicitor to the company?—Mr. Fry: Yes, I was.

Mr. Clarkson, upon this, submitted that Mr. Fry's evidence could not be received, as all he knew was in his professional character. The Lord Mayor decided that Mr. Clarkson was right, and the evidence was rejected.

Mr Robinson, a clerk in the issue department of the Bank of England, proved that the notes produced of the value of £200, which were found at the prisoner's house, were the same as he exchanged on the 20th of August for gold. The party asking for the exchange gave the name of Richardson.

Benjamin Soares Willis, clerk in the office of Smith, Payne, and Co., proved receiving a letter from Captain Richardson, requesting that they would credit his agent with £300. The letter was dated Dublin, 3rd July.

Mr. Clarkson said there could not be a doubt but that the prisoner exchanged notes for gold, at the Bank of England, but there was no evidence to prove that those notes were any part of the produce of the £5000 forged cheque.

Mr. Stevenson, examined: I am one of the Directors of the Tenbury, Worcester, and Ludlow Railway Company. I attended a meeting of the Directors in Palace-yard, on the 13th of July, but I do not recollect seeing a cheque for £10 signed by the prisoner. I have no recollection of having seen cheques drawn for £10, £20, and £100.

Mr. Wm. Pulsford, examined: I am Secretary to the company. I received the letter now produced on the 15th of July; it was addressed to me. The cover is lost or mislaid. Do not recollect any cheques being signed on that day (15th July). This witness underwent a long examination as to the attendance of different Directors on various board days, but the particulars were of no general interest, and did not appear to bear on the case. I remember a cheque for £10 being drawn and given to me by Captain Richardson. I asked him if I should give the party in whose favour it was drawn cash for it when he called. The prisoner replied "No, it had better go in the regular way," which was accordingly done.

Mr. Stevenson was called and re-examined; Although my name is entered in the minute book, as being present at the meeting of Directors on the 7th of July, I feel confident that I was not there on that day. The witness, however, after referring to some memoranda, said, I believe now that I was present at the meeting held on the 7th of July. I have no recollection of having signed any cheque on that day, or on the 15th July. I remember receiving a letter from Mr. Pulsford, the Secretary of the company, some time in the month of June or July, containing three cheques, one for £10, one for £20, and the other for £100. I signed all the cheques as requested, and returned them to Mr. Pulsford. I believe the cheque now produced for £5000 is signed by me. I have no doubt the signature to this cheque is mine. I never remember ever having put my signature to a blank cheque. All the cheques I signed had been previously signed by one or more other Directors of the company. I never signed a blank cheque.

Mr. Clarkson: Upon the solemn oath you have taken, did you never sign a blank cheque in behalf of this company?—Witness: Never that I can recollect.

Mr. Clarkson: Did not the prisoner call at your house in Grosvenor-street, and give you some blank cheques to sign?—Witness: I have no recollection of any such thing. I remember the prisoner calling on me in Grosvenor-street, but I have no recollection of his asking me to sign blank cheques which had been previously signed by Mr. Whitmore. I think this was in June; but I feel certain that I did not on that occasion sign four blank cheques. Upon my oath, I will swear positively that to the best of my recollection I never signed a blank cheque.

Mr. Clarkson, at this stage of the proceedings, said this case was of the greatest importance to the public. No doubt a fraud amounting to £5000 had been committed, but the question was, whether the party charged had been guilty of forgery. The duty of the Lord Mayor was to ascertain whether or not there was sufficient prima facie evidence to warrant the prisoner's committal. The learned counsel, after some comments upon the evidence, asked that the prisoner should be admitted to bail.

Mr. Bush opposed the application.

The Lord Mayor said be was of opinion there was sufficient evidence to send the prisoner to trial at the ensuing sessions of the Central Criminal Court.

Mr. Clarkson contended that Mr. Whitmore, the other Director who signed the £5000 cheque, ought to be produced before the prisoner was fully committed for trial; surely if due diligence was used, Mr. Whitmore, a gentleman of respectability, might be found.

Mr. Bush said, he had no doubt the proceedings of this day, which would be published in the newspapers, would be sufficient to induce Mr. Whitmore to attend on the trial.

Mr. Clarkson: That is not what I want. It is clear to me that no forgery has been committed, and therefore the prisoner should be admitted to bail.

After a short discussion, the Lord Mayor ordered the prisoner to be remanded until Friday next, the 18th instant.

REVOLTING DESECRATION OF A CHURCHYARD.

At Worship-street, on Saturday last, a man, who gave his name John Gardner, and said he lived at No. 6, Hertford-street, Haggerstone, applied to Mr. Broughton, to advise and assist him under the following circumstances:—

He stated that about half-past six that morning, as he was passing a waste piece of ground (situated over the Kingsland-road-bridge, by the side of the Regent's Canal, in the possession of Mr. King), where rubbish was shot, his attention was drawn to the spot, by seeing a number of persons, who were raking over a large heap of rubbish that had just been shot. He went up to them, and was horror-stricken to find that it consisted of nearly six cart-loads of pieces of coffins and human bones, some of which had the flesh still adhering to them. There was also a person's head, with the hair on it, the face of which was so little decomposed, that it might be identified. The coffins had very few of them been under ground, and some were almost new. The crowd, which consisted of the poor cottagers of the neighbourhood, and their children, were busy in despoiling the coffins of the metal plates and handles, to sell to the marine-store dealers, and the wood they were taking home for their fires. On making inquiry, he found that the matter in question had been brought there but a short time before by some carts in the employ of Mr. Gould, the dust-contractor of Shoreditch. The effluvium was dreadful, and the applicant, fearing the consequences that might arise, if its removal were neglected, instantly went to the police-station in the district, and then came down to that court.

The applicant's statement created the greatest sensation in court; and Mr. Broughton having sent for Holland, the warrant officer, in whose district it was, Holland said the same statement had been made at the station, and he had no doubt the police were now on the spot.

After the lapse of about three hours, Holland and the applicant returned to the office, accompanied by Inspector Tarleton, of the M division, and Waller, the beadle of Shoreditch, and the statements made by them fully corroborated that of the applicant. Holland said that the whole place was in a state of the greatest excitement. On getting into the field, he saw a great quantity of broken coffins and human bones strewed in all directions about the field. There were not then so many as the applicant stated, but he had no doubt but that there had been, for several of Mr. King's men were then busy burying the stuff. The grossest indecencies were being practised; human bones in the state described by the applicant were being kicked about in all directions. He found a skull, the jaw of which had been tied up with a handkerchief, and which was stained with blood: this was being kicked about. He then went round to the marine store shops in the neighbourhood, and found that above 20lb. of metal plates and handles had been disposed of. He also found a quantity of coffin wood that had been removed to the poor people's houses about the place, and which had been broken up for fires. From appearances, he should have thought the coffins and bodies had also been broken up with either pickaxes or spades.

Inspector Tarleton corroborated this statement, and added that he went to Mr. Gould's yard, and saw the two men who had carted the stuff, and they told him that it had been brought from a vault in Friday-street, which they had cleared out about ten days previously.

Some inquiries have since been made into this case, and some additional facts have transpired.

It has been ascertained that the vaults of St. Matthew's Church have been cleared out, as stated, and that the building itself was undergoing repair. Upon the church door was posted the following notice, which confirms the statement as to who gave the order for the removal of the remains;—"St. Matthew's, Friday-street—Notice is hereby given, that there will be no service in this church on Sunday, the 6th day of September, 1846, in consequence of repairs Dated Friday, September 4, 1846. Signed W. Liddiard and John Mair, churchwardens" Mr. Jeremiah Long, the senior churchwarden of St Leonard's, Shoreditch, has spared no pains in trying to find out the perpetrators of such shameful desecration. He has also exerted himself to find out the friends of the persons whose remains have been discovered. Waller, the beadle, was sent, on Saturday, by churchwarden Long, to take charge of all the pieces of coffins and remains of bodies he could find. Upon his return to the field, he found that a vast quantity of bones, pieces of coffins, &c., had been deposited in holes made in the ground. He, however, found about two or three bushels of remains, which he took possession of, and they were interred in the consecrated ground belonging to the parish in the Hackney-road. The remains of the coffins prove that some of them were of recent construction. One is only eight years old. The plate has been cleaned, and has been found to bear the following:—"E. C. Connell, died 21st February, 1838." Another has the following inscription: "Master John Ingleby, died the 5th February, 1834." A third plate bears the name of "Ann Webb, died" the month and also the year are, however, not perfectly legible. The police and also the parish authorities, are making every endeavour to find out the friends of the deceased so as to bring the offence home to the proper parties.

The Sale of Poisonous Berries At the Thames Police-office on Saturday last, John Hilliard, the man who sold berries of the atropa belladonna, or deadly nightshade, was re-examined, and after some additional evidence had been given, Mr. Ballantine committed him for trial for the wilful murder of Thomas Parker, late proprietor of the Veteran beershop, in the Whitechapel-road, and Samuel Jones, a child, aged three years. The circumstances have been detailed in our paper.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

Curious and Fatal Accident.—On Monday night an inquest was held by Mr. Bedford, at the Griffin Tavern, Villiers-street, Strand, on the body of Charles Wells, aged forty-two, a basket-maker, in James-street, Covent-garden. Mr Horry appeared on the part of a man named Redman, who was in custody, and who was alleged to have caused the death. Thomas Smith, of Bartlett-court, stated that about eight or nine o'clock on Saturday morning he saw Redman going up Bow-street with a sack of potatoes on his shoulders. The deceased and another man were talking opposite the Grapes public-house, and Redman went against him, which threw him into the road, and at that instant a greengrocer's cart was passing at a slow pace. The deceased fell under the horse's feet, which tramped on his head. As soon as he was released he was taken to the Charing cross Hospital, but he died about two o'clock. The street was very crowded, and Redman could not see the deceased for the sack on his shoulders. The house-surgeon said the cause of death was two fractures of the skull. The deceased was tipsy, and some of the witnesses said Redman pushed deceased with his hands, as the sack was falling. After other evidence, the Jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

Sudden Death of a Centenarian during the Storm of Sunday. On Tuesday an inquest was held before W. Carter, Esq., at the King John's Head, Bermondsey-square, on the body of Thomas Harbut, who used to say he was in his hundredth year. Thomas Harbut, the grandson of the deceased, of No. 3, Long-wall, Bermondsey, stated that the deceased was formerly a tanner, but of late years an inmate of Bermondsey workhouse. He always went to church on a Sunday, and afterwards witness or his brother took him a walk, previous to going home to dine with them. On last Sunday he met him at his brother's, and was in excellent health and spirits. When they got home to his lodgings, deceased had some beer and a pipe, and while sitting at the door a very heavy storm of thunder came on, and a gentleman said, "Look how that poor man has been struck by the thunder, and is turning up his eyes?" Upon looking at his grandfather, he found it was so, and removed him into the yard, where he was very sick. He got better, and laid down; and when witness returned in half an hour he thought he was asleep, but it was afterwards discovered that he was quite dead. The evidence was corroborated by the brother and another witness, and the Jury returned a verdict of "Natural death."

Murder by a Poacher near Exeter.—On the night of Saturday last, Festus Harris, the gamekeeper, and James Norman, the gardener of Sir W. P. Carew, the High Sheriff, of Haccombe House, Newton Abbot, near Exeter, were on the watch, and ascertaining that poachers were on the grounds, they called to their assistance six other persons, amongst whom were Mr Robert Rendell, of Netherton, and William Setter, of Coombinteignhead. These parties met in a field called Blendfield, between eleven and twelve at night, and surrounded the place where the poachers were. Mr. Rendell and Setter went to the gate of Kiln Field, and whilst there heard the rest call out "gate," a signal previously arranged. They perceived some one running towards them with a gun in his hand, and on approaching them discovered it was one Henry Warren. They ran into the field, and Warren raised his gun as if to fire Mr. Rendell called out, "You'd better not fire;" but immediately Warren fired at Setter, and without taking the gun from his shoulder, discharged the other barrel at Mr. Rendell. The shot passed by the side of Mr. Rendell's head, but, alas! the aim at Setter was more deadly; he received the whole contents in his body, causing a wound two inches in length, from the effects of which the unfortunate man lingered until a quarter-past two on Sunday afternoon, when he expired at the house of Mr. Elias Rendell, Buckland, where he had been taken immediately after the occurrence. On a post mortem examination, a number of small [illegible] shot were found, lacerating most frightfully the liver, and injuring the bone. The surgeon also found a piece of deceased's watch-chain, which had been carried into the wound. The prisoner was, after a scuffle, secured by Mr. Rendell, and the next day taken before H. Cartwright, Esq., who (with the assistance of Mr. Flamank), having made the depositions of the various witnesses, and that of the dying man, committed him to take his trial at the next assizes for wilful murder, and also for shooting at Mr. Rendell. He said to Mr. Rendell, when in custody, he was very sorry he had done it, and he wished his gun had broken in pieces when first he took it in his hand. The prisoner's mate, who was out with him, has been also committed to gaol, on the charge of poaching.

Fatal Accident on the Nottingham and Lincoln Railway. On Monday a fatal accident occurred on the Nottingham and Lincoln Railway, at Gonalstone, eight or nine miles from Nottingham. At twelve o'clock the train left the station at Nottingham for Lincoln, and proceeded as usual till reaching the portion of the line near the village of Gonalstone, when a spring underneath the fore part of the engine snapped, and caused the engine to oscillate, and jump up and down in a fearful manner. The engine-driver shut off the steam, and the next instant was precipitated, head foremost, to the ground. The stoker, a young man of the name of Henry Glover, unable to keep his feet, fell, and was caught between the tender and the engine, upon the upper part of both his thighs. Here he was transfixed, and could not extricate himself, the engine and tender at the same time being whirled off the rails, and, as it were, actually doubled up; but, owing to the chain attaching them to the engine suddenly breaking, and there being two or three trucks and a luggage-van between the engine and the passenger carriages, the mischief did not extend to the passengers, and the train came to a stand, without any other individual sustaining damage. The alarm was very great; the shrieks and cries of the passengers rent the air, and were heard many hundred yards distant; directly afterwards, numbers were seen running in all directions across the fields for safety, and they could not be induced to go near the train again. The poor unfortunate stoker could not be removed from his awful situation by human strength, and horses were obtained from Gonalstone to separate the engine and tender, to set him at liberty; he remained in this deplorable condition for more than a quarter of an hour. Many of the passengers returned to Nottingham on foot, and would not venture again in the train. The stoker was conveyed to the General Hospital, with his thigh bones protruding, and with the flesh smashed to atoms. On leaving his driver, the dying man shook hands, and bade him farewell. He only survived a few hours He was twenty-six years of age, and has left a wife, but no family.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Letters from Rome speak of the progress of railway matters in the Papal States. The Pope has formed a general committee to examine the proposals which have been made by the house of Torlonia and by several English companies, for the construction of a complete network of railways, in which report they will set forth and consider the various systems adopted in other countries.

A letter from Geneva, 1st inst., states that the Canton of Vaud has ceded the valley of Dappes to France for a sum of 300,000f. The contract for its sale will be submitted for ratification to the Swiss Diet at its next meeting. The ceded valley will be officially united to the department of the Jura. No objection appears to have been raised to this arrangement by the inhabitants of the valley, who will continue to enjoy, as heretofore, an exemption from customs' duties.

It is stated, under the date of Alexandria, Aug. 19, that the current report that some cases of Asiatic cholera had manifested themselves in the hospitals is void of foundation. Ibrahim Pacha wished to remain at Alexandria until the arrival of his father, but matters of importance required his presence at Cairo, where he arrived on the 14th August. The Nile had risen twenty feet, and continued rising.

A great many Indian rupees are in circulation in the City, and, from a similarity of resemblance, readily pass for half-crowns; the real value, however, is less than 2s. A tradesman in Farringdon-street took three last week in one day.

It is to be noticed as a most remarkable thing, that notwithstanding the excitement in some quarters at the idea of a glut of foreign corn, an almost unprecedented circumstance occurred a day or two ago, namely, the sale of two cargoes of Lincolnshire wheat, to be shipped direct from Lincolnshire to France.

The last arrivals from Stockholm, of the date of the 28th ult, state that the King and Queen of Sweden may now be considered in an advanced state of convalescence. On the 27th the King signed an ordonnance abolishing all games of chance at the waters of Ramloese (Scama), the only place in Sweden where gambling was allowed.

Some of the share-dealing members of the Hall of Commerce have met for the purpose of adopting measures for the formation of a new Stock Exchange on a small scale, but the arrangements are as yet in embryo.

The Courrier Belge of the 5th contains an account of the late fire at Leipsic, which broke out on the evening of the 29th ult., at the Hotel de Pologne, and which continued to rage during the whole night. A correspondent of the Gazette de Cologne states that three persons lost their lives by the falling of a roof, and that five or six others were seriously wounded; but the Gazette Universelle Allemande, which is published at Leipsic, officially announces the number of killed at five and wounded at nine.

The Prince de Joinville embarked at Naples on the 28th ult. on board the French packet Rhamses, with the intention of visiting Rome. The Prince was accompanied by his aides-de-camp, several officers of the squadron, and his chaplain, Abbé Coquereau. On landing at Civita Vecchia, his Royal Highness was received with all the honours due to his rank. The Prince immediately set out for Rome, where his stay was not to be of long duration.

A policeman has been dismissed from the Birmingham force because he refused to go down a lane which was on his beat, where he said he had seen his uncle's ghost.

The Protectionists of Essex are about to give a dinner to the Duke of Richmond and Lord George Bentinck. It will take place at Chelmsford, on the 25th instant.

On the morning of the 31st ult., while the workmen at the Hamburg Theatre were hoisting to its place a splendid bronze chandelier for gas lights, just brought from London, and weighing above 10,800lbs., the rope broke, and the enormous mass, falling to the ground, was broken to pieces, crushing two Englishmen who had come over to superintend its being suspended.

M. Dumont, the Minister of Public Works at Paris, arrived in London a few days ago.

The Leeds Mercury says that there never was a season in which the principal watering places in Yorkshire and other parts of the kingdom were so full of company as at present, and this is chiefly accounted for by the cheapness of travelling and the other facilities that are given to visitors by railway.

The French Scientific Congress opened its sittings at Marseilles on the 1st inst. An opening speech was delivered by M. Roux, in which he pointed out the numerous claims which Marseilles possessed as a suitable place for their present scientific meeting, after which M. de Caumont was named President, and MM. de Cussy, Forbin-Janson, Wulfrand Puget, and Cauvière, Vice-Presidents.

The American papers state that by a recent arrival at New Bedford, advices have been received from Tahiti to April 15th. The natives had made a vigorous assault upon the French garrison, and had driven them from the land. The European residents had been compelled to flee with their effects on board the French vessels-of-war. After the evacuation of the town the French vessels opened a fire upon it.

During the recent session the Royal Assent was given to no less than 570 bills.

Lord Ashley is to be the Conservative candidate at the ensuing election for the Lord Rectorship of Glasgow Lord John Russell and Mr. Macaulay are severally spoken of as likely to stand on the Whig interest.

Mr. John Dodgson, of Ulverston, last week nearly lost his life by the sting of a bee. The insect punctured the jugular vein.

A letter from St. Petersburgh, of the 22nd ult., says:—"The Empress of Russia, whose delicate constitution cannot bear the severe winters of this country, will leave St. Petersburgh at the end of September, or the beginning of October at the latest, for her delightful villa of Orianda, in the Crimea, on the banks of the Sea of Azof, where her Majesty intends to reside until next spring."

By an Act of Parliament passed in the late session the gauge on which railways are to be constructed is defined. The gauge is to be 4 feet 8½ inches in Great Britain, and 5 feet 3 inches in Ireland. It is enacted by the 4th section, "That it shall not be lawful, after the passing of this act, to alter the gauge of any railway used for the conveyance of passengers."

It is announced officially, that Government do not intend, at present, to take any measure for revising the laws relative to the Militia, or for assembling that force for training and exercise.

Letters from Naples announce that the extreme heat had entirely dried up the country parts. The peasants could find no water for their cattle, which were perishing of thirst, and making the air resound with their cries. The shepherds saw their sheep dying daily before their eyes for want of pasturage. The Government was occupied in despatching water to the districts which suffered most from the drought, at a certain rate of quantity per family. In some parts of the country water was sold at the price of wine. The capital alone was exempt from the sufferings of this extraordinary drought, which had already led to tumultuous movements among the people.

The Nuremberg Correspondent of the 3rd inst. announces that his Holiness the Pope has determined to commence forthwith the railroad from Rome to Naples. The funds are to be provided by a daily subscription during five years, after which debentures of 100 scudi each, bearing interest, are to be given to the subscribers.

During the week ending the 6th inst., the number of persons passing between England and France, was—At Boulogne, 2583; Calais, 610: total, 3193.

The Brighton Gazette states that the turnip crop is affected by a destructive disease. Some instances, it says, have come under its own knowledge in Brighton.

Sir George Clerk and Sir H. Pottinger are spoken of in the Indian papers as likely to succeed to the Governorship of Bombay.

Mehemet Ali arrived at Alexandria on the 24th ult., when he was received with every demonstration of respect. His Highness left on the 29th for Cairo.

The Brussels papers mention a great misfortune which took place on the 6th in the coal mine of Baremont, near Charleroi an explosion of fire damp, which killed eight workmen. Two other workmen were burnt, but not severely, so they continued their work. The director of the works cannot account for the accident; he had visited the mine just before, and there was no appearance of danger.

The Government of Hesse Darmstadt has just published a decree against the forestallers of corn and other provisions; this decree orders that "Intrigues to raise the price of corn in an illegal manner shall be punished by imprisonment, which may be for three months, or by fine from 50 to 3000 florins. The fact itself shall be punished with heavier penalties, viz., three months to two years imprisonment, and 1000 to 6000 florins fine."

In consequence of the important intelligence from the Pacific, according to the Armoricain of Brest, orders have been given by the French Government to prepare the corvettes the Alker, the Somme, and the Loire, to convey troops, amounting to 1600 men, to Tahiti.

The Weser Gazette announces that the King of Denmark has received a letter from the Emperor of Russia in which the Czar signifies that he is ready not only to renounce his pretensions to the eventual succession to the Grand Dukedom, but even to induce the Grand Duke of Oldenburg to withdraw his protest against the letter patent, on condition that the King of Denmark will, with promptitude and energy, oppose all revolutionary proceedings in the duchies both now and hereafter.

On Sunday morning the tide run out so low, that the Venezuela steam-ship, bound to Havre, deeply laden with passengers and goods, grounded over the Thames Tunnel, where she remained for two hours, till the tide flowed. Not a brick was started, and no damage whatever was done to the works.

Lord Dudley Coutts Stuart has contradicted the statement published in the Frankfort Journal, to the effect that the sequestration which had been laid on the property of the Princess Czartoryski, in Gallicia, had, in consequence of an august mediation, been withdrawn, but that the Prince, her husband, was to sign an engagement not to interfere henceforth in Polish affairs.

A sham fight took place on the 4th instant, near Strasburg, in the presence of the Duke de Montpensier, the Prince de Baden, and his other guests. The ground was chosen by General André, near an arm of the Ill, not far from the mouth of the canal which connects that river with the Rhine. All the manœuvres were executed with great spirit and precision. In the evening the Princes honoured the theatre with their presence.

LITERATURE.

A Visit to the Antipodes: with some Reminiscences of a Sojourn in Australia. By A Squatter. Smith, Elder, and Co.

This little volume is somewhat timidly put forth by the Author, who fears there is nothing absolutely new to relate of our Antipodes. His record of the voyage out is but slight. The details of his Visit are more interesting. The following is life-like and literally descriptive of An Australian Landscape.

"The life of an Australian squatter bears a strong resemblance to the patriarchal modes recorded in ancient Jewish history. Wealth consists in flocks and herds. The character of the population is entirely pastoral, the habits are primitive and rude. The shepherd wanders over the country with his flocks, and at night brings them to the fold, where watchmen and dogs are posted to guard them from the attacks of prowling wolves. The dwellings, which are mean and simple, are occasionally abandoned as pasture becomes scarce. The modes of life and sorts of occupation are migratory, roving, unsocial, unsettled, and, consequently, the nearest approximation to the savage state that civilised society admits of. Like many beautiful pictures which look enchanting in perspective, a great part of the poetry and romance vanishes on a near approach.

'Tis distance lends enchantment to the view

"The country is peculiar, but not by any means without interest. The surface is for the most part hilly, the elevations being of moderate height and continuous, generally wooded to the summits. On this last account, though the trees are scattered and far apart, a view of the country from an eminence gives the appearance of an extensive forest. The gum trees, an important feature in the landscape, are generally branchless to a considerable height, when twined and serpentine boughs project from the trunk, bearing small clusters of foliage, which droop gracefully from the extremities. The leaves are long and narrow. Thus the forest trees are seldom impervious to the sun's rays, and do not afford the pleasant shade which forest trees in England yield. There is a bareness about the under portions, which to an English eye seems to require filling up. The grasses are peculiar: their period of verdure is short. They spring up as if by magic, and disappear almost as rapidly; so that in summer, the prospect, instead of being verdant and green, is yellow and withered looking. The kangaroo grass, which abounds in many parts, in summer, looks like a ripe field of barley. There are many other features in which an Australian scene differs from an English one. There is the grass tree, with its long pointed leaves, as sharp and hard as a spear, its blackened and knotted trunk, the groves of wattle, covered with yellow blossoms, which diffuse a delicious perfume for miles around, and the twining parasites that creep up the stunted gum, and hang in graceful drapery to the ground. Then the sounds which break the silence of the forest, are the hum of locusts in the trees on a hot day, the short, quick sound of grasshoppers springing up all around, and towards evening a concert by the bullfrogs about the water-holes and creeks, resembling in sound the drawing of innumerable corks. The effect on the whole is pleasing and strange. The sky in this climate is often for a month together without a cloud, and the sun's rays stream down uninterruptedly, giving a bright colour, almost a glare, to every object, which in the heat of the day is often oppressive and painful"

Practical Mercantile Correspondence. By William Anderson. Third Edition. E. Wilson.

The object of this work is to supply certain information to those whose mercantile education has been neglected; a very common case, by the way, even in our great commercial country. With this view, the volume before us contains a collection of Modern Letters of Business, with Notes, critical and explanatory; and an Appendix of pro formâ invoices, account-sales, bills of lading and exchange; and the German Chain Rule applied to the Calculation of Exchanges. The Letters," it should be explained, are not such fictions as we find in "the Polite Letter Writer;" but, a veritable Correspondence, with the names altered, and the dates somewhat disguised The extensive utility of such a work as the present is so obvious, that we shall only add our commendation of its execution, which is, in every department, most satisfactory.

Court Intrigues. By William Peake, Esq. 3 vols. T. C. Newby.

The author of these enticing volumes is the brother of the popular dramatist, Richard Peake; and, albeit unused to the writing mood, he has bestowed sufficient energy and research to weave from historical details the materials for an agreeable romance. The reign of Louis XIII. afforded ample examples of "Court Intrigues," of which the reader will find the record in these volumes. Although there is no affectation of deep reading on the part of the author, yet he seems to be fully acquainted with the history of the times, and of the leading personages who figured in them. He has drawn a powerful, although darkly-coloured, portrait of Cardinal Richelieu; and, altogether, the facts and fictions here pourtrayed excite deep interest in the reader. Historical novels generally find great favour with the public. This work is likely to obtain a fair share of patronage, because it has all the attractive features of fiction, with the more essential requisites of historical record.

IRELAND.

Mr. O'Connell and the Ministry.—At the meeting of the Repeal Association on Monday, Mr. O'Connell made a speech explanatory of the act passed last session for the relief of Ireland, and also avowed his determination to give his strong support to the Government. The hon. and learned gentlemen adverted in the first place to the potato failure, and deprecated all violence on the part of the people. He enjoined upon them the most peaceable submission, and then proceeded to detail how relief might be obtained under the recent act. He said that the act would suffice for any emergency, and then went on to show how the act was to be carried out. There was to be an application to the Lord Lieutenant in the first instance, then a proclamation from his Excellency—a proclamation, by the way, for the first time, not against but for the people. (Hear, hear.) The extent of work, or payment for it, was unlimited. He (Mr. O'Connell) thought that it would take thirteen millions of money to feed the Irish people this year. The money was to be repaid, but not this year; to be repaid, but not by the very poor classes. Five-eighths of it should be repaid by the landlords. (Hear, hear.) This law would teach the absentees a lesson. There was no doubt the landlords would grumble a good deal, but he had a remedy for them let them come to Conciliation Hall, and look for Repeal of the Union. (Hear, hear) Thus good would arise out of present evil, and a jewel would be found in the head of this hideous toad. He never in his life was more convinced than now of the necessity for Repeal. He admitted, indeed, that the present Government was doing all the good they could for Ireland; but he knew they would be unable to accomplish all that was necessary. In the meanwhile, he and his Association would give the Government all the support in their power. He was about to visit his mountain home, and during his absence would receive no communication on matters of business except through Mr. Ray. He wished to have his holidays uninterrupted. (Hear, hear.) Meanwhile, he would not be altogether idle. During his six weeks' absence he would write weekly letters to them. (Hear, hear.) He next repeated his various requirements for effecting "justice to Ireland"—the enlargement of the electoral franchises, and of the Municipal Act. If the Young Irelanders persisted in coming there, they should be turned out as often as they presumed to come. (Hear, hear.) They (the Old Irelanders) were not to be imposed upon. The physical force principle should be put down. The moral force principle would gain new triumphs every day. It was winning its way in France, in Prussia, and would be ultimately triumphant in Ireland. (Hear, hear, hear.) He must now take his leave of them for six weeks. He would in the interim entrust the Association to the management of his son, the hon. member for Kilkenny. (Hear, hear.) He would return to them, as he left, a thorough Repealer. (Hear, hear.) He was taunted with his support of the present Government, but he cared not. He would support them, and do his duty to the people of Ireland. (Cheers.) After some other proceedings of no particular interest, at half-past three o'clock Mr. O'Connell announced the rent for the week to be £142 15s.

Treatment of Paupers in St. Pancras Workhouse.—On Wednesday Mr. Wakley held an adjourned inquest at the Elephant and Castle Tavern, King's-road, Camden-town, to inquire into the circumstances attending the death of Mary Anne Jones, aged nineteen, late inmate of St. Pancras Workhouse. The finding of the body in the Regent's Canal on the 5th inst. having been proved, Jane Dowling, a girl about fifteen, deposed that she was living in the workhouse, and knew deceased, who had been at a place since the 2nd of June, and had been obliged to leave her situation because she had not enough to eat, nor did she like to return to the workhouse, lest she should be put into the "shed," by order of Miss Stone, the matron. The shed is a place of confinement in the workhouse, wherein the paupers are placed for misconduct. There are upwards of sixteen in it now. It consists of a dark room of about 26 feet long and 18 wide. Witness met deceased about five o'clock in the afternoon of the 1st inst., and in answer to witness's question, deceased said that she could not return to her place, as she had only two meals a day, consisting of breakfast and tea. She also said that she had been so ill-treated by Miss Stone, the matron, that rather than return to the "house" she would drown or poison herself. Witness had been in the workhouse five or six years, and had been kept in the "shed" for five months at a time, without going to any other part of the place. Deceased had been ten months in the "house," and fourteen weeks at her situation. In the shed we pick oakum and feathers. We have four ounces of meat three times a week, but witness had had none for a week, because she left her place. She had had nothing but salt and potatoes since last Thursday: not a morsel of meat. And when she went back to the "house," the matron put her into the "shed." Deceased had never been put in the black hole.—The Coroner What! is there a black hole too?—Witness: Yes, Sir; and I have been put in it I was once kept there for forty-eight hours, and was all night by myself, having nothing to eat or drink but bread and water.—James Hill, a waiter to persons in the "shed," corroborated the last witness's statement.—The Coroner: What food have you given to the last witness to-day?—Witness: Nothing but bread and water.—After an examination of the matron, Miss Stone, and Mr. Lee, the master of the workhouse, and after the surgeon of the workhouse had stated that he considered the "shed" an unhealthy place, the Jury returned the following verdict:—"We find that the deceased, Mary Anne Jones, drowned herself rather than return to the workhouse she being driven to distraction by the thought of the treatment to which she would be subjected in the 'shed;' and we cannot separate without expressing an unanimous opinion that the discipline therein is unnecessarily severe"

Births and Deaths in the Metropolis.—It appears from the official account of births and deaths in the Metropolis during the week ending September 5, that the number of deaths was Males, 434, females, 450. Births registered in the week.—Males, 461; females, 669. Weekly average derived from Deaths of 1841-2-3-4-5, and corrected for increase of population to the middle of 1846 Males, 493; females4, 7

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO JERSEY.

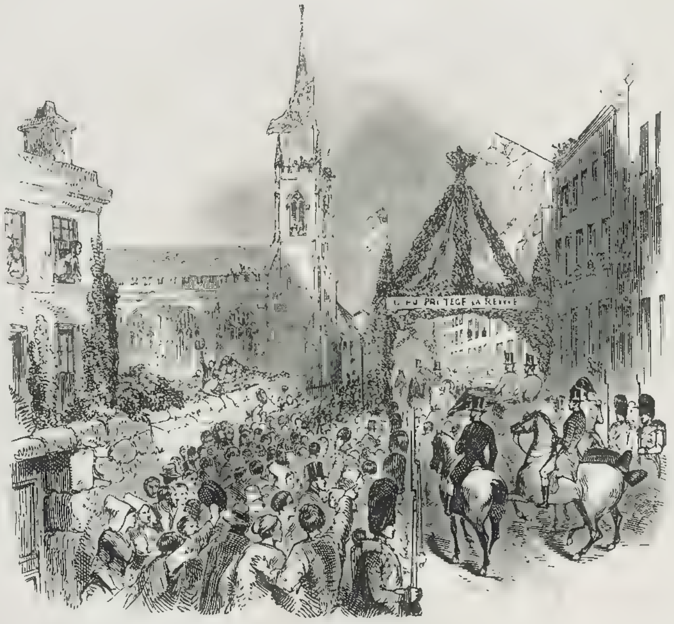
FROM SKETCHES BY OUR OWN ARTISTS.

Last week, we illustrated in our pages, the Visit of her Majesty and Prince Albert to "the privileges island" of Guernsey; an event which will long be gratefully remembered by the inhabitants of this ocean home. It was als arranged that the Royal squadron should visit Jersey, which lies about 18 miles south-east of Guernsey; but, on the morning of the 24th ult., a Pilot arrived at St. Helier, and announced to the Mayor that her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and the Princess Royal, with their suite, had visited Guernsey, and that the Queen was thence called by the pressure of public business to return to the Isle of Wight. It was, at the same time, intimated that the Royal visit would not be deferred many days.

Immediately upon the receipt of authentic intelligence that her Majesty would certainly visit Jersey, every exertion was made to carry out the well-devised plans of the Committees of the States, assisted by various public committees and individuals. A committee of ladies was also formed to make arrangements for the reception of her Majesty. Seats were erected throughout the whole extent of the promenade on the New Harbour, for the accommodation of at least 6000 persons, and the covered recess nearest the landing-place at the pier-head being elegantly fitted up and ornamented, was converted into a pavilion for her Majesty during the presentation of the addresses.

The certainty of having their hopes realised, incited the Committee to devise and carry into execution some most splendid pieces of ornamental architecture in the form of triumphal arches, which, for variety of design and richness of ornament, reflect the highest credit upon the parties erecting them. Many of these arches had appropriate mottoes inscribed on them, surmounted by the Royal arms, and tastefully worked in flowers, together with a number of flags and banners, bearing the words, "Welcome," "Long live our Queen," "Dieu protège la Reine," &c. These decorations were not confined to those parts of the island through which the Royal cortège was likely to pass, but were to be met with generally throughout the country parishes.

On Wednesday morning intelligence arrived that Captain Goodridge, sen., was on board the Royal yacht, and would have the honour of piloting the Royal Squadron into Jersey. About five o'clock in the afternoon the signal was made that the squadron was in sight, and thousands flocked to the heights commanding the bay of St. Aubin's; at six o'clock the Royal yacht, Victoria and Albert, followed by the Black Eagle, the Fairy, and the Garland, anchored in the bay, under a salute from Elizabeth Castle.



THE QUEEN PASSING ST. MARK'S CHURCH, JERSEY.

At night, the town and its environs, together with the bay and the heights, which could be seen from the Royal yacht, were illuminated, and a great number of rockets were let off; huge bonfires blazed upon the cliffs; the church steeples were also illuminated, and the signal-post at Fort Regent displayed a number of lanterns which produced a very pleasing effect.

On the first signal being given, the Ordnance yacht pushed from the New Harbour, having on board Colonels Dixon and Le Breton, representing the Governor, who was unable to present himself personally. Besides the Ordnance boat there was another bearing the Bailiff, Sir John de Veulle, and the Viscount Colonel Le Couteur, Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, as representatives of the States, accompanied by Mr. Chevalier, Harbour Master of St. Helier's. Her Majesty was most graciously pleased to permit an audience to the Bailiff and Colonels Le Couteur, Dixon, and Le Breton, receiving these gentlemen in the most affable manner, saying that she had heard much of the salubrity and beauty of the island, and was mindful of the loyalty at all times of its inhabitants; that she approved of the regulations as to the route submitted to her; and stated her Royal pleasure to land the next day at eleven o'clock, being informed by Mr. Chevalier that the tide would then suit.

On board the Royal yacht were her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, Lady Jocelyn, the Hon. Miss Kerr, the Dowager Lady Lyttelton, Earl Spencer, Viscount Palmerston, Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, Colonel Grey, and Sir James Clark.

Thursday opened with a beautiful morning. Her Majesty is said always to have fine weather when she travels; and the flags and arches, and the clean and gala aspect of the town, were true omens of the triumphs of the day.

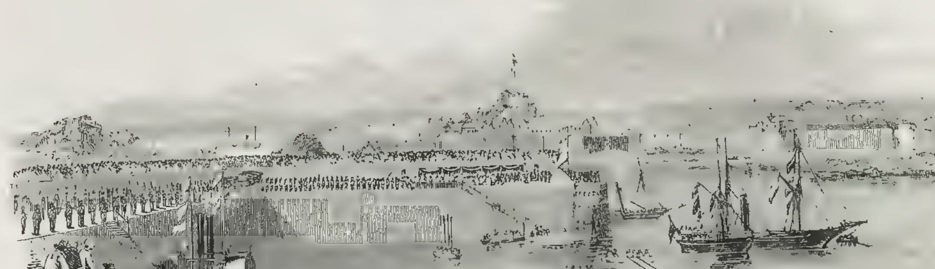
From an hour before sunrise people were coming into town and proceeding to the neighbourhood of the piers. The coup d'œil by ten o'clock was very picturesque and imposing; the ranges of seats covered with well-dressed persons—the crowds swarming on the table-lands of the rocky steeps leading to the fort—the decorated red pavilion at the end of the pier, and the white group of young ladies about it, to welcome her Majesty with the Royal Anthem, gave a fine effect to the scene.

At ten o'clock the depôt of the 81st, under the command of Major Creagh, took up their position immediately below the State Room, flanking the pier on both sides. Shortly after the town militia arrived, and formed in line with the depôt along the entire pier. The bands played from the moment of their arrival several well-selected pieces. The States arrived in procession shortly after, and took up their position on the left side of the State Chamber. Exactly at twenty-four minutes to eleven the Fairy came alongside the Royal yacht, and received on board the Queen, Prince Albert, Lady Jocelyn, the Hon. Miss Kerr, Lord A. Fitzclarence, Lord Palmerston, Lord Spencer, Lord A. Paget, Sir J. Clarke, and Col Grey. Immediately the battery of Elizabeth Castle opened a Royal salute, and, on the Fairy rounding that fort, and entering the Small Roads, the Royal standard of England was hoisted at the pier head, and at the same time a beautiful white flag was run up under the Royal banner, bearing the words "Victoria Harbour" in large characters. Precisely at five minutes to eleven her Majesty disembarked with her Royal Consort and suite, Colonel Le Couteur, the Queen's aide-de-camp, having the distinguished honour of handing the Royal cortège from the bridge to the stairs, and Lady De Veulle and Mrs. Symonds, sister of Col. Le Breton, assisted by Miss Le Maistre, Demoiselle of the Senior Fief of the Isle (that of St. Queen's), of assisting her Majesty in landing on the shores of Jersey.

The landing place and the steps leading to the pavilion were covered with rich carpeting, and a large portion of the pier fronting the Reception Room was also carpetted. The train of ladies sang with thrilling effect the National Anthem, which was led on the concertina by Master Bridgman, and conducted by Mr Williams, the organist of St. Mark's, they, at the same time, strewed flowers along her Majesty's path. On entering the pavilion, her Majesty seated herself for a moment, his Royal Highness at her right, and beside her the Ladies of Honour and Lord Spencer. The Queen was pleased to receive the Address of the States from the Bailiff, and immediately after her Majesty graciously received the Address of the Militia, from their commander, Colonel Le Breton.

The Addresses having been handed to Lord Spencer by the Queen, her Majesty immediately proceeded to her carriage. The cortège then moved on in the following order:—

The Mace Bearer, Hugh Godfray, Esq., Greffier.
The Seal Bearer, George Horman, Esq
The Bailiff's Secretary, George Evans, Esq.
The Bailiff.
The Royal Commissioners.
The States
The Solicitor-General and the Sheriff.
The Constables of St. Helier's and St. Saviour's; the Rectors of the Twelve Parishes, headed by the Rev. Mr. Marett, Sub-Dean, in the absence from the island of the Rev. Mr Hemery, the Dean.
The Royal carriage, containing her Majesty the QUEEN, his Royal Highness Prince ALBERT, Lady Jocelyn, and the Hon. Miss Kerr.
The second carriage.—Viscount Palmerston, Secretary of State for the Foreign Department, Earl Spencer, Lord in Waiting, Sir James Clark, M.D., Physician to her Majesty, and G. A. Anson, Esq., Secretary to his Royal Highness Prince Albert.
The third carriage.—His Excellency the Lieut.-Governor and General Touzel.
The fourth carriage.—Dr. Dickson, surgeon to his Excellency, and Captain Smith.
The fifth carriage.—Lady De Veulle and Family.
The sixth carriage.—The Family of Colonel Le Couteur, Aide-de-Camp to the Queen.
The Aides-de-Camp on either side of the carriages,



HER MAJESTY LANDING AT "VICTORIA PIER," JERSEY.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO JERSEY.

The Royal party did not alight at Government House, and after a short stay proceeded along St. Martin's-road to St. Martin's Church, from thence to Mount Orgueil Castle, where the Royal equipage arrived at about half past twelve o'clock. Colonel Dixon, Deputy-warden of the fortress, in the absence of the Governor, had the honour of dresenting the keys to the Queen, who was graciously pleased to return the same. This formality having been gone through, and while the National Anthem was being sung by a choir of Jersey young ladies, her Majesty, the Royal Consort, and suite proceeded to inspect the Castle, remaining in it altogether upwards of twenty minutes; and on seeing the coast of France her Majesty expressed her surprise, and asked the Viscount what might be the distance between this island and the opposite coast, to which he replied about 13 or 14 miles, her Majesty expressing a desire to see, if possible, Coutances Cathedral, Colonel Le Couteur proceeded for a spy-glass, but unfortunately the one he procured was not a good one, and the Royal party had a very indifferent view of the opposite coast. Her Majesty was also desirous of entering her name on the visitors' book, but, unfortunately, it was not at hand. The Royal party re-entered their carriages, and returned to the new harbour, where the Royal state barge was in attendance. In a few minutes the barge with the Royal standard at the bow left the steps of the Victoria Harbour, under a royal salute from the town battery of artillery, and proceeded to the Fairy. The second brigade of artillery, stationed at Mont Patibulaire, fired a salute, as did also the guns at Elizabeth Castle, as her Majesty stepped on board. The Fairy cast off, and in a few minutes proceeded for the outer roads, her Majesty most graciously bowing to the multitudes who were cheering her most enthusiastically, his Royal Highness Prince Albert taking off his hat in acknowledging the tribute of the Jersey public.

MONT ORGEUIL, JERSEY.

We are informed that, in Mont Orguell Castle, Lord Palmerston expressed to the Bailiff her Majesty's great satisfaction at the manner of her reception, and the order of the people, as well as her admiration of the beauties of the island. When about to embark, we believe her Majesty was graciously pleased to give to the Bailiff, from her own lips, the same condescending terms of Royal eulogy on the inhabitants and the country; and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, we understand, benignantly expressed himself in a similar manner.

Her Majesty was attired in a very plain manner, wearing a white bonnet lined with pink, with a feather, a green and white plaid dress, and a scarlet and gold scarf; her parasol was of a deep mazarine blue: her Majesty wore her hair plain, and had blended in her countenance an air of affable condescension and courteous dignity. The Prince was attired in a black coat, dark-coloured lavender trousers, and silk waistcoat of white ground, varied with green flowers.

The Royal children remained on board the Victoria and Albert during her Majesty's excursion.

Her Majesty admired greatly the scenery of the country, and often expressed herself pleased with the loyal demonstrations of the inhabitants; she was also particularly struck with the appearance of the artillery and the beauty of the harbour. His Royal Highness Prince Albert said the appearance of the troops was highly creditable to the island, and inquired how many of her Majesty's troops were stationed in the island, thinking that the troops placed along the quays and roads through which the Royal cortège passed were soldiers of the line.

Her Majesty (who looked exceedingly well), on taking leave of the island, expressed herself highly gratified with the affectionate reception she had met with, and with great cordiality added that, in no part of her dominions, had she experienced more demonstrations of attachment than in her loyal island of Jersey.

The Royal squadron left its moorings for Falmouth precisely at ten minutes after eight, on Friday morning, under a parting salute from the battery, the people crowding the hills to pay their last tribute of respect and homage to so kind and truly popular a Sovereign.

Let us mention, en passant, a circumstance which occurred shortly before the Victoria and Albert came to her moorings. The little Prince of Wales went on deck, dressed as a sailor—a glazed hat, checked shirt, the handkerchief round the collar tied in a sailor's knot, blue jacket, and white trousers, were his costume. The sailors gave the Royal sailor nine times nine; and, when that was over, he ordered a glass of grog to be given to each of them.

Various incidents occurred on the progress of the Royal Family through the town. In passing through Broad-street, Prince Albert acknowledged with pleased smiles the dutiful homage of his Masonic Brethren, dressed in full costume. In going through the Square, the Queen asked Mr. Centenier Chevalier, who was walking by the carriage, whom the statue represented? and was informed it was George the Second. On passing by Beresford-street, her Majesty said to Mr. Centenier Le Bailly, who was also walking by the carriage, "Sont-ce la les femmes du marché?" "Oui, Madame," replied Mr. Le Bailly: and Prince Albert, on coming up to Mr. Ramié Le Brocq, inquired of Mr. Vingtenier Renault if it was the Government-house?

Our Illustrations show the time-worn Fortress of Mont Orguell—the Landing of her Majesty at the Pier—Her Majesty Passing St. Mark's Church and the Expectant Crowd in the Royal Square.

A few words as to these localities. One of the larger Engravings shows the "Victoria Harbour" and the two Fortresses. Fort Regent, commanding St. Helier, and, with its overtopping ramparts, giving the place the appearance of a continental town. Elizabeth Castle, the second fortress, stands on a rock in the bay opposite the town, and would be insulated at high water, but for a narrow causeway formed by the confluence of the tides between the castle and the shore. The Royal Square is an open space, flagged with smooth stones, surrounded by the principal booksellers' shops, newspaper offices, reading rooms, the court-house, and one of the principal hotels. Mont Orgueil Castle, once the principal fortress of the island, is on a headland between St. Catherine's and Gronville Bays. Its commanding situation on a rocky headland jutting into the sea, and its massive walls, in many parts yet entire and mantled with ivy to their very summits, render it a very picturesque and striking object. It was the place of confinement of Prynne, and the residence of Charles II. during part of his exile.

THE RIVER PLATE.

ADVICES from Monte Video to the 30th of June, and from Buenos Ayres to the 11th of June, have reached us. They are exceedingly interesting.

Rosas was reported to be unwell. Gold was rapidly advancing in value: ounces quoted 415 to 425 paper. Exchange on London, 2d. 2 1-16d. the dollar.

The following graphic account of the action off San Lorenzo is written by a British officer:—

"By the evening of the 2nd of June all the Parana convoy, consisting of 110 vessels, were collected at the anchorage, about four miles above the cliffs of San Lorenzo, in the province of Santa Fé, and there waited a favourable wind for forcing the passage.

"The Gorgon and Gassendi steamers had been lying there three weeks, and had made themselves well acquainted with the positions of the enemy, as well as with the capabilities of the islands and creeks.

"The enemy had shown great judgment in selecting this spot to oppose our passage down, as no stronger position is to be found in the whole length of the Parana. The cliffs occupied by them rise 70 feet perpendicularly from the water, and extend north from the little creek or port of San Lorenzo for four miles; thence they tend to the north-west, forming an elbow at the point of approach of vessels coming down the river.

"On this point a battery of two guns was erected, with two or three field-pieces at short intervals to the north-west. A quarter of a mile south of this one, another battery of five guns was erected, of great strength, and well-built of earth; and from this to the creek peeped forth a field-piece at intervals of 400 yards.

"The river at this point is scarcely half a mile broad, the opposite shore being formed by the low islands of Entre Rios. The current runs down at the rate of three miles per hour.

"The great strength of the position consisted in the land behind the edge of the cliffs declining, so that nothing could be seen but the muzzles and tops of the wheels of the guns. The whole of the guns, battery and field, were mounted on field carriages, and horses were kept ready for transporting them.

"Two nights previous to the passage, on an island opposite the principal battery, and which appeared expressly provided by nature for the occasion, Captain Hotham had placed a masked battery of six congreve rocket tubes, with orders not to show themselves, or open fire, until the action commenced by the steamers.

"This island, so important for the purposes of the enemy, would certainly have been occupied by him, but for the sure destruction which he knew awaited him in its defence. It is wooded. I have been told that while an officer of the Gorgon cautiously reconnoitred it some days before, the sentinel on the opposite cliff was observed to stop suddenly, and gaze long and fixedly on the very spot on which the officer stood; the latter remained motionless, full in the sentry's sight, and at length, after straining his eyes for some minutes, the sentry, fancying he had mistaken a tree for a man, continued his beat, and the officer completed his survey.

"Notice had been given to the convoy that, if through neglect on their part, or to avoid the enemy's shot, any of them should run aground, they would be burnt.

"It had been arranged by the senior officers of the combined squadron that the five largest steamers were first to anchor, to attack the batteries; while the others, with the sailing men-of-war, were to pass on outside of them, at the head of their respective divisions of the convoy. After all the vessels had passed, the steamers were then to weigh and pass down also.

"The following are the vessels of which the combined squadron consisted:—

WAITING FOR THE ARRIVAL OF THE QUEEN, ROYAL SQUARE, JERSEY.

	ENGLISH.
Gorgon steamer	Captain Hotham	6 guns
Firebrand steamer	Captain Hope	6 guns
Alecto steamer	Captain Austen	1 gun
Lizard steamer	Captain Tylden	1 gun
Harpy steamer	Captain Proctor	1 gun
Dolphin	Captain Levinge	3 guns
Fanny	Captain Key	1 gun
	FRENCH.
Gassendi steamer		6 guns
Fulton steamer		2 guns
San Martin	Captain Trehouart	9 guns
Procida		4 guns
Coquette		20 guns

"On the 4th, at ten A.M., there being a commanding breeze from the northward, the signal was made to weigh. The Gorgon, leading past the batteries, and closely followed by the Fulton and Alecto, anchored in a flanking position 2000 yards below the principal battery, and 800 yards from the field pieces on the cliffs. The Firebrand and Gassendi at the same time took up their appointed stations above the upper battery and field pieces. The enemy were well prepared, and received us with a brisk discharge of round, grape, and musketry; the former only doing any damage.

"The first shot from the Gorgon was the moment selected for our rocket battery to open fire. The enemy, at the principal battery, not yet being within reach, and anxious to see the fun with the upper battery, had jumped on the parapet, and were shouting, "Viva la Confederacion Argentina," &c., at a great rate, when the rockets from the island drove them down much faster than they mounted.

"At 10h. 40m. A.M the action was general. The firing from the steamers was beautiful, nearly every shell bursting at the muzzles of the field-pieces, or over the batteries.

"The steamers then all passed down after the convoy, and at night anchored four miles below the town at Rosario. We were well pleased to find that no one had been killed in any of the vessels, although all the steamers, as well as the men-of-war, and some of the convoy, were damaged in the hull and spars.

"The Gorgon alone received ten round shot in the hull, and one through the funnel, beside grape and musket-balls. The small amount of damage done must be attributed entirely to the bad firing of the enemy, as most of the shot passed over us, and proves the havoc that must have been made at Obligado among their best gunners.

"The amount of guns of the enemy was estimated at from fifteen to twenty, of all sizes, from 6 to 18-pounders, commanded by General Mancilla, with about 1000 men. Gaining experience from Obligado, where their infantry were ploughed up by our shot as they stood in their ranks, on the present occasion no more showed themselves than were absolutely necessary to fight the guns. From this circumstance, the secure nature of their position, and the guns not being crowded together as before, we cannot suppose their loss to have been very great. An officer, supposed to be Colonel Thorne (an American, who rendered himself conspicuous for his gallantry at Obligado), was seen to fall. Should it be so, it is but due to so gallant an enemy to suppose that his loss alone must be estimated by his patron, Rosas, as equal to that of 100 men.

"After this, the convoy were allowed to leave the river unmolested, and have since arrived safe at Monte Video."

We are enabled, by the courtesy of a Correspondent, to present our readers with an "owl's-eye" glimpse of the engagement from the mast-head.

1. H. M. steam frigate, Firebrand.
2. French steamer, Gassendi.
3. French steamer, Fulton.
4. H. M. steam-frigate, Gorgon.
5. H. M steam-vessel, Alecto.
6. Where a bark and two schooners went on shore, which were burnt.
7. Rocket Brigade—fired 200 12 and 24 pounders.
8. Batteries consisting of 22-12 18, and 24 pounder field pieces, and innumerable musketry.
9. Creek, where Obligado lay (a schooner that we took at Obligado), afterwards got on shore and crew obliged to leave her. The Firebrand blew her up with a shell, to prevent the enemy making use of her.
10. Creek, which rocket boat went up the night before.
11. Creek which it came down.
12. Passage which convoy came down.

TRACTS FOR THE TRAINS.
BY ALBERT SMITH.

No. XII.

THE rush from home, alluded to in the Illustrated London News of last week, has never been so tremendous as this year; all of which may be attributed to the railways. If we were to go up high enough in a balloon to command all England at one view, no doubt, after dark, we should see dots of light scudding about in all directions, marking the trains, like the sparks on the tinder of the blown-out piece of lighted paper, on which it was customary for infancy to detect the parson and clerk following the congregation out of church.

One of the most remarkable features is

THE DIFFUSION OF MUSIC BY THE TRAIN.

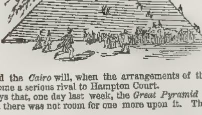
The French artist, Grandville, once drew a picture of a concert performed by steam; and we are rapidly approaching a realisation of it: for, during our festivals, the great vocalists sing at Birmingham in the morning, at Edinburgh in the afternoon, and finish the day at Exeter; and the instruments travel at the same rate. Their echoes have scarcely died away at Hereford when they are all in high tune again at Brighton.

A friend sends us a Sketch, made the day before yesterday in Egypt. The different books on the East—"The Crescent and the Cross," "Eothen," "Titmarsh," &c.—have turned everybody's attention to that quarter; and the Pyramids swarm with travellers, as here represented—

It is expected the Cairo will, when the arrangements of the steam-vans are completed, become a serious rival to Hampton Court.

Our friend says that, one day last week, the Great Pyramid was like an ant-heap; and that there was not room for one more upon it. The authorities had interfered.

From our "Mail Bag" we take the following letter, with the accompanying sketch of a



VIEW BETWEEN LONDON AND LIVERPOOL.

"Sir," says the writer, "I took a place in the coupé of an express train, thinking that I should be enabled to see the country. Instead of that, I only saw the back of the carriage before me, all the way, with the clumsy shoes of the guard who sat on the top of it. This is to warn your readers not to do the same. The Directors ought to put up looking-glasses, at an angle, to reflect the country; like those set up at windows to show who is calling, that you may not be at home unless you please."

BALLADS OF THE LINE.

HE DINED AT BERTHOLLINIS.

Air.—"She Wore a Wreath of Roses."

He dined at Bertholinis, the day when first we met,
A pint of single stout was on the board before him set;
His dinner had the lightness—his voice the humble tone
Of one to whom a shilling was not intimately known;
I saw him but a moment, but I think I see him now,
In that hat of time-worn gossamer that drooped upon his brow.

A new dark Lama Paletot, when next we met he wore,
The expression of his dress was not so seedy as before;
And, dining at his side, was one, in Hemming's room upstairs,
Who deem'd his Line a good one, and who took five hundred shares.
I saw him but a moment, but methinks I see him still,
At that café, in the Haymarket, where yet he owes the bill!

And once again I saw him, but this time it was not here;
In coat of questionable age he traversed Boulogne Pier;
He stept in shabby solitude, for, on one fated day
The bubble of his Line had burst, and he had run away.
I saw him quite down-hearted, with his paletot all but rags,
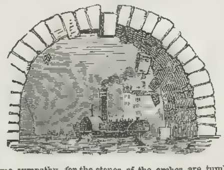
As he underwent the fate of all Provisionary Stags.

THE PERILS OF WESTMINSTER-BRIDGE.

The position of the hapless people in the ship, in "Sinbad the Sailor," when the Roc let the big stone fall on them, and swamped them altogether, was not worse than that of the poor travellers who are compelled to pass under Westminster-bridge in their steam-boat travels. A facetious contemporary is looking after the interests of those above the bridge; but those beneath ought to command the same sympathy, for the stones of the arches are tumbling about in such eccentric fashions, that before long each arch will form a grotto, or ruin, that shall rival the Colosseum; and, indeed, may be converted, by a coffer-dam, into "the only sub-aqueous exhibition in London," with which Mr. W. Bradwell might be able to effect a great deal; and the proceeds might go to the families of all those who had been smashed when passing under, now that deodands are done away with.



In the taste for reviving old English minstrelsy, the architectural ballad once made upon London Bridge may come again into popularity, substituting "Lambeth" for "Westminster," as follows:

"Lambeth Bridge is broken down,
Dance over Lady Lee;
Lambeth Bridge is broken down,
With a gay lady."

Whether Lady Lee, whoever she may be, would consent to such a proposal, or whether such savage hilarity was necessary to build the bridge up again, we will not argue. It will be lucky, however, when the bridge does break down (which it assuredly will before long), if it is only, in the words of the song, and not with the hundreds now passing to and fro on it.

"With a gay lady,"

What with this hazardous water approach to the Western outlet of London, and the Counties Railway at the Eastern, there only wants an eruption of Mount Primrose, or an earthquake at the Elephant and Castle, to block us up altogether.

CHARADE THE EIGHTH.

The air came close and sultry, when it chose to come at all,
And not a breath was stirring in the Churchyard of St. Paul;
And dogs went mad, and fish were boiled whilst swimming in their pond;
And Mercury achieved degrees it could not get beyond,
The theatres were deserted, so was almost every ball
The veriest Polka-maniac didn't choose to dance at all.
The Opera, e'en, was empty, 'spite of novelty and stars,
And nobody was happy, save the street-sweeping Lascars.
But every one, both old and young, was perishing with thirst,
And nought was heard but loud complaints and grumbling at my First.
Sir Harry followed all the world, and left the glowing town;
He made a tour—went up Mont-Blanc, and by the Rhine came down.
He bought things at the Rigi, wooden spoons and paper knives,
And at St. Bernard got a dog, who'd saved a dozen lives;
And chamois horns at Montanvert, and agate boxes too,
With watches from Geneva rusty arms from Waterloo;
Mosaic views from Florence, and from Paris busts in plaster,
From Pisa leaning towers, nicely carved in alabaster.
In fact, things meant for travellers he bought, where'er he went;
But all, to give unto my Second was his sole intent
He proposed and was accepted by a rich and high-born girl,
And the first few months, as usual, passed in something like a whirl;
But, when August came again, and when the corn was in the sheaf,
Ere the first autumnal tint had fallen on the summer leaf,
Being slightly ennuyé, he left his home in search of sport,
With an old friend—not his wife—but one of very good report;
One he loved both well and truly, as the partner of his joys;
One who, though by nature tranquil, in the world had made some noise.
Then it was my Whole he sought; in fact, he ever would declare,
That his heart was in the Highlands, when he chanced not to be there.

THE POETRY OF HOGG.

A lively Correspondent encloses the following mythological whim as his idea of PIG-ASUS.

MUSIC.

(From our own Correspondent.)

HEREFORD FESTIVAL.

Hereford, Wednesday.

The 123rd Meeting of the Choirs of Hereford, Gloucester, and Worcester, commenced this morning. There are to be six performances—three in the morning of sacred music, in the Cathedral Church, and three concerts in the evening at the Shire Hall. On Monday and Tuesday evenings, there were rehearsals of the secular compositions. Yesterday was devoted to going through the Anthems, Handel's "Te Deum," Mozart's "Requiem," and Spohr's "Fall of Babylon. The "Messiah" will, of course, be executed without rehearsal, as all the artists are quite at home in that great work.

These gatherings are held annually in Hereford, Worcester, and Gloucester, alternately. The collections at the doors of the Cathedral are appropriated, without deduction to the Diocesan Clerical Charities, and if there be any balance after the expenditure has been met, by the sale of tickets, it is also given to the Widows and Orphans of the poorer clergy. But of late years a loss has taken place, and gentlemen who accept the office of Stewards sustain it with the aid of a certain guarrantee fund from the inhabitants of the town where the Festival is held. The organist of each Cathedral is the Conductor for the time being. This year it falls on Mr. Townshend Smith, who, if inexperienced in the use of the baton, has displayed much ability in the preparatory arrangements.

The principal vocal performers are Miss Birch, the Misses Williams, Miss Dolby, and Messrs. Hobbs, Lockey, Hatton, Machin, and Phillips,—most of our best English vocalists. Mr. T. Cooke is leader of the morning programmes, and Mr. Willy of the evening concerts. Amongst the instrumentalists of note are Blagrove, Lindley, Lucas, Williams, G. Cooke, Baumann, Godfrey, the Harpers, Platt, Rae, J. and W. Loder, Moratt, Hill, Howell, Flower, Calkin, Crouch, Watkins, Anderson, Seymour, Watts, W. Cramer, Card, the Smithies, Chipp, Prospère, &c. Mr. Arnott presides at the organ, and Mr. W. Done at the pianoforte; the former is organist of Gloucester Cathedral, and the latter of Worcester.

The Cathedral is still under renovation; but, as the nave is completed, it was here that the orchestra was erected, just before where the screen stood formerly. In front of this is a raised gallery, and seats are placed in the aisles and in the body of the nave. The massive Saxon columns, with the Gothic arches above, did not harmonise certainly with the clumsy wooden scaffolds for auditory and executants; but the effect on the whole was not bad, as there were crimson and green coverings to the seats.

There was divine service this morning at the Cathedral, and upwards of £200 were taken at the doors by the ladies who held the plates. This amount has nothing to do with the receipts for admission. The selection comprised Spohr's Overture, "Last Judgment," Handel's Dettingen Te Deum, Purcell's Jubilate in D, Dr. Croft's Anthem, "God is gone up," Dr. Boyce's "O, where shall wisdom be found," and Dr. Hayes's "O, worship the Lord." Tallis's Preces, Responses, and Litany, and Soaper's Chant for the "Venite," and Psalms, were also given. The effect was grand and impressive, and the service was well executed from beginning to end. An excellent sermon, advocating the cause of charity, was preached by the Rev. Richard Lane Freer, B.D., Rector of Bishopstone, who took his text from the 14th Chap. of Luke, verse 1. The Bishop of Hereford, the Dean and Chapter, the Mayor and Corporation, were present. The town had a very animated appearance all day.

Thursday, Sept. 10.

The first Concert at the Shire Hall last night was not so well attended as the excellence of the scheme deserved. Weber's "Der Freychutz," and Rossini's "William Tell" overtures were splendidly executed. Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night" was also finely done—Mr. Lockey taking the tenor soli, Mr. Phillips the Priests' soli, and Miss M. Williams the aged woman. The picturesque chorus, "Disperse, disperse," and the fantastic "Come with torches," were extremely well sung, but the audience was tame to the last degree. Mr. Done, of Worcester Cathedral, conducted this work with zeal and ability. Beethoven's beautiful quintet for piano, clarionet, oboe, horn, and bassoon, was charmingly rendered by Hatton, Williams, G Cooke, Platt, and Baumann. Mr. Hatton is a first-rate pianist in our home market, and a very able composer. His songs of "The Chapel," and "The Shepherd's Winter Song," sung by Miss Dolby, the latter being encored, are fully equal to Schubert, who has been taken as a model by Mr. Hatton. We hope he will drop the name of Czapek for the future. The patriarch Lindley played his violoncello jig with great unction, and was much applauded. His tone is still unrivalled. Mr. Phillips was encored in the "Sea Fight," with Dryden's words. John Barnett's madrigal, "Merrily wake Music's measure," was another encore. Bishop's famous "Tramp Chorus" concluded the Concert, after airs by Hobbs, Machin, and Miss Birch. Mr. Hatton was called upon to repeat the song of the "Savoyard," with his amusing patois.

This morning, Mozart's "Requiem" in an English form, and Spohr's "Fall of Babylon," were given; but I must reserve my notice until next week. There will be a Ball after the Second Concert to-night, at the Shire Hall. The "Messiah" is given to-morrow; and the Third and last Concert terminates the Festival to-morrow evening.

Books and Engravings.—Power is given to her Majesty by an Act of Parliament, passed on the 18th ult., to reduce the duties on books, prints, or drawings, published in and imported from any foreign country. On works originally produced in the United Kingdom, and re-published in the country of export, the duty may, by an Order in Council, be reduced to £2 10s. the cwt.; and works not originally produced in the United Kingdom, to 15s. the cwt.; whilst on prints and drawings (plain or coloured) one halfpenny each, or three halfpence the dozen, bound or sewn.

The Convict John Smith. Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to respite John Smith during pleasure. The convict is indebted for the preservation of his life to the jury who tried him, all of whom signed a memorial for mercy; to the untiring efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Walters and their family, whom he had served for 17 years; to the members of the Coroner's jury, who signed the general petition; to the magistrates, clergy, merchants, and others in London and in Norwich. who added 3,000 signatures, testifying their estimate of the value of character under circumstances wherein such testimony only can avail a prisoner; and above all, to the kindness and unremitting exertions of Mr. Alderman Sidney.

Sudden Death.—Mr. Bach, a healthy man, about fifty years of age, manager of Messrs. Peg and Co., paper and rag merchants, on Tuesday fell suddenly dead while engaged in his usual occupation. Surgical assistance was immediately called in, but it was of no avail.

BIRTHS

On Thursday, the 3rd instant, at the Park, Harrow, the lady of George Frederick Harris Esq., of a son.——In Eaton-square, the lady of Major-General Caulfeild. C.B., of a daughter.——At Castle Bernard, county of Cork, the Viscountess Bernard, of a daughter——At Newry, the lady of Lieutenant-Colonel Leslie, C.B., late Bombay Horse Artillery, of a daughter.——At Caversham, Oxfordshire, the Hon. Mrs. John Gellibrand Hubbard, of a son.——At Oatlands-cottage, Weybridge, the lady of George Liddle, Esq., of a son.——At Clevelands, Dawlish, the lady of Henry Ley, Esq, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

At Kilkenny, Charles William Tupper, Esq, 7th Fusiliers, to Frances Letitia, daughter of Sir Wheeler Cuffe, Bart.——At Rochdale, the Rev. John E wards, to Louisa, youngest daughter of the Rev. Dr. Molesworth.——At Keswick, R bert E. .urner, Esq, of her Majesty's 87th Royal Irish Fusiliers, to Mary Ann, daughter of the late Joseph Gunson, Esq——At Wistow Hall, Albert, eldest son of the late Sir Albert Pell, to Elizabeth Barbara, only daughter of Sir Henry Halford, Bart., M.P——On Monday, the 7th inst, at St. John's, Lambeth, W. J O'Hea, Esq., to Mary Elizabeth, daughter of the late Abraham Filmore, of Ilsington, Devon.

DEATHS.

At Chiswick, Mary, the wife of Morgan Thomas, Esq.——At Binstead, Isle of Wight, Sarah, relict of the late Major-General Mann, R.E.——On the 7th instant, Captain George Douglas Bowyer, half-pay, 90th Light Infantry——At Barnet, aged seventy-nine, Mrs. Sarah Roberts, sister of the late Nathaniel Roberts, Esq——Of consumption, Mr George Wynne, late of the Surrey Theatre.——At Pit House, Beddington, Ann, widow of the late John Williams Bristow, Esq.——At Newport, Isle of Wight, Charles Cornwall Seymour Worsley, Esq.——In Wilton crescent, the Hon. John Kennedy, grandson of the Marquis of Ailsa, aged twenty-seven.——At Evesham, aged eighty-three, Edward Rudge, Esq, one of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace.——At the Vicarage, West Lavington, Wilts, the Rev. Robert Clarke Caswall, LL.B.——At Chingford, Essex, James de Saumarez, Esq.——On the 5th instant, at Malshanger House, near Basingstoke, the Right Hon Lord Metcalfe, in the 62nd year of his age.——At Stokesley, Yorkshire, in her 90th year, Margaret, relict of the late John Haviside, Esq.——On the 4th inst., Edward Coats, Esq——On the 7th inst., in the 78th year of her age, Mary, relict of William King, Esq——At an advanced age, the Rev. Phipps Long, of Shabbington vicarage, near Thame, Oxon.——On the 7th inst, Sarah, widow of the late Captain Corry

OUR MAGAZINE COLUMN FOR SEPTEMBER.

BREVITY OF LIFE.

The rapidity with which time is said to move, most poets have spent some time in showing. Life has had its comparison in a vapour, a cloud, a wheel, a stream, a dream; but no simile has been more favoured and admired than that of a flower. Its budding and opening, its brightness and its evanescence, its drooping and passing away, are under the observation of nearly every one. With some bards the verse ceases with the allusion; while others, more to the purpose, draw those inferences and maxims which suit their personal or their religious ideas.

How sings the sweet lyrist of Ireland?—

This moment's a flower, too fair and brief
To be withered and stained," &c.

Or the old and admired song—

Life let us cherish
Whilst yet the taper glows,
And the fresh flow'ret
Pluck ere it close.

"Let us fill ourselves with costly wines and ointments; and let no flower of the field pass by us. Let us crown ourselves with rose buds, before they be withered."—Wisd. Sol., chap. ii.

Gather, therefore, the rose whilst yet is prime,
For soon comes age, that will her pride deflower;
Gather the rose of love whilst yet is time,
Whilst loving thou mayst loved be with equal crime.
SPENSER.

For tho' we slepe, or wake, or rome, or ride,
Ay fleeth the time, it will no man abide.
CHAUCER, Clerke's Tale.

I am not concerned to know
What to-morrow Fate will do.
ISAAC WATTS.

What need a man forestal his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would most avoid?
MILTON, Comus, 362, 3.

And we might add, in termination of this part of the subject, the family motto of the Doddridges,

Dum vivimus vivamus,

so beautifully illustrated and warmed into vivid Christianity by the piety of one of its bearers:

"'Live while you live,' the epicure would say,
"And seize the pleasures of the present day."
"'Live while you live,' the sacred preacher cries,
"And give to God each moment as it flies."
Lord, in my views let both united be,
I live in pleasure when I live to Thee!

—The New Quarterly Review.

A SIGN OF THE TIMES.

It is quite delightful, in these days of artificial life, when everything is chiselled and polished into such a degree of smoothness, that, together with the rough surface, all which bore the stamp of nature and originality is removed, to meet with anything fresh and genuine, and which appears to come from the heart rather than the head: in other words, which speaks the language of sentiment and feeling, rather than that of cold and dry reason. We have far too much of the latter. We live in an atmosphere of matter of fact, the gloom and dreariness of which we seldom allow to be dispelled by the genial warmth of the imagination. Everything is grounded upon calculation, and that of the lowest kind. Every step in our progress—every move in the journey of life—is made with utilitarian views alone, with the prospect only of temporal gain or loss. We plod our weary way along, not like pilgrims and sojourners in a world of trial; but like denizens of a country which is to be ours for ever, beyond which there is no hope. We rise up betimes in the morning, and late at night do we take our rest; and upon what are our waking thoughts and our last reflections employed but upon gain, mean and selfish gain? The "age of chivalry is gone," and the "poetry of life has fled." Everything around us is hard, and dry, and calculating; thus even our works of imagination partake of this strongly marked character of the present period, and exhibit its results in striking colours. Intellectual triumphs, rather than appeals to the imagination, are sought after and desired, and their pages more frequently display sparkling wit, pointed irony, and clever sarcasm, the feats of intellectual skill, than attempts to lay bare the recesses of the human heart, and to analyze those mighty secrets which it contains.—The New Quarterly Review.

SHAKSPEARE'S HUMANITIES.

In Ariel's narrative, in the fifth act of the "Tempest," of the state and behaviour of "the King and 's followers," how admirably has the poet seized the occasion to awaken our sympathies with the humanities of his drama; which, though he often obscures them with the exhibition of the wonderful, he never entirely dismisses from the scene. He avails himself of the opportunity afforded by a description of suffering to read another of those splendid lessons (so frequent with him) on the ennobling quality of mercy, and the feeling of compassion for our fellow man; a feeling which the spirit seems almost to envy human nature the indulgence of. Surely, Shakspeare was made up of all the gentlest elements of our nature. This truly Christian spirit, breathing compassion and forgiveness of injuries, infuses itself into all his works, and arrests our attention on every apposite occasion.—Hood's Magazine.

THOROUGH-DRAINING LAND.

The demand for Mr. Smith's (of Deanston) paper on thorough-draining has gradually increased, and upwards of twenty-five thousand copies have been sold to be distributed all over the kingdom, carrying with them a knowledge of the most important practical improvement in agriculture which has been given to the world in our day. Mr. Smith states in this paper that the agriculturists of Great Britain might, by thorough-draining and subsoil ploughing, followed by an improved system of cultivation, successfully compete with any country in agricultural productions; and he emphatically pronounced that, by a general adoption of these principles, the Corn Laws would die a natural death, and save a political struggle. Mr. Cobden, in his very first address to the Corn Law League, quoted Mr. Smith's opinion of the capabilities of the British soil, if properly dealt with. Mr. Smith had considerable intercourse with Mr. J. B. Smith, Mr. Cobden, and others, at the commencement of their movement, but he considered the principle of the League unconstitutional, and their procedure rather obtrusive and violent, being an advocate for the diffusion of intelligence, on the economic bearing of the question, without abuse of the landed proprietors, or the use of expressions tending to alienate from them the attachment of the peasantry.—From a very interesting Memoir of Mr. Smith, of Deanston, in the Farmer's Magazine.

MUSICAL EDUCATION.

The heaps of startling trashy fashionable music which are poured out of the press and palmed off on the public by teachers and publishers, are the effect, not the cause, of the low character and the mistaken objects of the every-day performances of our drawing-rooms. What is their object? It is not uncharitable to say, that it is either a personal lure of display, or a cruel necessity (conceived by parent and child to be a duty) of showing that the daughter has been well educated; that no money has been spared in giving accomplishments; in other words, it is a means of publishing that a competent "degree" has been taken in the female curriculum of education, and that a certain amount of pounds, shillings, and pence have been expended, according to the conventional method established in so-called good society. If the thing itself was the object—if music, for its own intrinsic value, both as an intellectual study and a fine art, was duly appreciated, then it would be taught rationally, studied perfectly, and practised by those who are physically and mentally capable of carrying it out; not meretriciously, as it is now, for the few years before matrimony, but as a means of high enjoyment, and as cultivating a pure and elevated taste.—The Union Magazine.

SUPERSTITION IN SHETLAND.

The extent to which superstition influences the minds of the Shetlanders is scarcely conceivable. At the very time I write (August 3rd) an example of this has been making what you publishers call, I think, "the round of the press." No fewer than four hundred fishermen from the west coast of Caithness, who had travelled towards the Moray Firth in quest of employment at their annual labour of herring fishing, in order to enable them to earn as much money as will support them throughout the winter, have been deterred from engaging in their wonted occupation, and nearly frightened out of their wits, by the prediction of an old woman, foretelling that an awful storm would arise and destroy both men and boats. This silly rumour was held by those ignorant Highlanders to be sufficient warning not to jeopardise their lives; and accordingly many of them prepared to retrace their steps to the cheerless boothies they had just left. The greater part of them, it is said, returned home, whilst the more stout-hearted, believing themselves safe from the impending danger in Banff and Morayshire, wandered about the towns and villages, endeavouring to find employment by land. The old wife who has caused all this mischief was committed to prison, with a view to have her punished according to her deserts; but, in the meantime, it is estimated that on the beach at Wick nearly fifty boats have been thrown idle in consequence, involving a loss of some £5000, attributable solely to the desertion of these foolish men, who have gone back to their families to rusticate in a state of half starvation, the victims of their own blind delusions. Fraser's Magazine.

FATE OF SIR WALTER RALEIGH.

Sir Walter Raleigh perished in the sixty-sixth year of his age—a mournful monument of the proverbial mutability of fortune, and a testimony that the most brilliant capacities, unless accompanied by moral rectitude, are insufficient and unstable. However much we may be inclined to dissent from that sweeping sentence of Dr. Lingard (vol. vi. page 171), that, in this catastrophe, "the provocation was great, and the punishment not understood," we can, nevertheless, coincide with that eminent historian in looking with admiration upon the magnanimous self-possession of Raleigh. We can peruse with joy that splendid panegyric uttered by the Bishop of Salisbury, who attended Sir Walter on the scaffold, and who declared that "his was the most fearless of deaths that ever was known, and the most resolute and confident, yet with reverence and conscience!" We can rejoice that the contemporary population were sufficiently dispassionate to regard that execution, according to Hume (Hist. Eng. vi. 99), as a deed of "cruelty and injustice, meanness and indiscretion!" We can rejoice to hear Mr. Macaulay (Essays, ii. 340) asserting that that decollation, "under all the circumstances, must be considered as a dastardly murder!" We can almost rejoice at that dramatic incident at Whitehall, where, several years after this imperial assassination, James was startled by the introduction of Raleigh's only surviving son, Carew, at court, and turned from him with loathing, muttering that he resembled his father's ghost! An anecdote which proves, as Miss Aikin keenly remarks (Mem. Court of James, vol. ii. p. 105), "how loudly the conscience of the king upbraided him with the sacrifice of Sir Walter." We can rejoice in these considerations, painful and lamentable as they are, because, in the indignation which they aroused against the murderer of Raleigh, we recognise the safeguard of the future illustrious. Because Sovereigns must tremble in their palaces, and Ambassadors swallow vengeance in their cabinets, before another subject, however exalted or however base, shall suffer wrongfully for their satisfaction; before another Raleigh can perish by an ignominious punishment, deriving an additional glory to his memory out of the very abjectness and degradation of his antagonists. Dolman's Magazine.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"C. O."—1. Enigma No. 46 is correctly printed. Examine it again; if you then fail, we will give the solution.—2. We cannot insert your challenge to young players, except as an advertisement.—3. Having began the publication of Messrs. Horwitz and Kieseritzky's match games, we were unwilling to break that series by introducing the games now playing between Messrs. Staunton and Harrwitz; besides, as the latter have already been given daily in the Herald and Standard, their novelty is gone.

"Orient."—The new Problem from India, which graces the current Number of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle," is rightly printed, and is allowed to be one of the most beautiful pieces of strategy in three moves ever seen.

"Μρ. Βύμβλε," Broadstairs.—Mr. Lewis is alive, but he rarely plays. Your solution is right.

"Titmouse."—We should say one edition of the work named was of the same value as the other.

"C. F. S.," Islington.—The London Chess Club assemble at the George and Vulture Hotel, Cornhill. Subscription, Three Guineas per annum. If you wish to become a Member, write to the Secretary.—The Grand Chess Divan is in the Strand, opposite Exeter Hall. You will find play all day, and readily obtain information upon the other little points you mention.

"F. N. B."—Any foreign Chess work is obtainable through Messrs. Williams and Norgate, the London Publishers of the "Berlin Chess Journal."

"J. P. B.," Settle.—The first position we have already published. The other, called "Philidor's Legacy," is inaccurate. The Queen, as you suggest, should be at her Kt 3rd. Many thanks for your good wishes.

"—," Hull.—We have received two Problems, one in three, the other in two moves; but the accompanying letter has been mislaid, and we are ignorant of the author's name. To that in three moves, no solution is sent.

"A Subscriber."—You must have the goodness to send us the position. We have neither time nor opportunity to refer to the paper mentioned. Copy out the situation of the men, and a solution shall be given next week.

"C. R. L——e."—Received, with thanks.

"E. A.," Kensington.—We are not acquainted with the game.

"Chesso-Mania."—We cannot see the mate of two moves in Enigma No. 45. You say, "Queen to B's 5th (ch)," for the first move; but the B's 5th sq is already occupied by a White Pawn. Look again at the position.

Solutions by "J. T. C.," "Sopraccitta," "C. O.," "A. E. L.," "W. P.," "Jerry," "Alpha," "Amateur," "Styk," "J. W. D.," "J. W.," "F. N. B.," "D. C.," "Punch," and "S. S.," are correct.

drawn games.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM, No. 138.

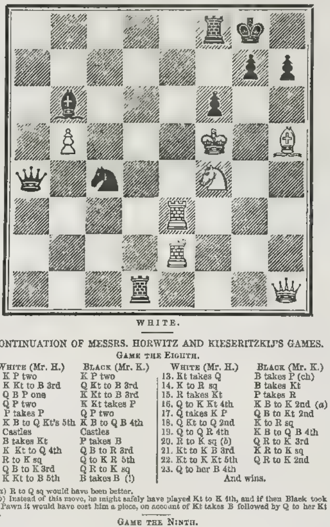
WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R P takes P (ch)	K to Kt sq
2. R to R 8th (ch)	Kt takes R (best)
3. P takes Kt	K takes Q, becoming a Queen (ch)
4. B P one (discovering ch)	K to R 2d
5. Kt to B 8th, mate

PROBLEM No. 139.

By M. Kling.

White plays first and mates in eight moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

CONTINUATION OF MESSRS. HORWITZ AND KIESERITZKIJ'S GAMES.

GAME THE EIGHTH.

White (Mr. H.)	Black (Mr. K.)	White (Mr. H.)	Black (Mr. K.)
1. K P two	K P two	13. Kt takes Q	B takes P (ch)
2. K Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	14. K to R sq	B takes Kt
3. Q B P one	K Kt to B 3rd	15. R takes Kt	P takes R
4. Q P two	K Kt takes P	16. Q to K Kt 4th	K B to K 2nd (a)
5. P takes P	Q P two	17. Q takes K P	Q B to Kt 2nd
6. K B to Q Kt's 5th	K B to Q B 4th	18. Q Kt to Q 2nd	K to R sq
7. Castles	Castles	19. Q to Q R 4th	K B to Q B 4th
8. B takes Kt	P takes B	20. R to K sq (b)	Q R to K 3rd
9. K Kt to Q 4th	Q B to R 3rd	21. Kt to K B 3rd	K R to K sq
10. R to K sq	Q to K R 5th	22. Kt to K Kt 5th	Q R to K 2nd
11. Q B to K 3rd	Q R to K sq	23. Q to her B 4th
12. K Kt to B 5th	B takes B (!)	And wins.

(a) R to Q sq would have been better.

(b) Instead of this move, he might safely have played Kt to K 4th, and if then Black took the Pawn it would have cost him a piece, on account of Kt takes B followed by Q to her Kt 4th.

GAME THE NINTH.

White (Mr. K.)	Black (Mr. H.)	White (Mr. K.)	Black (Mr. H.)
1. K P two	K P two	22. Q P one	R to K sq
2. K B to Q B 4th	K Kt to B 3d	23. Q to K B 2d	Q to her sq
3. K Kt to B 3d	K Kt takes K P	24. K R P two	R to K B sq
4. Q P one	K Kt to B 3d	25. Q takes R (ch)	Q takes Q
5. Kt takes P	Q P two	26. R takes Q (ch)	K takes R
6. Q to K 2d	Q B to K 3d	27. K to B 2d	K to Kt sq
7. B to Q Kt 3d	Q B P one	28. B takes Kt	K takes B
8. K B P two	K B to K 2d	29. K to B 3d	K to B 3d
9. Castles	K Kt P one	30. Kt to Q 3d	Q Kt P one
10. Q Kt to Q 2d	Q Kt to Q 2d	31. K to B 4th	K R P one
11. Q Kt to K B 3d	Q Kt to B 4th	32. K Kt P one (ch)	P takes P (ch)
12. Q B to K 3d	Q R P two	33. P takes P (ch)	K to Kt 2d
13. Q B P one	Kt takes B	34. K to K 5th	B to K B 4th
14. P takes Kt	Castles	35. Kt to K B 4th	B to Q B 7th
15. Q R to K sq	Kt to K sq	36. K to Q 6th	B takes P
16. Q Kt to Kt 5th	B takes Kt	37. K takes P	K to B 2d
17. P takes B	Kt to K Kt 2d	38. K takes P	Q R P one
18. K Kt P two	K B P two	39. K to Q B 4th	K to K 2d
19. P takes P (in passing)	R takes P	40. Kt takes P (ch)	K to his 3d
20. B to K R 6th	R takes R (ch)	41. Kt to K 5th	And Black surrendered.
21. R takes R	Q to Q Kt 3d (ch)

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 49.—By Mr. Bede.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q R sq	K at his R 4th
Q at her 2nd	Q at her 4th
R at Q Kt 3rd	R at K Kt 2nd
R at Q Kt 4th	B at K Kt 8th
B at Q R 3rd	B at K B 2nd
	Kt at K R 7th and K Kt 4th
	P's at K Kt 3rd and K B 4th

White to play, and mate in four moves.

No 50.—By the Same.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his B 2nd	K at his R 4th
Q at her B 6th	Q at her R 2nd
Kts at K 5th and Q B 7th	R's at K R sq and Q B sq
P's at K R 4th and K Kt 3rd	B at K 5th
	Kt at Q B 4th
	P's at K R 3rd, Q 6th, Q Kt 3rd, and Q R 7th

White playing first mates in three moves.

No 51.—By the Same.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q B 2nd	K at Q 4th	Kt at Q Kt 5th	B's at K Kt 4th and K sq
Q at K 2nd	Q at K Kt 2nd	P's at K Kt 4th, K 3rd, Q B 3rd, and Q Kt 4th	P's at K 4th and Q 2nd
B at Q R 4th	R at Q R sq

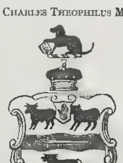
White playing first, mates in three moves.

Draughts.—A gentleman amateur, who has left his address at this office, is desirous of playing a match at Draughts, of twenty-one games, at one guinea each game, and ten guineas the main; on condition that he be allowed to score

A Man Killed by a Bull.—On Tuesday a man, named George Ellis, was in a field at Roehampton, removing a bull, when the animal turned upon him, and, before he could escape, tossed him. Some persons went to his assistance, and he was taken to St. George's Hospital, where it was found that the spinal cord was fractured. He died in a few hours after his admission.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

LORD METCALFE.



Charles Theophilus Metcalfe, Baron Metcalfe of Ferne Hill, in the county of Berks, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, and a Baronet, also a Privy Councillor and a G.C.B., was born the 30th January, 1785. He was the second son of Sir Thomas Theophilus Metcalfe, Bart., by his wife, Susanna, daughter of John Debonnaire, Esq., and widow of Major Smith. Sir Thomas himself took an active part in East Indian affairs, and was a Director of the Company. The son, Charles Theophilus Metcalfe, the subject of this notice, after being at Eton, proceeded to India when only fifteen, and during a period of many years passed there through various gradations of rank, always acquitting himself with great ability and credit. He was for a considerable time a member of the Supreme Council of Bombay, as well as Governor of Agra. Previous to those honourable appointments, while Chief Resident Agent to the Nizam of the Deccan, Mr., now Sir Charles, Metcalfe had succeeded to the baronetcy on the death of his eldest brother, Sir Theophilus Metcalfe, in 1822. In 1834, Sir Charles Metcalfe assumed the duties of Governor-General, vacant by the recal of Lord William Bentinck, and continued to fulfil them until relieved by the new Governor, his friend, Lord Auckland. During his administration Sir Charles granted full freedom to the press of India; this having displeased the Board of Directors, he retired from the Company's service, and returned to England in 1837, carrying with him the warm affection and regrets of the whole Indian population. After a brief residence on his paternal estate, Sir Charles Metcalfe was appointed Governor-General of Jamaica, the 11th July, 1839. Here, by his wise and skilful conduct, he quieted the then disturbed condition of the country: in 1842, however, the incipient symptoms of the disease which afterwards proved so fatal to him, compelled him to resign and come back to England. In 1843, his health having somewhat bettered, Sir Charles was named Governor-General of Canada: here, also, his administration was proving most beneficial to the country, when the terrible disorder, cancer, under which he laboured, resumed its virulence. On the 1st December, 1845, he once more sailed for England. He had been created Baron Metcalfe in 1844.

From the period of his return, Lord Metcalfe's malady daily gained ground, and his sufferings were intense: these he bore with perfect Christian meekness and fortitude, until death came to his relief, on the 5th instant: he expired in the 62nd year of his age, at his seat near Basingstoke, leaving an honoured name behind him. For forty-three years, this great and good man devoted himself to the public service with an energy and determination that no labour or sickness could abate—with a success, too, that was everywhere apparent. In private life, he was no less to be admired. Kind, generous, affable, and abounding in charity, he was invariably beloved by the people whom he governed; and his society was the delight of the numerous friends whom affection and esteem drew around him.

"On a consideration of the whole life of Lord Metcalfe," said a Canadian writer, commenting on his Lordship's departure from Canada, "we find him fully justifying the character of a fitting representative of such a Monarch as the Sovereign of England—dignified in his language, mild in his power, just in his decisions, amiable in his private life, and generous in his charities."

Lord Metcalfe died unmarried.

PRINCE HUGO OF TOUR AND TAXIS.

This unfortunate Prince, who perished in a duel, at Graetz, on the 27th ultimo, was the eldest son of Charles Anselmo, a distinguished member of the non-Sovereign but Princely House of Tour and Taxis, and an Imperial counsellor and chamberlain. Hugo Maximilian, the son, was born the 3rd of July, 1817; and was an officer of hussars in the Austrian service. In consequence of a dispute at a ball, he met in hostile rencontre a Captain Schned; and, at the first fire, received his adversary's ball in his breast, and fell dead.

THE MARQUIS OF AILSA.

Archibald Kennedy, Marquis of Ailsa, of the isle of Ailsa, Ayrshire, and Baron Ailsa in the peerage of the United Kingdom, Earl of Cassillis, and Baron Kennedy in that of Scotland, and a baronet of Nova Scotia, was the eldest son of Archibald, eleventh Earl of Cassillis by his second wife, Anne, daughter of John Watts, Esq., and was born in 1770. On the 1st of June 1793, he espoused Margaret, youngest daughter of John Erskine, Esq., by whom he had two sons, now both deceased, and four daughters, who are Lady Baird, Lady Mary Oswald, the Countess Dowager of Newburgh, and Lady Alicia Peel.

His Lordship succeeded his father, as twelfth Earl of Cassillis, on the 30th of December, 1794, and was subsequently created a Peer of the United Kingdom, as Baron Ailsa, in 1806, and as Marquis of Ailsa in 1831. The noble Marquis expired, after an illness of some months, on the 8th inst., at St. Margaret's his Lordship's seat at Isleworth.

The Marquis is succeeded in his honours and vast estates by his grandson, Archibald, now second Marquis of Ailsa, the eldest son of his Lordship's eldest child, Archibald, Earl of Cassillis, who died before him in 1832, and whose wife, only daughter of Alexander Allardice, Esq., and mother of the present Marquis, survived her husband but three months.

THE RIGHT REV. BISHOP LUSCOMBE.

This highly estimable prelate, whose name was Matthew Henry Thornhill Luscombe, was, for twenty years, until his decease, the Church of England Minister attached to the Embassy at Paris. Dr. Luscombe was a member of a very respectable English family of that name; and had, prior to his distinguished appointment in France, been engaged in educational pursuits in this country. After having for some years officiated as Chaplain to the Embassy, he was consecrated, in 1825, a Bishop by the Episcopal Church of Scotland—an elevation that tended to greatly enlarge the sphere of his utility abroad; for, though possessing no see, he could fulfil all the sacred functions annexed to the mitre. The members of many English families were confirmed by him in different parts of France. His care and direction of the English Protestant Church there redounded much to his piety and wisdom. The Right Reverend Prelate, who was married, and had a family, died recently at Lausanne. He is reported to be succeeded at the Embassy by his coadjutor, the Venerable J. Keatinge, Archdeacon of Ardfert.

Dorsetshire Peasantry.—A county meeting was to be held at Beaminster, on Thursday, to form a Society to promote the "Field Garden Allotment System" in Dorset.

Demolition of the Half-way House on the Road to Kensington.—On Tuesday, the workmen completed the demolition of the celebrated Half-way House, that stood nearly in the centre of the road to Kensington; and was long regarded as a very great obstruction in that thoroughfare, the number of carts and other vehicles occasionally assembled in its vicinity having rendered the roadway at times nearly impassable. In our paper of the 29th of August, we gave an illustration of this building, the removal of which cannot fail to afford satisfaction.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN DOWAGER AT CASHIOBURY.

Close to the Watford Station of the London and Birmingham Railway lies Cashiobury Park, a picturesque seat of the Earl of Essex, and along a part of the possessions of the Capel family. The mansion was originally begun in the reign of Henry the Eighth, and was a good specimen of the embattled mansion of that period. But a few remnants of the old house remain, and the entire pile was modernized and adapted to our times, for the late Earl of Essex, by Mr. Wyatt, the architect. The Park is extensive and well wooded; it has also a sheet of water, and abounds with beautiful views. The gardens are fine, and there is a "Swiss Cottage" on the banks of the canal, besides several other rustic retreats throughout the grounds. The house was filled with "curiosities" and "modern antiques" by the late Earl, who allowed them to be shown all the year to visitors, from eleven to five o'clock, on Mondays and Thursdays. There are a few good modern pictures by Wilkie, Turner, Calcott, &c. "The late Earl," says Felix Summerly, in one of the Railway Chronicle Travelling Charts, "encouraged visitors, even to providing them with plate," for their pic-nic parties in the Park.

This charming retreat has just been taken by the Queen Dowager, for a term; and the arrival of her Majesty at the domain on Thursday, the 3rd inst., gave rise to one of those spontaneous demonstrations of loyalty and affection which is so delightfully characteristic of the excellent feeling of our provincial population towards personages of rank and station located in their neighbourhood. By her Majesty's request, the welcome was unattended by any ceremonial; but the public anxiety to behold the illustrious lady, whose virtues have endeared her to all classes of society, drew together a very large concourse of persons from Watford and its neighbourhood.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR SEPTEMBER.

Queen Adelaide, accompanied by her Royal Highness the Princess of Prussia, and Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, and attended by the Earl and Countess Howe, Sir Andrew Barnard, Colonel Conolly, and suite, arrived by special train on Thursday, at the Watford Station, and immediately proceeded to Cashiobury. The road from the railway station to the park entrance was thronged with well-dressed persons; and within the Tudor Gateway of the domain was presented the interesting scene of our Engraving, sketched on the spot by Mr. Hanshew, a student of the Royal Academy. Here had assembled upwards of 4000 ladies and gentlemen, and about 1000 children from the different schools in the parish, ranged in double lines along the road. The Queen Dowager arrived at a quarter past 4 o'clock; and, in accordance with her Majesty's wish, the strictest silence was maintained as the royal carriages passed on; but the waving of handkerchiefs, raised hats, and other obeisances, testified the universal gratification on her Majesty coming to reside here.

The Royal carriages having passed, the school children formed in regular procession, and thus returned to the town, preceded by the Watford band, to partake of cake and tea, which were provided for them in a large field at the rear of the Rose and Crown Inn. The shops throughout the town were closed; the bells rang a merry peal; a public dinner was given at the Essex Arms; and the whole of the inhabitants seemed to participate in the rejoicings of the day, which concluded with splendid fireworks.

On Friday morning, the subjoined Address was presented to her Majesty by a highly respectable deputation, consisting of the Churchwardens, and several of the principal inhabitants of the town.

TO HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY QUEEN ADELAIDE, THE HUMBLE ADDRESS OF THE INHABITANTS OF WATFORD AND ITS VICINITY

May it please your Majesty,—We, the inhabitants of Watford and its vicinity, desire to greet your Majesty with a [illegible] welcome, and to express our heartfelt joy at the distinguished honour conferred upon us by your Majesty's selection of a residence in this neighbourhood.

Filled with sentiments of most respectful attachment and regard, we sincerely pray for the perfect restoration of your Majesty's health, and trust, with [illegible] Divine Providence, your Majesty may long continue in the enjoyment of every earthly blessing; and humbly acknowledging the inestimable benefit of your Majesty's constant example of public and private virtue, we fervently hope that we may long have the happiness to be favoured with your Majesty's presence in this part of the kingdom.

Watford, 5th September, 1846.

To this her Majesty was pleased to return the following most gracious answer:—

TO THE GENTLEMEN COMPOSING THE DEPUTATION OF THE INHABITANTS OF WATFORD

Cashiobury Park, Saturday, September 5th, 1846.

Gentlemen—I have not failed to present the address of the inhabitants of Watford and its vicinity to the Queen Adelaide, and am commanded to assure you of the unfeigned gratitude with which her Majesty has received so [illegible] the widow of our late most excellent King to the neighbourhood. Queen Adelaide [illegible] her residence in Herts should prove in any way, advantageous to the vicinity of Watford, and to those who will be her Majesty's neighbours during the occupation of Cashiobury.

I have the honour to be, Gentlemen, your obedient humble servant, Howe.

ARRIVAL OF HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN DOWAGER AT CASHIOBURY PARK.

FASHIONS FOR SEPTEMBER.

Since the close of the London season, an elegant world has dispersed itself over the Continent, at the seaside and at country houses, to enjoy for a time fashionable retirement. Travelling costumes and those toilettes habillés that are necessarily required amongst the chosen circles assembled at our beautiful English chateaux have been therefore much in request. For travelling costume, dark colours are invariably selected—deep violet, dark blue, and myrtle green are much in favour; these colours are chosen for pelisses à la vielle, which are much worn and are very pretty: of one of these, with a coarse Tuscan bonnet with ribbon simply twisted over the crown, and a dark blue or green gauze veil, consists the simple costume which in such case should be adopted; for it is decidedly a mark of bad taste to be over-dressed when travelling

As to the more elegant toilettes, which almost every one of our leaders of fashion has taken with her, they consist principally of dinner and evening costumes. The former include a silk dress shot with light colours, such as pink Nemours blue, mallow, shaded with violet, and cabbage green, shaded with Pistache. Large plaids are also in great vogue. Foulards in small patterns, striped Chinés silks, or those with a serpentine pattern in satin, Mousselines de soie, Barèges, and embroidered organdies, make very pretty dresses. With these materials the body is always made full, like a blouse, the skirt trimmed with three or five flounces, and a sash with long floating ends of the colours of the dress is indispensable. Dresses of Taffetas d'Italie, in Joinville blue and steel grey, are much in favour. The skirts of these dresses are trimmed with five rows of Pompadour effilés, headed with lace, or with festooned flounces.

Evening dresses are made in gauze and tulle, in organdie, and white, pink, and lilac silk These last are trimmed with flowers of crape, in the same colour as the dress, edged with gimp.

A very elegant evening costume is a dress, consisting of three skirts of pink tulle, widely scolloped at the edges, and bordered with a double quilling of tulle over a slip of white silk: a still uncommon and recherché toilette is a dress with two shirts of white areophane gauze over a slip of cabbage green silk.

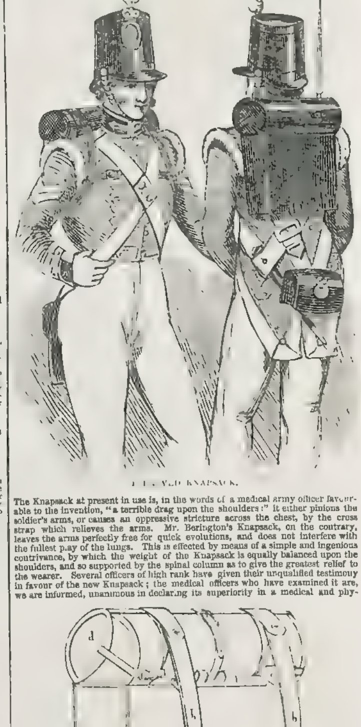
Lace is still extremely fashionable. On the warmer days the silk visites and the other graceful out-of-door coverings are replaced by those of tarlatane or embroidered muslin, some literally covered with lace, which takes the place of the quilings of ribbon, and which, besides increasing the richness of the mantelet, has a most graceful effect.

Canezous, in embroidered muslin trimmed with lace, are very becoming to the figure: they are made with small sleeves, and with lappets descending below the waist.

IMPROVED MILITARY KNAPSACK.

Our readers will, probably, recollect that on the 15th ult., a new military Knapsack, belt, and pouch, invented by Mr. Berington, were highly eulogised in the House of Commons, by Sir de Lacy Evans, Captain Layard, and Mr. Wakley.

We have engraved Mr. Berington's improvement, with the view of making its advantages more evident. The object which the inventor has had in view in the new Knapsack, has been to remove the weight from the soldier's arms and chest, and to make it fall as nearly as possible upon the perpendicular axis of the body.



IMPROVED KNAPSACK.

The Knapsack at present in use is, in the words of a medical army officer favourable to the invention, "a terrible drag upon the shoulders:" it either pinions the soldier's arms, or causes an oppressive stricture across the chest, by the cross strap which relieves the arms. Mr. Berington's Knapsack, on the contrary, leaves the arms perfectly free for quick evolutions, and does not interfere with the fullest play of the lungs. This is effected by means of a simple and ingenious contrivance, by which the weight of the Knapsack is equally balanced upon the shoulders, and so supported by the spinal column as to give the greatest relief to the wearer. Several officers of high rank have given their unqualified testimony in favour of the new Knapsack; the medical officers who have examined it are, we are informed, unanimous in declaring its superiority in a medical and physiological point of view, over the Knapsack at present in use; and the soldiers of the 73rd, and other regiments, who have been allowed to use it, have declared "the comfort it has afforded to them by the relief it gives to the chest, and the trifling weight they feel, by the manner in which it is placed upon their shoulders." It is to be hoped the evidence of the men themselves upon the question of ease and comfort will have its due weight with the proper authorities, and that the apprehension of some slight additional expense will not prevent the impartial and unprejudiced consideration of an invention so nearly affecting the health of our troops. Mr. Berington's improved belt is made on the same principle of relieving the wearer, by throwing the weight of the pouch and ammunition upon the edge of the hip bones, instead of allowing it, as at present, to press upon the abdominal and lumbar regions, where it impedes the action of the extremities This invention appears to be equally ingenious with that of the Knapsack, and, like it, is founded upon a simple application of mechanical skill to the facts of anatomical and physiological science.—From the Times.

[illegible] over shoulder
[illegible] over shoulder
Straps which meet the above side of cover, or lid

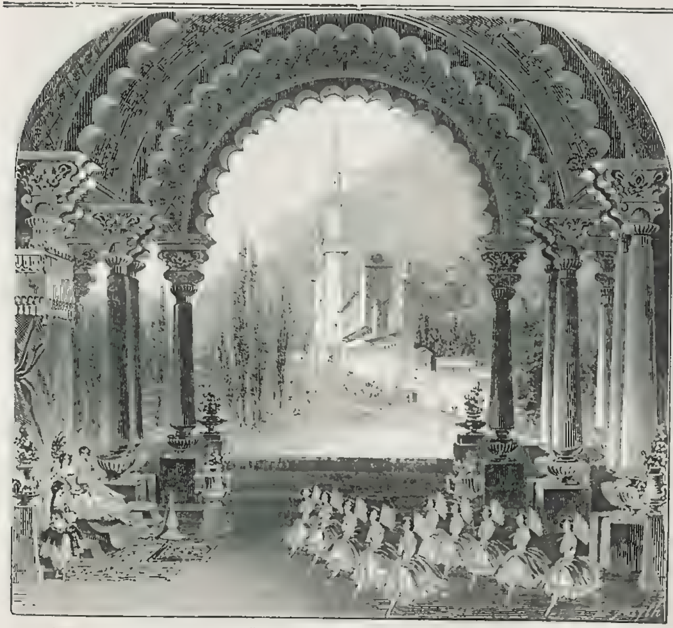
IMPROVED KNAPSACK.



SCENE FROM THE NEW BURLESQUE OF "THE MAGIC HORN," AT THE LYCEUM THEATRE.

THE THEATRES.

"THE MAGIC HORN," AT THE LYCEUM.

Mr. Dance's burlesque extravaganza of "The Magic Horn," with Mr. Alexander Lee's "taking" music, continues its successful career at this theatre. The spirited acting, the smart libretto, the picturesque scenery, and the superb appointments, all entitle the piece to this popularity. We have engraved one of its most brilliant scenes—the Grand Hall in the Palace of Haroun Alraschid, with the Princess Reiza, and Fatemma, her attendant; and a pleasing Ballet, to divert the "wilful young Turk dying for a Christian." The proposed remedy, however, fails:

Reiza. Rising.) Break off—for one amusement's like another—
In short, there's no amusement now—it's bother.
Fatem. That thus great Haroun's daughter should behave,
Passes the comprehension of her slave
Reiza. Drop that word slave—I never liked it, never;
And now I've done with slavery for ever
(To Attendant.) My handkerchief. (Attendant, in giving it, drops it.) Next time you let that fall—
Papa shall have your head cut off, that's all.

MR. MACREADY AT THE SURREY.

A remarkable change has taken place of late in the bent of the public taste, as regards the support of the legitimate drama in different theatrical localities. It may not be inaptly likened to the objects of a kaleidoscope; for, on looking into that toy, we find the pieces may be all in the centre forming the figure; but, after a turn, they diverge, and take their places at the circumference; another revolution bringing them once more to the centre. So it has been with the taste for the legitimate drama. Up to a comparatively late period, the representation of it was confined to the central theatres, the more remote ones relying upon the "music and dancing" of their licence to attract the public; but now Shakspeare has gone to these latter, and the legal features of their entertainments have been changed to those theatres termed the national ones. Whether another revolution of taste will bring these things to their original position we cannot tell; it is true, however, at present, that the performance of Shakspeare's plays forms the feature at three of the more distant minor theatres—Sadler's Wells, the Surrey, and the Queen's.

We do not altogether go the lengths of some of our contemporaries in attributing this change entirely to a revival of taste for legitimacy. The mere variety of the style of entertainment, and the desire to see a "star," in any line, has much to do with its present success. But, on the other hand, the experiment of Mr. Phelps at Sadler's Wells has long outlived the imputation of its being a "new broom;" and he has turned a precarious speculation into a lucrative management. It is also a great thing to draw large numbers of the frequenters of a minor theatre together, and show them that there is an entertainment of a far higher class than they have been accustomed to run after, more capable of moving the real feelings, and furnishing them with far more to think about, to their improvement and gratification, than the miserable ranting melodramas of the old school, whose chief conventional points are, however, being rapidly drawn into the vortex of burlesque. We hope the time is not far distant when the blood and blue fire—the injured innocence and mysterious outlaw class of plays—will be swept away from the minors altogether, and consigned to the dusthole of contempt. At the same time we should not be too ready to patronise theatres affecting to play the legitimate drama, making the intention in a mere spirit of cant, because the plan has elsewhere proved successful. For the miserable manner in which the regular drama has been from time to time played at different minor houses is far more calculated to extinguish altogether what lingering disposition to support it may remain, than revive, in the slightest degree, the public taste.

We have been led to make the foregoing remarks by the appearance of Mr. Macready as Hamlet, on Monday evening, at the Surrey Theatre—a house, as our readers may be aware, dedicated especially to the performance of the school of melodrama just alluded to, even to a proverb. We believe it is no secret that, for some time past, the business at this theatre has been anything but lucrative; in fact, it closed for a short period—a circumstance almost unprecedented under the present management. The engagement of the Opera Company improved the state of things; and that of the Misses Cushman, which followed, was also satisfactory, the entertainments, in either case, being of a class entirely opposite to those supposed to be indispensable to a "Surrey audience." On Monday evening the house was crowded to suffocation in every part; indeed, its appearance from the upper private boxes near the stage was extraordinary—the heads in the spacious gallery rising one above the other until they were almost lost in the extreme height. The pit was equally full; and the boxes presented a most respectable and closely-packed array of visitors.

As may be conceived, the reception of Mr. Macready was most enthusiastic, the house being almost shaken with the storm of applause that greeted his entrance, and which continued for some little time. It must have been highly gratifying to him; more so, perhaps, than in a theatre where his claims to position were more absolutely recognised. Of course, it would be idle to enter into any analysis of a performance so well known to all; our business is rather to report its effect upon an audience, many of whom, probably, now saw him for the first time. This was highly satisfactory; ill-judged applause or thoughtless interruption was immediately repressed; and the tragedy was throughout listened to with the deepest attention. We have always observed this feeling when Shakspeare's plays have been decently performed at the minor theatres, even amongst audiences usually the noisiest. Whether this is that the deep and grand truths they hear, in a measure awe them into silence and reflection, or that a totally different class of persons assemble on such occasions, we know not. We are willing to believe that it is the first theory.

Nothing could exceed the success of Mr. Macready's début at the Surrey; it must have surpassed the most sanguine expectations of his warmest admirers; and will, without doubt, prove really the greatest "hit"—not in the sense of the placards—that has been for some time made. Great praise is due to the Management for the evident pains taken in putting the tragedy on the stage Mr. Macready was respectably supported. Mr. Cooper was the Ghost; Mr. Leigh Murray, Laertes; Mrs. Ternan, the Queen; and Mrs. Gill (formerly Miss Fanny Vining), the Ophelia. It is unnecessary to particularise their acting, beyond stating that there was an evident intention on the part of all of them to do their best, in giving the tragedy an uniformity of excellence. We may, however, give an extra word to Mr. Leigh Murray, whose performance of Laertes was worthy of high commendation.

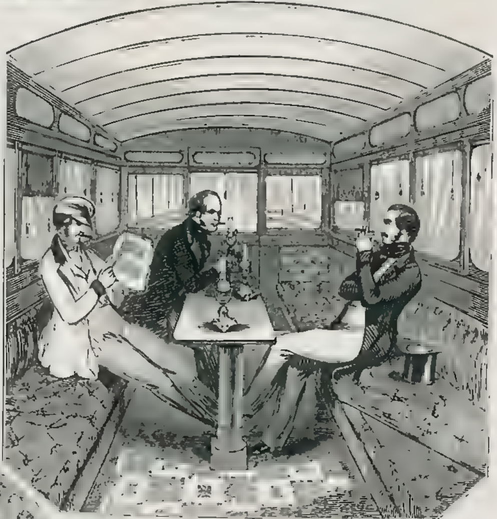
PRINCESS'.

On Wednesday night, a comedy, called "Love's Telegraph," was produced at this theatre. It is from the French; and, like most pieces of that stock, is well constructed, and abounds in striking situations; but scarcely enough to sustain the interest through three acts. The plot is somewhat elaborate, and we can only give its outline. The Princess Blanche, with her friend Alice, have just quitted a convent, the former to succeed to the sovereignty of a German State. The Princess falls in love with her secretary, Arthur de Solberg, who has set his affections on Alice; and the process by which these two lovers carry on a clandestine conversation in the presence of the Princess, gives title to the piece—by motion of a fan, or glove, or "Love's Telegraph." The Princess confides, and is deceived, and is, at length, wedded to a neighbouring Prince; Arthur claiming credit for preventing her from marrying one beneath her own rank.

The Princess and the Secretary were exquisitely played by Madame Vestris and Mr. C. Mathews: the serious comedy of the last scene has rarely been equalled. Alice, too, was cleverly played by Mrs. H. Hughes; and the love diplomacy throughout was deservedly successful. The piece has been admirably put upon the stage, as regards dresses, scenery, and appointments. It has been repeated most satisfactorily on each evening since its production.

Mr. Keeley is suffering from a violent sprain of the tendons of the leg: it does not, however, interrupt his performances at the Lyceum. At this theatre, on Monday evening, Miss Daly was taken ill, when Mrs. Keeley took her part; and Mrs. Wigan also played in the farce of "The Boots at the Swan," at a short notice.

Miss Laura Addison, whose performance in the "Lady of Lyons" we noticed last week, is said to be not yet out of her teens. She has on each night of her appearing been enthusiastically cheered, and will evidently become a leading favourite at Sadler's Wells. There is an absence of puffing in the bills of this establishment, highly commendable. We question whether the merest tyro in affairs theatrical is ever influenced by the paragraphs issued by the manager; whilst old stagers are apt to take them in an inverse sense.



INTERIOR OF SMOKING SALOON, ON THE EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY.

The Speaking Machine, at the Egyptian Hall, begins to talk English a little better than it did when we first heard it, as its master, M. Faber, becomes more acquainted with our language. On Monday afternoon, when we were present, it sang the Austrian Hymn, or rather hummed it, in an extraordinary manner, after singing our own National Anthem, with the words. Its voice is, a gentleman near us observed, a pure tenor: and an opera might be entirely played by a company of similar automata, were the manufacture of them less intricate. Managers might keep a mechanical tenor or prima donna by them, to prevent the public from being disappointed, through indisposition of the "stars."

The bills at the theatres were never so barren as at present. They will most likely continue to be so, for a week or two, until the opening of the winter houses.

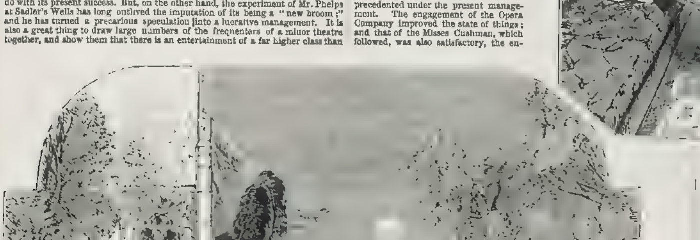
RAILWAY SMOKING SALOON.

The Directors of the Eastern Counties Railway have just placed on their rails the first of a series of novel Carriages, which will, we think, obtain the lasting preference of the public over the close box system that has hitherto prevailed for the conveyance of first-class passengers.

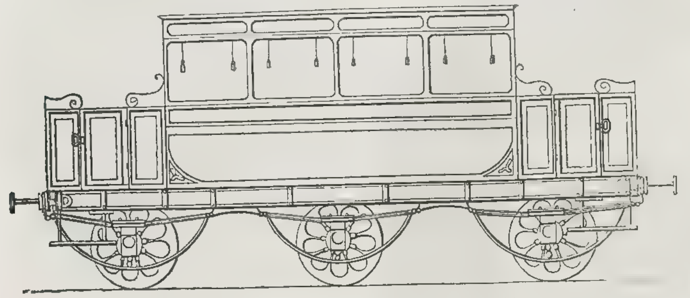
The Carriage in question consists of an apartment, if we may so phrase it, fifteen feet by seven, applicable to those who prefer a close carriage; and the entrances are through two outer apartments or lobbies, open to the air, for the accommodation of those who may choose an open carriage; each of the outer apartments measuring five feet by seven. The fittings-up of the interior are similar in character to those of a gentleman's plain dining-room. There is a long couch of blue morocco on either side, with a table of polished mahogany down the centre; leaving space sufficient to pass between the table and the sitters. The side windows, provided with crimson silk blinds, are fixtures, consisting of eight sheets of plate glass, half an inch in thickness, (thanks to Sir Robert's repeal of the duty), each about three feet six inches in length by two feet in height, commanding a full view on either hand; and, at each end of the couches, are mirrors, so disposed, that the country passed through, is as well seen as that in front. The doors at each end are provided with plate glass sashes, sliding vertically, so that any amount of air may be admitted or excluded at pleasure. For the purposes of ordinary ventilation, perforated plates of brass are inserted near the roof or ceiling, which is constructed on the plan of an ornamented steamer's cabin, panelled in compartments with dead-white, bordered by gold mouldings.

We have never beheld, in carriage-work, a better combination of the plain and simple with the elegant. The table pleasantly garnished with flowers, as we saw it, added much to the effect.

Externally, the Carriage is painted a crimson-lake colour, with gold bandings; the centre being one large massive panel, with the Company's crest in a garter, and their initials on the end doors in Arabesque letters. The mechanical parts of the construction are in plain-black and vermillion. Altogether, it is such a style of carriage as a gentleman with a taste for art, and a taste for driving, might choose for the rail, were railways adapted for private trains, as the sea is for private yachts.



MR. MACREADY AS HAMLET, AT THE SURREY THEATRE.



EXTERIOR OF SMOKING SALOON ON THE EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY.

The mechanism of this carriage is peculiar for England, though well known on the Northern German lines; and we are the more anxious to draw attention to it, because it confirms an opinion confidently expressed by us some time since, when accidents were rife on railways, and disputes ran high as to the respective merits of four and six wheeled engines, in commendation of a mode of suspension, at that time new, called the Bow Spring, as well adapted to prevent carriages from getting off the rails. A German line, the Hamburg and Bergedorf, opened, at the same time, as an English one, the Dover, and the carriages of both lines were mounted on bow springs. On the Dover, they were condemned; on the Hamburg, they were approved, and were adopted by almost all the new lines of North Germany. The apparent paradox was solved by the knowledge of the fact that the Hamburg carriages were on six wheels, with their extreme axles eighteen feet apart, while the Dover carriages were on four wheels, with the axles eight feet six inches apart. The question, in fact, resolves itself into that of narrow or broad base, position of the centre of gravity. The real base of a railway carriage or engine is, not the road or rail, but the axle bearings, and therefore is it that an engine with outside bearings is more steady than one with inside bearings, the base being thereby extended. An ordinary first class carriage, on the narrow gauge, stands on a base 6 feet 2 inches by 8 feet 6 inches. The improved Carriage we now speak of stands on a base 6 feet 8 inches by 18 feet 6 inches. The steadiness is thereby so much increased, that additional height may be gained without disadvantage, and a tall man may stand upright in it with his hat on.

We have no doubt that carriages such as we have described will become very general, and we see no reason why the principle should not be carried out to a still greater extent. There is no mechanical reason to prevent the running of carriages nine feet wide and forty feet long over all the narrow gauge lines in Great Britain, save the paring some three inches here and there from the face of a badly boarded station platform. Want of length in the carriage is the sole obstacle to increased speed, and we understand that it is very practicable to convert the existing short stock into long stock at a trifling expense. What is Colonel Pasley about that he does not look to this? If he would bring it to pass, the public would immortalise him for rescuing them from dog boxes and unaired holes, Black-holes of Calcutta in the hot weather—and giving them spacious saloons wherein to move about, and ascertain if any of their kith or kin, friends or connections, be embarked in the same train.

It is said these carriages are for the use of smokers. We do not object to this; smokers and non-smokers should be apart; but why should smokers exclusively be indulged with the use of the best carriages on the line? We would venture a guess, that ladies would especially prefer this to the coops endorsed in gilt letters "For Ladies only."

We were glad to find on inquiry that these new carriages are not proportionately more costly than the old ones. The carriage described, carries twenty-two to twenty-four passengers inside, and fourteen outside.

GOLD; OR, THE HALF-BROTHERS.

BY CAMILLA TOULMIN.

CHAPTER VII.

"And your mother?" murmured Margaret Clifford, looking down, and endeavouring to release the hand which Trevor Sefton grasped between both his own. For the explanation had been sought, and had ended in a declaration of love.

"My mother loves me, replied Trevor, "and will love her daughter; that is, if you have not already won her affections. I am prepared to hear some accusations of imprudence, and some homily against long engagements; but, her heart is so true and so warm, that I fear neither selfish regrets nor worldly prejudices. I did not mean, thus poor and powerless, to have sought your hand; yet, dearest, how dared I have related to you the scene I had witnessed, and, by relating, asked its meaning, had I not loved you? And, surely, better to live years of hope and trusting faith, than months of jealous doubts and trembling uncertainty. Tell me, is it thus with your heart?" And he bent his head towards her, and would have an answer.

"Yes."

There was one thing, however, in reference to his mother, on which Trevor Sefton had not calculated, and that was the pang which, under the most favourable circumstances, an attached mother always feels on discovering that another, young and fair, is becoming dear to a beloved son: with so much, too commonly, besides youth and beauty, to outrival her, and weigh against long years of devoted affection! Youthful sympathies, and energies unchilled—and radiant hope, with wings unwounded.

But, where hearts are right, as theirs were, the mother, whatever she may think, is not displaced. Another love grows in the heart, it is true, but the heart expands to make way. Nay, the human heart, I verily believe, is the wiser and better and happier, the more it is full of warm affections; and the stronger and braver, the more it is sustained by their soft woodbine links.

Without pausing to analyse such thoughts or opinions, Mrs. Sefton felt thus; and though she started with astonishment when her son related the event of the day to her, and trembled for awhile at the thought that he with fortunes still to achieve, had wooed one as poor as himself, she was soon won over to believe that a reciprocal attachment would be but another incentive to exertion, and the goal to which he looked, but a star to guide him the more steadily on his course. She had had many opportunities of knowing Margaret Clifford—opportunities which the mere conventional forms of society could not have afforded in a dozen years, and the result was, that she thought her almost worthy of her son; an admission which might very nearly be taken for a patent of perfection.

Mrs. Clifford had still to be consulted; but though she possessed a bad temper, which often gave pain unintentionally, she had not a bad heart, which would have inflicted it systematically. And, taking into account that no marriage was contemplated until Trevor should in some way have established himself, opposition on her part was not very likely.

It was the following evening; and some strange magnetism exerted secondarily in the form of an invitation from Mrs. Sefton, had drawn Margaret up stairs to her little drawing-room. A looker-on might have told at a glance that matters had been arranged in a tolerably satisfactory manner. The ladies bent over some needle-work, yet though they did not seem very intent upon it, neither did they talk much. Trevor seemed to watch the movement of Margaret's slender fingers with extraordinary interest, though he had been repeating a confession which he had already made to Dr. G——, namely, that he was the author of some articles on Consumption, published anonymously in a medical journal, and which had attracted very considerable attention. He had been moved to this revelation by having that very day received a cheque for twenty pounds from the publisher, the which he contemplated with feelings that he himself smiled at as childish. But who that has ever wanted money can forget the sensation of acquiring his first earnings! It is as if nothing before had ever been one's own; and that is a strange nature which does not experience a strength-giving honest pride in the acquisition.

It was at this juncture that a note from Dr. G—— was presented to Trevor Sefton. It contained something like the following:—

"I told you, my dear young friend, that the Fates were busy with your destiny, and thus are they planning. I have been called in to attend a consumptive patient, whom I have ordered to Madeira for the winter. She is desirous of taking out a medical attendant; I have named you; and, in short, the thing rests in your own hands. Call on me at twelve o'clock to-morrow, and I will take you with me for the introduction.

"By the way, there is one strange thing which I must not forget to mention. Mrs. Smith begged me not to let her husband know that you have written on the subject of Consumption, and especially not to mention that you are the 'Alpha' of ——. I feared he might object to your youth, and rather desired to make the most of what you had done, but she over-ruled me. The guess at her reason is one I dare not commit to paper. They will sail in September.

"Yours, FRANCIS G——."

With flushed cheeks and a trembling frame, Trevor handed the letter to his mother.

"Read it aloud," he exclaimed, "there are no secrets here;" and, taking a hand of Margaret in his, and leaning affectionately over his mother's chair, they listened.

"And you will go?" asked the widow, tearfully.

"Yes, dear mother, if it be possible. This event seems to me like the dawn breaking in upon the darkness. Now I see the stepping-stone—the first rail of fortune's ladder—which I have been seeking so long, and which it is generally so difficult to find. Hope brightens—energies will be redoubled; and the separation you, Dear Ones, must meet as bravely as I will; and neither will be desolate, for I leave you together."

What a strength and comfort lie in cheering words! and these were not false and cheating ones, but full of truth and meaning. Mrs. Sefton held out her arms to Margaret, and the warm embrace which followed was a mute but indissoluble compact between them.

Trevor was punctual in his appointment the following morning, and he found the carriage of the punctual physician already at his door. Dr. G—— would not listen to any acknowledgment of obligation from Trevor.

"Say not a word about it," he exclaimed, "I only did my duty in recommending you, for I believe you to be thoroughly qualified for the post. If you like the idea of it, so much the better; and I think, as you say, that the voyage and novelty of the scene will enlarge your mind, and that a personal knowledge of the climate will be of service to you in the future. Useful introductions may follow; and certainly, if you were a son of mine, I should advise you to accept the offer. But now I must tell you about the people you will be with; and I feel that, under the circumstances, I am even justified in breathing to you the suspicion which I dared not write."

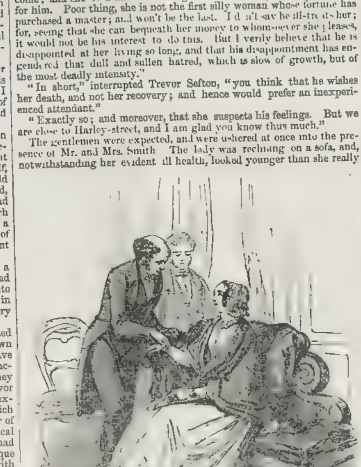
"I need hardly say, dear Sir, that your confidence shall be respected."

"Had I any doubt on that subject," continued Dr. G——, "we should not be on our present errand. The fact is, I do not generally pry into my patients' concerns; but it has so happened that, from my connection with other parties, I could not help knowing something about the Smiths. You will find him a man of talent, unquestionably—smooth tongued, and of specious manners. But, for my own part, I don't like him. His wife is a dozen years older than himself, and he married her nearly a dozen years ago, for the sake of the fortune which supports him in idleness. I believe her constitution was always very delicate, and hence her education was somewhat neglected, or perhaps I should say was more superficial than solid. She was doated upon by her father, who had made all his money in trade. But from her ill health her youth was passed chiefly in retirement, and having reached six or eight and thirty when her father died, I dare say he thought she never would marry. At any rate he left her undisputed mistress of eighty thousand pounds, only shackled with the condition that, if she should marry, it must be settled on herself. Nevertheless, her husband enjoys the income; and she is a kind-hearted generous soul—a great deal too good for him. Poor thing, she is not the first silly woman whose fortune has purchased a master; and won't be the last. I don't say he ill-treats her; for, seeing that she can bequeath her money to whom-soever she pleases, it would not be his interest to do this. But I verily believe that he is disappointed at her living so long, and that his disappointment has engendered that dull and sullen hatred, which is slow of growth, but of the most deadly intensity."

"In short," interrupted Trevor Sefton, "you think that he wishes her death, and not her recovery; and hence would prefer an inexperienced attendant."

"Exactly so; and moreover, that she suspects his feelings. But we are close to Harley-street, and I am glad you know thus much."

The gentlemen were expected, and were ushered at once into the presence of Mr. and Mrs. Smith. The lady was reclining on a sofa, and, notwithstanding her evident ill health, looked younger than she really was. She had never been handsome, but there was a sweet expression about the mouth which told of amiability; and the fatal hectic on her cheeks gave that brilliancy to the eyes, which, so far as I know, is an unexplained result of heightened colour. She was attired in white, but had drawn a large scarlet cachmere shawl around her. A Blenheim spaniel nestled by her side, and one of her thin hands seemed buried in its silky hair, the large sapphire and diamonds of a singular and antique ring which she always wore gleaming from among it, though the supporting finger was hid.



"My dear lady," said Dr. G——, "this is not a morning for open windows in your apartment; for, though the sun shines brightly, there is an easterly wind laden with mischief to stronger frames than yours;" and, as he spoke, he pulled down the sash.

"Mr. Smith persuaded me—" began the lady.

"My dear Clara," interrupted he, "I had no idea the wind was easterly: there must be something the matter with the vane, for it stood this morning to the south, with a point west, if anything. And I know sometimes you are oppressed for want of air."

"There is great judgment required, I know," said Dr. G——, with some tact, "for our patient is like a sensitive plant." And then he felt her pulse, and began questioning her of the day's symptoms.

Meanwhile, the husband busied himself in attempting to arrange the sofa cushions; but every movement was followed by the spaniel's bright eye, as it crept stealthily towards its mistress' head.

"Down, Victor, down!" said the lady, in a tone that was half caressing, though she meant it for a scold; and the obedient creature crouched by her side, though not without a smothered growl.

She did not know that poor Victor had some wrongs of his own to revenge, in the shape of sly kicks and buffets, as well as those of his mistress, which he divined by the instinct of his kind. For no one who is acquainted with dogs, can doubt their intuitive knowledge of friend and foe to those they love.

The communication made by Dr. G—— to Trevor Sefton had been so strange, and his introduction to the personages who seemed likely to influence his career, had followed so quickly, that, to own the truth, he was a little confused, and by no means appeared to the greatest advantage. His own predominant feeling was that, had not the clue been given him by which to judge, he should have been for a very long time deceived by appearances. As we know, he did not desire to impress Mr. Smith with any very exalted idea of his abilities, and certainly that rather shrewd individual did not surmise their quality. He took Trevor for an every-day sort of young man, and supposed he would make a tolerable companion—one who, at the worst, would prove a relief to the tête-a-têtes matrimonial. He saw that he was young, and he knew him to be poor, and it was a Dependent that he wanted.

Dr. G——'s recommendation, and Trevor's willingness to accept the proposed situation, had prevented any obstacles arising. The salary named was a handsome one, and the interview passed off with ease and courtesy. Just before taking his leave, Trevor had been seated for a few minutes on the sofa beside Mrs. Smith, a proximity which Victor did not quietly allow to every one. Trevor, however, he welcomed with most eloquent tail-wagging, and pushed a cold nose into his hand by way of seeking some caress in acknowledgment of his greeting.

"Victor makes friends with you already," said his mistress with a smile. "I hope you do not disdain his good will?"

"Indeed, no," replied Trevor; and after a moment he added, "and I will try to imitate his fidelity."

Their eyes met at the moment, and something there was either in the words or in the expression of the speaker's face, that brought tears to the invalid's eyes. They did not flow thence, but the emotion she felt perhaps, caused her to press his hand at parting more warmly than she could have thought it possible for her to do an hour before.

(To be Continued.)

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange (Friday).—The present week's arrivals of English wheat have been on a moderate scale, yet the show of samples here to-day was small. All descriptions moved off steadily, at fully, but at nothing quotable beyond, Monday's prices. Foreign wheat was held for an advance of fully 1s per quarter, yet, as the buyers were not disposed to give any [illegible] value can be [illegible]. All kinds of barley [illegible] at extreme currencies. We had a good demand [illegible] was doing. The [illegible] per quarter. Both beans and peas were 1s higher. Flour very steady.

Arrivals.—English: wheat, 3820; barley, 710; oats, 970. Irish: Wheat, ——, barley, ——; oats, 4510. Foreign: wheat, 2980; barley, 1430; oats, 1130. Flour, 2180 sacks. Malt, 2360 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 47s to 57s; ditto white, 52s to 64s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 47s to 51s, ditto white, 52s to 59s, rye, 33s to 3[illegible]; grinding barley, 29s to 31s; distilling, [illegible] 34s; malting [illegible], 30s to [illegible]; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 63s; brown ditto, 53s to 55s, Kingston and Ware, [illegible]; Chevalier, [illegible]; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s to 28s, potato ditto, 30s to 32s, Youghal and Cork, black, 24s to 25s; ditto white, 24s to 28s, tick beans, new, 36s to 37s, ditto old, 38s to 39s; grey peas, 37s to 39s; maple, 38s to 42s; white, 48s to [illegible]; boilers, 55s to 60s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 47s to [illegible]; Suffolk, 36s to 4[illegible]; Stockton and Yorkshire, 34s to 38s, per 280 lbs. Foreign—Free wheat, [illegible]; Dantzig, red, [illegible]; white, [illegible] per quarter.

The Seed Market.—There has been [illegible] linseed cakes, at an advance of 10s per 1000. [illegible] Linseed, English, sowing, 55s to 60s; Baltic, crushing, 38s [illegible] to 41s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 41s to 42s; Hempseed, 36s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 14s per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 11s to 1[illegible]; white ditto, 10s to [illegible]. Tares, 5s 6d to 7s 0d per bushel. English Rapeseed, new, £21 to £22 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 [illegible] to £12 0s; ditto, foreign, £7 10s to £[illegible] 12s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes, £5 [illegible] to £[illegible] per ton. Canary, 46s to 52s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, 45s to 50s; extra, 25s to 55s; white, 60s to 62s; extra up to 68s. Foreign, red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis, are from 8d to 8½d, of household ditto, [illegible] per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 49s 0d; barley, 31s 0d; oats, 23s 2d; rye, 32s 7d; beans, 40s 4d; peas, 37s 1d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 46s 9d; barley, 28s 1d; oats, 23s 4d, rye, 30s 7d; beans, 39s 8d; peas, 36s 7d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 10s 0d; barley, 3s 6d, oats, 1s 6d; rye, 3s 6d, beans, 3s 6d; peas, 3s 6d.

Tea.—This market continues in a very inactive state, nevertheless, previous rates are obtained [illegible].

Provisions.—In Irish butter a good business has been doing, [illegible] owing to the large quantity [illegible] holders have accepted rather lower rates. Waterford, [illegible] to 92s; Carlow, 94s to 98s; Clonmel and Carrick [illegible]; Cork [illegible]. On board, Limerick has sold at 90s to 92s; and Sligo, 86s to 88s per cwt. [illegible] Dutch butter [illegible] 102s, [illegible] 72s to 8[illegible]s, for middling and inferior [illegible]. English butter is steady at [illegible] to 104s [illegible] per cwt. [illegible] Waterford [illegible] 68s to 72s, and heavy [illegible] 52s [illegible]. [illegible] Irish lard is selling at 68s to 74s, for Waterford [illegible] to 66s per cwt., for kegs. All other kinds of provisions are quite as dear.

Tallow.—P Y C. is very firm, at very full prices, or from 41s 9d to 42s 9d per cwt. Town tallow, 41s net cash.

Oils.—The inquiry for most descriptions of oil is steady, at extreme currencies.

Hay and Straw.—Old meadow hay, £3 0s to £4 0s; new ditto, £2 8s to £3 14s; old clover, £4 10s to £5 10s; new ditto, £3 10s to £4 18s; oat straw, £1 8s to £1 10s; wheat straw, £1 10s to £1 12s per load.

Hops.—A very large quantity of new hops has come to hand during the present week [illegible] New Kent pockets, £[illegible] to £6 [illegible]. New Sussex ditto, £4 10s to £5 15s per cwt.

Coals (Friday).—New Tanfield, 13s; Whitwell, 16s 6d; Shotton, 17s 3d; Wharncliffe, 16s 9d; Eden Main, 17s; Barrett, 17s; and Killingworth, 16s 3d per ton.

Smithfield (Friday.)—In to-day's market the supply of beasts was seasonably extensive, [illegible] to numbers, but of very middling quality. The primest Scots, &c., moved off steadily, [illegible] at late rates. [illegible] readily supported. [illegible] which was good—sold freely, at full prices; but pigs commanded very little attention. Milch cows were a dull sale, at from £16 to £19 each.

Per 8lb. to sink the offals:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 10d to 3s 0d; second quality ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; prime large oxen, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime Scots, &c., 4s 0d to 4s 2d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 6d to 3s 10d; second quality ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime South Down ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; large coarse calves, 3s 10d to 4s 6d; prime small ditto, 4s 8d to 4s 10d; large hogs, 3s 8d to 4s 6d; neat small porkers, 4s 8d to 4s 10d, lambs, 4s 8d to 5s 8d. Suckling calves, 18s to 29s, and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 19s each. Beasts, 923; cows, 108, sheep and lambs, 8180, calves, 389; pigs, 180.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a very steady demand, at full prices.

Per 8lb. by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; middling ditto, 3s 0d to [illegible]; prime large ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; ditto small ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; large pork, 3s 6d to 4s 2d; inferior mutton, 3s 6d to 3s 10d; middling ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 2d, prime ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; veal, 3s [illegible] to 4s 8d, small pork, 4s 4d to 4s 10d; lamb, 4s 8d to 5s 8d. ROBERT HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

There was a disposition to decline in the English Funds on Monday, the marriage of the Infanta of Spain to the Duke of Montpensier offering difficulties which may not prove easy of solution. Added to which, the rise in the price of grain had its usual depressing tendency on Consols. This flatness prevailed to a greater extent on Tuesday, Consols receding to 95⅞ to 96 for money. Exchequer Bills also receded to 13 17 premium. A slightly improved tone has been, however, perceptible since, but the amount of business transacted has been very limited, the greater portion of the speculators, both within and out of the House, being absent, in pursuit of the various enjoyments resorted to at this season of the year. The following list of prices gives the closing values of the various English Securities:—Bank Stock, 210; Three per Cent. Reduced Annuities, 95½; Three per Cent. Consols Annuities, 96; Three per Cent. Annuities, 1726, 95½; New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cent. Annuities, 98¾; Long Annuities to expire Jan., 1860, 10 7-16; Consols for Account, 96⅛; Exchequer Bills, 15.

The Foreign Market, at the commencement of the week, was marked by some extensive fluctuations. Portuguese Stock receded nearly eight per cent., from an intimation that the Portuguese Government proposed to impose a description of Income-tax on the Foreign Debt, amounting to about 20 per cent. upon the dividends. The unjustness of this measure is only exceeded by the coolness with [illegible] It will be remembered that the present Converted Bonds, now paying four per cent., were contracted for under a promise of paying six per cent. The last clause of the decree endorsed upon the Five per Cent. Bonds of 1841 states plainly that "no political change or circumstance whatever" shall affect the promise of payment at the rate of interest therein specified. Notwithstanding, a decree is deliberately issued in the face of this, reducing the interest nearly twenty per cent. A meeting of the principal bondholders will, however, shortly be held, when prompt measures will be advised to resist this robbery. Spanish quotations have not been well maintained, at the prices of the previous week, the Infanta's proposed marriage not being considered [illegible] Spain. Towards the close of the week, however, a better feeling prevailed, and prices again displayed improvement. Mexican Stock continues heavy. A strong party favouring the return of Santa Anna evidently exists in the Republic, and is well represented here. The fluctuations have not, however, been very extensive, although the closing prices evidence a decline. The market is, however, very thinly attended; and, at closing, the following almost nominal prices were quoted: Brazilian Bonds, 89½; Buenos Ayres Bonds, 6 per Cent., Account, 43½; Chilian Bonds, 6 per Cent., 101; Ditto Deferred, 54; Dutch, 2½ per Cent., 60⅛; Equador Bonds, 3⅝; Grenada Bonds, 1 per Cent., 2 [illegible]; Mexican, [illegible] per Cent., [illegible]; Ditto, Account, [illegible]; Portuguese Bonds, 4 per Cent., 43; Ditto, Account, 42½; Spanish, 5 per Cent., Account, 27; Ditto, 3 per Cent., 38¾; Ditto, Account, 38¼; Venezuela Bonds, 2 per Cent., 43; Belgian, 4½ per Cent., 97; Dutch, 2½ per Cent., 12 Guild., 59⅝; Ditto, for Account, [illegible]; Ditto, 4 per Cent. Certificates, [illegible].

At present a depression in the Share Market appears to have ceased, and prices, consequently, display very little variation. Eastern Counties remain good, at a slight advance; and Great Westerns are firm. In Scrips very little is doing. The following list contains the last prices of the lines dealt in:—Aberdeen, 9½; Amber., Nott., Boston, and Eastern Junction, 1⅞; Birmingham and Gloucester, New, 32½; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 5⅞; Bristol and Exeter, 97; Buckinghamshire, [illegible] dis.; Caledonian, [illegible]; Cambridge and Oxford, [illegible]; Chester and Holyhead, 26; Cornwall, 1¼; Eastern Counties, 22⅝; Ditto, New, 7¼ p.; Ditto, York Extension, 2½; Edinburgh and Glasgow, ¼ Shares, 17½; Great North of England, 229; Great Western, ½ Shares, 82½; Hull & Selby, ½ Shares, 51; Ipswich and Bury St. Edmunds, 9; Lancaster and Carlisle, 63; Ditto New, 10¾; Leeds and Bradford, 70½; Liverpool, Manchester, and Newcastle Junction, 2; London and Blackwall, 8; Ditto New, 4½; London and Brighton, 62½; London and Croydon, 22¾; London and North Western, 202; Ditto New Shares, 15 pm.; London and South Western New, 26; London and York, 2; Ditto Half Shares, 1⅝; Manchester and Leeds Extension, 2¼ pm; Manchester and Birmingham, 77½; Ditto Quarters (A), 13¼; Midland, 139½; Ditto New, 36½; Midland and Eastern Counties, —; Newcastle and Darlington Junction, 42¾; Ditto New, 11; Newcastle and Berwick, 27¾; Norfolk, 131¼; Ditto Extension, 2½; North British, 37¾; Ditto Half Shares, 16; North Kent and Direct Dover, 1⅞; North Staffordshire, 3⅞ pm; Northampton, Banbury, and Cheltenham, 1½; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 8; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 2⅞; Shropshire Union ¼ dis.; South Midland, ⅝ pm; South Eastern and Dover, 42⅝; Ditto, No. 1, 24½; Ditto, No. 2, 16; Ditto, No. 3, 18½; Ditto, No. 4, 3½; York and Carlisle, ½; York and North Midland, 97; Ditto Half Shares, 46½; Ditto Scarborough Branch, 46; East and West Riding Extension, 12⅞; Boulogne and Amiens, 13½; Dutch Rhenish, 5½; Namur and Liege, 2¼; Northern of France Constituted, 13½; Orleans and Bordeaux, 8¾; Paris and Lyons Constituted, 6; Rouen and Havre, 28½; Sambre and Meuse 3½; West Flanders, [illegible]; Mines, Real del Monte, Unregistered, 3.

SATURDAY MORNING.—The English Stock Market was in a very inactive state yesterday, probably owing to the fine weather. Consols, for money, were done at [illegible], and for the account, at [illegible]; very little business was done. In the Share Market the transactions were equally limited. In fact, there is no speculation going on. In Scrip scarcely anything is doing.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 8.

WAR-OFFICE, SEPTEMBER 8.

5th Dragoon Guards: Major W. H. Archer to be Major, vice King.

3d Light Dragoons: A. A. M. Campbell to be Cornet, vice Sal[illegible]. 11th: Major J. W. King to be Major, vice Archer.

Scots Fusilier Guards: Lieut. and Capt. the [illegible] Captain and Lieutenant-[illegible] to be Lieutenant and Captain, vice Liddell; A. W. H. Meyrick to be Ensign and Lieutenant, vice Mercer.

[illegible] Foot: F. Sitwell to be Ensign, vice Drew; H. Cole to be Ensign, vice Sitwell. 20th: Lieut. G. Thomson to be Adjutant; Sergeant Major J. Magee to be Quartermaster; Ensign W. H. Dowling to be Lieutenant, vice Touson; R. E. W. Gordon to be Ensign, vice Dowling. 22nd: Ensign G. P. E. Morrison to be Lieutenant, vice Aplin; J. B. Gardiner to be Ensign, vice Morrison; Sergeant Major W. Hughes to be Ensign, vice Holbrook. 27th: Captain Sir A. B. de C. Brooke, Bart., to be Captain, vice Smith; Lieut. J. Lewes to be Captain, vice Sir A. B. de C. Brooke [illegible] Lieutenant, vice Lewes; Ensign F. Barnes to be Ensign, vice Herring [illegible], vice Sterling; Ensign J. V. Ellis to be Lieut., vice Browne; L. S. Cotton to be Ensign, vice Ellis. 30th: C. W. Clubley to be Ensign, vice D'Arcy. 40th: Lieut. L. A. Forbes to be Lieut., vice Miller. 41st: Capt. A. J. W. Northey to be Captain, vice Farmer. 51st: Capt. T. M. Farmer to be Captain, vice Northey. 67th: Ensign W. D'Arcy to be Ensign, vice Barnes. 85th: Ensign F. Sitwell to be Ensign, vice Thompson. 87th: Second Lieutenant H. S. Bawtree to be First Lieutenant, vice Cruickshank; W. Murphy to be Second Lieutenant, vice Bawtree. 92nd: D. Erskine to be Ensign, vice Gillies. 97th: Ensign W. H. Beatty to be Lieutenant, vice Bindon; Lieut. W. G. Bindon to be Adjutant; C. E. Stainforth to be Ensign, vice Beatty.

Rifle Brigade: Quartermaster P. Macdonald to be Adjutant, with the rank of Second Lieutenant.

BANKRUPTS.—T. COOKE, Bridge-terrace, Harrow-road, plasterer. J. DITCHMAN, Thurlow-place, Hackney-road, builder. W. G. BARLEY, Northampton, draper. R. WALTON, Birchin-lane, Cornhill, hosier. J. GRAHAM, Jewry-street, Aldgate, stationer. F. ARNOLD, New Bond-street, stationer. E. A. W. TAYLOR, Kirkgate, Yorkshire, bookseller. J. D. BROWNING, Bristol, cabinet-maker. T. WRIGHT, Derby, cheese-factor. B. C. SOTHERN, Liverpool, coal-dealer. C. D. JOHNSON, Liverpool, victualler. J. BIRLEY, Eccles, Lancashire, card-manufacturer. J. BIGNETT, Manchester, sack-manufacturer. J. TUCKETT, Exeter, herbalist.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—A. DIXON, Kingston, Haddingtonshire, farmer. R. BRIDGES, North Berwick, engineer. J. PATON, and Co., Glasgow, wine-merchants.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 11.

WAR-OFFICE, SEPT. 11.

7th Light Dragoons: [illegible] vice Wyndham. Cornet H. [illegible]

Scots F[illegible] Ensign and Lieut. F. Haygarth to be Adjutant, vice Murray.

1st F[illegible]: Surgeon of the Second Class A. Knox, M.D., to be Surgeon, vice Carson. [illegible] W. Marriott to be Quartermaster, vice J. Willox. 60th: Capt. R. G. Johnston to [illegible]. 95th: Lieut. H. Carew to be Captain, vice Baines; Ensign J. N. Sar[illegible] vice Carew; G. C. Taylor to be Ensign, vice Sargent.

Rifle Brigade: Capt. A. J. Lawrence to be Major, vice Sullivan; Lieut. C. H. Pollen to be Captain, vice Lawrence; Second Lieut. the Hon. G. Elliott to be First Lieutenant, vice Pollen; W. W. Knight to be Second Lieutenant, vice Elliott.

3rd West India Regiment: W. Browne to be Assistant Surgeon, vice Thompson.

Royal Canadian Rifle Regiment: Capt. P. Hill to be Captain, vice Johnston.

STAFF: Paymaster A. Thompson to be Paymaster of a Recruiting District, vice Storey.

HOSPITAL STAFF: Surgeon W. Carson, M.D., to be Staff Surgeon of the Second Class, vice Knox; D. O'R. Clayton, M.D., to be Assistant Staff Surgeon, vice Traquair.

UNATTACHED: Major W. S. [illegible]

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY LORDS-LIEUTENANT.

S[illegible]: J. W. [illegible]dgell, Esq., to be Deputy Lieutenant.

[illegible] Suffolk Regiment of Militia: J. G. Sheppard, Esq., to be Captain.

BANKRUPTS.—H. SUTTON, Holland-crescent, Barrington-road, Brixton, builder. C. PADDON, Charlotte-terrace, New-cut, Lambeth, slop-seller. G. F. T. FOWLER, Ebington-street, Pimlico, late of Catherine-street, Strand, printer. J. PERKINS, late of the Minories, but now of Wenlock-street, Hoxton, cheesemonger. P. FLITTON, Barley, Hertfordshire, boot and shoe-maker. M. SHACKLETON, Manchester, printer. H. COPNER, Ludlow, mercer. T. MORRIS, [illegible] late of Lockington, but now of Castle Donington, Leicestershire, cattle-dealer. E. PHILPOT, Ludlow, timber-dealer. H. DEVERILL, Stoke-upon-Trent, corn-factor. T. WARD, Nottingham, maltster. W. GRIBBON, Leeds, dealer in glass.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—W. TURNBULL, Airdrie, cattle-dealer. W. DICKSON, Jun., Glasgow, wine-merchant. C. SHANKS and Co., Glasgow, commission-agents. J. M'CLIESH, Glasgow, surgeon.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W. BATTY. Patronised by her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Royal. Immense hit of the new Spectacle of STEED OF SYRACUSE [illegible] MONDAY NEXT, SEPT. 14, will be presented the highly successful Drama of THE MERCHANT STEED; or, the Flight of Damon, with all the extensive resources of the Theatre. New and magnificent SCENES OF THE CIRCLE, by the French and British Riders. The whole concluding with, for the first time, the Necromantic Ballet entitled THE VINE DRESSER'S DAUGHTER; or, the Sprite of the Vineyard.—Box-office open from Eleven to Five.—Commence each evening at Seven.—Stage Director, Mr. T. Thompson.

COLOSSEUM.—ALTERATION OF TIME.—THE DAY EXHIBITION consists of the Panorama of London, Museum of Sculpture, Arabesque Conservatories, Gorgeous Gothic Aviary, Classic Ruins, Swiss Cottage and Mont Blanc, with Mountain Torrent, &c. From Ten till Five.

EVENING EXHIBITION.—The new and extraordinary Panorama of London by Night, with additional atmospheric effects every half hour, Museum of Sculpture, Conservatories and Gorgeous Gothic Aviary, &c., brilliantly illuminated; Swiss Cottage, Mont Blanc, and Mountain Torrent, represented by Moonlight.—Open from Seven till Half-past Ten. The whole projected and designed by Mr. W. Bradwell.—The Grand Mexican Aloe still in Bloom, no Extra Charge.

GENERAL TOM THUMB (the American Man in Miniature) is now giving positively his FAREWELL LEVEES in the PROVINCES, previous to his Final Departure for the United States. He will be in Exeter the 11th and 12th of September, Exmouth, 14th; and then Exhibit in Teignmouth, Torquay, Totness, Plymouth, Devonport, Tavistock, Liskeard, St. Austell, Truro, Falmouth, Penzance, Redruth, Bodmin, Launceston, Torrington, Bideford, Ilfracombe, Barnstaple, Bridgwater, Glastonbury, Wells, Bristol; and then proceed through Ireland and Wales.

The Little General will appear in all the various Costumes and Extraordinary Performances which he had the honour of Exhibiting THREE TIMES before HER MAJESTY, at Buckingham Palace, and before the principal Crowned Heads and Courts of Europe. His new Miniature Equipage will promenade the streets daily. The Little General and Suite travel in his own Carriage and Four; his Retinue consists of ELEVEN Persons, including his Father and Mother, Secretary, Preceptors, Pianist, Petite Coachman and Footman, &c. &c.

INVENTORS and DEPOSITORS of WORKING MODELS, and of other Specimens of the Useful Arts (as well as the Visitors of the ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION) are respectfully informed that the Directors have given their anxious consideration to the new appointment of DEMONSTRATOR in MECHANICS, whose duty will be to explain to the Visitors the Principles and Uses of the above Specimens with clearness and simplicity. The Lectures now comprise the ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH, as well as other objects of present interest. The beautiful Optical Exhibitions, &c. &c.—Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price.

TEN GUINEAS WORTH OF BOOKS FOR FOUR GUINEAS.—FINDEN'S TABLEAUX, a Series of Graphic Scenes, illustrative of National Character, Beauty, and Costume, from Paintings by eminent Modern Artists, with Letterpress Descriptions, by Popular Writers; the whole complete in five very elegantly-bound volumes, for Four Guineas—usual price Ten Guineas. This is one of the handsomest books for the drawing-room table ever published. Sold by J. FIELD, Bookseller, 65, Quadrant, corner of Air-street. Sets forwarded to the Country on receipt of a Post-office order.

THE POINT LACE CROCHET COLLAR BOOK, with Original Patterns, Ornamentally Illustrated, designed by Mrs. WARREN, 2, Manor-place, Holloway, is now publishing, price Sixpence. London, SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co. Booksellers; and HUTTON and Co., 6, Newgate-street.

THE FORMATION OF READING SOCIETIES.

THE PLANS AND PARTICULARS for the FORMATION of READING SOCIETIES [illegible] (inclosing two stamps) to be addressed to SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Publishers, Conduit-street, Hanover-square.

DR. MADDOCK on DISEASES of the LUNGS and HEART. [illegible] these complaints, to consult this able work. The treatment pointed out is at once novel, simple, and natural, and is undoubtedly highly efficacious."—Literary Journal.—Third Edition, price 5s. 6d.—SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, Paternoster-row.

PRICE EIGHTEEN PENCE.

A COMIC PANORAMA.
By "LEECH."
ACKERMANN and Co., Strand, and all Booksellers.

Just Published, one handsome volume, royal 8vo., price £1 1s.,

BEAUTIES OF CHESS. A Collection of the Finest CHESS PROBLEMS extant; including upwards of TWO THOUSAND CURIOUS POSITIONS won or drawn by brilliant "Coups." Selected from the works of the first Chess writers, past and present. By A. ALEXANDRE.

BAILLIERE and [illegible] Marlborough-street, London.

CHEMISTRY APPLIED TO THE ARTS, AGRICULTURE, AND MANUFACTURES.

THE PHARMACEUTICAL TIMES, No. 2, price 5d., will be ready on SATURDAY, 72 quarto columns, and will contain Original Articles by Dr. Ure, F.R.S., Dr. Letheby, &c. &c.; Courses on Organic Chemistry applied to the Arts, by Dumas; and on Practical Pharmacy, by the celebrated Souberian; a Review of the Progress of Chemistry Abroad and At Home, with several Editorial Articles on Chemical Subjects of importance.—Price 5d.; stamped, 6d.—Office, 49, Essex-street, Strand.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, AND AVOID, addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic.

By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c.

SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; CARVALHO, 147, Fleet-street; HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street; MANN, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 10, Argyll-place, Regent-street.

DR. ROGET'S CHESS-BOARD.

Just Ready, a New Edition, in a neat foolscap 8vo. case, price 2s. 6d.,

THE ECONOMIC CHESS-BOARD; being a Chess-board, provided with a complete set of Chess-Men, for playing games in carriages, or out of doors, and for folding up, and carrying in the pocket, without disturbing the game. Invented by P. M. ROGET, M.D., and Registered according to Act of Parliament.

* * * Dr. Roget is Preparing a set of Chess Problems to accompany the above.

London, LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

THE OXFORD GRADUATE ON PAINTING.

Just Published, in Imperial 8vo., Price 18s. cloth,

THE FIRST VOLUME of MODERN PAINTERS. By A GRADUATE OF OXFORD.

A New Edition, revised by the Author, and printed uniformly with Volume II.

Also lately Published, in Imperial 8vo. Price 10s. 6d. cloth,

THE SECOND VOLUME of MODERN PAINTERS: Treating of the Imaginative and Theoretic Faculties. London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 65, Cornhill.

Now ready, price One Shilling, or free by post for sixteen postage stamps,

A TREATISE on the HUMAN TEETH and GUMS, with [illegible] Teeth and Gums, with a number of Prescriptions of Tooth Powders; a detailed and simple account of their physiological structure; and an important Chapter on the Prevention and Cure of Toothache, &c. &c. &c. London: S. V. COLLINS, 39, Holywell-street, Strand; and all Booksellers. Country Booksellers and News-agents supplied with all the Daily and Weekly Newspapers (per early trains or otherwise), Periodical Publications, &c. &c. &c.

COINS of the ANCIENT ROMAN EMPERORS, History of the Succession of the Ancient Roman Emperors, with the Prices of their Coins, bearing Portraits, their Dates and Mottoes, is just published by P. WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins, 46, Strand, London, price 1s.; by post, 1s. 2d. Coins sent by post, Bought, Catalogued, &c.

CLAUDET'S PORTRAITS.—"A Daguerreotype Portrait that could be truly pronounced a flattering likeness, we certainly never expected to see; that phenomenon, however, was presented to us on recently visiting the establishment of Mr. Claudet."—Athenæum, July 4th.—"We confess we had no idea of the possibility of producing anything so artistic and elegant on a metal plate."—Art-Union, July 1st.—"Mr. Claudet's productions approach more nearly to the highly finished miniature than anything we have yet seen."—Literary Gazette, July 4th. Mr. CLAUDET'S Daguerreotype Portrait Establishment is open at Nine o'Clock, 18, King William-street, corner of Adelaide-street, West Strand.

SELLING OFF—REAL VALENCIENNES LACE and EDGINGS.—Thousands of Yards, from 4½d. to 1s. 3½d. 2500 yards Narrow Lace, from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 2d. 800 yards Wide Lace, from 2s. 6d. to 15s. 6d. 350 Insertions, from 1s. to 4s. 9d. Patterns sent to any part of the Kingdom.

Address, KING and SHEATH, 264, Regent-street.

SELLING OFF.—BLACK SILK VELVETS for DRESSES and BONNETS.

1000 yards at 4s. 9d. for trimmings.
2000 yards for Bonnets, at 6s. 6d.
2450 yards for Dresses, at 7s. 6d.
1500 yards very rich Lyons, at 9s. 6d.

Ladies in want of Velvet Dresses or Bonnets can have patterns sent free of expense.

Address KING and SHEATH, 264, Regent-street.

Milliners and Large Buyers allowed the wholesale discount.

GROSSMITH'S ARTIFICIAL HUMAN EYE MANUFACTORY, 175, FLEET-STREET (Established by J. B. Sleath, 1760).—These superb gems of art are made by William Robert Grossmith in a few hours to fit, without operation or pain, in every case where the sight has been lost. They are recommended by all the ophthalmic surgeons as protective to the cavity and preventive of the wasting and closing of the lids, the colour is perfectly matched, the movement precise with the natural eye, and the closest [illegible] will not detect them from life.—* * * Forwarded by post to all parts of the world.

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS AND GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM for STOVE GRATES, kitchen ranges, iron bedsteads, fenders, fire-irons, general furnishing ironmongery, tinned copper, iron and best tin cooking vessels, best Sheffield plate, and table cutlery, japanned trays, tea urns, ornamental iron and wire work for verandahs, lawns, &c.; flower-stands. Every article is warranted, and marked at the lowest prices, in plain figures, for cash.—Adjoining the Royal Bazaar, 58, Baker-street, Portman-sq.

GOWLAND'S LOTION for Purifying the Skin and preserving the complexion. The use of Gowland's Lotion is speedily followed by the disappearance of every species of eruptive malady, discoloration, &c., and the establishment of a pure surface of the skin, accompanied by the brilliant circulation which constitutes the tint of beauty; whilst as a refresher it preserves the most susceptible complexion, and sustains to a protracted period the softness of texture and vivacity peculiar to earlier years.—"ROBERT SHAW, LONDON," is in White Letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is Genuine. Price, 2s. 9d., and 5s. 6d., Quarts 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Chemists.

GIBBINS' CREAM of ROSES and ROSEMARY.—This esteemed and elegant article is most respectfully offered to the Public, by GIBBINS, Court Hairdresser and Perfumer (from Paris), 7, King-street, St. James's-square, as the most delicate and effectual Preservative of the Hair. Being a pomade, it will be successfully applied in promoting its growth and lux[illegible]

GIBBINS' EXTRACT of ROSES [illegible] ROSEMARY [illegible] plants, and when applied in Washing the hair, renders it soft and glossy, or, after illness, its astringent properties prevent the Hair from falling off.

No. 7, King-street, St. James's-square, London.

EAGLE INSURANCE COMPANY.—NOTICE is hereby given, that, pursuant to the Deed of Settlement, an ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the Proprietors of ten or more shares will be held at the Office of the Company, No. 3, the Crescent, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars, on FRIDAY, the 2nd day of October next, at twelve for one o'clock precisely, for the purpose of receiving the accounts of the Company, and of electing four Directors in the room of John Richards, Esq., Sir James McGrigor, Bart.; Henry Tufnell, Esq., M.P.; and Peter Skipper, Esq.; and one auditor in the room of James Gascoigne Lynde, Esq., who go out by rotation, but who are eligible to be re-elected.

By order, HENRY P. SMITH, Actuary.

Eagle Life Office, 3, the Crescent, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars, September 2, 1846.

By a by-law, no person can be a candidate for the office of Director or Auditor unless he shall give notice thereof in writing to the Actuary, fourteen days at the least, previous to the General Meeting.

THE NEW HOUSES OF E. MOSES AND SON.

First, reader, your attention let us fix
On Nos. Eighty-five and Eighty-six;
Right facing Aldgate-church are these display'd,
To furnish you with clothing ready made
Neat, strong, and matchless goods are purchas'd here
And not a single article is dear.
Next your attention we would beg to call
To No. Eighty-four, the "Private Hall."
Here you ascend the stairs of solid oak
To gain the Room where orders are bespoke
This show-room with its giant chandelier,
Eclipses all that's witness'd far and near.
Here a secluded Habit-room you view,
And here there is a room for Vestings, too:
Other apartments follow in rotation,
To answer one design, ACCOMMODATION.
The next compartment we survey, must be
The Hat depôt of MOSES—Eighty-three.
There's not another Hat-mart in the Town
Which casts such lustre on the human crown.
On turning round the corner, you behold
The Warehouse where the Hosiery goods are sold.
This House, whose trade is constantly alive,
Is in the Minories, No. One-four-five.
On passing to the right you'll find, next door,
The Establishment for Outfits—One-five-four.
And here, good reader, our description closes
Our brief description of the House of MOSES.
We trust you'll not omit to give a call—
Not to ONE Warehouse only, but to all.
We mark the prices on our goods in trade,
From which, of course, there's no abatement made.
If any thing that's sold is found to lack,
We change the goods or give the money back.
We do, to please you, all that CAN be done,
Do all "YOU" can for MOSES and his SON.

For particulars of Self-Measurement, and other essential information, obtain the new book, entitled "Past, Present, and Future," which may be had gratis, and post-free, of the Proprietors, E. MOSES and SON, 154, 155, 156, 157, Minories, and 83, 84, 85, and 86, Aldgate, City, London.

E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Woollen-drapers, Clothiers, Hatters, Hosiers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen, regret to be obliged to guard the public against imposition, but, having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood of "being connected with them," or it's the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and, for obvious reasons, they have no connection with any other house in or out of London, and those who desire genuine cheap clothing should, to prevent disappointment, call at or send to the Minories or Aldgate, opposite the Church, City, London.

NOTICE. The entrance to the Bespoke Department is at 84, Aldgate.—No business transacted at this Establishment from sunset Friday evening till sunset Saturday evening, when it is resumed till twelve o'clock.

CURE of STAMMERING without SURGICAL OPERATION, or the use of MEDICINE. Mr. HUNT, having been called to Town somewhat earlier than usual this autumn, to attend to several Pupils, begs to announce his Residence, at 224, Regent-street, to the end of October.

MR. DAVID RITCHIE, formerly Partner with Hall and [illegible] Churchyard, under the new firm of BAILEY and RITCHIE.

GLAZIERS WHO WANT WINDOW-GLASS can be Supplied [illegible] and every substance of Sheet Glass in stock. Squares cut to size—R. COGAN, 48, Leicester-square, London.

TONIC ALE.—This splendid new description of Bottled Beer is now in high perfection. It is strongly recommended by the Faculty as possessing peculiar stomachic qualities, promoting appetite, &c. Sold in quart and pint bottles, secured by Betts's Patent Capsule. JOSEPH STOCKTON, Sole Agent, 51, Lamb's Conduit-street.

EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY, (Offices, No. 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate [illegible] are still sold for 15s.; or half-a-crown a pound, [illegible] 3s. 4d., and 3s. 10d. Coffee, 9d., 1s., and 1s. 3d.

HEALTH PRESERVED, INDIGESTION PREVENTED, [illegible] all Diseases of the Teeth and Gums. Tooth Powder, chemically prepared. Consultation free.

BONA FIDE SALE.—EXPIRATION of LEASE.—The DOUDNEYS are relinquishing their City Trade, and, to effect a speedy clearance, are SELLING OFF their Fashionable and Excellent STOCK at HALF PRICES. The Saving of Pounds on a Single Suit will repay an effort to call, and early comers will have the best choice. Observe, at 97, FLEET-STREET only.

SILVER PLATE for the DINNER and TEA TABLE.— A Pamphlet is published, containing Drawings and Lists of Prices of Silver Spoons and Forks, Tea and Coffee Services, and all the articles of silver required in family use. It may be had gratis, or will be sent postage free to any part of Great Britain, Ireland, or the Colonies.

A. B. SAVORY and SONS, 14, Cornhill, London (opposite the Bank).

ROMAN CAMEOS.—Recently Received, a few ROMAN CAMEOS, by some of the best Italian artists [illegible] the Graces—Hebe—Rebecca at the Well—and [illegible] They are mounted in Gold as Brooches. The price is from 20s. to [illegible] A. B. SAVORY and SONS, 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the statue [illegible]

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house. On receipt of a Post-office Order payable to John Jones for £4 5s., one will be sent free. —Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a Twopenny Stamp.

DANCING TAUGHT, in the most fashionable style, by Mr. WILLIS, 41, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private Lessons in the Polka, Cellarius Valse, and Valse a Deux Temps, at all hours, to Ladies and Gentlemen of any age wishing privacy and expedition. An Evening Class on Monday and Friday. A Juvenile Class on Wednesday and Saturday. Terms may be had on application as above.

CHUBB'S LOCKS, Fire-proof Safes, and Cash Boxes.—Chubb's [illegible] fitted with the Detector Locks. C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard.

CHILDREN'S AND INVALIDS' CARRIAGES.—Invalids Wheel Chairs, from £3 to £35, with hoods, second-hand as well as new; Spinal and Self-Acting Chairs, Children's Chaises, vis-à-vis Waggons, Phaetons, Barouches, &c., from 10s. to 20 guineas. Immense and varied collection on sale or hire at INGRAM'S Manufactory, 29, City-road, Finsbury-square.—N.B. Illustrated Catalogues.

HOT WEATHER. — TRAVELLING. — SEA-SIDE. — The REGISTERED PALETOT in London, only at 22, Cornhill, opposite the Royal Exchange; and the chief Llama Cloth Warehouse, 114, Regent-street. Do not be deceived by a similarity of name placed in the windows of a few petty shops in the neighbourhood of the Patentees. Each Paletot is stamped H. J. and D. NICOLL, 114, Regent-street.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, Sole Inventress of Teaching the Art of Dress-making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most finished Style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers Wanted.—Millinery Rooms.

DAMASK TABLE LINENS, most Elegant and Durable, at very Low Prices for Cash, by JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linen-Drapers to the Queen, at their Family Linen Wareroom, 26, Regent-street, two doors below Piccadilly Circus. Parcels above £5 sent throughout England carriage paid.

John Capper and Son's General Linen-Drapery Business, established for nearly Seventy Years, is continued in Gracechurch-street, without change.

"THE PROOF of the TEA is in the DRINKING."—As you pass by Number One, St. Paul's Churchyard, ask the tea-merchants to send you a pound of their Stout, Old-Fashioned Tea, at 4s. 6d.; and, after the tea-pot has gone its round, and comes to be again filled with water, then taste and say if "the proof of the tea is not in the drinking." If Number One, St. Paul's Churchyard is not in the way of everybody, then drop DAKIN and Co. a line by post, and they will send this choice tea any distance, by their own vans, within seven miles of St. Paul's.

HOBY'S IMPERIAL BLACKING has no unpleasant smell; its lasting polish equals patent leather; it softens the upper leather, prevents it breaking, and alleviates the pain of corns and tender feet. In bottles, 4s. St. James's-street, London, and BENETFINK, 8, Cheapside. Edinburgh, Duncan, 59, Princes-street. Dublin: Hodges and Son, Westmoreland-street.—Also, HOBY'S EMOLIENT WATERPROOF WAX, for shooting and fishing boots; which, after thirty years' constant use, has proved to be the only composition which renders boots and shoes thoroughly waterproof. In bottles, 5s.

PIANOFORTES.—The cheapest house in London to purchase these first-rate instruments is at H. TOLKIEN'S, manufacturer, 28, King William-street, London-bridge, near the statue. H. T. having completed his extensive alterations, begs his friends and the public to view his splendid stock of PIANOS, which is not to be equalled by any maker, and at about half the price charged by them. H. T.'s much admired piccolos, cash price £25. Old instruments taken in exchange.—TOLKIEN, 28, King William-street, London-bridge.

THE SUMMER RIDE or PROMENADE.—The peculiar virtues of C. and A. OLDRIDGE'S BALM of COLUMBIA completely removes the difficulty experienced by ladies in preserving their ringlets after exercise. Its use so invigorates the hair, that tresses, previously the straightest and most destitute of curl, rapidly acquire a vigour which maintains in permanent ringlets the head-dress of the most persevering votary of the ball-room, the ride, or the promenade. Its efficacy in preserving, strengthening, and renewing the hair has become a matter of notoriety among all civilised nations.—3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle. No other prices. Oldridge's Balm, 1, Wellington-street, the second house from the Strand.

CAUTION.—BERDOE'S WATERPROOF OVER-COATS and SHOOTING JACKETS. W. BERDOE [illegible] Caution he gave several months since against certain parties, who, falsely representing themselves as "travellers" for him, have, for a long period, been visiting almost every town in the kingdom, selling goods, which, although having attached to them W. B.'s name and label (or a very slight variation therefrom), have not been made by him. Almost every [illegible]

METCALFE and CO'S. NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—Useful Inquiry.—For proof of the extreme durability, power of cleaning, and true economy, ask all who have used Metcalfe's Brushes. The Tooth-brush performs the highly-important office of searching thoroughly into the divisions, and cleaning in the most extraordinary manner; hairs never come loose. 1s. Peculiarly penetrating Hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russia bristles, which will not soften like common hair. Improved Clothes-brush, that cleans harmlessly in one-third the time. The new Velvet Brush, and Immense Stock of genuine unbleached Smyrna Sponge, at METCALFE and Co's. only Establishment, 130 B, Oxford-street, one door from Holles-street.

CAUTION. Beware of the word "from" Metcalfe's, adopted by some houses.

THE LATE CASE of POISONING by DEADLY NIGHTSHADE BERRIES (the Belladonna of the doctors). People of England!. The only difference between the man who sold the berries and those dishonest doctors who administer rank poisons medicinally is this—that the former has killed two persons OUTRIGHT, whereas, the doctors above-named, poison, SLOWLY, thousands with belladonna and other rank poisons, only it is done by slow degrees, and under the name of science!!! Out upon the idea that poisons can or ought to be used "medicinally." Twenty or more of the first doctors of London, whose names appear in the "London Teetotaller," of the 1st of August, have just declared that spirituous liquors should not be used "medicinally." It is only a year ago that hygeists were laughed at for even mentioning such a thing, yet it has come to pass!! If, therefore, spirituous liquors should not be given "medicinally," with how much more reason should rank poisons, such as belladonna, arsenic, prussic acid, &c., be prohibited!!! The British College of Health call upon those eminent medical men (who do not make a trade of their profession) to come forward and declare the truth. How the public can allow themselves to be imposed upon in a question so palpable is most extraordinary. Nothing but the blindest confidence can account for it. Well may doctors administer their poisons in SMALL DOSES! Let there be a disinterested inquiry, and it will soon appear that those rank poisons have been introduced into medicine for the purpose of creating mystery, confusion, and monopoly. Read the 62nd No. of The Hygeist, price 1d., or 2d by post, to be had at the office, 368, Strand, London.—British College of Health, New-road, London, September, 1846.

HER MAJESTY'S CRUISE.

We continue our report of the Royal Cruise from the departure for Falmouth.—(See page 169.)

ARRIVAL AT FALMOUTH.

The Summer Eve, on starry wings,
  Comes down upon the purpling deep,
His vesper hymn the sealark sings
  High hovering o'er the cloudy steep.
The dews descend, the freeborn breeze
  Wakes in his coral cave afar,
While graceful o'er the freshening seas
  Bounds on the young Queen's ocean car.

Hark! from old Falmouth's rocky shore
  The shouts still echo to the s[illegible]
Pendennis lends its cannons r[illegible]
  Commingled with the people's cheer.
On bounds the bark, proud of its freight,
  Graceful as swan on Isis' tide;
On bounds it o'er the waves where fate
  Engulph'd the Spaniards' daring pride.

And surely since that glorious day
  Rarely the Cornwall coast hath seen
More joy and festival display
  Than that which lately hail'd the Queen
Twas "one and all." The humblest mine
  Poured out each hardy denizen
To greet the Queen of Brunswick's line,
  Belov'd in city, hill, and glen.

Then happy be her ocean path
  Whereon she rides the sovereign free,
And fearless! May the tempest's wrath
  Baffled and braved for ever be.
The genius of Britannia smiles
  With pride and pleasure on her name,
Who sways the sceptre of these Isles,
  And on their welfare builds her fame.

On Friday evening, at seven o'clock, the Victoria and Albert, followed by the Fairy, next the Garland, and in the rear the Black Eagle, entered Falmouth amidst the shouts of some thousands of persons, who had taken their station on the hills at the entrance of the harbour, and of those who were fortunate enough, in the half-hour that ensued from the steamers being first descried, to get into boats, and arrive at the roadstead, a steamer, full of ladies, who gave their tribute of homage, and went round the Victoria and Albert after the squadron had brought to. Her Majesty and Prince Albert stood abaft the wheel of the yacht until the vessel had entered the port, and the Royal salutes from Pendennis Castle and the Crane packet had ceased, when they retired from observation. At nine o'clock her Majesty walked for a few minutes with Prince Albert on the deck of the yacht, observing the illuminations and fireworks, both on the shore and afloat, exhibited in honour of her Majesty's visit. Her Majesty was on deck for a few moments only, at seven o'clock, and shortly after Prince Albert and two of the Royal children presented themselves to receive the cheers of the thousands of persons around the yacht.

HER MAJESTY'S CRUISE.

On Saturday morning, her Majesty with Prince Albert left the Victoria and Albert for the Fairy, in which they went round the beautiful St. Michael's Mount. The Queen returned to the Victoria and Albert, but Prince Albert went on shore at the new quay erecting at Penzance, and was received by Mr. Mathews, who took the Prince to the smelting works of Mr. Bolitho, then to the Geological Rooms, and thence to the Esplanade, when he returned on board, which occupied two hours, the Prince having landed at four P.M. Richard Taylor, Esq., and Lord Palmerston accompanied the Prince in his tour.

An odd little circumstance took place on board the Victoria and Albert, on the books of which the Duke of Cornwall is entered as a midshipman. The Prince's outfit was not of an extravagant character; it consisted of only one white duck jacket and trowsers, and one blue suit, the former soiled by the youngster's pranks on deck. He was bound to appear neat and trim to muster on the Sunday morning, and this he was enabled to do by the good nature of the captain of the foretop, who washed the white jacket and trousers on Saturday night, and dried them by the fire, and for want of a mangling apparatus or an ironing-box sat on them to get them smooth, giving them all the appearance of a first-rate man-of-war's wash. Lord Fitzclarence, on Sunday morning, when all hands were called to muster, noticed the cleanly appearance of the attire, and, on inquiry, learned this little circumstance, which, on being repeated to her Majesty, was the subject of much amusement to the Queen and Prince Albert.

HER MAJESTY'S YACHT OFF ST. MICHAEL'S MOUNT.

The steam squadron remained until Sunday at Mount's Bay. The Queen privately landed and walked over St. Michael's Mount. It appears, from some reason or other, the trip to Scilly was abandoned

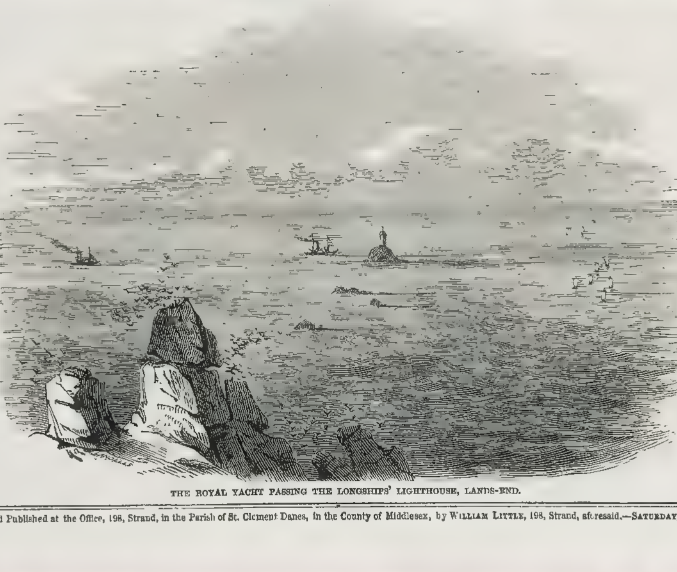
In the afternoon the squadron got under way, and returned to Falmouth, as previously arranged, and it is said that en voyage the Queen, Prince, and two children, accompanied by Mr. Taylor, of the Duchy Office, landed on the beach at Kynance Cove, a locality near the Lizard, much celebrated in Cornish history for its local features and romantic attraction, and remained there for some time picking up shells and other natural curiosities. At half-past six on Sunday evening, the yachts again entered the harbour of Falmouth, under the repetition of salutes, and anchored in Carrick Roads, the Garland returning from Scilly a few hours subsequently.

Early on Monday morning all was increased bustle, and as early as six A.M. the town began to be thronged with visitors from all parts of the county. Soon after eight his Royal Highness Prince Albert entered the state barge, in the bow of which his banner was immediately hoisted; a Royal salute was then fired by the Crane brig, and at half-past eight, amidst the hearty welcome of the assembled thousands afloat and on shore, he landed at Greenbank Quay, and, accompanied by the Hon. Colonel Anson, Sir James Clark, and Mr. Richard Taylor, drove off in one of the Royal carriages, which was previously disembarked from the Black Eagle. The Mayor, Lieutenant M'Coy, commanding the detachment of the 55th Regiment at Pendennis, Commander Dick, and Lieutenant Pooley, of the Coast Guard, and Lieutenant M'Dougal, of the staff, received the Prince on his stepping on shore, and conducted him over a footway of carpeting previously laid down, to the carriage. The scene at this moment was most enlivening, and the Prince, evidently much pleased, was cheered out of the town.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT LANDING AT PENZANCE.

The Mayor and Corporation of Penryn proceeded on board the yacht at eight o'clock in the morning, and were admitted to the presence of the Queen and Prince Albert, when they presented an Address of Congratulation, which was very graciously received.

His Royal Highness returned at about three o'clock, having visited the United Mines, Polberrow Mines, and Truro, at all which places he was most enthusiastically received, though, of course, the particulars cannot yet have generally transpired. At the United, it is reported, full 3000 miners were assembled to greet him. The Mayor and Council of Falmouth, according to arrangement, proceeded, in carriages decorated with flowers, to Penryn, a little after one o'clock, and on the Prince reaching the bridge at that part of the united borough, formed into line and due order, and preceded his Royal Highness into and through the entire town of Falmouth to the pier, the whole street-way being tastefully decorated with flags and arches of flowers and evergreens. On reaching the descent leading to the pier-head, the Mayor, Town-Clerk, and Council left their vehicles, and received the Prince on his alighting, escorting him on a covered way of carpeting of more than 300 feet to the steps, where he embarked under the deafening shouts of assembled thousands on the land and water. A guard of honour of the 55th Regiment, under Lieut. M'Coy (supported by Lieuts. Bouse and M'Dougall), saluted the Prince en passant to the barge, and he was speedily wafted to the yacht, amidst a fleet of sailing and rowing boats of all sizes and descriptions. About an hour after the Prince returned on board, her Majesty quitted the Victoria and Albert, and proceeded to the Fairy, which immediately got up her steam. Sir James Clarke, on re-embarking, communicated to the Mayor that the Prince was very much pleased with the demonstration and reception he had experienced, and especially at so brief a notification.



THE ROYAL YACHT PASSING THE LONGSHIPS' LIGHTHOUSE, LANDS-END.

There is no doubt but both the Queen and Prince have been much gratified with the visit to the duchy generally; and it is confidently rumoured they have declared their intention to make an annual visit to Cornwall.

THE RETURN TO THE ISLE OF WIGHT

Soon after nine o'clock on Wednesday morning, the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, with the Royal standard flying, and accompanied by the Fairy, Black Eagle, and Garland steamers, was observed standing round Egypt Point, West Cowes , and, immediately after, the batteries at Cowes Castle and Fort Monkton fired Royal salutes, and the vessels of the Yacht Club began to decorate with flags. At nine o'clock the Victoria and Albert anchored off Trinity Wharf, and the Royal barge being hoisted out Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence had the honour to steer her Majesty, Prince Albert, their Royal Highnesses the Princess Royal and Prince of Wales, with some of the Royal suite, to the shore, and her Majesty's carriages being in readiness, the Queen and the Royal party stepped in, and were driven immediately to Osborne House. The squadron then dispersed; the Victoria and Albert anchored in Cowes roads, the Black Eagle came into Portsmouth harbour for eighty tons of coals, the Garland proceeded to Southampton with the Royal equipages, and the Fairy to Ryde, with Lord Palmerston, whom she landed at that place, and afterwards came into harbour.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, September 12, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

BEST, LELOIR SC A PARIS

No. 229.—Vol. IX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1846. [Sixpence.

SCIENTIFIC ASSOCIATIONS.

SCIENCE and its inquiries have always tended to gather its followers into bodies and corporations having a common understanding. The manner in which the world at large has too generally treated the votaries of Science, rendered mutual support from within absolutely necessary against universal indifference from without. Quick in its appreciation of physical changes that increase the comforts or conveniences of every-day life, the public is strangely apathetic to those inquiries into first laws and principles upon which discoveries and inventions are founded. The results command attention, but the steps in the process that lead to them are unregarded; nay, indifference scarcely defines the feeling adequately; it often amounts to absolute opposition, as if scientific men were united for some purpose obnoxious to the well-being of the community. We have got beyond the age of stoning, imprisonment, and the stake; but even these have played their part in the History of Man, and Science has had its "Martyrs" as well as the teachers of a yet higher and less earthly wisdom. The spirit "that slew the prophets," no longer incites men to active cruelty; but there is something akin to it in the disbelief in the efficacy of abstract inquiries, an unwillingness to admit the utility of any pursuit that does not immediately produce some brilliant physical result, or what is equivalent, make itself visible in the shape of something that produces tangible wealth. Societies and Associations for any conceivable or possible purpose are daily formed; they may be wild and absurd in the highest degree, they may be palpably unsound or positively dishonest, and they may cause much human misery. But, provided they employ the customary and recognised machinery, have a chairman at one end and a secretary at the other, with a Board of Management, meetings and resolutions,—but, above all, if they only promise a tolerable dividend,—they go unscathed; none denounce them, none ridicule them; they are free and unmolested in their sphere of action; some end is proposed, and means are specified by which it is to be reached; as every one can judge more or less correctly of what is in action, there is discussion, consideration, and decision. The "practical man" rubs his hands, chuckling a belief that "there is something in it;" and thereon the world is ready to embark in the scheme by which "something" is to be got; for we are eminently a "practical people."

But with this universal toleration of Union for any purpose, there is one species of Association that meets strange discouragement—it is the Association of men for the Diffusion of Scientific Knowledge, or at least for encouraging the taste for scientific inquiry. Any number of men may join for any other purpose unchallenged; but no sooner do the greatest minds of the age step beyond the sphere of their individual exertions and emerge from the study to the Congress, than they are assailed with ridicule. Why is it that science alone is so assailed and fettered in its action? Why should the Sections of the British Association for the Advancement of Science be satirized, and the conventions of Exeter Hall escape? Religious congresses of all kinds meet and separate unquestioned. A great "Evangelical Alliance" has just been formed, which establishes a communion and correspondence between one class of religionists in all countries. A conference of the advocates of Temperance from all parts of the world has just concluded its sittings in this metropolis. A few extravagances of individual speakers attracted notice and reproof; but the fact of their assembling, and the object that brought them together, were not assailed; it was left to have its fair weight and influence on the minds of men. Why should we be more intolerant to the labourers in the Field of Science?

We have a direct interest in not wilfully throwing obstacles in the path of Inquiry; yet we seem always to have had a perverse gratification in doing so. It is by no means peculiar to our own day. When it became impossible to persecute by violence and crush the inquirer, the resort to ridicule as a means of lowering the object of the inquiry was an easy one. The satire which was poured on the Royal Society when it was first established is well known; the powers of a Butler were engaged in the process of debasing and discouraging the "British Association" of that day. Swift was a man who could see only the worst side of everything; and, as he spared nothing, not even himself, his friends, or his Church there is little to surprise us in his holding up Science and its professors to ridicule. But we should have hoped that our many obligations to Science since the beginning of the last century would at least have blunted this weapon. The men and things so sneered at have changed the face of the world. Oceans are crossed by vessels that, to the generation of the days of Swift, would have seemed as monstrous impossibilities as his "Flying Island" itself; and Science is linking the most extreme points of Europe together, so that Constantinople will soon be less distant from London than Dublin was when the Dean of St. Patrick's mourned in bitterness over what he considered his exile in it. Seeing what Science has achieved for us, even "practical men" might keep silence; if they cannot assist her in the struggle, let them at least stand aloof, and not vex her with their lowering estimates. The smallness of the funds that scientific men can, unassisted, devote to their pursuits, is rather to be regretted than laughed at. Nor do those small sums express a tenth of the real value of the toil they have assisted. In one case alone, the tables of the British Association used in the Royal Observatory, on which a few pounds appear to have been expended, have cost an amount of mental labour, freely given, that could not be remunerated by many hundreds.

ROYAL VISIT TO CORNWALL.—PLAS HOUSE.—(SEE PAGE 180.)

Apart from the influence it may have on the efforts of any Association or Society, the spirit of ridicule should not be encouraged to seize on everything. Some subjects might be spared for the sake of the purpose or idea connected with them, even when they are presented under circumstances that may tempt an indulgence in it. The turning the "seamy side without" is always enjoyed, when cleverly done; but it leaves an after-feeling of regret: does not every man feel a kind of vexation with the burlesques of the most magnificent dramas of Shakspeare? Grandeur of character is destroyed by distortion, and poetry debased by a too successful travestie, annoying when remembered, yet too clever to be forgotten: the spiritual creation is brought down to the earth, and is thenceforward accompanied by a grotesque shadow, that mixes itself up involuntarily with the brightness of the original, so that they cannot be separated without effort. The best and truest creations of the intellect will survive this shock, doubtless—but not without damage: if ridicule is the test of truth, it is a dangerous one. Diviner doctrines than any science can unfold, have not always withstood its blight. It is a destroying, not a creative power; let it be launched, then, against the vices, and follies, and oppressions of the world, and with them do its office; a blessing shall go with it, if it works a particle of good. But Science does not debase, or corrupt, or oppress; why, then, should it be assailed? It no longer wraps itself up in mystery, or forms Castes and Hierarchies, in which all knowledge was for the initiated, all ignorance for the people. The wisdom of the Egyptians was the wisdom of the few, who made the many their passive instruments; Modern Science gives what she gains to all. Again, she wins her disciples neither wealth nor privileges: to no class of men are these more sparingly distributed. The world prefers bestowing its riches and rank on those who destroy, rather than on those who create. The Commander of a Fleet is maintained by the public, rewarded, honoured, raised to the highest places of the land; who can tell even the names of those who have wrought out the rules of construction by which that fleet is built? Yet, to frame a single vessel of war, more mental exertion is required than to win a battle! Run over the names of those who have penetrated the laws of the solar system, and drawn from the stars the rules for navigating that fleet to the scene of its triumph—how many of them have had any reward? The world profits by such toils, but has not yet learned to estimate them at their right value; the least it can do, is to leave its benefactors to pursue their self-chosen and ungrateful path, in peace. If it is disappointed at the few results they produce, and so asks "of what use is it," let it remember that the field is boundless and all progress gradual; from year to year we can see but little change; look back over a generation and we may well be startled. And if Science has aided us in effecting this, we may afford to overlook a few trifles and imperfections that will soon be forgotten, and that are scarcely worth notice in the great account.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

Parisian society, whether that of pleasure or that of politics, is still absorbed by the projected marriage of the Duke de Montpensier. The moment is one of intense anxiety to the Ministers, but particularly to that much tried wife and mother, the Queen of France. It is true that the dealers of luxuries have already furnished the trousseau of the Princess; that apartments for her at the Louvre and the seat of her mother at Malmaison, are nearly ready for their reception; but the most difficult remains to be accomplished—the conveyance of the Royal Bridegroom to Madrid, and his marriage amidst the infuriated Progressistas and Carlists. This alliance, even when accomplished, has its heavy drawbacks. In all Courts of Europe the diplomatic representatives of England and France acted often in unison, always amicably, by express order and example of their respective leaders and Sovereigns at home. Now that Count Bresson has stolen a march upon Mr. Bulwer whilst he was laid up by illness; that the Marquis of Normanby only learnt the news on his passage through Paris to Vichy, whilst Lord Palmerston, totally taken unawares, was with her Majesty "at sea," both positively as well as figuratively, unquestionably rivalry and acrimony must arise betwixt the French and English agents in every Court of Europe. In four different capitals of Europe, I have often met Count Bresson, and I can tell you his history is a most curious one, were it only in this well-known respect, now overlooked, that he has been the negotiator of the two most vitally important alliances the new dynasty of France has made. When Louis Philippe's race was shunned and abhorred by all the great powers of the Continent—kept without the pale of the great family of European Sovereigns, and apparently condemned for ever to sterility—M. Bresson, then Minister of France at Berlin, found means to acquire such an ascendancy over that peace-loving monarch, the late King of Prussia, that he effected the marriage of the Duke of Orleans with one of his relatives. And now he has no less unexpectedly transferred to the arms of the young Duke de Montpensier the young, beautiful, richly-dowered Infanta, the probable heiress of a throne. Still is Count Bresson totally unlike in appearance to the diplomatist the world imagine him to be. He is a heavy-built man, with melancholy look; of stature above the middle size; taciturn in his habits, but impetuous when excited, as the celebrated scene at the card table at Berlin has proved. He likes retirement better than society, he is a warm-hearted friend, and his young and lovely wife, now in Paris, is the constant idol of his adoration. At Madrid, as much as he can, he remains closeted with his secretary, the little Baron Talleyrand.

It appears that the sale of the Constitutionnel is at last effected, and Mr. Mosselman is the fortunate or unfortunate owner. The secrets of the press, and the penurious state of the French journals, have through this negotiation completely oozed out. English people who know anything of the magnitude of the enterprize of a daily Journal in London, will be astonished to hear what one of the first-rate is in Paris. We now know that the Constitutionnel, with a daily issue of of 25,000 numbers, was bought by M. Veron for 100,000 francs down, only with the annexed obligation as regards the concern, to pay 200,000 francs more in case of need. All that M. Veron in selling the Journal has exacted in addition to the above is a compensation for the three years thought he has given to the enterprize. During which, by the means of Roman feuilletons, volumes of novels, plays, almanacks, &c., given as a temptation to the yearly subscribers, he has raised the circulation to 25,000, without, as it is generally asserted, a shilling profit. If M. Duveyrier had not bought up, for fifteen years, the advertising columns of this journal for 300,000 francs per annum, relying on awaking and stimulating the advertising spirit in France, the journal could not maintain itself. I must here observe that nothing can be more strange than the ignorance prevailing in France as to the benefits of the advertising system; its saving of time, the means of intercourse it establishes, how it ministers to the wants of the consumer as well as to those of the producer. In fact, that in trade and commercial enterprises the advertisement is the telegraph of society, and one of the most indispensable comforts and necessities of industrious nations. Those who are placed like M. Duveyrier have only to hold on until railroads have "mobilized," and stirred up the nation to the simplest enterprises, to the economy of time as well as the knowledge of how industry works to realise immense fortunes. The great error of our countrymen in this respect, as well as in many others still more vital, is not to see that the conditions of man's existence are everywhere the same in the main; to think that because they have an idiosyncrasy, and peculiar habits of their own, they can arrive at a flourishing state without passing through the same channels as other nations, whilst the greatest wisdom consists in availing oneself at once of those means of easy progression the hard-earned experience of others has discovered.

Already are all the trades of Paris preparing for the next season, which, however, owing to the imitation of En[illegible] proc[illegible] those who give impulse to Parisian society are [illegible] to Paris on the 1st of January, instead of the 1st of October. On all sides buildings are erecting, wherever an inch of ground is found to be free; whilst, where there is no space, new floors are added to the tops of houses, so that any house in the Boulevards might any day be turned into a telegraphic establishment, or into an observatory, provided it be not on the things below. With these questionable improvements the prices of lodgings, as well as of all commodities, are rising immensely. Paris is now the dearest city in Europe. No stranger with luxurious taste should come to Paris, unless he has thousands to spend, or unless he relies upon a windfall, such as occurred two days since, when 125,000 francs in bank notes blew from the window of a fair lady, and spread themselves on the heads of the people in the Place de la Concorde.

FRANCE

The approaching marriage of the Duke de Montpensier with the Infanta of Spain is the engrossing topic in Paris. Some of the Paris papers assert that the Duke de Montpensier is to leave Paris for Madrid at the end of the present month. The Constitutionnel, however, states that the departure of the Duke de Montpensier for Madrid has been postponed in virtue of a decision of the Council of Ministers. The Portefeuille observes, that it was by mistake the departure of the Duke de Montpensier for Madrid had been announced for the 18th. "We have ascertained," says the Portefeuille, "that his Royal Highness would only leave for Spain after the arrival of the dispensations from Rome, when the Court of Spain shall apprise the Prince of the period at which his presence will be required at Madrid. The Dukes de Nemours and d'Aumale are not to accompany their brother to Spain. The Prince will depart alone with his suite and the ladies of the household of the future Duchess de Montpensier."

Some of the Paris papers state that preparations have already been commenced in the Tuileries for the reception of the young couple, who will occupy apartments adjoining those of the Duchess of Orleans. According to a private letter from Paris the provisions of the treaty of Utrecht against the possibility of the crowns of France and Spain ever settling upon one head—and particularly the renunciation for ever of any and all pretension by the Orleans family to a matrimonial alliance with the Royal family of Spain—have been urged by the British Government upon that of France in reference to this proposed marriage.

The Moniteur publishes the official announcement of the marriage of the Infanta Luisa of Spain with the Duke de Montpensier, copied from the Madrid Gazette. The Duke de Glucksberg passed through Bordeaux during the night of the 10th, on his way to Paris. He was said to be the bearer of the marriage contract of the Duke de Montpensier with the Infanta.

A letter from Rome, of the 8th of September, states that on that morning the Papal Government signed the dispensation for the marriage of the Queen of Spain with the Infanta Francisco D'Assis; an extraordinary courier set out immediately for Madrid.

A Paris letter contains the following rather doubtful intelligence:—"A few days since the King received an autograph letter from her Majesty Queen Victoria, which has, it is said, caused considerable sensation in the French Court. It seems that her Britannic Majesty referred, in language very firm and animated, to the marriage so precipitously arranged between the Duke de Montpensier and the Infanta, regardless of the terms of friendship and good feeling that existed between the two Courts. His Majesty's reply, we are assured, was exceedingly dry and concise, and announced an unalterable determination on his part not to postpone the projected marriage of his son."

The King, Queen, and Royal Family removed from Neuilly to the Palace of St. Cloud, on Monday.

The Paris papers of Wednesday refer almost exclusively to the Montpensier question. From an article in the Presse, and circumstances mentioned in private letters, it would seem that a probability existed that the marriage would encounter difficulties.

A similar impression prevailed on Bourse at the close of business, and caused a depression in the funds.

The convict, Joseph Henri, has been sent off from the prison of La Rouquette to the hulks at Toulon, in execution of the sentence of the Court of Peers. Until his being transferred to this prison he maintained hopes that his appeal to the King for a commutation would meet with some success; and more than once sent for his counsel, M. Baroche, to whom he expressed great anxiety as to his fate. At six in the morning he was informed that he must prepare to go to Toulon, undergo the usual process, and put on the dress worn by all persons sentenced to the hulks. He sunk into a state of despair and almost stupor, exclaiming, "Oh, God! Oh, God! All, then, is over! No hope is left." And, when brought out to be put into the van, he saluted those around him, and, seeing an Inspector-General of Prisons among them, he raised his eyes to him and said, while his face streamed with perspiration which he endeavoured to conceal, but could not, "I should have preferred death."

The Prince and Princess of Salerno, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess d'Aumale, left Paris on Sunday, by a special train of the Northern Railroad, for Brussels. After staying a short time at the Court of the King and the Queen of the Belgians, the Prince and Princess of Salerno intend to set out for Italy. It was supposed in Paris that the departure of the Prince of Salerno had been hastened by the projected marriage of the Duke de Montpensier, to accommodate whom and his bride the Palace of the Elysée Bourbon, which had been the residence of the Prince and Princess of Salerno during many months, had become desirable. The Prince was said to have said, on parting (in allusion to the attempt of the regicide Lecomte, from which he, too, was placed in danger), "Well! at Brussels we shall, at least, have no parties of pleasure."

A letter from Ai, in Champagne, says:—"You can form no idea of the magnificent aspect of our rich vineyards, which the storms that lately occurred here and there have, thank God, completely spared. The vintage will be admirable. The octogenarians of the country do not remember a single instance in which it presented itself under such favourable auspices. The famous year of the comet itself, so justly renowned among the epicures of both hemispheres, will be totally eclipsed. The vintage has also commenced in the centre of France, and is everywhere most promising. The condition of the vines is not less satisfactory along the Rhine. "In the memory of man," says the Cologne Gazette, "such a quantity of grapes was never seen as this year on both banks of the Rhine."

SPAIN

Accounts from Madrid have reached us so late as the 14th. The Cortes were assembled that morning. The Ministers notified to them the marriage of the Queen and that of the Infanta. The message was very well received. A commission was appointed to consider the address; it was composed entirely of members friendly to the Government.

Notwithstanding all opposition, the Spanish Government appears to have resolved on the marriage of the Infanta with the Duke de Montpensier. It is thus officially mentioned in the Madrid Gazette:—"We are authorised to announce that the marriage between H.R.H. the Infanta Dona Maria Luisa Fernando de Bourbon, and his H.R.H. the Prince Antoine-Marie Philippe Louis D'Orleans, Duc de Montpensier, has been stipulated, agreed to, and decided on, by his Excellency Senor Don Francisco Javier Isturitz, First Secretary of State and President of the Council, invested with full powers by her Majesty the Queen our Lady, and his Excellency the Comte de Bresson, Ambassador of France, also authorised with full powers from the King, his august Sovereign, who have drawn up, confirmed, and duly signed and sealed the said act. The Cortes will be duly informed of this alliance. (De este matrimonio, e dará opportunamente cuenta á las Cortes.)"

The Liberal party have agreed to an energetic petition to the Queen upon the subject of this marriage. The petition commences by congratulating her Majesty on the choice she has made of her husband in Don Francisco d'Assis, one of the candidates pointed out by public opinion, but it deplores that the satisfaction caused to the nation by that happy news should be marred by the announcement of the marriage of the immediate heir to the Crown with a French Prince. It then goes on to argue that the Duke de Montpensier is incapable of aspiring to the hand of the Infanta of Spain, and argues in favour of that opinion on the treaty of Utrecht, and the renunciation of Philip V., for himself and his descendants, of any right to the succession to the Throne of France, and of a similar renunciation of all the branches of the Royal Family of France to the Throne of Spain. The actual political constitution of Spain, it says, forbids the King and his immediate successor from contracting any marriage with a person excluded by the law, and, consequently, that the union of the Duke de Montpensier with the Infanta cannot take place without a violation of a law of the kingdom, and of an article of the Constitution.

The Eco del Comercio contends that the feeling of the nation rejects the Duke de Montpensier. It deplores the state of humiliation into which has fallen that Spain so powerful a century and a half ago, which discovered America, took possession of Africa, invaded Asia, and was respected by all the nations of the earth. The manners, the customs, the government, the laws, and even the language of Spain, have, it says, submitted to the influence of France; in the eyes of some bad Spaniards, nothing is good but what comes from the banks of the Seine, and they only aspire to make of Spain a satellite to the French planet. It is time that a vigorous hand should oppose itself to this torrent which threatens to invade the country. The Eco afterwards seeks to explain the motives which cause the aversion which it pretends good Spaniards bear towards France, by noticing the war of French invasion, and the persecutions to which Spanish Liberals have been subjected by the new Government of France. The Eco concludes by calling on all good Spaniards to affix their signatures to the petition, pointing out the places where they may do so. This petition was signed by 15,000 persons, which shows how strong the feeling is against the French connexion.

The Heraldo contradicts the statement made in some of the papers of the 8th, to the effect that Count Bresson had already made a formal demand of the hand of the Infanta for the Duc de Montpensier. The Espanol says that at Eu, last year, a formal understanding was come to between M. Guizot and Lord Aberdeen that the question of the Montpensier marriage should not be mooted until the Queen of Spain had children, and that the Marquis of Normanby had, in a very animated conversation, recalled the recollection of M. Guizot to this circumstance, and stated that England considered it to be an engagement binding on the French Government. The same journal states that the English and Austrian Ambassadors at Paris had presented a joint protest against the marriage. In his interview with M. Guizot, Lord Normanby is said to have declared that his Government would consider the affair as one of the few questions calculated to interrupt the amicable relations between France and England.

ITALY.

The Sémaphore de Marseilles, of the 12th instant, quotes a letter from Rome, of the 8th, giving an account of the Feast of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin, on which occasion the Pope was conducted in triumph to the church of the Madonna del Popolo, where it is usually celebrated. "From the date of the publication of the amnesty," says the writer, "the Roman people resolved to give the Holy Father a public testimonial of their gratitude, and decided that it should be on the 8th instant, the Feast of the Nativity. A subscription was accordingly opened for the purpose of erecting a monument destined to commemorate that act of clemency, and a temporary triumphal arch, representing the intended monument, was built on the Piazza del Popolo; its summit and base were surrounded with statues, symbols of religion and of the virtues of which Pius IX. is the model. Inscriptions extolling those virtues, in appropriate and affecting terms, adorn the columns. A rich carpet, with the arms of the Holy Father, surrounded with various devices, was spread under the arch; and thence to the Quirinal the whole line which the Pontifical cortège was to pursue was strewn with flowers. It is impossible to describe the aspect of the Corso at this moment. It can only be compared to an immense saloon, magnificently decorated, offering to the eye everything that is calculated to move the heart and mind. 100,000 enthusiastic spectators, richly dressed, completed its decoration. It was a truly sublime spectacle. The most profound silence pervaded the crowd on the announcement of the approach of the Sovereign Pontiff, and permitted us to hear the distant acclamations which saluted his passage. Five horse Gendarmes opened a passage for the cortège through the multitude. Five hundred young men, dressed in black, holding branches of laurel in their hands and bearing the pontifical colours, walked six abreast, and sang hymns in praise of Pius IX. They were followed by the household of the Pope, dressed in crimson, and after them came the Pontifical carriage, from which his Holiness, whose tears betrayed his deep emotion, bestowed his benediction under showers of flowers and sonnets, amidst the most deafening acclamations."

EGYPT AND IBRAHIM PACHA.

A letter from Cairo gives a remarkable example of the tolerant spirit of Ibrahim Pacha. He has given proof of his great tolerance on two occasions lately. The great rabbi of the Jews had died, and it was indispensable to do that honour in death, to the chief of a religion, which was his due. The fear lest some fanatics might disturb the ceremonies had caused an application for protection to be made by the Israelites to the Governor of Cairo. He gave in return an evasive answer, and it was determined that an address should be sent to Ibrahim Pacha in person. This address Ibrahim Pacha received in his divan, and after having heard it read, he turned towards the assistants and said:—"Since my journey through Europe I am discontented with myself. We cannot conceal from ourselves the fact that much remains on our part to be done, not only to put ourselves on the level with Europe, but also to commence in the way of progress. I have seen what protection is generally given to religion of every description, and the respect in which all are held, and I do not intend that in Egypt it should be otherwise. We owe the same protection to all, and I should be most unhappy were it otherwise. Instead of giving you a few soldiers to escort the conveyance, we shall put 3000 at your disposal, and my own carriages will be given to you to put the bier in." The Pacha concluded by saying: "Fear not to be disturbed in the exercise of your religious duties to the head of your church. Go, and remember that Egypt shall henceforth be a country where all religions may be followed with entire liberty." This action, which reflects so much honour on the Prince, was followed by another. Ibrahim called together all his Mamelukes, and gave them their liberty, leaving them, at the same time, the full choice of leaving his service if they so wished it. They all assured him that nothing would induce them to leave the service of so good a master.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—THE WAR WITH THE KAFFIRS

Cape of Good Hope papers to the 24th of June inclusive have arrived, bringing news from the seat of war four days later than that last received. The information conveyed is brief, but important, as it shows that no more fighting had taken place at Fort Peddie or its neighbourhood, nor indeed was any serious engagement expected. Reinforcements were arriving, and the Governor-General was only waiting the concentration of all the Burgher forces, when he intended promptly to act on the offensive, the result of which will probably be the complete subjugation of the Kaffir tribes.

(From the South African Commercial Advertiser of June 24.)

"Last frontier post, which arrived on Monday afternoon, brings nothing new of any consequence. Another detachment of waggons had passed safely through Trompetter's Drift to Fort Peddie, and there seems to have been no more fighting in that quarter. It is stated that 3500 Burghers from the western districts have crossed the Gamptoos River; 200 of these, with their waggons, arrived in Graham's Town on Sunday, the 14th inst. Commandant Linde, with 400 Swellendam Burghers and 200 Hottentots, marched forward from Uitenhage on the previous Wednesday. Four hundred Worcester Burghers, under Du Toit, with several other parties, had reached Uitenhage. Thus, in a few weeks more, the Colonial forces, of all sorts, will be ready to enter on the real business of the campaign.

"In the meantime, though the Kaffirs have disappeared from the neighbourhood of the villages and "legers" on the immediate frontier, parties of marauders are found as far down as Uitenhage, in search of cattle, nearly a hundred miles from their own border. The following extract from a private letter, gives a lively idea of the service in which the Burghers and troops will be engaged, probably for some months to come:—

Camp, Uitenhage, June 16, 1846.

I mentioned in my last that the Kaffirs had stolen 300 head of cattle within half an hour of this, and that Commandant Du Toit, of the Worcester Burghers, had gone in pursuit. He was fortunate enough in overtaking the rascals at Pleasant Drift on the Sunday River and shot all they saw, viz., eleven, and recaptured the cattle. Du Toit behaved nobly, shooting two himself, but I regret that one of his men was killed by an assagai. One Kaffir got into the river and covered his head with reeds to make it appear that he was a bush. Young Du Toit, however, saw his head, fired, and shot him through the head. They took several assagais, and two muskets, which were loaded. Both these were pointed at Du Toit, but flashed in the pan. They also took three horses.

The weather continues very warm during the day, and cold at night. No rain, however.

17th June.—An Aide has just arrived from Graham's Town with a requisition to press all [illegible] provisions from Algoa Bay to Graham's Town, as they are very badly off there. They have, in consequence, taken our oxen, and how long we shall remain here it is impossible to say. Our horses only get 12lb. of oat hay per diem. I have been obliged to buy forage and feed my horse up a little, for there is not a blade of grass where our camp is.

Nothing seems to be publicly known respecting the movements or intentions of the Kaffirs. If they ever meditated an attack on the colony in overwhelming numbers, as some have supposed, they have lost their opportunity. Such men as Macomo, Botma, or Stock, who have known the colony, and the power it can in no long time bring to bear upon them, must begin to be sensible that they are in the very jaws of destruction. The scattered population of the immediate frontier, with some 1500 soldiers, have, in effect, repulsed their whole force as invaders. Though cattle have been captured, the loss of men on the Kaffir side, compared with that of the colonists and troops, cannot but be felt by them as a decisive proof of their utter incapacity to continue the contest on anything like equal terms. What then can they expect, now that the number of effective military is more than doubled on their front, while the frontier colonists have been reinforced by five or six thousand men from the rear? They trust, no doubt, to the bush, or the ravines and thickets of their country, but, in the winter, even this resource fails them, for in the months of July and August, the cold and rain on the mountains are fatal to their cattle, and the plains will be occupied or commanded by the troops and burghers.

THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

The Caledonia has arrived at Liverpool with New York papers to the 31st ult. Boston to the 1st inst., and Halifax to the 3rd inst. The news from the United States is insignificant, but the papers contain important intelligence respecting Mexico. There had been a movement in Mexico in favour of the Ex-President Santa Anna, who had started from the Havannah, and was expected at Sisal daily.

The accounts from Matamoras state that General Taylor, who had been collecting provisions and means of transit in the Rio del Norte, reached Camargo on the 8th ult., from whence General Wood was to push forward to Monterey. The American forces had taken possession of Mier, a place of some strength, containing 6000 inhabitants; and the city of Guerro had declared for the United States. General Kearney, by the last advices, was at Bent's Fort, and anticipated no opposition on the road to Santa Fé.

This revolution has spread: and the military of Vera Cruz, as well as the city of Mexico, have declared for Santa Anna.

The Pennsylvania Inquirer publishes the following statement of the aspect of affairs:—"The garrison and city of Vera Cruz pronounced in favour of Santa Anna on the 31st of July; and he left Havannah, in the British steamer Arab, on the night of the 8th of August, for Vera Cruz. The question now arises,—Will he be permitted to pass the United States squadron, and land on the shores of Mexico? A letter from Vera Cruz, under date of the 1st of August, says that, immediately after the declaration in favour of the hero of Tampico, two commissioners were dispatched to invite him to return to Mexico; and the writer expresses the opinion that his return would be favourable to an early adjustment of the difficulties between that Republic and the United States. The Vera Cruz Indicador contains a full account of the pronouncement of the garrison, together with the address of the commander-in-chief on the occasion. The plan adopted is based upon the movement of Guadalaxara. The signers of the declaration, consisting of generals and other officers, set out with declaring the Republic to be in a wretched condition, and avowing a determination to exert themselves to the utmost to restore its character and prosperity. They denounce the present Government as illegally constituted, as having discharged its mission in an oppressive manner, and issued an anti-popular decree, the tone of which is entirely monarchical. They affirm further, that, while engaged in this detestable intrigue, Paredes and his friends neglected the defence of the national territory, and abandoned at the frontier the army assembled to protect it."

The new President is to be accompanied by Almonte and Rejon.

A New York paper observes: "The success of these generals in regaining their lost power is not doubtful, inasmuch as they have selected the most opportune moment for such an attempt. Their return will probably result advantageously for the interests of the United States and for the welfare of their own country; as Santa Anna, besides being a more sagacious statesman than Paredes, is undoubtedly better acquainted with the nations of the Anglo-Saxon race, and will work his cards accordingly. It is the opinion of some that he is pledged to carry on the war. With his usual adroitness, he will unquestionably make the present state of affairs redound to his advantage. An attack on Alvarado, which had been planned by Commodore Conner, was frustrated by a storm on the 8th. It will, doubtless, be again attempted; with what success remains to be seen. In the north, General Mejia commands the Mexican army (if so it can be called). On the 19th of last month, he was to have proceeded to Monterey with the remnant of Arista's forces, to unite with Paredes. According to the last accounts, Paredes would have an army of 12,000 to 15,000, leaving about 1500 only at the capital. The garrison at Tampico had been reinforced."

Information reached Boston just before the Caledonia left for England, announcing the complete success of the revolution in favour of Santa Anna, the deposing of General Paredes, and his imprisonment in the city of Mexico.

It is reported that the Revolutionists in Mexico had issued a proclamation, declaring the determination of the Republic, under their new chief, to carry on a vigorous war against the United States.

Previous to these events a declaration was made by the garrison of Vera Cruz against the Mexican Government, and in favour of Santa Anna.

On the 8th ult. an attack was made by a portion of the American squadron upon Alvarado, a port situated about twenty or thirty miles from Vera Cruz. It appears that several vessels had taken shelter from the blockading force under the guns of the fort, and an attempt was made to cut them out. With this view, the steamers Princeton and Mississippi, and three sloops, ran in and opened their guns upon the batteries, which latter returned the fire without effect. The vessels were hauled in out of reach, however, so the attack was given up.

The war with the United States was still being proceeded with, so that it seems strange that the American squadron off that place should permit Santa Anna to enter.

Nothing has yet been learned of the reception by the Mexican Government of the American proposition to negotiate for peace. The effect of the probable success of the Santa Anna movement is a subject of much speculation. It is thought by some that the two million dollars asked for by the President was to be used with Santa Anna in such a way as to render him instrumental in effecting a pacific settlement of the difficulties; whilst others aver that the temper of the Mexican, and his own inveterate hostility to the United States, discourage the idea that he would lend himself to any such plan.

CANADA.

The following resumé of Canadian affairs (from the Montreal Courier, Aug. 28) will be read with interest:

"Political affairs remain in statu quo. Although it is generally believed that some further overtures have been made by Mr. Draper to the leaders of the French Canadian party, they have not been attended with success; and Mr. Draper, it is said, went off to Saratoga to a grand masquerade, preferring the polka to politics, of the latter, it may be presumed, he is getting as sick as the people are of his blunders. Most of the other Ministers are absent from town.

"Perhaps, the most important item of colonial news carried home by this packet will be, that the proprietors have determined on proceeding with the St Lawrence and Atlantic Railroad. The work is to be commenced, although the shares are not all yet taken up, and advertisements are out for tenders to undertake the cuttings, embankments, &c. About 1500 shares have been taken up here since the great meeting, and the directors conceive that they have 5364 shares, or £268,000, available for the commencement of the work. It is to be hoped that this will inspirit the stockholders in England, and allay the apprehensions which some of them appear to entertain relative to the eventual success of the undertaking."

COUNTRY NEWS.

Rural Fete at Drayton Manor.—On Wednesday (last week), the labourers employed at Drayton Manor, with their wives and children, amounting to about two hundred and thirty persons, partook of an excellent dinner provided for them by Sir Robert Peel. The men and their wives dined under a spacious tent erected at the Manor, and the children at the White Lion Inn, in the village. After dinner they all assembled in front of the mansion, where the afternoon was spent in dancing, foot-ball, bowling, and other games, which were kept up with great spirit until the evening, when the party sat down to supper. The entertainment was furnished in the most liberal manner, and the party separated with feelings of the greatest pleasure and satisfaction. Sir Robert and Lady Peel, with two of their sons (who joined heartily in the sports) were present, and seemed to take great interest in the proceedings of the day.

The Season and the Crops.—The Liverpool Times says, the summer of this season has been one of the most brilliant that we have had in this country for many years, but it has not been favourable either to vegetable or animal life. All the corn crops are deficient, with the exception of the wheat, which is always improved by the hot weather; the potatoes are a failure everywhere; the turnips are affected in some districts; sheep have been suffering from a painful disease in the mouth and feet; and cattle are dying so suddenly and rapidly that farmers scarcely dare to purchase them. The murrain amongst the cattle is frightful in the midland counties; and though the disease from which sheep are suffering is not in general fatal, yet it is found to affect every sheep in the flock in which it shows itself. The origin of these diseases is a mystery to every one, just as is the origin of the disease in the potato crop. There must be something in the state of the atmosphere injurious both to animal and vegetable life

Forgery at Norwich.—The magistrates of Norwich have for some days been occupied with a curious charge of forgery brought against a Mrs. Barber of that town, a person respectably connected, but of eccentric manners, who presented to the East of England Bank, Norwich, ten £5 notes, seeming to be Bank of England notes, but which on examination were found to want both signature and the watermark on the paper, as well as all the fives being imitations of the same note. Several other forged notes were found in the lady's residence, and it appeared that she had produced them by tracing the lines of a genuine £5 Bank of England note against the window. In the absence of parties connected with the Bank of England, the case has been still further remanded, the impression on the minds of the magistrates being that the accused is of unsound mind.

Fatal Accident at the Oxford Railway Station.—A dreadful accident happened at the Oxford Station of the Great Western Railway, on the evening of Saturday, about seven o'clock, whereby two men of the names of Bates and Gardiner, employed as porters at the station, lost their lives. The two poor fellows, with several others, were employed in removing large blocks of deal from a boat in the Isis to a truck, for the purpose of conveyance by rail, when suddenly the crane, (from the great weight attached to it) broke, and falling on the two unfortunate men killed them both instantaneously. The head of Bates was completely smashed, and the other poor fellow had his neck and arm broken. The rest of the men escaped uninjured.

SCOTLAND.

The University of Glasgow.—At a late meeting of the Faculty of Glasgow College, Mr. W. Thomson, B.A., Fellow of St. Peter's College, Cambridge, was unanimously elected Professor of Natural Philosophy, in the place of the late Dr. Meikleham

Trinity College, Perthshire.—The ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of Trinity College, Perthshire, was performed on Tuesday (last week). The rain fell in torrents, but, notwithstanding, a large concourse of people from the surrounding country assembled to witness the imposing scene. The beginning of the proceedings was announced by the appearance of the principal dignitaries of the Episcopal Church in Scotland, the Right Rev. Primate Skinner; Bishops Russell, Moir, and Low; followed by a large number of the clergy, and various noblemen, gentlemen, and ladies, walking two-and two from the College. Amongst those present were the Right Hon. Lord Gray, the Right Hon W. E. Gladstone, the Hon. J. C. Talbot, Sir John Gladstone, and Sir P M. Threipland. The ceremony commenced by prayer; after which Sir John Gladstone received the bottle containing the documents, and deposited it in the cavity prepared under the stone, after the usual manner on such occasions. The Warden of the College then delivered a long address; and, after the benediction had been pronounced by the Primus, the procession returned to the College, to partake of a sumptuous déjeûner

Extracting Silver from Lead.—The mines of Wanlockhead, the property of his Grace the Duke of Buccleuch, are now wrought with spirit and enterprise by the noble proprietor. He has built splendid new smelt mills, and is now building a commodious school. He is about to erect a handsome church—the present one being somewhat uncomfortable, and but ill-adapted for public worship. At the smelt mills, refining apparatus for separating the silver from the lead ore has been erected. It was set in motion on Saturday for the first time, when a plate of silver, 104 lbs. weight, was extracted from the lead. The yield averages from seven to thirteen ounces of silver to one ton of lead, and the ore that yields the latter quantity may be considered among the richest specimens in Scotland.

IRELAND.

The Repeal Association.—The proceedings at the Conciliation Hall on Monday, were wretchedly insipid, the attendance poor and thin, and the collection, £102—not within 50 per cent. of the weekly expences. Mr. J. O'Connell spoke for about two hours in explanation of the recent Government Bill and Treasury Minute for employing the Irish poor! Mr. J. O'Connell read a letter from Mr. J Haughton, a highly-respectable merchant, in which he requested to have his named erased from the roll, in consequence of the suppression of "free discussion" in the Association, as lately exemplified in the case of Mr. Meagher and his friends. When Mr. J. O'Connell had read the letter he proceeded to say that he could only account for the language of Mr. Haughton from a belief that he could not have read their proceedings for the last month; for, if he had, he would not certainly have supposed that the question between the Young Ireland party and the Association was not finally settled. (Hear, hear). That gentleman had accused them of not allowing free discussion to take place in that hall; but he did not consider to what extent they had allowed it go, they had permitted it to verge upon the law; but beyond that they could not let it go; and he (Mr. O'Connell) was sure that Mr. Haughton, on consideration, would be sorry that they should do anything by which they might be committed. (Hear, hear). They had and would keep within the laws; the question of physical force, however, was not within it, and therefore it was that they were obliged to put an end to that discussion by the expulsion of all the advocates of physical force. (Cheers). The advocates of that doctrine could, if they chose, form an association of their own, and speak as much treason as they liked; but his (Mr O Connell's) father was determined to preserve the association; as long as he was a member so long he would preserve it from danger. A motion was then proposed by the learned gentleman, and passed, requesting Mr. Ray to write to Mr. Haughton, and request him to withdraw his letter of resignation. Mr. O'Connell then expressed his regret at having seen a letter in the Evening Mail from a demon in human form, who disapproved of the conduct of Government for preventing the people from dying of starvation, by passing a measure which would oblige the landlords to support their tenants. He (Mr. O'Connell) thought this was the best measure that was ever introduced for Ireland, and if she was as well legislated for in future, justice would be done.

Assemblages of the Peasantry.—It appears from the Irish papers that there have been further accounts of assemblages of the destitute peasantry in the south and west, seeking for employment as the means of saving them from starvation. On all hands it is admitted that these meetings, caused by dire necessity, are characterised invariably by order and tranquility, and that the poor people exhibit a patient endurance for which it would be difficult to find a parallel.

Clonmel Election.—The Hon. Cecil Lawless was elected for Clonmel in the room of Mr. Pigot, now Chief Baron, without opposition

Mr. Smith O'Brien and the Government.—The Nation of Saturday contains a long letter from Mr. Smith O'Brien to Lord John Russell, on the progress of distress in Ireland, in which he tells Lord John that the calamity of the present year is of much greater magnitude than the distress of last year, and insinuates that the present Ministers have not provided sufficient resources to alleviate it. After reviewing the measures which have been taken to relieve the [illegible] he declares that Parliament ought to be assembled in October.

Audacious Proclamation A notice was posted up at Miltown, Clare, last week, offering a reward of £50 to any person who would shoot a young gentleman of the vicinity, whose name was given.

THE NAPOLEON COLUMN AT BOULOGNE.

We have received the following letter from a gentleman relative to a portion of the article which appeared in our paper of the week before last, under the head of "Off to France," and beg to lay it before our readers

To the Editor of the Illustrated London News.

10th September, 1846.

Sir—In reading in your last Number your article "Off to France," I noticed an incorrectness which I take the liberty of pointing out to you. You say, speaking of Boulogne's Column—"The pillar set up to celebrate the victories over England by Napoleon." Such has not been, and could not be, the intention in erecting that Column. You should know that we never erect any monument to commemorate our victories, unless they are gained. Before thinking of the future ones, we have enough to remember the past ones; and we Frenchmen we are not very forward in extolling the exploits of our countrymen. How many of our victories have never been engraved on the brass nor the marble, whilst your meanest, and often most undecisive, combats are most carefully retraced as most brilliant victories.

As to the Boulogne's Column, I must tell you that it has been raised to commemorate the first distribution of the crosses of the Legion of Honour; and it has been noted by the whole army for that intention, and not at all for the victories expected from an expedition which was then quite uncertain.

Trusting that you will rectify this error, I beg your indulgence for my incorrectness in a language I am not entirely acquainted with, and

I remain, Sir, your most humble servant, A. D.

On reading it, we forwarded it to the writer of the article in question, and from him have received the following reply:—

To Monsieur A—— D——

Sir—Your complaint of my inaccuracy with respect to the Boulogne Column having been forwarded to me, I hasten to reply.

I must commence by premising that it is a difficult matter to write about another country with minute accuracy. Your authors know this well, but not yet sufficiently, or they would not have fallen into various comical and amusing errors. M. Dumas would not have made Lord Mewil fix appointments with ladies at the "Coal Hole Tavern," to the door of which a mariner offers to bring his sloop. Nor would M. Paul Feval ("Sir Francis Trolloppe" he calls himself; it is wonderful he did not say "Sir Trolloppe" at once) have made the santinel in Hyde Park watching the ball, and thinking of the aristocracy eating their puddings at the supper, or something of the kind. nor would the author of your last Boulevard drama, Le Marché de Londres, have made Smithfield a vegetable market, wherein the Lords of London are accustomed to sell their wives—an every-day occurrence. Were we not foreigners, they would be aware our language of social life comprised other words besides "Goddem," "rosbif," "bulldogue," and "boxer." But all this by the way: as I said, it is difficult to write correctly about another land.

You accuse us of perpetuating our "most undecisive victories," which you never do. As we never had an "undecisive" one, this is wrong; we can afford even to give you Toulouse, if there remains the slightest question about it. But, Sir, what are all those names engraved on your Arc de l' Etoile, at the top of the Champs Elysées? Are they victories we never even heard of? Are they towns, or hamlets, or farms where hen-coops were sacked and sheds burnt down? Or are they the names of people? They are sufficiently obscure to do for either. We have never wrongly or idly vaunted our superiority over our foes—more especially over your brave and polished nation, for such it is, in all sincerity. But had you gained as many of our colours as we have of yours, the array in the Hotel des Invalides would have presented a different appearance; every rag would have been displayed. But we are patriotic, and did not like them to go into other hands; we took great pains to keep them, and we succeeded.

With respect to the Column. I said that it was set up to celebrate the intended victories of Napoleon over England, and I stick to my assertion. You will find English people sometimes very troublesome on this point. The Column was erected to frighten us, as children set up a turnip behind a hedge with a candle in it; as the Chinese paint dreadful things on their gates: only it did not answer the purpose.

It was voted by the army at the camp of Boulogne, and the flotilla, to the Emperor, in honour of what he was thinking of undertaking, in November, 1804; and, as you know, finally commemorated the restoration of the Bourbons; but the contemplated destruction of England was the main feature of its erection. You can say that it was raised to commemorate the first distribution of the crosses of the Legion of Honour—the name is, indeed, Legion—if you please; you are quite at liberty to do so. We may say that our own Monument was built to celebrate the restoration of London after the fire, if we like; but we know that it was to perpetuate a bit of spite against the Catholics.

The monument to commemorate the distribution of the crosses was put up the same year, near Wimereux. It was, you know, totally destroyed in some odd fit of enthusiasm, not uncommon in France, in 1816, and rebuilt, near the Column, in 1831, bearing the inscription

"Distribution solennelle de la décoration de la Légion d' Honneur, le 16 Août, 1804."

Possibly you may know the spot in the valley of Terlincthun.

I hope, Sir, that you will allow I am in the right, and permit me to remain

Your obedient and humble servant, Albert Smith.

14, Percy-street, Bedford-square, September 15.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE BISHOP OF ST. ASAPH.

The Right Rev. William Carey, D.D., Bishop of St. Asaph, who had long suffered from ill health, died on the 13th instant, in his 77th year.

This learned prelate, distinguished for classical acquirement, received his education, as a King's Scholar, at Westminster School, whence he was elected to Christchurch, Oxford. Having graduated, and entered holy orders, he obtained, in 1802, a prebendal stall in the Cathedral of York, and, in the following year, became Head Master of the Seminary (Westminster) in which he had himself been instructed. In 1808 he was appointed Sub-Almoner to the King; and held, subsequently, the Vicarage of Sutton-in-the-Forest, Yorkshire. Dr. Carey enjoyed the friendship and confidence of the late Duke of York, and was intrusted by his Royal Highness with the charge of the Royal Military Asylum at Chelsea, in perfecting the educational arrangements there. Very soon after (in 1820), on the translation of Dr. Pelham to the see of Lincoln, Dr. Carey was consecrated Bishop of Exeter; and, in 1830, succeeded Dr. Luxmore in the diocese of St. Asaph, the annual value of which is fixed at £5300, with the patronage of one hundred and thirteen livings.

Among the published productions of the deceased Prelate, is one rather celebrated, "A Sermon Preached before the House of Commons, in 1809."

EDWARD RUDGE, ESQ.

This venerable and highly respected country gentleman, who had attained the advanced age of eighty-three, died on the 3rd instant, at his seat, the Abbey Manor House, Evesham, having acted for many years as a magistrate for the counties of Worcester and Middlesex. In the former shire, his ancestors had been settled from the middle of the sixteenth century; and so far back as 1637, Edward Rudge, Esq., of Evesham, served as Sheriff of London. The manor and site of the famous Monastery and Abbey lands of Evesham were purchased, in 1664, by Edward Rudge, of London, merchant, great-grandfather of the gentleman whose decease we record.

Mr. Rudge married twice; by his second wife, Margaret, widow of Daniel Bazalgette, Esq., he had no child; but by his first wife, Anne, only daughter of Peter Nouaille, Esq., of Great Ness House, Kent, he has left two sons and one daughter.

M. JOUY.

Many men, although their works live, are often themselves forgotten, even before they die. Who has not heard of "L'Hermite de la Chaussée d'Antin," yet who gave recently a thought to its witty, and once-popular author, of late years lingering in a state of miserable imbecility? M. Jouy, who wrote "L'Hermite," a book so much in vogue at the period of the Bourbon Restoration, was a member of the "Academie Française," and produced also those applauded efforts of genius, "Guillaume Tell," "La Vestale," and "Fernand Cortez." The distinguished, but unfortunate, M. Jouy suffered that dreadful deprivation, loss of reason, and died on the 4th ult., at St. Germain-en-Laye.

MRS. SARAH MAWE.

This ingenious lady, the widow of Mr. John Mawe, the celebrated traveller in the Diamond District of Brazil, died at her house in the Strand, on the 10th inst., at a very advanced age. Mrs. Mawe had the honour of being appointed Mineralogical Preceptress to her Majesty, and gave to her Royal pupil, then Princess Victoria, lessons in Mineralogy and Conchology, as a portion of her Royal Highness' educational course at Kensington Palace.

Death of the Duke of Athol.—This nobleman, who has been suffering for some time under a mental disease, expired on Tuesday last, at his residence, at St. John's Wood.

Death of Hawkins, the Cricketer.—Charles Hawkins, who for some years was one of the Sussex crack Eleven, expired at Petworth, his native place, on Wednesday last, in the 29th year of his age By profession he was a hairdresser. He came out as a cricketer in 1838, when he played in the grand match between Sussex and All England, in which Sussex came off victorious.

GOSSIP OF THE WEEK.

More and more fervently are the September suns parching up the *un*chosen few who still remain to do penance in the Great Metropolis. One feels almost as hot and solitary in London as Coleridge's Ancient Mariner did on the Enchanted Sea.

> Alone, alone; all, all alone;
> Alone in an empty square;
> And never a friend with whom to dine;
> To flirt with never a Fair.

The taste for rushing out of town at this season of the year may be derided as common, but it is decidedly classical. The old Romans indulged in it quite as vehemently as the modern Londoners. The "Patres Conscripti" shuddered at the thought of the Senate's sitting in September as much as our English legislators abhor the idea of an autumnal session; and, if they did not precisely "take a boat and go to Philippi," they took very good care to migrate to their villas, or to Baiæ, or some such ancient Brighton.

One remembers, indeed, in this weather, Cicero's description of his country-house at Arpinum, and the cool stream of his Tibrenus, or Horace's letter to his friend, about the "latebræ dulces," which kept him fresh and lively "Septembribus horis," with the same envious keenness of appreciation which comes over a prisoner in town, on reading some joyous friend's letter about the delights of his box in ——shire, or his eulogium on the coolness and comfort of his favourite marine retreat.

We daily grow more and more swallow-like in our migratory longings. An imaginary sweet voice of invitation sounds more and more sweetly in our ears—

> Oh! quit this brick and mortar scene,
> These streets of dust and dazzling light;
> And roam with me by hamlets green,
> Or chalky cliffs so white.
> We'll roam beneath a rural sky,
> From noisy London far,
> And if too much you chance to sigh,
> I'll bid you "ask Papa."

It is probably out of regard to the metropolis, and to prevent its being totally depopulated, like a second Palyrma, at this period, that certain Railway Directors have raised their fares so suddenly and severely since the rising of Parliament. But vain is the attempt to check the zeal for travelling out of the regions of the Bills of Mortality. Steam can carry us to our favourite Kentish scenes, by water as well as by land. To holiday seekers—

> Time is no object; cheapness hath its charms,
> The steamboat triumphs, while the train alarms.

So, to describe it in the Burger and Scott style.

> Splash, splash, along the Thames we steam,
> Hiss, hiss along the sea.
> "Hurrah! hurrah! the steamer's cheap,
> Who fears to steam with me?"

The news that has been borne to us from the North lately has been of a Sporting, that from the South has been of a Scientific character. Doncaster and Southampton have been the rival centres of attraction. The Jockey Club has mustered in great force at the one, the British Association for the Advancement of Science has achieved a great gathering at the other.

> Oh, Yorkshire turf and Hampshire coast!
> Ye are two pleasant places;
> I know not which I like the most,
> The Sections or the Races.
>
> Between the two I pause, and read
> Who first in fame at each is;
> Sir Tatton Sykes's wondrous speed,
> Sir Roderick's wondrous speeches.

We pause not here to dilate upon the great contest in the North, or to chronicle the winner of the fastest Leger upon record. Not that we scorn such topics. No—we are like the antique Romans, who, Horace tells us, were not permitted which, as we translate it, means "they were not allowed to scorn the hazardous turf"—i. e., they all were encouraged to bet at the Races. But we leave the narration of how Sir Tatton Sykes has redeemed his defeat for the Derby by a triumph at Doncaster, and the pedigrees and performances of his competitors, because they are in better hands.

> Fortuitum spernere cespitem:

> Their praise is hymned by loftier harps than mine.

We cannot, however, pass over, or wholly surrender to others, the glories of the Association. Many have been harping on them also, and some in no very friendly notes.

> All they said, all they did, all their victuals and drink—
> A Boswell sarcastic has noted them all,
> And it seems pretty plain that some journalists think
> That Science, like Mobs, should not gather at all.

We confess, however, that we are not of the number of those who think the worse of Science for being sociable. The Deipnosophists of Athenæus always appeared to us to be very eminent and very exemplary philosophers.

> Mais revenons a nos moutons,

(we mean no offence to the Association by the phrase), their week seems to have passed brilliantly by; not the less brilliantly for the number of bright eyes that shone on their meeting, and, like Pallas Athène, showed that a votaress of science may also have perilous claims to the prize of beauty.

The Treasurer's report of tickets issued showed that no less than 198 fair helpmates of the Advancement of Science had honoured the Southampton Meeting.

The Geological Section was the favourite one with the ladies.

Some mischief was, of course, occasioned by the presence of so much beauty, but it was more among hearts than heads. One semi-scientific friend of ours, who was long devoted to the Muses, but who vainly thought himself proof against the Graces, has deplored the sudden conquest of the deepest stratum of his heart in the following touching strains, which we reprint, in hopes that they may catch the victorious blue eye that wrought the ill, and induce it to heal, like the spear of Achilles, the wound which itself has made. Our unfortunate Telephus heads his ditty—

WE MET IN SECTION A.

Air.—"We met, 'twas in a crowd."

> We met in Section A,
> And I felt she had won me;
> I scarce could hear a word,
> For her eye was upon me.
> Some remains were handed round
> From a Tertiary Stratum;
> She turned her head to look,
> And, oh, how I did hate 'em.
> The world may think me wise,
> But I feel I must fly hence;
> Oh, thou hast been the cause
> Of my folly, fair Science.
>
> We met, 'twas once again,
> A Professor was near her;
> They were going by the train,
> And I heard him "My dear" her.
> I can't pronounce his name,
> 'Tis as bad as High German.
> How could she like his speech?
> 'Twas as dull as a sermon.
> Without science much advanced
> I hence am retreating;
> But I feel I've lost my heart!
> At this Southampton Meeting.

Losses of this sort are, however, easily repaired, and their occasional occurrence only gives interest to a Sanhedrim of the Wise. Altogether the Association seems to have left very pleasing recollections in Hampshire; and the advice of its members about deepening the Artesian well, on the common, was the only subject in which they displayed any tendency to prolonged boring.

Payment of a very Old Debt.—The new Pope has privileged an Anglo-Roman Company to intersect the Roman states with railways—a curious and interesting episode to the benefits reciprocally conferred by the Romans of old, in intersecting our own country with roads and aqueducts.—The Builder.

Funeral of Lord Metcalfe.—On Tuesday afternoon the mortal remains of Charles Theophilus, first and last Baron Metcalfe, were consigned to the grave. It has already been stated that that much-lamented nobleman died at Malshanger, near Basingstoke, but his body was removed on the morning of the funeral to within a few miles of the church of Winkfield, in Berkshire, to be deposited in the vault with his ancestors. The obsequies of the deceased peer were conducted in a manner quite becoming his high rank, and the great personal esteem in which he had ever been held, but at the same time with no unusual or ostentatious display. Amongst the mourners were Lord Monson, Sir Alan M'Nab, Mr. James Metcalfe, Mr. Thomas Metcalfe, Mr. Brownrigg, M.P, Sir Hesketh Fleetwood, Bart., Messrs. Martin, Brownrigg, Jun., Smythe, Howell, &c. The private carriages of several noblemen and gentlemen followed the mourning coaches, amongst the latter was that of Lord Ashbrooke, the brother-in-law of the deceased. It is understood that Mr. Brownrigg has been appointed Lord Metcalfe's executor, and that the bulk of his Lordship's property will go to Mr. James Metcalfe. His Lordship's brother, now in India, inherits the baronetcy, to which the deceased peer succeeded more than twenty years ago.

ROYAL VISIT TO CORNWALL.

THE ROYAL YACHTS OFF PENDENNIS CASTLE.

The extreme interest excited by the recent visit of her Majesty and Prince Albert, with his Royall Highness the Duke of Cornwall, together with the picturesque localities of the western part of the county, have induced us to extend our Illustration of the Royal Excursion to the present Number. As we have already chronicled its leading incidents, we shall, on this occasion, chiefly refer to the localities.

The first of the Engravings shows

THE ARRIVAL OF THE ROYAL SQUADRON OFF PENDENNIS CASTLE.

On Friday evening (4th), at a quarter before six, four steamers were descried from Pendennis Castle, steering E.S E.. At twenty minutes before seven, the Victoria and Albert yacht, with the Royal Standard flying at the main, was abreast the Light-house, which was lighted, when the half-moon battery of 24-pounders at Pendennis Castle commenced firing a salute of 21 guns. The detachment of troops in the fort was drawn up in the rear of the battery by their officer, Lieut. Coy, and presented arms. The Castle ground presented a multitude of people, who welcomed the Royal party with hearty cheers. Soon after the battery opened its fire, H M. packet Crane, Lieut. Lewis, lying in Carrick Roads, also fired a salute, manned her yards, and cheered. The four steamers of which the squadron consisted, (the Victoria and Albert, the Fairy, the Black Eagle, and the Garland,) came in nearly abreast, the Victoria and Albert somewhat in advance. This yacht came to at one of the buoys in Carrick Roads, which are laid down for the use of the packets (the same buoy at which she moored in 1843), and was immediately surrounded by a great number of boats. The corporate body of the town of Falmouth went alongside the yacht in official costume, with an address from the loyal inhabitants.

Pendennis Castle was built by Henry VIII., and improved and strengthened by Queen Elizabeth. It long resisted the attack of Oliver Cromwell, whose lines of encampment may yet be seen. It now contains commodious barracks, storehouses, magazines, with apartments for the Lieutenant-Governor. A light-house has been erected on the east side of the harbour.

MOUNT ST. MICHAEL.

(From a Correspondent.)

The fifth and sixth of September, 1846, will be memorable days in the annals of western Cornwall; for few are the occasions which history records of the presence of Royalty on its coasts.

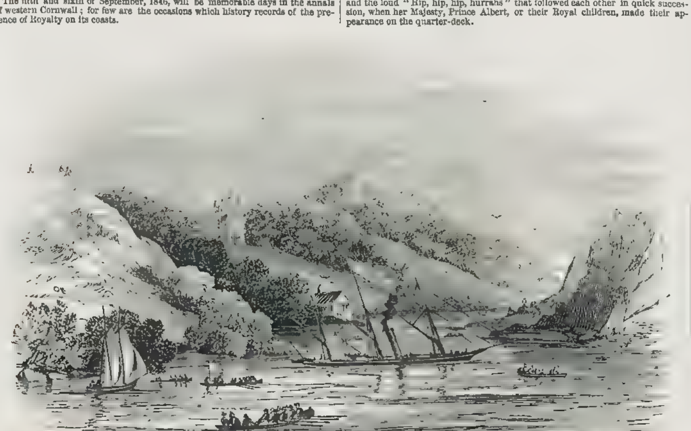
The movements of the Royal yachts during their late cruise were watched with intense interest. It was known at Penzance early in the morning of Saturday that a Pilot for Scilly had been taken on board the Victoria and Albert at Falmouth; and that the vessels would leave that port at seven for the westward They might be expected to arrive in Mount's Bay about ten; and within a few minutes of this time three steamers were indistinctly seen in the offing, one of which had the Royal Standard flying.

A signal gun was fired from the shore, which was followed by a Royal salute from the Sylvia cutter, from the batteries at the Mount, and from Penzance.

The effect was magical; on the instant all the usual occupations were at a stand still, and pleasure became the order of the day. There was a general rush to all the commanding points of view, but St Michael's Mount was the favourite spot, and its summit and sides were soon studded with countless groups of well dressed people. At one time the vessels were reported to be standing in for the land, at another that they were steering for Scilly: thus hope and disappointment were by turns in the ascendant; but this state of suspense was not of long duration. The bay had been crossed and they were out of sight. At this time the weather was not very propitious; it was foggy until near one o'clock, when it began to brighten, and with the first gleam of sunshine, a Royal salute announced the near approach of the squadron, consisting of the Victoria and Albert, the Fairy, the Black Eagle, and the Garland. They had steamed as far as Cape Cornwall, and, after re-passing the Land's-end and the Logan Rock, were now rounding Mousehole Point, all in full view; and, passing in front of Penzance, they soon anchored near the Mount.

The weather was now become beautiful. In an incredibly short space of time, the sea was covered with boats of all sizes and description; amongst which the large bay boats with their tanned sails and tarred sides were very conspicuous, ("black boats," as her Majesty called them); they were crammed with spectators.

Addresses teeming with loyalty and congratulations fresh from the heart, by being dictated on the spur of the moment, were presented through the Lord Chamberlain, to her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Duke of Cornwall, from the Mayors and Corporations of Marazion and Penzance, who approached the Royal yacht in boats dressed for the occasion, with the national colours flying, and the town arms on a white flag, the Sergeants with the maces, and the Mayor, Chaplain, and the Municipal body in their official costume, preceded by the Town Clerk. The accompanying sketch will give some idea of the busy scene; but how can we convey to the ear the deafening cheers from assembled thousands, and the loud "Hip, hip, hip, hurrahs" that followed each other in quick succession, when her Majesty, Prince Albert, or their Royal children, made their appearance on the quarter-deck.



THE FAIRY IN THE RIVER FAL, NEAR TREGOTHNAN.

About two o'clock, the Royal standard was hoisted on board the Fairy, and she steamed, or rather flew, towards Penzance Pier: Prince Albert landed on the northern arm, now building, and which is henceforward to bear his name. He was received by the worshipful the Mayor, Edward Bolitho, Esq, who conducted him to the smelting works of the Messrs. Bolitho, at Chyandour. From thence he went to the Museum of the Royal Geological Society, and carefully examined many of the valuable specimens His Royal Highness has evidently made mineralogy his study, for he was very prompt in giving the German synonyms to the different minerals. After driving through part of the town, he re-embarked, and went to the opposite side of the bay, and inspected a copper mine—Trenow Consols. Her Majesty and the Royal children did not quit the Fairy; and, after skirting the Bay, returned to the Mount Roads, and sent the steamer for her Royal Consort.

On Sunday morning, divine service was performed on board the yacht; but previous to this, her Majesty, Prince Albert, and suite landed on the Mount, and remained on shore more than an hour, viewing its beauties, and those of the surrounding country, and in inspecting the Castle.

Milton has sung of the "Guarded Mount," and before his time Spenser asked—

St. Michael's Mount who does not know,
That wards the Western Coast?

And there are countless stirring associations connected with it.

For the admirers of nature, there are its own unrivalled beauties and picturesque scenery; for the geologist, a rich field for study and observation—with its huge blocks of granite, and the different strata traversed by veins of quartz, and at its base a granitic bed, which yields its claim of primogeniture to clay slate—to the discomfiture of many theoretical savants. For the mineralogist, there are lodes of copper, lead and tin, which the late proprietor, Sir John St. Aubyn, with great good taste, would not suffer to be worked. A few topazes have, also, been found here.

Its ecclesiastical history commences in remote ages. Passing over the legend, Archangel St. Michael made his appearance on the Mount, we find it endowed by Edward the Confessor; and from his time to the reign of Richard I., it was exclusively devoted to religious purposes. After the Conquest, it was annexed by Robert, Earl of Merton and Cornwall, to the Monastery of St. Michael de periculo maris, on the coast of Normandy; and this connection was continued until the reign of Edward III. Henry VI. granted this Priory to King's College, Cambridge; and Edward IV. to the Nunnery of Sion, Middlesex.

Many have been the inducements in by-gone days held out to entice visitors to the Mount. Pope Gregory, nearly eight centuries ago, granted "a remission of a third part of their penance, to all the faithful who should enrich, endow, or visit the Church of Mount St. Michael;" and five hundred years before this, St. Keyne performed a pilgrimage to this sacred spot—and she was of Royal blood.

There was a monastery and a convent formerly on the Mount; the latter stood on the site of the present "new buildings."

The historian and the antiquary will find ample riches in store for them in the history of this spot. There is little doubt that the Mount was "the Ictis" of Diodorus Siculus. In the earliest ages the Phœnicians, the polite merchants of those times, traded here for tin.

The first record of any military transaction connected with the Mount was in the reign of Richard the First, when it was surprised and taken by Henry de la Pomeroy. Afterwards, in the eighteenth year of Edward the Fourth, John Vere, Earl of Oxford, after the defeat of the Lancastrians at Barnet, set sail for St. Michael's Mount, and having disguised himself and attendants in the habits of pilgrims, obtained entrance, massacred the garrison, and seized the fortress, which he valiantly defended for some time against the forces of Edward, but was at length compelled to surrender.

In Henry the Seventh's reign, the wife of Perkin Warbeck, the pretended son of Edward the Fourth, fled here for safety. In the reign of Edward the Sixth, many families of distinction fled to the Mount for security; and during the Civil Wars it was taken by the Parliament forces, under the command of Col. Hammond; when the Duke of Hamilton, who had been confined there, was liberated. At this time, from the strength of the fortifications, it was considered impregnable and almost inaccessible. This was the last military transaction of its history.

The government of the Mount, as a military post, was bestowed on Humphry Arundel, Esq.; then to J. Militon, Esq.; afterwards to William Harris, Esq.; and Queen Elizabeth, in the 29th year of her reign, demised it to Arthur Harris, of Kenegie, Esq.; it then passed to Francis Basset, Esq., and from him to the St. Aubyn family.

History has so run away with us, that we had almost forgotten to conclude Queen Victoria's Visit to Mount's Bay. As the vessels were about to depart, her Majesty was observed on the quarter-deck in conversation with Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, who, on going aft, said—"Her Majesty has desired me to wish you all good bye." This was very gratifying to those who were within hearing; and the same gracious message was as distinctly conveyed to the assembled thousands who were at a distance, and whose eyes were fixed on the yacht. The Royal standard of England was dipped and then re-hoisted; speaking plainly enough that her Majesty wished all her faithful subjects in Mount's Bay "good bye." The reply of one and all was—"May God bless the Queen."

FOWEY AND RESTORMEL.—PLACE-HOUSE.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 8, her Majesty and Prince Albert landed at Fowey from the Royal yacht, and proceeded to visit the ancient Castle of Restormel, belonging to the Duke of Cornwall. As it was currently reported that her Majesty would pass through Lostwithiel, on her way thither, there were but few persons fortunate enough to witness her arrival, the Royal cortège having taken a different route from the one generally expected. In the interior of this ancient structure her Majesty alighted, and proceeded with the Prince to examine the various apartments, now fast falling to decay, of this venerable fabric, with which they appeared to be very much interested. The only part remaining is the Keep, placed on a steep mound formed out of a rocky hill, and having a deep ditch. The enclosure of the Keep is an exact circle of 110 feet diameter within; it has walls 10 feet thick at the top; from the present floor of the ground rooms to the top of the parapet, is 34½ feet. Restormel Castle was a seat of the family of the Cardinans; it afterwards came into the possession of the Earls of Cornwall.

ROYAL VISIT TO CORNWALL.

THE ROYAL YACHTS OFF ST. MICHAEL'S MOUNT.

Leaving this ivy-mantled ruin, the Royal visitors, attended by their suite and Mr. Richard Taylor, one of the officers of the Duchy, walked half a mile to inspect the iron-mine in the lands of the Duchy of Cornwall, of which Mr. John Taylor is the lessee. At an early hour, the various officers connected with the mine were on the alert, a messenger having arrived the previous evening to announce the Royal intention of examining the mine by going into one of the adits. Tram carriages, cushioned and lined with green baize, were prepared for the purpose, and every other kind of arrangement was adopted by the active and intelligent officers of the mine to make our beloved Queen and her august Consort as comfortable as possible during their subterraneous excursion. Her Majesty and the Prince having entered the Royal tram-waggon, were then partially arrayed in the usual style for underground trips. The courage and firmness of her Majesty were the general theme of admiration. They were drawn 300 fathoms into the bowels of the earth, where her Majesty and the Prince got out of the carriage and entered the excavations. The Prince took a pick and knocked off some ore, which he brought out with him. Her Majesty was heartily and most lustily cheered when she entered, and more heartily so, if possible, when she came out Her Majesty and the Prince were observed to address with the greatest affability not only the principal officers of the establishment, but even the common men in their red working dresses. Her Majesty's visit, so unexpected, and so devoid of pomp and parade, has conferred a high honour on this mine and neighbourhood, On her return the Queen passed through the town of Lostwithiel, and stopped to receive an address from the Corporation.

Place-House, the seat of J. T. Treffry, Esq., was next visited. We have engraved this fine old pile on our front page: it is reputed to have been the Palace of the Kings or Earls of Cornwall, many of whom lie buried, adjoining, in their chained armour and coats of mail. It was afterwards called the "Plâs," or the "Place;" and had been occupied by the Treffrys, according to Halse's "History of Cornwall," during sixteen descendants previously to the reign of James II. Sir John Treffry distinguished himself at the Battle of Cressy, was made a "knight banneret" on the field, and had an honourable augmentation to his arms given to him for his signal services, viz., supporters, and, as a quartering, the fleur de lis, from the arms of France. Leland, when speaking of the Frenchmen having divers times assailed the town of Fowey, and last most notably about Henry the Sixth's time (1457), informs us that the wife of Thomas Treffry the second, jun., with her men, repelled the French out of her house, in her husband's absence; "whereupon Thos. Treffry builded a right faire and strong embateled touer in his house, and embatled it to the walls of his house, in a manner made it a castle, and onto this day it is the glorie of the towne building of Foey."* Sir John Treffry and his brother, W. Treffry, Esq., were attainted by Richard III. but afterwards restored by Act of Parliament to their estates by Henry VII Thomas Treffry, Esq., was member for the county during the two first Parliaments of Philip and Mary; and, for having opposed the Queen's marriage with Philip, was obliged to leave the kingdom, whereby his estates were greatly worsted.

The apartments are numerous. In the Hall is a richly carved ceiling of oak; against the walls are the arms of King Edward the Sixth, and the first Earl of Bedford, with quarterings, all well executed, and placed there in Edward the Sixth's reign; under which King, Thos. Treffry held a commission, authorising him "to kill, slay, burn, and destroy all the enemies of the republic." In the said Hall are the arms of Treffry and Tresithneys, quartered in Queen Elizabeth's time; and in the other parts of the house, the arms of Treffry, with supporters, in Henry the Sixth's and Richard the Third's time; and the arms of Treffry emblazoned with those of France, &c.

On her Majesty's return from Restormel Castle, the Royal party, the Lords and Ladies in Waiting, &c., entered Mr. Treffry's drive, which commands a delightful view of the river and picturesque harbour of Fowey. On her arrival, the Queen was received by the owner and Capt. Davis with every demonstration of loyalty; and Mr. Treffry had the honour of conducting her Majesty and Prince Albert, through the tesselated Porphyry Entrance, into the ancient Hall, where Mr. Treffry presented to the Queen a loyal Address from the borough of Fowey. On leaving the house, her Majesty and suite ascended the steps on the left, to view the sculptured effigy of the "Heroine" before alluded to; and to examine the Porphyry Arch, which is twenty-two feet high, and very massive, and supports the eastern square of the tower, as well as the arches of jasper, amethyst, porphyry, and shorle, in the hall connecting the western tower with the mansion. Previous to his departure, Prince Albert expressed his intention of having a porphyry arch constructed in a similar manner to that at Place. Mr. Treffry had the honour to present to his Royal Highness a beautiful model of Restormel Castle, made of cork; also, a splendid drawing of Place House, and another of the Viaduct; which the Prince was most graciously pleased to accept.

Though Fowey is not of the maritime importance it was in the reign of Edward III.—when its inhabitants could boast of 60 tall ships and 770 seamen—yet, its beautiful and secure harbour, with all its natural advantages, remain the same. From its bold and picturesque outline, and general character of the scenery, it presents objects worthy the pencil of the artist, and its historical associations are of the highest interest.

On leaving the southern entrance, through a row of lime trees towards the landing-place, her Majesty and Prince Albert, attended by their suite, walked through the streets of Fowey, totally unguarded, except by her loyal and faithful Cornishmen. She was received on the Royal Victoria Stairs by a guard of honour, composed of the Coast Guard, under the command of Captain Holman. The Royal yacht left the harbour under a salute, and was soon followed by the Fairy, Black Eagle, and Garland; when all proceeded eastward.

MUSIC.

(From our own Correspondent.)

HEREFORD FESTIVAL.

The 123rd Meeting of the three Choirs has terminated. The collections at the doors of the Cathedral by the ladies produced £812 18s. 4d. The sale of tickets did not meet the expenditure, and it is expected that each Steward will have to pay £120. The loss falls on six gentlemen, whose names are worthy of record — the Venerable Archdeacon Vickers, Rector of Chetton, Salop; the Rev. R. L. Freer, B.D., Rector of Bishopstone; the Rev. W. Hassall, M.A., Vicar of Much Dewchurch; J. Bailey, Esq., M.P.; R. Pulsford, Esq., M.P.; and W. L. Childe, Esq., of Kinlet Hall, Salop. The Festival was attended by Earl Somers, the Lord Lieutenant of the county, the President; the Earl of Oxford, the Rev. the Lord Viscount Hereford, Viscount Eastnor, M.P., Vice Patrons; Lord Bateman, the Bishop of Hereford, the Dean of Hereford, Sir T. Frankland Lewis, Sir T. Hastings, Sir Hungerford Hoskyns, Bart., Sir E. S Stanhope, Bart., Sir V. Cornewall, the Hon. Mrs. Holland, W. Dowdeswell, Esq., M.P., the Dean of Exeter, the Hon. and Rev. J. S. Cox, Archdeacon Wetherell, Colonel Scudamore, Sir F. Ouseley, the Stewards, &c. This attendance, and the financial results we have named above, are regarded as better than had been anticipated. It is, however, hard that the town, like Worcester and Gloucester, did not provide a guarantee fund to relieve the Stewards from some portion of the loss. Whatever opinions may exist as to the mode of obtaining money for the poorer clergy, by begging in a Cathedral, there can be no question that the whole county is benefited materially by such gatherings, and that a great deal has been achieved in the promotion of musical taste by the performances

The programmes at the Cathedral in the morning and in the Shire Hall in the evening were, on the whole, well executed. In our last Number we brought up our reports to the First Concert. Mozart's "Requiem," with Professor Taylor's absurd adaptation to English words, was smoothly done. Spohr's "Fall of Babylon," filled as it is with appalling difficulties, both for players and singers, did not go so well; and in the Terzetto, "Loud proclaim," sung by Miss M. Williams, Messrs. Lockey and Machin, there was a complete break down the fault, apparently, of the tenor. The Oratorio, with its continuous chromatic and enharmonic changes, did not please; and Handel's "Messiah," on the Friday morning, was quite a relief. The company was, however, not so great as is usual at this sublime work. The singing of the Misses Williams in the airs "He shall feed his flock," and in the "Come unto Him"—of Miss Dolby in the pathetic "He was despised"—of Miss Birch in the air "But thou didst not leave"—and of Mr. Phillips in the "Why do the nations," were the most striking pieces. Mr. Hobbs and Mr. Lockey divided the tenor music, and Mr. Machin shared the bass with Phillips; so the "Messiah" was done full justice to. The band and chorus were quite at home, of course, in Handel.

The selection from Weber's "Oberon," at the Second Concert, was a great treat. Miss Birch, in the great scena, "Ocean, thou mighty monster," particularly distinguished herself. She delivered this noble composition with a force of dramatic inspiration, rarely attained by our English vocalists. Miss Dolby sang the beautiful air "Oh, Araby," with much taste and delicacy. Beethoven's C Minor Symphony was extremely well executed, led by Mr. Willey. Miss Dolby was encored in Linley's "Spirit of Love." Knyvett's glee, "The Midge's Dance," sang by Miss Birch, Miss M. Williams, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. H. Phillips, was called for a second time. Mr. Hobbs sang Lover's "Road of Life" very nicely; and Hatton's duet, "Two Laughing Fairies," was charmingly interpreted by the Misses Williams. At the Third, and last, Concert, on Friday night, Mendelssohn's Music to "Midsummer Night's Dream" was given, but seemed not to make the slightest impression on the auditory. Indeed the apathy with which the finest music was received at Hereford was quite inconceivable. Mr. Hatton performed Mozart's D Minor Pianoforte Concerto exquisitely, but was met with utter frigidity. The Earl of Mornington's glee, "O, Bird of Eve," sung by Miss Birch, Miss Dolby, Messrs. Lockey, Hobbs, and Phillips, was encored; as also Phillips, in "Haste thee, Nymph." Handel's Laughing Chorus, a composition as clever as it is vivacious, was certainly one of the most exciting pieces during the Festival—there was no resisting Phillips's unctuous style. Herold's "Zampa" Overture, Wilbye's madrigal, "Flora gave me," and Dr. John Bull's version of the national anthem, were included in the farewell scheme.

The performances on the whole reflected credit on the Conductor, Mr. Smith, and the leaders, Messrs. Cooke and Willy; but we think that the present system practised at the three choirs, of exchanging organists, might be materially improved upon. Why not engage an efficient London Conductor, and allow each organist to preside at his own instrument, with the capabilities of which he must be better acquainted than with a strange one. The resident organist of each town could attend to all the business arrangements and have his mind relieved from the fatigue of rehearsals and performances.

MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

The Italian Opera at Covent-Garden Theatre.—"The vocalists already engaged," says the Morning Chronicle, of Wednesday, "for Covent-garden Theatre, are as follow: Primi soprani: Grisi, Persiani, Stefanoni, and Ronconi. Primi contralti: Albani and Angor. Seconde Donne: Mdlle. Piombanti and Lega. Primi Tenori: Mario, Salvi, Lavia, and Perez. Primi bassi baratoni

RESTORMEL CASTLE.

---

* This tower fell about seventy years since; but it is remarkable that two busts of the heroine who so gallantly repulsed the French have been found, and are still preserved. The present proprietor has restored the tower, &c. A most commanding prospect can be obtained by ascending to the height of 105 feet

Tamburini, Ronconi, Speck, and Polonini. Primi bassi profondi: Marini, Silva, Corradi, and Alba. Primi bassi comici: Rosvere and Ley. Secondi tenori: Biada and Alberti. And secondi bassi: Morelli and Lopez." It is added that Madame Pauline Viardot Garcia, the sister of Malibran, is expected to be added to the above troupe. Costa is musical director, composer, and conductor. He has selected a band of 80 players and a chorus of 60 voices, nearly all from the late company of her Majesty's Theatre. After Jullien's next concerts have terminated, the theatre is to be newly decorated. It is stated that there will be 200 private boxes. The embellishments are to be on a scale of unprecedented splendour. The season will commence in March, and the nights of performance Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. M. Joseph Persiani, the composer, and husband of the syren of that name, is the manager for the capitalists of distinction who have undertaken the speculation. In addition to the usual orchestra, a military band has been engaged by Costa; and "Don Giovanni" will be given with the triple orchestra. All the engagements have been made for three years certain. It is not yet decided whether there will be a ballet for the first season.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, Sept. 20.—Fifteenth Sunday after Trinity.
Monday, 21.—St. Matthew the Apostle.
Tuesday, 22. New Post-Office opened, 1829.
Wednesday, 23 Porson died, 1808—Day and night of nearly equal length.
Thursday, 24.—Jupiter rises at 8h. 45m. p.m.
Friday, 25.—Mars rises at 5h. 21m. a.m.
Saturday, 26. -Saturn rises at 4h. 43m. p.m., and sets at 2h. 17m. a.m.

High Water at London-bridge, for the Week ending September 26

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m
2 25	2 42	2 55	3 11	3 26	3 42	3 57	4 13	4 29	4 47	5 3	5 24

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"W. R. T.," and "T. S. B.," Middleton, should provide themselves with "Walker's Electrotype Manipulation," 1s.

"W. J. L.," Barnsbury Road. Walker places the accent on the middle syllable in "Sonorous": as does Thomson, in the line—

"Down comes a deluge of sonorous hail."

"J. J.," Manchester. -"Cobbett's English Grammar."

"A Subscriber," Newington, is recommended to deliver the commodity to its purchaser.

"M. A. C"—Should M. Leonard visit England, with his learned Dogs, we will notify the same. An interesting account of their performances is given in Vol. XXXVII. of the "Mirror."

"H. P." should address a note of inquiry to the Secretary to the Training College, Stanley Grove, Chelsea. (See also No. 44 of our Journal, where the College is engraved and described.)

"Semper Fidelis" had better consult a respectable Solicitor upon so critical a matter.

"S. W. D." should apply at the Society's Depository, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's Inn [illegible] The address of the Governess' Benevolent Society is 1, Cambridge-terrace, Regent's Park.—3. "Hints on Etiquette." (Longmans.)

"J. H.," Hardingham Hall, may obtain the "United States Almanac" of Messrs Wiley and Putnam, Waterloo-place; price about 3s. 6d. A Sloop differs from a Cutter by having a fixed bowsprit and a jib-stay.

"H. W. J.," Bayswater.—Merchants' Clerks are not among the persons exempt from serving on Juries by the 2nd sect. 6 George IV., c. 50.

"A. Q." -By the New Tariff, "Plants, Shrubs, and Trees, alive" may be imported duty free.

"Mary," Lancaster.—A married woman may be made executrix to a will; but, in such a case, she cannot act alone, and if the husband waste the estate, she will not be liable. (Chanc. Rep., 323. Powell's Advice.)

"Potato"—Pope Nicholas V. died of grief, 1455. The vaults unearthed in Bride-lane were not adapted for illustration. Our Correspondent should not place a high value upon "Antiquities" paragraphs.

"A Constant Reader," Stoke Newington, may see a file of the Morning Post at Deacon's Coffee-house, Walbrook.

"R. R.," Manchester. We have not room.

"A. B.," Gloucester.—From one of Mr. Macaulay's brilliant Essays: we do not recollect which.

"W. S.," Wilderness Park.—A newspaper, if written on, is chargeable by the Post Office; but, the person to whom it is addressed cannot be compelled to take it in and pay the postage. The execution was public.

"W. S.," Marylebone.—

	Breadth.	Length.	Height.
Exeter Hall	90 ft.	138 ft.	48 ft.
Birmingham Town Hall	65 ft.	140 ft.	65 ft.

These fine Rooms are engraved in Nos. 107 and 225 of the Illustrated London News.

"An Old Subscriber and Admirer" is assured that the delay is the fault of the Engraver: we have sent him our Correspondent's letter as a refresher.

"F. M. S.," Kennington. -Not prepaid.

"A Constant Reader," Maidstone. In "Metamorphosis," the accent is on the third syllable.

"E. K. R.," Kelso.—The case is a breach of trust: it often happens that impostors escape through the delicacy of their dupes.

"Nihil," Jersey.—We have not room.

"Philo."—The grave Johnson defines "Flirtation" to be "a quick, sprightly motion. A cant word among women." Pope talks of a muslin flounce having "an agreeable flirtation air." It is synonymous with coquetry.

"C. O."—1. The Wellington Statue will be placed on the Green Park Arch in about ten days.—2. At Footscray, Kent.

"P. B.," Prince's street. Declined.

"J. S." and "S. V."—The distant Lodge to which the receiving Member belongs will be fineable, if the money advanced by the first-named Lodge be not repaid.

"D. M."—The well-endowed College at Bromley, is for Clergymen's Widows, only. There are several Almshouses in the neighbourhood of London, to which "Old Maids" are eligible: benevolence has not left them to their "single blessedness." (See the List in the volume of "Metropolitan Charities." S. Low.)

"J. W.," Swansea, will find a well-executed Series of Engravings of "The Crown Jewels," in No. 148 of the Illustrated London News.

"J. H.," Torquay. We have not room.

"Inquisitor," Truro. -Pronounced as spelt.

"A Whaler," the Hague.—We do not know of any periodical work exclusively chronicling the results of the Whale Fisheries. The "Nautical Magazine" occasionally records them.

"Anglicanus." The price of "Walker's Elementa Liturgica," (a capital work), is 3s. (Longmans.)

We are not aware of any really practicable machine to turn over music leaves, without the performer taking his hands off the keys.

"Anne."—Thorough-bass is essential to learners, although too often neglected at schools.

"J. G. C." -Apply to Whitaker and Co., Ollivier, or Cocks, for the singing-books required.

"Baritone-Bass."—We do not regard the Wilhelm-Hullah system of singing classes as calculated to form a good singer, although it is of service at the beginning.

"R. H."—Cramer, Beale and Co., or Addison, Regent-street; or Chappell, in Bond-street.

"A Subscriber from No. 1."—Carlotta Grisi is an Italian.

"W. S."—Pronounced See-vor-ee.

"A Constant Reader." -Dr. Gauntlett is Organist of St. Olave's, Southwark.

"Old Dan Tucker." -Apply to the Ethiopian Serenaders, for an instruction-book on the Banjo.

"Kuricola."—A line addressed to the Apollonicon Rooms, St. Martin's-lane, or to Mr. Parker, Publisher, in the Strand, will meet with prompt attention.

"Cæsar." A reference to the Gazettes (published in all the Newspapers) of the months referred to, will enable our Correspondent to ascertain the number of commissions granted with or without purchase.

"T. D. H."—Winwick in Lancashire, and Doddington, in Cambridgeshire, are, we believe, the richest livings in England.

"A Constant Reader." On the purchase of a commission in the Army, it is not required of the young Officer to go to any Military School.

"O. K." A letter addressed "St. Margaret's, Twickenham," will reach the gentleman in question.

"C. W." The Queen might have married whom she pleased. Her choice was not confined to "Princes of the Royal Blood."

"A Wiltshire Correspondent."—We know of no other means of obtaining the employment, but by application to the Superintendents of the Dockyards.

"J. K. A." is thanked for his good wishes: the gilt is nearly rubbed off the gingerbread.

"A Constant Reader." -Thanks.

"Johnny."—"Black's Guide to Scotland" is a capital work. Velvet is not mentioned in any documents earlier than the 13th century; so that Alfred the Great wearing velvet seems out of the question.

"J. L. G.," [illegible] Ireland.

"Bookworm," [illegible] is [illegible] Book Auctioneer's.

"W. W.," Rye.—"The Illustrated New Testament" is in the press.

"C. R.," George-street, Edinburgh.—Under consideration.

"A Subscriber" may obtain a small pamphlet on Wax-Modeling. (Reed, King William-street, Strand.)

"G. H." -See the minute account of Christ's Hospital, in No. 208 of our Journal.

"An Ilminster Subscriber."—What kind of work -a County History, or popular Description?

"P. T. O."—A certificate is not only required for killing game, but also for shooting Woodcocks, Snipes, Quails, Landrails, or Rabbits, though, for the latter, open to certain objections. Colonel Hawker, on Shooting. Whether insects be endowed with any senses [illegible], cannot easily be ascertained.

"W. H. B."—The selling [illegible] fine.

"A Correspondent," [illegible].

"A Constant Subscriber," Leyton.—Passports for the Netherlands are granted at the Consul's Office, 123, Fenchurch-street, between ten and four; fee, 5s.

"Mr Froth" will find the Portrait of Mr. Haydon, in No. 218 of our Journal; and that of Chief Justice Tindal, in No. 220.

"H. E. H.," Alnwick.—Address a note to Taylor, Bookseller, Wellington-street, Strand.

"L. D. L.," Stamford-street. There are several Loan Societies in London, of whom a sum under £100 may be borrowed. We doubt as to the second inquiry.

Ineligible.—"E. D. E.," The Sonnet.

The New Military Knapsack, engraved in our Journal of last week, has not been shown by the Artist properly placed upon the wearer, in the first Engraving. (See page 172.) The arms or yoke should be in a direct line, in front, on the turn of the barrel of the ribs, as shown in the second Engraving; and the breast-strap should be so raised as not to touch the chest when buckled.

Received.—"A Genealogical and Heraldic Dictionary of the Landed Gentry of Great Britain and Ireland." By John Burke, Esq., Author of the "Peerage and Baronetage," &c. And, John Bernard Burke, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. 2 vols., large octavo.

Our Subscribers and the Public are apprized that from this date, the Numbers comprised in Vols. 1, 2, and 3 of the Illustrated London News, (Nos. 1 to 87, inclusive,) cannot be sold separately, but only in volumes. This alteration, rendered imperative, by the constant demand for back Numbers, will, we trust, suggest to our Subscribers the necessity of keeping their Sets of our Journal perfect, in order to insure its entirety as an unique Illustrated History of Our Own Times.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1846.

The week has produced one political, or semi-political event; the destruction of the potato crops, which the Protectionists denied last autumn, has been admitted by them, or by Lord George Bentinck for them. Ten millions sterling, he says, barely represents the value of the food destroyed, and which must be supplied from some quarter. He wishes to explain to the agriculturists why prices have not fallen so much and so suddenly as they were assured they would do in consequence of the new measures. But, unless very skilfully handled, this course of argument tends to excite other ideas than those inculcated by the noble Lord; the most determined opponent of the Corn-Laws could not have established a stronger reason for their repeal. People, too, will be apt to think that the judgment which so clearly foresaw what has now happened, could not have been far wrong last year.

In Ireland the scarcity is more severely felt, and is deepening into a famine; the awful task that a Government must undertake which attempts to supply employment and food, to a whole nation, is becoming visible; the operations, which in a healthy state of things, go on almost imperceptibly, when they have to be carried on by an Executive Government, are found beyond almost any command of wealth and labour. The "Commissariat" of an army has often been the greatest difficulty of a General; but when it has to be arranged for nearly an entire nation, it exceeds all estimate. The Executive is endeavouring to strike a medium between two courses; remain passive it cannot; but neither can it undertake to feed all. Its chief resource is giving labour, or compelling it to be given. This kind of relief is now made obligatory; and it is easy to see how Ireland is gradually falling under a poor law. Like causes produce like effects. The misery of an unemployed and starving peasantry in the "good old times" of England, when famines were of frequent occurrence, and men could be whipped and branded for asking charity—facts which Lord John Manners and the Young Englanders strangely overlook—compelled the proprietors of land to devise some means of saving themselves from continual turbulence and depredation. All "coercive" measures had been exhausted; Ireland never suffered worse atrocities than were inflicted on the people of England in the reigns of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth; thousands upon thousands were hung, and the whip was plied with an activity never surpassed among the blacks of slaveholding nations. At last, as poverty could neither be scourged nor strangled out of existence, the expedient of employing and feeding it was tried, and successfully. The celebrated Poor-Law of Elizabeth, so much lauded as an emanation of benevolence on the part of that "man-minded" Queen, was really but a rational measure for the protection of property; a little was sacrificed to secure a peaceable enjoyment of the remainder. The benefit that measure has proved to this country no one can calculate. Many as may have been the abuses which sprang from it, the great principle was asserted, that all born on English soil should have the means of supporting life secured to them; that those who had should give to those who had not. It immediately became the direct interest of those most liable to the assessment to see that the poor were employed profitably, and, as labour is wealth—the only wealth, indeed—so has the land continued to prosper; its surface now supports five-fold the population, with not a tenth of the misery that was continually occurring ere numbers had begun to "press upon space." Ireland is now undergoing the pressure that forced England upon a Poor-Law: charity will not avail when it is a whole nation that asks relief. The law is less capricious than human dispositions; what anybody may do without it, everybody must do with it. We are glad to see that the Irish landed proprietors are beginning to speak of a Poor-Law without alarm; and, in what is required of them at the present juncture, they exhibit themselves in a favourable light, as the extent and reality of the affliction becomes seriously felt. A Belfast journal says:—

> In the present crisis, the conduct of the Irish landlords is beyond all praise. They have acted, and are acting, as becomes them. They do not oppose or resist the measures of Government on the ground of their being too burdensome. So far is this from being the case, in the suggestions they have proposed, that they not only recognise the principle of assessment provided by the Government, but they strongly impress it upon the public mind, that all public measures of relief will be utterly unavailing, unless the landed proprietors, both individually and collectively, make sacrifices proportioned to the extent of the misfortune.

The Foreign intelligence still represents Madrid to be in a state of intense excitement about the French Marriage: there are protests under signature; many seizures of Journals, which appear with great blanks in their leaders, where offensive comments have been erased by the pen of authority; a French courier, who could not find his way to the Hotel of the Embassy, has been hooted and pelted by the populace. And, in the midst of all this, the intrigue, or negotiation, whichever name it may deserve, goes on successfully; the Cortes have been assembled, and officially informed of the two Royal Marriages, of which much more has been made than the nature of the event can justify. Much more important—to France, at least—is the scarcity with which the country is said to be threatened, and the rumours of a revival of the war "that for a space did fail," in Algiers.

ESCAPE OF DON CARLOS.

A telegraphic despatch has been received from Paris announcing the escape of Don Carlos.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

The Queen and the Royal Family.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal children, continue at Osborne House. The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Prince of Wales and the Princess Royal, and attended by the Viscountess Canning, Lady in Waiting, went on Tuesday afternoon, in the char-à-banc, drawn by four ponies, to Newport. Colonel Bouverie, Equerry in Waiting to his Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended on horseback. Her Majesty and the Royal party returned to Osborne House, by way of Barton. The necessary preparations for the reception of her Majesty and the Prince Consort at Windsor, are to be completed by Tuesday, on which day the Court will take its departure from Osborne House. Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, accompanied by her Royal Highness the Princess of Prussia, will arrive, upon a visit to her Majesty, either on the afternoon of the 22nd, or during the forenoon of the following day.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Christ's Hospital.—On Monday next, being St. Matthew's Day, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs, with the Governors of the several Royal Hospitals, will attend divine service at Christ's Church, Newgate-staeet, where a sermon will be preached by the Rev. Hugo Daniel Harpur, B.A., Fellow of Jesus College, Oxford; after which, they will repair to the Great Hall, Christ's Hospital, where, according to annual custom, Orations on the Benefits of the Royal Hospitals will be delivered by the four senior scholars, who are about to proceed to the Universities of Cambridge and Oxford: the first in Latin, by Malcolm Laing; the second in English, by Thomas Stedman Polehampton; the third in Greek, by Thomas Johnson Potter; the fourth in French, by Edward Algernon Newton. Eight Poems will also be recited by the other senior scholars, viz.—a Latin Alcaic ode, on "Godfrey addressing Jerusalem," by Edward Hayman; a Greek Iambic translation of "Prince Henry's Apology, and the King's Reply," from Shakspeare's "Henry IV.," by John Daniel Williams; an English poem, on "Egypt," by D'Arcy Charles Wentworth Thompson; a Latin Hexameter translation of "Adam and Eve's Morning Hymn," by Charles Dacre Craven; original Greek Iambics, on Charles I.'s Last Interview with his Children," by Charles Edward Searle; original Latin Elegiacs, on the "Punjaub," by Robert Black; a Greek Sapphic translation of "Gray's Hymn to Adversity," by James Lemprière Hammond; and an English ode, on "The Pictures of H.M. the Queen and H.R.H. Prince Albert" (painted in commemoration of their late visit to Christ's Hospital), by William Allan Russell.

Bank of England Meeting.—A general court was held on Thursday morning in the Bank Parlour, to consider of a dividend. The meeting was not very fully attended, the tranquil state of the money market and the good position of the affairs of the corporation rendering any discussions of importance unlikely. The Governor took the chair at the usual hour, and acquainted the court that this was a meeting to consider a dividend, pursuant to the charter and the bye-laws; and the directors having carefully considered the Bank's accounts, proposed a dividend at the rate of 3½ per cent. for the half year, out of interest and profits. Last year the "Rest" stood, on the 3rd of September, at £3,588,887, an increase on the previous return of £15,363. On the 28th of February, 1846, it was £3,689,430, a further increase of £100,543. On the 31st of August last, it was £3,853,753, an increase of 150,393. The total increase on the whole year had been £250,860. The directors had great satisfaction in offering so favourable a statement to the proprietors, and moved the declaration of the dividend. Mr. de Winter considered, as the affairs were so satisfactory, that the dividend ought to be increased to 4 per cent., and moved a resolution to that effect. If this was lost, he should propose that a bonus of 2 per cent. should be declared immediately. Posterity would reap the benefit of the improved situation of the present Bank stockholders, not he. The Governor assured the proprietor that the subject had not been lost sight of, but that upon the whole the directors considered it best for the interest of the corporation that the dividend proposed by the court should be agreed to. A desultory conversation followed, in which several proprietors took part; the amendment was put and lost, and the original motion for the dividend carried. Mr. de Winter said he would now move that a bonus for the half year be declared, but he was reminded by the Governor that the bye-laws prevented any proprietor from moving two amendments at the same court on the motion for a dividend, and, therefore, the hon. proprietor did not persevere, but stated that at every future meeting he should move for an increase in the dividend.

The Registrations.—The Registrations for the metropolitan districts have commenced, but no points of particular interest have been brought before the Revising Barristers. Mr. Arnold, the Revising Barrister for the City of London, however, has adopted a course which is likely to put a stop to frivolous objections. In cases where objections have not been properly sustained, he has awarded the full amount of costs. In consequence of this decision, the objections to 636 liverymen and 900 householders, will be withdrawn, thus materially reducing the amount of business before the court.

Government School of Design.—The fifth report of the Council of the School of Design, from June, 1845, to June, 1846, signed by Lord Colborne, as chairman, has recently been printed as a Parliamentary document. It extends to nearly forty pages, and gives a favourable account of the metropolitan as well as the provincial branch schools. It appears that among the manufacturing communities throughout the kingdom, a sense of cultivating taste and of improving skill in ornamental design is becoming more and more evident. In every department of labour to which a knowledge of the arts of design is applicable—among manufacturing proprietors and operative artisans—the subject of their commercial value is attracting increased attention, and instances of earnest interest in the advantage of methodical education in schools of design are continually occurring. Every student is required to draw the human figure, and to pass through at least the elementary classes for this study as an important and indispensable part of the general course of instruction; it being found by practical experience, that the accurate delineation of beautiful models of the human form is a most efficient means of educating the hand and the eye, and of promoting the refinement of taste. The total number of students in the male school, Somerset-house, in May last, was 237; consisting of 47 from 12 to 14 years of age, 62 from 15 to 16, 61 from 17 to 19, and 67 from 20 and upwards. At Midsummer, last year, the prizes distributed to the male and female students of the head school amounted to £207. The prize competitions have been discontinued, on account of the interruption caused to the regular business of the school. It seems that applications have been made from Paisley, the Staffordshire Potteries, and Leeds, and the Council consider it advisable to make grants to open schools of design in those counties, and submit the proposal to the Board of Trade. An abstract statement of the expenditure by the Council of the School of Design, on account of the £10,000 granted by Parliament, in 1841, appears in the report. The payments on account of the branch schools, to January last, amounted to £3900 12s. 2½d., and, on account of the head school, £4523 13s. 8½d., making the total payments £8424 5s. 11d., and leaving a balance on the grant of £1575 14s. 1d.

The Opening of Fleet-street.—On Monday afternoon, the entire line of Fleet-street was thrown open to the numerous vehicles passing between the metropolis and the West-end, having been partially closed exactly five weeks; for at no one period was the entire line rendered impassable to carriages, as during the first fortnight the communication was kept open from Ludgate-hill up to Fetter-lane, and so on to the other outlets. Within the five weeks, no less than 6,000 square yards of granite have been laid down, weighing upwards of 3,000 tons.

Progress of the New Houses.—In the House of Lords, to which, more particularly, attention is now directed, the works are making rapid progress. The ceiling and upper part of the walls are finished, and carvers and joiners are occupied in every corner of the place in fixing the wainscot fitting, both in the house and lobbies. Those in the former are most elaborately carved out of the solid, and reflect great credit on the workmen. The decorations will be gorgeous—dazzling. The ceiling, formed into deeply-sunk panels, is covered with gold and colours. Under each wall-piece, from principal timbers, is a sculptured canopy and niche, solidly gilt where finished, between which occur the windows, to be filled with stained glass (six on each side) and compartments for fresco.

Hungerford Market Steam Boat Pier.—The long pending dispute between the Hungerford Market and the Charing Cross Suspension Bridge Companies is now in course of arrangement, and will be soon settled, when the public will be allowed to land and embark from steamboats by means of the Suspension Bridge. The present pier, composed of a number of ricketty barges, will be immediately removed, doing away with a very great obstruction to the navigation.

The Burlington Arcade.—The narrow slip of ground called the Burlington Arcade, in Piccadilly, containing seventy-two houses, produces an annual rental of £8,640.

Drury-lane Theatre.—At the annual general meeting of the proprietors of this theatre, held on Tuesday in the saloon of the establishment, and consisting only of Mr. B. B. Cabbell, who was in the chair, and ten other gentlemen, a report was read by the secretary, and was, after some conversation, agreed to. In it, the committee recommended that a proposition made by Mr Bunn, the lessee, to appropriate a balance of £555 on the rent account to decorating and otherwise repairing the theatre, should be complied with; and further that a balance of £689, as set forth in their last report, should be devoted to repairs, which the report of the architect represented as necessary. There was no surplus income wherewith to discharge the liabilities of the corporation as regards the bondholders' claims, which in more prosperous times had been reduced from £30,000 to £6,000, but both principal and interest had ceased to be paid for the last ten years. The accounts had been audited by Major Nayler, and the standing debt was shown to be £7,553 16s. 3d. The whole of the liabilities of the concern for the past season, amounting to £4,087 19s. 4d., had been discharged, and the balance on the bankers' account, applicable to discharge the current quarter's expences amounted to £582 10s. 3d. The report was unanimously adopted, and the proprietors concurred in a suggestion of the committee as to a better arrangement between the renters, trustees, and the proprietors than at present existed. The committee and sub-committee were re-appointed.

The Mildness of the Season.—The neighbourhood of South Lambeth presents many remarkable features of the peculiarity as well as mildness of September, 1846. We have now before us from a garden in South Lambeth-place, apple blossoms, and also embryo fruit, a second crop—the first having been gathered many weeks since; ripe, and of large size. Blossoms of the pear-tree, now a second time covered with flowers, whilst some of the first fruit is still ripening. Potatoes growing from this year's growth, and, what is equally rare, perfect flowers on tall stems of the monkshood, the first crop having blossomed, withered, and been cut down six weeks ago; and in a neighbouring garden, the horse chesnut has not only clothed itself with an entire new suit of green, but is absolutely covered with its sweet smelling flowers.

Reduction of the Hill at Piccadilly.—For some time past a number of labourers have been engaged in digging away the hill in Piccadilly, from Half Moon-street to Dover-street, and repaving it with broken granite.

Westminster Bridge.—The work of demolition has been going bravely on during the last few days. At the present time the whole of the balustrades and stone-work on either side of the bridge have been pulled down, and some hundred loads of stone have been removed. On the upper and lower sides of the structure the stone work has been pulled down beyond the level of the footpath. The lamps on both sides have been transferred to nearly the centre of the old carriage road, to light the small space that is still left for pedestrians to pass over. This looks as if the re-opening of the carriage way, notwithstanding what has been said about the safety of the bridge, now that the erection is not so heavy, was never contemplated.

Births and Deaths in the Metropolis.—The metropolitan returns for the week ending Saturday, the 12th instant, exhibit an increase of deaths, which amount to 944, a greater number than has taken place in any of the corresponding weeks of the previous six years. The greatest mortality occurring in the eleventh week of the third quarter was in 1843, when 915 deaths were registered. The average of the series of corresponding weeks of the last six years is 860. The births registered during the past week were 1,280.

POSTSCRIPT.

COMMITTAL OF CAPT. RICHARDSON FOR FORGERY.

At the Mansion House, yesterday, Capt. Richardson, Chairman of the Tenbury, Worcester, and Ludlow Railway Company, who has been examined there on three previous occasions, on a charge of forgery on Messrs. Coutts and Co., by altering a cheque for £10 into one for £5000, was again brought up, and further evidence was adduced

Mr Edward Ingleby examined: I am principal clerk in the house of Coutts and Co. I remember one of the clerks applying to me for a copy of the signatures of the parties who signed cheques with Capt. Richardson. The prisoner told me that he wished for the vouchers of all the cheques he had signed for the Tenbury and Worcester Railway Company. I told him that I could not give up the vouchers unless a receipt was given, signed by all the parties. Prisoner said, "I am Mr. Richardson, and the London and County Bank give up the vouchers." I said that was not the practice of our house (Coutts and Co.), and his request could not be complied with. Mr. Fry and some other gentlemen were present Prisoner then asked if he could see the vouchers. I told him that he might, but they must not be taken away. The paid cheques were then exhibited, when the prisoner pointed out the one for £5000, and said, "This is a forgery." I asked him if his signature was not genuine: he said, "Yes, it is, and so are the signatures of the other parties, but the cheque has been altered from £10 to £5000." I told him then, under these circumstances, Messrs. Coutts and Co. were not liable. On a subsequent occasion, I again asked the prisoner if the signatures to the cheque for £5000 were genuine, and he replied that they were, and so were the signatures to the £100 and £20 cheques, which were drawn on the same day. I asked him if he knew to whom he had paid the cheque for £10. To which he replied that he did not know to whom, but he had paid it to some person or another.

By Mr. Clarkson: Mr. Fry, the solicitor, said the contents of the cheque must have been removed by some chemical process. I have examined it, but I cannot discover any discolouration or any alteration whatever. I have been told, however, by Mr. Vaughan, the stationer, that an alteration could be made in the writing of a cheque without its being discovered; and he thought that, probably, an alteration had been made in the cheque for £5000. I am not aware that the cheque for £5000 has ever been submitted to the inspection of any experimental chemist

Mr. Pulsford, Secretary to the Company, examined: I never saw blank cheques signed on behalf of the Company but on one occasion, and that was on the 30th of April, for £22 10s.: it was signed by Mr. Stevenson, but I believe not by Mr Whitmore. I am aware that six or seven other blank cheques have been signed by Directors, but I do not know by whom, except seeing the name of Mr. Whitmore on some of them. These cheques were signed in blank to pay the solicitor's bills when they were taxed. This was the whole of the evidence on behalf of the prosecution.

Mr Goodman, the Chief Clerk, then proceeded to read over the numerous depositions which had been taken on previous examinations, which were signed by the various witnesses

When Mr. Stevenson's deposition was read over, three cheques were handed to that gentleman, who distinctly swore that he did not sign them blank; they were filled up when he signed them. He had not recently been to Calais.

The several witnesses were bound over in their own recognizances of £40 each to appear at the next sessions of the Central Criminal Court, which commence on Monday next, and give evidence against Capt. W. Richardson, on a charge of felony.

The Lord Mayor, addressing the prisoner, said, "You stand committed on a charge of forgery."

The prisoner was then removed in custody from the justice room to Newgate. He maintained the greatest self-possession throughout the inquiry.

Assembling of Parliament in November.—The Cork Reporter says that an announcement was made to the Mallow and Doneraile deputation, by the Private Secretary of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, that Parliament was to be assembled in November, in order to remedy the defects in the Labour Rate Bill, and to provide other effectual measures for the relief of distress in Ireland.

Visit of the British Association to Portsmouth.—A number of ladies and gentlemen connected with the British Association, including the President, Sir R. I. Murchison, visited Portsmouth yesterday. The party went on board her Majesty's ship Excellent, to observe the effects of two 68 pounder shot, which were fired at the wreck of the iron steamer Ruby, both of which hit her, and knocked away large fragments. After lunching at Sir C Ogle's, the party, much increased in numbers, and apparently mustering 100 persons, went over the dockyard in groups, and were attended by Mr. Brown, the senior master attendant, and Mr. Fincham, the master shipwright, who took them to the block machinery, metal mills, smithery, new steam basin, test-house, hydraulic pump, rope house, sail-loft, &c. In the evening the learned body returned to their quarters at Southampton.

Loss of Two Lives on the Nottingham and Lincoln Railway.—A shocking accident occurred at Newark on Wednesday last, by which two men have lost their lives, and two others been severely injured. Although the Nottingham and Lincoln Railway has been opened some weeks, the station at Newark is far from being complete; and for several months past a large number of men have been employed in carting earth from Beacon Hill, in order to raise the site to its proper height. On the morning in question the men were employed as usual, but at eight o'clock the greater part of them had retired to breakfast—four persons only remaining at work. They were undermining, for the purpose of more readily filling a cart belonging to Joseph Hallam, one of the men killed, when a portion of earth suddenly gave way. Two of them fortunately escaped, one of them being thrown to a considerable distance without sustaining any material injury. The other two were buried under the earth, and taken out dead. The names of the deceased were Robt. Briggs, of Newark, a single man, and Joseph Hallam, of Bathley, where he kept a small public-house and grocer's shop; he was married, and is reported to have left eleven children. In the afternoon of the same day an inquest was held on the bodies, and a verdict of "Accidental death" was returned

---

NATIONAL SPORTS.

DONCASTER RACES.

We are all familiar with the old scholiast derivative, "lucus a non lucendo" the charter maxim of the logic which asserts that speech was given to man to enable him the better to conceal his thoughts. This principle pervades the great majority of all modern institutions the more modern, the more absolutely. For this reason it is identical with all that relates to railways—from their capital (so called because there's not a stiver of it in rerum naturâ) to their time-bills—chronometrical contrivances to test the amount of human credulity. On Monday morning last, being of purpose to seek the land of the Tykes, for their annual carnival, in the good old burgh of Doncaster, we betook us to the station of the North Western Line, situated hard by Euston-square. There, having learned that the train which starts for Derby at 9 A.M., would reach that romantic district in advance of the express despatch of carriages which leaves at half-past nine, we took our seat in the former in all the security of a leisurely jaunt—and were not disappointed.

At Rugby (the reverse being stated in the bills) of course we stayed till the express had passed; and then, having duly burst the boiler of our engine at Loughborough, or otherwise maimed the locomotive, we toddled at seven miles an hour for the remainder of the journey, and arrived at our destination in time to go to bed by candle light. Horace, a philosopher, who drew truth without the fig leaf, has an hexameter commencing—which any son of Bull with a lively digestion, who travels in these days may hear his penetralia echo, if he will only interpret conscientiously what is passing under his waistcoat after three hours of uninterrupted dalliance with a railway route. Sweet reader, did you ever share the box of the Age Brighton with Charley Jones? Our own especial Charley? Yes. Rememberest thou the first glorious "weed" at the "Elephant," and washed down by soda and sherry in the next five miles—then another "flower," and soda and brandy—and so on, in most admired succession? Think, we say, of those passages of incense and libation, and the Pagan pilgrimages of those degenerate days, wherein nothing is permitted to hope but the generation of so much wind as shall keep alive the sacrificial ashes of disappointment.

Dum vitant stulti vitia,

But, as Byron says, "we grow too sad." Well stand with us at Swinton: by the grace of a "unicorn," surmount, as we did, that most fair of vallies, crowned by the ruins of Conningsbro'; and, in due time, lo! the brave lough of Doncaster as aforesaid is won. But for the difficulty of acquiring the language, this place would be a desirable residence. Here the muffins are perennials, and you get London porter as it comes out of the hands of the manufacturers—a remarkable instance of the simplicity of the natives. The commerce is confined to its races; but the importance of this branch of traffic may be understood from the fact that the produce of four days enables the inhabitants to live in ease and comfort for the other three hundred and sixty-one.

Like the townsfolk most of the public buildings have an easy life of it, and turn a handsome penny besides. The Race Stand averages a rental of £2500 for four afternoon's occupancy during the twelvemonth. Something like the rate of two hundred thousand a year for unfurnished premises with half an acre of land attached; and the Rooms let at fifteen hundred pounds a week, or thereabouts. There is a rumour in existence that in former times gold was the only circulating medium known here; and at this day it would be hard to name anything to be procured for less than a guinea. What a paradise were Doncaster did the race week only last all the year round.

This auriferous festival commenced on Tuesday and terminated on Friday. The weather was peerless, brilliant sunshine, and zephyrs born of beds of violets. The pleasure people gathered together in great multitudes as did the industrious classes: persons as Shakspeare has it "at odds with Fortune." There is somewhere a couplet that runs to this intent—

And surest then our passion to create,
When most they touch the brink of all we hate.

So it is with racing in general: Doncaster racing in particular. The excitement your turfite requires is a heart-quake. Tell him a pretty little swindle is in the wind, and he shakes out his reefs with a will: but give him a hope of robbery under aggravated circumstances, and his soul is surfeited with extacy. To cater for that taste, the St Leger of our days is seasoned to suit this appetite. It is a plate got up after the receipt in the first act of Macbeth. One compounds the poison; another puts it in the cauldron; a third stirs it up; a fourth administers it—while the patients stand round, and squabble for a mouthful. During the last couple of months everybody affecting olympics was satisfied some considerable "sell" was in contemplation on the Leger. A foretaste of the bargain was the retirement without leave of Pyrrhus the First, when the public had extensively backed him to win outright. But as the crisis drew more near, the case became more interesting. The actual corpus delecti indeed was not manifest, but a deed of darkness there was of some kind, and that was zest enough.

In this promising position the great northern meeting of 1846 was put on the scene, Tuesday's sports was the purè before the haunch. The only race of account was that for the Champagne Stakes, for two year olds, won by Van Tromp, likely to be a trump in the Derby betting. Planet, the favourite with the ring, will probably be the best of the pair in his three year old form: your perfect babies make imperfect adults.

Wednesday the all exciting Leger anniversary was a gorgeous paragon of autumn weather. By dawn the town filled fast, and "with this fool's bait" fish of all sorts—loose and fast, gudgeons and sharks—were captivated. It was, indeed, a motley crowd in goodly motley—for all were dress'd in their best; and you saw they had made up their minds to be happy: was it not a good resolution?

In inconceivable dialects of what we will concede was an attempt upon the Queen's English, these companies spake of the cynosure of their hopes and wishes, the raase for t' Ledger. O the prospects of these antediluvians! They thought—the primeval formations!—that a race is to the swift: have they any credits with their Saving Banks, and would they like an improved rate of interest on bills at short dates?

The day's list contained five events—the Leger being appointed for four o'clock. Soon after three, the preparations commenced by that time the betting having pretty well subsided into a calm. It left Brocardo, Sir Tatton Sykes, and Sting, it will be seen, very good favourites—the middle one of the two the best fancied; only the fear was, his jockey would not be allowed to ride on his merits. In short, there was William Scott, in his yellow silk jacket, ready to get on his horse—closely watched by his friend, lest a pill or potion should be administered to make him safe——this in the middle of the aristocratic refinement of the nineteenth century! Out of the 149 nominations, twelve came to the post, under a suffocating atmosphere, and as much excitement as human nature is capable of sustaining. It was fearfully beautiful, that parade of proud cavalry; and when the flag fell, and they were off—awful was the moment. Away they steamed—led by one in black satin, who bestrid Tom Tulloch and over the hill they raced after him—the imprisoned in yellow next, and the crowd astern. Thus they came to the Red House, where Tulloch was done with it, Sir Tatton taking the lead, racing first up the straight ground, with honest Iago next him, who struggled with might and main, but was cleverly beaten.

Thus, for the first time, the Leger was won by a horse ridden and trained by his owner. The sky was rent by the shouts of the Tykes as Sir Tatton, led by Sir Tatton Sykes, returned to scale—and an enthusiastic reception. It was all over an old English passage of rural life, to see the fine old Baronet enacting the groom of the ceremonies, and served well to wind up the most memorable St. Leger ever run over Doncaster Race-course. There was nothing in the run on any terms with the winner and Iago.

DONCASTER RACES.—Tuesday.

The Fitzwilliam Stakes of 10 sovs each, and 50 added; three-yr-olds, 7st 5lb; four yrs, 8st 5lb; five yrs, 8st 12lb; six yrs and aged, 9st. One mile and a half. Six subs.

Major Yarburgh's Red Robin, 4 yrs	(Holmes)	1
Mr. Wreford's Wit's End, 3 yrs	(A. Day)	2
Sir G. Gerard's Pantasa, 4 yrs	(E. Edwards)	3

Wit's End made running at a good pace, Red Robin waiting on her to the distance; he then went in front, had a lead of three parts of a length at the stand, and appeared to be winning cleverly; the mare, however, came a few yards from home, made a good fight, and was only beaten by a neck. Pantasa was a bad third. Run in 2 min. 44 sec.

The Champagne Stakes, of 50 sovs each, h ft; two-yr-old colts, 8st 7lb, and fillies 8st 5lb. The second to save his stake. Red House. Forty subs

Lord Eglintoun's Van Tromp	(J. Marson)	1
Mr. Mostyn's Planet	(Nat)	2
Mr. W. Scott's Christopher	(Owner)	3

After a good deal of marching and counter-marching the horses were brought in tolerable order to the post, and started at the first signal, Van Tromp taking the lead, followed by Planet, and, without ever being caught, winning cleverly by a length. The race was between the first two from first to last. Run in 1 min. 16 sec.

Her Majesty's Plate of 100 guineas. Three-yr-olds, 7st 9lb; 4 yrs, 9st; 5 yrs, 9st 9lb; 6 yrs and aged 10st. Four miles.

Mr. John Day's the Hero, 3 yrs	(A. Day)	1
Mr. Hesseltine's Fitzwilliam, 3 yrs	(Longstaff)	2

Betting.—7 and 8 to 1 on the Hero, who made his own running, and won by 15 lengths.

WEDNESDAY.

The St. Leger Stakes, of 50 sovs each, h ft; for three-year-old colts, 8st 7lb: and fillies, 8st 2lb. The second to receive £300, and the third £100, out of the stakes. St. Leger Course. One hundred and forty-nine subs

Mr W. Scott's Sir Tatton Sykes	(Owner)	1
Colonel Anson's Iago	(Butler)	2
General Shubrick's Brocardo	(Holmes)	3
The following also started, but were not placed.—
Lord Chesterfield's Free Lance	(Nat)	0
Mr. D. Cook's Fancy Boy	(Templeman)	0
Mr. Cranston's Cranebrook	(Bartholomew)	0
Mr. O'Brien's Grimston	(Marson)	0
Lord E. Russell's Sting	(H. Bell)	0
Lord Maidstone's Tom Tulloch	(S. Day)	0
Mr. O'Brien's The Traverser	(Marlow)	0
Mr. W. Scott's Erin-go-bragh	(Chifney)	0
Mr. Skerratt's Romance	(G. Whitehouse)	0
Mr. Meiklam's Poynton	(Lye)	0

Betting.—3 to 1 agst Brocardo, 7 to 2 agst Sir Tatton Sykes, 6 to 1 agst Sting (taken freely), 7 to 1 agst Iago, 7 to 1 agst The Traverser, 9 to 1 agst Fancy Boy, 20 to 1 agst Poynton (taken). Won by half a length.

THURSDAY.

The North of England Produce Stakes of 50 sovs each; h ft; for three-year-old colts, 8st 7lb; fillies, 8st 4lb; and 5lb allowed, &c. The winner of the Derby or Oaks 5lb, of the St. Leger 7lb, extra. St. Lager Course. Five subs.

Mr. F. R. Price's Kismet by Touchstone, 3lb, walked over.

The Innkeepers' Plate of 15 sovs each, 10 ft, for horses of all ages (two-year-olds excepted), with 100 added. The second horse to save his stake. If 20 subs the second to receive 50 sovs. Red-house in.

Mr. Meiklam's Philip	1
Mr. T. Walter's Ratcliffe	2
Lord Chesterfield's Cockfighter	3

Fourteen ran. Won by a length.

Municipal Stakes of 200 sovs each; h ft; for two-year-old colts, 8st 7lb; fillies, 8st 4lb. Red-house in. Nine subs.

Colonel Anson's Bingham	1
Mr. Mostyn's Crozier	2
Lord Glasgow's Discontent	3
Mr. W. H. Brooks's The Field	4

Won by a neck.

The Scarborough Stakes of 30 sovs each; 20 ft; for three-year-old colts, 8st 7lb; fillies, 8st 4lb. The winner of the St. Leger 7lb extra. One mile. 11 subs.

Mr. O'Brien's Traverser	1
Mr. Stephenson's Sheraton	2
Mr. A. W. Hill's Burlesque	3

Won by a length.

The Great Yorkshire Handicap of 25 sovs each, 15 ft, and 5 only if declared, with 200 added by the Corporation.

Mr. Cranston's Cranebrook, 3 yrs, 6st 7lb	1
Mr Robinson's Morpeth, 3 yrs, 7st 12lb	2
Lord Chesterfield's f by Elis, out of Morella, 3 yrs, 5st 3lb	3

Fourteen ran. Won by a neck.

Sudden Death of Mr. Justice Williams.—Mr. Justice Williams died very unexpectedly on Monday evening last, between eight and nine o'clock, at Livermere Park, near Bury St. Edmund's. The learned Judge had for three weeks or more, complained of some pain at his chest; and, on his return, through town, from his annual excursion to the north, had, about that time, consulted Dr Chambers upon the subject. That eminent physician treated it as a case of liver complaint, and, after having twice seen his patient, recommended the necessary specifics. From that period up to the day of his death no visible alteration took place in the state of his health. On Monday morning he complained that the pain in his chest was much sharper than before. Dr. Probert, a physician from Bury, was immediately sent for, who continued the course which Dr. Chambers had prescribed. The complaints of the pain in the chest were more frequent during the day, although they did not interfere with taking air and exercise. Between eight and nine o'clock in the evening he was left reclining on the sofa, and within the space of four minutes afterwards it was discovered that his spirit had passed away without a struggle. Mr. Williams was called to the bar in 1804; and, being an exception to the general rule, his success at the bar commenced with the very day on which he assumed his forensic costume. In February, 1832, he was appointed one of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer. He sat only one term in that court; after which he took his seat as one of the Judges of the Court of Queen's Bench, in which court he remained up to the time of his death.

The late Suicide of a Pauper in St. Pancras.—On Tuesday a special meeting of the Directors and Guardians of the Poor of St. Pancras took place in the board-room of the workhouse, for the purpose of considering the recent serious charges preferred against them by the Coroner's Jury empanelled before Mr. Wakley, M P., on Tuesday and Wednesday (last week), concerning the death of Mary Ann Jones, a pauper, who committed suicide under the circumstances reported in our paper of last week, and also to pursue a rigid investigation into the affair. A great many witnesses were then brought forward and examined. The master, matron, and assistant matron deposed to the humanity of their own conduct, and the misbehaviour of those paupers who gave evidence at the inquest. On the other hand, the persons in charge of the shed stated several complaints against the way in which it was kept, and the surgeon in particular gave his opinion that the food allowed the inmates in that department of the workhouse was insufficient to sustain life. The inquiry was adjourned.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Liverpool Agricultural Show takes place in the North Haymarket, on Thursday next, the 24th inst. Lord Stanley will preside at the dinner.

The Scientific Congress of France closed its transactions at Marseilles on the 10th inst. The next Congress will be held at Tours.

The planet Saturn is now visible on clear nights, in the south-eastern quarter of the Heavens, between ten and eleven o'clock.

The young Prince de Montfort, second son of Jerome Bonaparte, and nephew of the King of Wurtemberg, arrived in London on Saturday last. He proceeded immediately to Bath.

The Grand Duke Michael of Russia arrived on the 5th instant, at Vienna, in the steamer Archduke François Charles, bearing the colours of Austria and Russia. He alighted at the Russian Embassy, where a guard of honour was posted. In the evening he went to the Prater, accompanied by the Archduke Albert, and honoured with his presence a concert given by Strauss.

A Treasury warrant has been issued altering the rate of postage between this country and Denmark, which is now reduced to 6d. for each letter not exceeding half an ounce, with the option of prepayment on the part of the sender; newspapers are to be charged 1d. each.

The Warsaw journals announce a new condemnation that has just taken place for participation in the late insurrection. The person on whom this decision has fallen is an architect of Cracow, named Mirecki, aged 21, who has been tried by court-martial, and sentenced to hard labour for life in the mines, with confiscation of all his property. It is in the silver mines of Nertichinsck, in the province of Irkutsk, on the confines of China, that M. Mirecki is to undergo his punishment.

Dr. Pusey, whose health during the summer has caused much serious apprehension to his friends, is now considerably better. The Rev. Doctor is on a visit to his brother, P. Pusey, Esq., M P., of Pusey House, near Farringdon, Berks, and is expected shortly in Oxford to resume his Cathedral duties.

A Tangiers letter of Aug. 24, says:—"We are at the eve of great events. Abd-el-Kader, assuming the title of Defender of the Faith, has declared the Emperor of Morocco unfit to reign, and is exciting the population to accept Muly Edris, a descendant of the Imperial Family, as their true and legitimate Sovereign Edris is already near Fez with an immense number of partizans, and the first shock with the troops of the Government may produce an active war, to which France and England cannot remain indifferent."

A letter from Breslau, of the 6th, corroborates the rumour that disorders have again burst out in Galicia and the Free State of Cracow. The authorities have deemed it necessary to adopt extraordinary measures of safety in the latter place. Patrols of light horse perambulate the street, and some of the inhabitants have formed themselves into a guard of safety. The nobles of Gallicia are taking refuge at Cracow. The peasants of Gallicia are refusing to perform the duties which they owed the landed proprietors, and were setting fire to farm-houses and chateaux.

A company has just been formed for the navigation of the Volga by steam A Dutch engineer, named Rontgen, constructed an iron steamer of 250 horse power, only drawing two and a half feet water, and had it conveyed in pieces to Rybinsk, where it was joined together and launched. It has been called the Volga, and is employed in towing vessels of a peculiar construction to suit the river. The distance from Rybinsk to Samora was done on the first trip in 16½ days, which formerly took between three and four months.

The foundation stone of the great viaduct on the Glasgow, Paisley, Kilmarnock, and Ayr Railway, at Bullockmyle, twelve miles from Kilmarnock, was laid on Saturday, amidst great rejoicings. The viaduct will cost £100,000, and it will cross the river Ayr in a deep wooded ravine, three quarters of a mile wide from bank to bank.

A new Welch church was on Monday opened in Aldersgate-street, contiguous to the General Post Office.

During the first six months of this year the suicides, according to the return for the western districts of Middlesex, have more than doubled the suicides in those districts during the corresponding period of last year.

The principal streets and shops in Turin are now lighted at night by gas made from Newcastle coal, which is shipped to Genoa; and costs, including carriage to Turin, about three guineas a ton. At the beginning of October next the whole city will be illuminated by gas.

A sharp shock of earthquake, but unattended with any calamity, was felt at Smyrna on the 21st ult. Between the 15th and 20th four shocks, but not of much violence, were experienced at Mitylene.

There is now exhibiting at Valencia (Spain), a child fourteen months old, half of whose body is black and half white, covered with extraordinary marks. Its legs are deformed; one of its arms is nearly in the natural state, but the other is like that of a monkey.

Blackberries are very abundant this year. The editor of the Liverpool Times says the wife and children of a labourer on his farm collected as many as sold for seven or eight pounds in the Manchester market.

Six marriages were solemnised at Preston on Sunday week, and out of the twelve newly-married persons only one could write his name. Of the twelve witnesses to the ceremony not one could write. Thus, of twenty-four whose signatures should be in the register, twenty three had to affix marks!

The Second Chamber of the States of Baden came to a resolution, in the sitting of the 9th, to send an address to the Grand Duke, inviting him to open negotiations with the Germanic Diet, for the speedy suppression of lotteries and gambling of every kind, in all the States of the Confederation.

Prince Louis Napoleon landed on Saturday at Ostend, from London, and went to the Hôtel des Bains, where he was to wait for the necessary passports to enable him to proceed to Florence to take possession of the property bequeathed to him by his father.

Bordeaux was visited by a violent storm during the night of the 9th. The rain fell in such torrents, that for more than an hour the streets were perfectly impassable. At Lajarre, near Saintes, the lightning struck the malle-poste and overturned it. The courier had both his arms broken by the fall. The horses released themselves from their harness and ran off.

The railroad between the Volga and the Don, on which the carriages are drawn by horses, was opened on the 7th ult.

A very numerous meeting of the partisans of free trade took place at Marseilles on the 11th. It was resolved that an association shall be formed having for its object "to promote by all legal means the reform of the tariffs of customs, the suppression of all restriction on foreign or home trade, and the progressive modification of the prohibitive and protective laws up to their total abolition." Before the meeting separated, a provisional committee, consisting of some of the most eminent merchants, with M. Luce, the President of the Chamber of Commerce, as their President, was appointed

A haddock was captured off Whitehaven, last week, in the belly of which was found a considerable part of a joiner's two-foot rule.

Another, but very slight, shock of earthquake was experienced at Pisa on the 1st inst.

Our Lisbon letters of the 10th inst., state that Miguelite movements, countenanced by the Cabral press and partisans of the late Government, had taken place in various directions in the northern provinces. The Count das Antas, in command of the troops in the northern provinces, had taken active measures against the insurgents. These appeared only in guerilla parties, and in several places they were attacked and defeated by the people, where the popular leaders had been placed or left in office. Quiet had been restored, but whether permanently or not, seems somewhat doubtful.

Serious fears are entertained at Hamburg for the situation of the poorer classes. Provisions are excessively dear, and work is scarce. Commerce and navigation are stagnant. The money market is in a critical state.

A toast proposed by the President of the Board of Trade at a dinner given at Dusseldorf, in honour of the President of the Chamber of Commerce of Berlin, has caused great sensation. The toast was to "Commercial freedom and independence." The baneful influence of protective duties was the subject of conversation.

Amsterdam is suffering from a dreadful mortality. All the hospitals are quite full, having together upwards of 1500 patients, and it has become necessary to convert the Palace of Justice into wards for the sick.

During the week ending on the 13th inst., the number of persons passing between England and France, was—At Boulogne, 2864; at Calais, 594; total, 3458.

We have to announce the death of one of the oldest servants attached to the Palace of Fontainebleau—viz., Aly, a Circassian by birth, whom Napoleon brought from Egypt and placed among his mamelukes. He was afterwards taken into the service of the Empress Josephine, and in 1805 sent to Fontainebleau as garçon d'appartemens, a position he preserved till his death

The Journal des Chemins de Fer states, on the authority of private correspondence from the East, that the Turkish Divan is at present occupied with the question of establishing railroads in Turkey. Two contracts have been tendered for the grant of the line from Constantinople to Belgrade

The schooner Express, of Glasgow, was lost off the west end of Tory Island, on the Coast of Ireland, early on the morning of Tuesday, the 8th instant, and all hands perished. Four bodies have been washed ashore. She was laden with sulphur, Spanish nuts, and some bales of damask muslins have been drifted ashore, and is supposed to have been from a Spanish port. She has become a total wreck.

The whole of the buildings, tools, and materials for working the silver mines of Sala, about 20 leagues N.W. of Stockholm, were destroyed by fire in the night of the 26th ult., causing a loss estimated at 3,000,000f. and putting 2000 men out of employ.

It is a remarkable fact, that, whilst we hear of the potato disease in every other part of the world, in the Shetland Islands, the poorest of soils, the Ultima Thule of Britain, it is unknown.

A ship named the Vernon, just arrived in the river from Archangel, Russia, had on board, in addition to 15 barrels of tongues, and a variety of other productions, the large quantity of 704 tierces and 48 barrels of beef

At all the theatres of Paris a number of men are regularly engaged by the management to applaud all the pieces performed, and all the actors and actresses. From a process before one of the Law Courts the other day it appears that at the Theatre de l'Ambigu-Comique (one of the minor theatres of the Boulevards, a regular mercantile company was formed for the purpose of carrying on the applauding business The rage for companies is certainly great now-a-days, but it was hardly to be expected that the claque of a theatre would be put into a company, and divided into shares.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION SOUTHAMPTON

In our Journal of last week, we chronicled the proceedings of this "Parliament of Science," to Wednesday evening, reserving for our present Number, the report of the Meeting during the remainder of the Week, to accompany the Illustrations of the entire proceedings in the present sheet. We shall now return to our narrative, chiefly condensed from the admirable report in the Daily News, and interspersed, commencing on THURSDAY.

The Sectional Meetings, which may be regarded as the chief business of the gathering, so far as the objects of the Association are concerned, commenced this morning. The Sections were seven in number, arranged as follows.

Section A, Mathematical and Physcal Science.—Presided over by Sir John F. W. Herschel, Bart., F.R.S.; the Secretaries being Dr. Stevelly and Messrs. Stokes and Drew. Sec. B, Chemical Science, including its application to Agriculture and the Arts.—President, Michael Faraday, LL.D., F.R.S.; Secretaries, Dr. Miller, and Messrs. Hunt and Randall. Sec. C, Geology and Physical Geography.—President, Leonard Horner, Esq., Vice-President for Geography, G. B. Greenough, Esq.; Secretaries, Professor Oldham, Dr. Norton, Dr. Beke, and Mr. Austen. Sec. D, Zoology and Botany.—President, Sir John Richardson, M.D., F.R.S., Secretaries, Dr. Lankester, and Messrs. Wollaston and Woolridge. Sec. E, Physiology.—President, Professor Owen, F.R.S.; Secretaries, Dr. Sargent, Dr. Laycock, and Mr. Keele. Sec. F, Statistics.—President, G. R. Porter, Esq.; Secretary, Rev. J. L. Shupcott. Sec. G, Mechanics.—President, the Rev. Professor Willis, F.R.S.; Secretaries, Messrs. Manby and Betts. Section A holds its meetings at the Assembly Rooms; B, at the Polytechnic Institution; C, D, and F, at the Victoria Rooms; E, at the Bugle Hall; and G, at a room in the High-street. All the Sections except G sat to-day.

PROFESSOR WARTMANN. R. LANING, ESQ. COLONEL SABINE. PROFESSOR OERSTED. SIR J. F. W. HERSCHEL, BART., F.R.S. DR. WHEWELL, F.R.S. PROF. WHEATSTONE, F.R.S. PROF. SVANBERG. DR. SCORESBY. DR. STEVELLY.

MATHEMATICAL SECTION.

The papers read in Section A were—"A Report on Gauss's Magnetic Constants," by Professor Erman; "On the Bands Formed by Partial Interception of the Prismatic Spectrum," by Professor Powell; "On the Constitution and Forces of the Molecules of Matter," by Mr. R. Laming; "On the Variation of the Magnetic Needle," by J. G. Hurtley; and a paper "On Magnetic Causation and Intrinsic Forces," by G. Towler.

In Section B the papers were—"On the Chemical Action of Water, in the Suburbs of Southampton, on Lead, in Solving the Metal, and Holding it in Solution, to the Detriment of Health," by Mr. H. Osborne; "A Report on the Actinograph, and Notices of the Progress of Experiments on the Influence of Light on the Growth of Plants," by R. Hunt.

In Section C, the first paper read was by R. Keele, Esq., "On the Artesian Well on the Southampton Common." This paper appeared to be the main point of interest, and Section C was consequently more fully attended than any of the others. A discussion arose as to the probability of the well yielding the expected supply of water, in the course of which Professor Hopkins explained

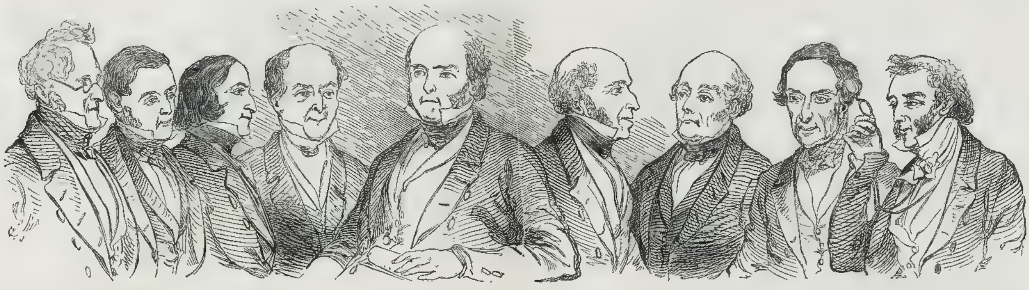
J. PRIDEAUX, ESQ. PROFESSOR SCHÖNBEIN. DR. DAUBENY, F.R.S. DR. FARADAY. PROFESSOR ROSE. PROFESSOR GROVE. DR. L. PLAYFAIR.

CHEMICAL SECTION.

DR. W. CARPENTER. PROFESSOR OWEN. DR. FOWLER. VISCOUNT PALMERSTON. JOHN TAYLOR, F.R.S. SIR HERCULES PAKENHAM. THE BISHOP OF NORWICH.

SECTION—PHYSIOLOGY—VISITORS, &c.

MEETING OF THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION, AT SOUTHAMPTON.



SIR HENRY DE LA BECHE. PROFESSOR ANSTED. PROFESSOR FORBES. DR. FITTON. LEONARD HORNER, ESQ. JOHN PHILLIPS, ESQ. G. B. GREENOUGH, ESQ. W. HOPKINS, ESQ. MARQUIS OF NORTHAMPTON.

GEOLOGICAL SECTION.

that theory was against the success of the experiment. The artesian well at Paris entered the chalk in the centre of a sort of basin formed by the strata where the water would be in the greatest abundance at all times; and at a place where, as far as was known, there had been no dislocation; whereas the surface of the chalk formation at Southampton dipped to the sea gradually, and ran abruptly on the other side at the Isle of Wight, where there had evidently been a considerable dislocation. Some of the subscribers complained that, according to the Professor's statement, they had been induced to throw away their money in an experiment which could not be successful; but the Professor advised the continuance of the work, as it was possible that in practice the experiment might succeed. The other papers in this Section were—"On the Origin of the Coal in the Silesian Coal-fields," by Professor Goeppert, of Breslau, communicated by Sir R I. Murchison; and a "Report on the Microscopic Structure of Shells," by W. Carpenter, M.D., F.R.S.

ALUM BAY, ISLE OF WIGHT.—THE GEOLOGISTS LANDING.

BLACK GANG CHINE.—DR. FITTON'S LECTURE ON ITS GEOLOGY.

The papers read in Section D were: "Additions to a Synopsis of the Classification of the Genera of British Birds," by John Hogg, Esq., F.L.S.; "List of Periodical Birds at Llanrwst," by J. Blackwall, Esq.; "Notice of New Species of Marine Animals found on the coast of Northumberland," by W. King, Esq.; "On the Homologies of the Vertebræ, and on the Temporal Bone," by Professor Owen; "On New British Nudibranchiate Mollusca," by J. Alder, Esq.; "On the Pulmograde Medusæ of the British Seas, with Notices of the Medusæ at present abundant in Southampton Water," by Professor Forbes. In Section E, a paper "On the Cause of the Blood's Circulation through the Liver," by Dr. Searle; and another "On the Sense of Touch, in reference to the higher mental processes of the Blind and Deaf:" this paper was a sequel to a previous one on the 6th, on "Muscular Sense," by Dr. Fowler. In Section F, an interesting report was produced from Dr. Alison, of Edinburgh, "On the Medical Relief to the Parochial Poor of Scotland under the old law." Dr. Alison stated that the result of the relief, as formerly administered, was a proof of the inefficiency of the voluntary system.

THE PRESIDENT'S GEOLOGICAL LECTURE ON BOARD THE "DE SAUMAREZ" STEAMER, WHITECLIFF BAY, ISLE OF WIGHT.

GENERAL MEETING

The first General Meeting of theSociety was held in the evening, in the Victoria Assembly Room, which was brilliantly illuminated, and filled by about 400 ladies and gentlemen. Prince Albert, who left Cowes in the Fairy at seven o'clock, and was received on his arrival at Southampton by the Mayor, Mr. Joseph Lobb, and Captain Ellice, did not reach the Assembly Room until half-past eight o'clock —half an hour after the appointed time the delay having been occasioned by a fog, which prevented the steamer from proceeding with her accustomed velocit On his Royal Highness being conducted to the platform which was erected for the Committee and distinguished visitors, he was warmly cheered by the entire company, who rose and remained standing for some minutes, until his Royal Highness, after shaking hands with several of the gentlemen on the platform, had taken the seat thereon assigned to him. Amongst the distinguished persons present were the Marquis of Northampton, the Marquis of Winchester, Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston, the Speaker of the House of Commons, the Bishop of Norwich, the Dean of Westminster, Sir Hercules Pakenham, Sir J. Ross, Colonel Sabine, Professors Phillips and Owen, and Mr. M. Milnes, M.P.

Sir John F. W. Herschel, F.R.S., then rose and addressed his Royal Highness Prince Albert and the meeting, first congratulating them "on a presence which, gives a dignity and a sanction to the proceedings, such as at no former occasion the Society could boast of. (Applause.) For the honour thus conferred upon us we must feel profoundly gratified, for it is a recognition in the highest quarter of the glorious cause in which we are embarked, which cannot fail to stimulate our best exertions for the future, in a cause in which the glory of the country and the prosperity of every person in it, from her Majesty herself down to the lowest of her subjects, is involved." Sir John then referred to his association with Southampton in his younger days, a recognition which was received with loud cheers. The learned Baronet then congratulated the meeting on great and important changes in the town—its start in commerce, and great development of its resources; the speaker adding his belief that Southampton is now in progress of resuming that position in the maritime history of the country which it once occupied. "It is already one of the great links of communication between England and her distant Indian empire. Not one of the least important advantages of this Society is that it brings us in constant contact with that great phenomenon, the immensity of our national progress. Go where you will the activity now prevailing in the onward progress of England is impressed upon us, and every year we find it placed more and more under the guidance of that science which it is our office and design to promote and advance, and to which the meetings of this Society in various parts of the country have greatly contributed." The other leading points of Sir John's address were the acknowledgment of the liberality of our own and foreign Governments to the Association; after which, Sir John Herschel retired from the chair, which was taken by Sir R. Murchison, who, in a few moments, rose, and, after complimenting the late President for his distinguished abilities and efficient services, delivered a most luminous address, which we regret we have not room to report further than by a few passages. The distinguished President commenced by observing:

> Ladies and Gentlemen,—After fifteen years of migration to various cities and towns in the United Kingdom, you are for the first time assembled in the South-Eastern districts of England, at the solicitation of the authorities and inhabitants of Southampton. Easily accessible on all sides to the cultivators of science, this beautiful and flourishing sea-port is situated in a district so richly adorned by nature—so full of objects for scientific contemplation—that, supported as we are by new friends in England, and by old friends from the farthest regions of Europe, we shall indeed be wanting to ourselves, if our proceedings on this occasion should not sustain the high character which the British Association has hitherto maintained.

Sir Roderick then referred to his having made his first essay as a geologist in the county of Hants; and then proceeded to state more particularly the recent progress and present state of natural history, the department of knowledge with which his own pursuits have been most connected; whilst he also incidentally adverted to some of the proceedings which were likely to occupy attention during the meeting. We detach a few passages:

> I must not omit to notice the grant obtained from our gracious Sovereign, of the Royal Observatory at Kew, which, previously dismantled of its astronomical instruments, has been converted by us into a station for observations purely physical, and especially for those details of atmospheric phenomena which are so minute and numerous, and require such unremitting attention, that they imperiously call for separate establishments In realising this principle, we can now refer British and foreign philosophers to the Observatory of the British Association at Kew, where I have the authority of most adequate judges for saying they will find that a great amount of electrical and meteorological observation has been made, and a systematic inquiry into the intricate subject of atmospheric electricity carried out, by Mr Ronalds, under the suggestions of Professor Wheatstone, to which no higher praise can be given than that it has, in fact, furnished the model of the processes conducted at the Royal Observatory of Greenwich.

* * * * * * * * *

> Among the many useful national objects which have been promoted by the physical researches of the British Association, there is one which calls for marked notice at this time, in the proposal of Mr. Robert Stephenson to carry an iron tube or suspended tunnel over the Menai Straits to sustain the great railway to Holyhead. This bold proposal could never have been realised, if that eminent engineer had not been acquainted with the great progress recently made in the knowledge of the strength of materials, and specially of iron; such knowledge being in great measure due to investigations in which the Association has taken and is still taking a conspicuous share, by the devotion of its friends and the employment of its influence—investigations which have been prosecuted with great zeal and success by its valued members, Mr. Hodgkinson and Mr. Fairbairn.
>
> Whilst on this topic I may observe, that in the recent improvements in railways the aid of scientific investigation was called for by the civil engineer, to assist him in determining with accuracy the power to be provided for attaining the high velocities of fifty and sixty miles an hour, and it was found and admitted by the first engineers, that the very best data for this purpose, and indeed the only experiments of any practical value, were those which had been provided for some years ago by a Committee of the British Association, and published in our Transactions. The Institution of Civil Engineers thus gave testimony to the practical value of our researches by adopting their results

* * * * * * * * *

> Professor Bunsen and Dr Lyon Playfair, at the request of the Association, have produced a report on the conditions and products of iron-furnaces, which is of the greatest value in a commercial view to one of the most important of our manufactures; and possesses, at the same time, a very high interest to chemical science in some of the views which it develops. On the one hand, it exhibits an entirely new theory of the reduction, by cyanogen gas as the chief agent, of iron from the ore; on the other, it shows that, in addition to a vast saving of fuel, about two cwt. of sal-ammoniac may daily be collected at the single establishment of Alfreton, where the experiments were made; thus leading us to infer that in the iron furnaces of Britain there may be obtained from vapour which now passes away, an enormous quantity of this valuable substance, which would materially lessen the dependence of our agriculturists on foreign guano. In pursuing this inquiry into the gaseous contents of a blazing furnace of great height, our associates traced out, foot by foot the most recondite chemical processes, and described the fiery products with the same accuracy as if their researches had been made on the table of a laboratory. * * * * *
>
> Let me express the obligation which geologists are under to this Association, for having aided so effectively in bringing forth the zoological researches of Owen, Agassiz and Edward Forbes. These three distinguished men have themselves announced, that in default of its countenance and assistance, they would not have undertaken, and never could have completed, some of their most important inquiries. Agassiz, for example, had not otherwise, the means of comparing the ichthyolites of the British Isles with those of the Continent of Europe. Without this impulse, Owen would not have applied his profound knowledge of comparative anatomy to British fossil saurians; and Edward Forbes might never have been the explorer of the depths of the Ægean, nor have revealed many hitherto unknown laws of submarine life, if his wishes and suggestions had not met with the warm support of this body, and been supported by its strongest recommendations to the naval authorities.

* * * * * * * * *

> If the astronomer has, to a vast extent, expounded the mechanism of the heavens; if lately, through the great telescope of our associate the Earl of Rosse, he has assigned a fixity and order to bodies which were previously viewed as mere nebulæ floating in space, and has also inferred that the surface cavities in our nearest neighbour of the planetary system are analagous to the volcanic apertures and depressions of the earth; the geologist, contributing data of another order to the great storehouse of natural knowledge, has determined, by absolute and tangible proofs, the precise manner in which our planet has been successively enveloped in diverse cerements, each teeming with peculiar forms of distinct life, and has marked the revolutions which have interfered with these successive creations, from the earliest dawn of living things to the limits of the historic era. In short, the fundamental steps gained in geology, since the early days of the British Association, are so remarkable and so numerous, that the time has now come for a second report upon the progress of this science, which may I trust be prepared for an approaching, if not for the next meeting
>
> Intimately connected with these broad views of the progress of geology is the appearance of the first volume of a national work by Sir Henry De la Beche and his associates in the "Geological Survey of Great Britain." Following, as it does, upon the issue of numerous detailed coloured maps and sections, which, for beauty of execution and exactness of detail, are unrivalled, I would specially direct your attention to this new volume, as affording the clearest evidence that geology is now strictly brought within the pale of the fixed sciences. In it are found graphic descriptions of the strata in the south-west of England and South Wales, whose breadth and length are accurately measured, whose mineral changes are chemically analysed, and whose imbedded remains are compared and determined by competent palæontologists. The very statistics of the science are thus laid open, theory is made [illegible] rously to depend on facts, and the processes and produce of foreign mines are compared with those of Britain. * * * * * * *
>
> Much indeed still remains to be done in Britain, to place the study of physical geography on a basis worthy of this great exploring and colonising nation; and, as one of the highly useful elementary aids to the training of the youthful mind to acquire a right perception of the science, I commend the spirited project of a French geographer, M. Guerin, to establish in London, a georama of vast size which shall teach by strong external relief, the objects and details of which he will, in the course of this week, explain to the geographers present.

* * * * * * * * *

> I would remind our agricultural members, that as their great practical Society was founded on the model of the British Association, we hope they will always come to our Sections for the solution of any questions relating to their pursuits to which can be given a purely scientific answer. If they ask for the explanation of the dependence of vegetation upon subsoil or soil, our geologists and botanists are ready to reply to them. Is it a query on the comparison of the relative value of instruments destined to economise labour, the mechanicians now present are capable of answering it. And if, above all, they ask us to solve their doubts respecting the qualities of soils and the results of their mixtures, or the effects of various manures up[illegible] them, our chemists are at hand. One department of our Institution is in fact styled the [illegible] of Chemistry and Mineralogy, with their applications to Agriculture and the Arts, and is officered in part by the very men, Johnston, Daubeny, and Playfair, to whom the agriculturists have in nearly all cases appealed. * * * * *
>
> [illegible] which our assembling at Southampton gives peculiar interest. I may st[illegible] say that [illegible] English geologists should find much to interest them in the Isle of Wight, the same island contains a field for a very curious joint discussion between th[illegible] maticians and the geologists, with which I became acquainted in a previous visit to th[illegible] It is a discovery by Colonel Colby, the Director of the Trigonometrical Survey [illegible] a considerable attraction of the plumb-line to the south, at the trig[illegible] [illegible]d Dunnose, on Shanklin Down. The details of this singular phenomenon, which has been [illegible]ed by numerous observations with the best zenith sectors, will be laid before the Sec[illegible] In the meantime, we may well wonder that this low chalk range in the Isle of Wight should attract, in one parallel at least, with more than half the intensity of the high and c[illegible] talline mountain of Schehallion in the Highlands of Scotland whilst no other chalk hill in t[illegible] South of England exhibits such a phenomenon. Can those of our associates who, like Mr. [illegible] a rich field of geological dynamics, explain this remarkable fact, [illegible] ecture and distribution of the ridge of upheaved strata which runs [illegible] to west through the island or by referring it to dense [illegible] along the line of displacement of the [illegible]
>
> [illegible] other local subject—one, indeed, of positive practical interest that stands [illegible] discussion is, whether, by persevering in deepening the large shaft which they have sunk deep into the chalk near this town, the inhabitants of Southampton may expect to be even[illegible] [illegible]d like those of Paris, by a full supply of sub[illegible]an water, which shall rise to t[illegible] of the low plateau on which the w[illegible] has been undertaken? On no occasion, I must observe, could this town be furnished with a greater number of willing counsellors of divers nations, whose opinions will, it is hoped, be adequately valued by the city authorities The question whether this work ought to be proceeded with or not, will, however, I apprehend, be most effectively answered by those geologists who are best acquainted with the sections in the interior of this county, and with the levels at which the upper greensand and subcretaceous strata there crop out and receive the waters, which thence flow southwards beneath the whole body of chalk of the hills in the south of Hampshire

ELTON, ESQ., (AMERICA.) DR. COOKE TAYLOR. G. R. PORTER, ESQ. COL. SYKES, JAMES HEYWOOD, ESQ. MAYOR OF SOUTHAMPTON.

STATISTICAL SECTION.—VISITORS.

Sir Roderick congratulated the meeting, very felicitously, on the full attendance of foreign Professors; adding—

> It is utterly impossible that such gatherings together of foreign philosophers with our own should not be productive of much advantage; for he must indeed be a bad statist in science who knows not that numerous are the works of merit which are published in periodicals, or in the volumes of societies of one country, which remain altogether unknown in another; and still less can he be acquainted with the present accelerated march of science, who is not aware that the germs of discovery which are lying ready in the minds of distant contemporaries must often be brought into action by such an interchange of thought. The collision of such thoughts may indeed be compared to the agency of the electric telegraph of our Wheatstone, which concentrates knowledge from afar, and at once unites the extremities of kingdoms in a common circle of intelligence.

The President concluded his address amidst the general applause of the meeting.

Viscount Palmerston, in an eloquent address, then proposed a vote of thanks to the President.

The Marquis of Northampton having seconded the vote, it was unanimously agreed to.

Sir R. J. Murchison, in returning thanks, announced that Prince Albert had not only consented to be present that evening, but had signified his intention of actively participating in the pursuits of the Association by attending some of the Sections. (Applause.)

The meeting then, shortly before eleven o'clock, terminated. Prince Albert remained for some minutes on the platform, conversing with Professor Oërsted and other distinguished scientific men. Some of the new gun-cotton was exhibited to his Royal Highness. He then proceeded to the Fairy, and crossed the water for Osborne House immediately. The utmost attention and respect were paid to him by the Mayor and authorities of the town.

FRIDAY.

The Sections were much better attended this morning. We can, however, only notice the papers of more popular interest.

In Section C, Dr. Daubeny, in a paper "On the Rationale of certain processes employed in Agriculture," detailed the principles on which dressing land with quick lime differed from chalking, by disengaging the alkalies from the materials of the primitive rocks, including also the volcanic, and thus furnishing what is wanting to vegetation in argillaceous soils, which the application of chalk does not produce; of course, this is not applicable to calcareous soils. Gypsum also furnishes the means of eliminating the dormant principles of soils; but, of necessity, all who intend to determine the applicability of particular agents to restore activity to a soil apparently worn out, must attend to the chymical analysis of that soil.—Mr. Prideaux stated some experiments on the Dartmoor granite, treated on this principle, by which they had facilities on the spot for producing abundance of alkali. He remarked that the roots of plants generally were acid, and hence he inferred the necessity of alkaline earth for their growth. Some plants were benefitted by soda, but most by potash; they, of course, flourish most with the particular alkali which suited them. With respect to one observation of Dr. Daubeny, that gypsum appeared to be most beneficial to leguminous plants, he thought that it would be proved to be a fact, that, applied to the leaves of plants, it became converted into carbonate of lime: some parts of plants were acid, and others alkaline; and the object in view with chemists was to supply, either to the plant or its roots, what it required for its development.—The question was asked, if, by high manuring—the growth of wheat, for example, was rank and luxuriant—the stalk was invariably weak, and it was sure to be laid, how could the stalk be strengthened?—Mr. Prideaux replied that the best mode he knew of stiffening the stem was by furnishing the plant with silicate of potash.—Mr. Spooner spoke of the use of supersulphate of lime and other salts, and of the errors of agriculturists in using at hazard lime or chalk or other ingredients, which frequently failed from misapplication; and he introduced some diseased turnips as, in his opinion, the result of something wrong in the soil. The Bishop of Norwich said, probably it would turn out that the diseased turnips introduced rather an entomological than a chemical question, and depending on electrical causes, which might also be the case with the potato disease.—Professor Daubeny replied that he thought the weak acid of roots, such as the acetic, not to be compared with the sulphuric or strong acids, advised by him to bring the dormant ingredients of soils into activity.

Professor Grove then read a very lucid paper on the decomposition of water by heat only, which led to a long discussion on this principle, as explaining the case of the bursting of boilers of steam-engines, but which he considered inapplicable (as did the chairman).—Professor Playfair suspected that some chemical change in the constitution of the water took place, which the Professor strongly combated.—Dr. Leeson drew attention to the subject of steam-boilers, which he thought favoured the non-decomposition principle, as he had observed no evidence of the oxydation of the metal of the fractured part (as we understood). It was generally considered to depend more on spheroidal repulsion of bodies.—Professor Faraday appeared to concur in this view.

In the Statistical Section, the only paper read was by Mr. Heywood, "On Oxford Educational Statistics." It detailed the general course of the system pursued in Oxford, comparing it with Cambridge in various particulars. It stated that the number of students at Oxford was rather diminishing of late years.—Dr. Cooke Taylor added a brief account of the course pursued at Trinity College, Dublin, remarking upon the viva voce examination of students there on entering—a system which often produced some odd answers. On one occasion, the Rev. John Martin was examining a class in hydrostatics, and asked a student who was not very popular, "Mr. Spencer, what would be the consequence if I thrust you into a pond?" the examiner's object being to test the student's knowledge of the law, that water rises in proportion to the weight of the body immersed. The student, not being able to give a solution of the question, another was put to his neighbour Mr. Plunket, "What would be the consequence if I thrust Mr. Spencer into a pond?" "'Pon my word, Sir," was the reply, "I think it would be of very little consequence." Another student being examined on Locke, where he speaks of our relations to the Deity as those which we most neglect, was asked what relations were most neglected; the youth answered very coolly, "Poor relations"

After a laugh at these anecdotes, a long conversation ensued on the subject of the system of education pursued in the French and American universities. In the latter, the chief feature noticed was their insisting less than our own on the study of the dead languages. Great praise was awarded to the French schools for their teaching so universally the art of drawing and design.—Dr. Cooke Taylor attributed much of the superiority of the French in this art to the time they were able to spare in consequence of the simplicity of their decimal system, while our own barbarous and complicated method of arithmetic and weights and measures consumed so much time unnecessarily.

In the Mechanical Section, the most attractive paper was "On a New Method of Boring for Artesian Wells," communicated to the Association by M. Arago, and read by Mr. C. Vignoles. It was accompanied by a diagram. It appears that an intelligent artisan at Perpignan, in France, named Fauvelle, was led to the discovery by noticing that, in several cases of success in boring for water with solid iron rods, so soon as the spring was tapped, all the triturated particles were brought up without the use of the auger. He inferred, therefore, that if the boring could be effected by a hollow tube about two inches less in diameter than the width of the auger, communicating with any injecting force-pump by a flexible tube from the surface, the same result would follow to this mechanical application of power, as resulted from the natural power of the rising column of water. Being a poor man, it was a long time before he could get any interest taken in his invention. At last, the fellow-workmen clubbed together for the materials, and assisted him with their labour. Success attended the first experiment. He competed with the old system in one or two places, and produced the most successful results in half the time ever accomplished before. The principle became so established, that Fauvel has now orders for, and in hand, 200 Artesian wells. Mr. Vignoles has not himself seen these, but he was assured that one of twenty-four inches diameter had been completed, and one of six inches diameter had been carried a depth of 540 feet. This paper was listened to with great attention, the subject being so important to the town of Southampton.

THE EVENING MEETING

was well attended by members to hear Professor Owen discourse on the fossil mammalia of the British islands. The earliest formation (he said) in which the remains of mammalian quadrupeds were found was the oolitic; here were little insectiverous quadrupeds, warm-blooded and quick-breathing; and the corresponding animals were to be found now in Australia, nearly at our antipodes. The various formations and deposits above the oolitic were then described; and the discourse was occupied with one of these, in which were to be seen a number of great fresh-water deposits, showing that at one period we had a series of mammalian forms very considerably surpassing anything we have now. For instance, a species of elephant nearly double the size of the largest elephant of Ceylon, a rhinoceros with two horns, a hippopotamus quite as large as that of Africa, and a deer with antlers whose extreme points were sometimes nine or ten feet from each other. We had, in the period in question, a large species of reindeer and a little roebuck. We had three species of wild ox, one a bison or bonassus of enormous structure, another with horns a yard or a yard and a half long, and a third with very short horns. There was evidence that all these had continued to exist in Europe within the historical period, and some of our ancient stories of battles with dun cows might have reference to these. There was also a feline animal of equal size with any lion or tiger, but with canine teeth of the most destructive form. There were the remains of bears surpassing in size the great grisly bear of the Rocky Mountains of North America; a species of hyena was also found in caverns. In considering the question how these quadrupeds came to this island, geologists had arrived at the conviction that the separation between England and the continent had been a comparatively recent affair, compared at least with the period when so enormous a mammalian class existed in this island. These could not be the remains of animals brought here from tropical climes by some great torrent; that notion was contradicted by their enormous numbers, the integrity of their bones, the wearing away of the floor of the caves they inhabited, the crushed bones and teeth of heedless young creatures dragged into these caves, and other like reasons; there were hundreds of antlers, not water-worn, and which must have been shed by living deer. There were many signs of the former union of England and France; England once had bears and wolves like France, and the bones of the extinct animals in both countries agreed.

Sir R. Murchison, the President, at the conclusion of the Professor's discourse, expressed a hope that the meeting would be favoured with the opinion of Dr. Buckland, the great wizard of the caves, the necromancer of all animals. The Dean of Westminster (Dr. Buckland,) objected to the discussion of points of difference before an inexperienced and unlearned audience. He would rather refer to the confirmation now given to what he stated 25 years ago, and for which he was then deemed almost an audacious liar. (A laugh):—that there were British Elephants (more in that very county than the members of the British Association), and rhinoceroses, and hippopotami, the aboriginal inhabitants of this country—the predecessors of landowners and farmers (laughter): these, to use a fashionable phrase, were "great facts." (A laugh.) But how did these strange gentlemen find their way into this now civilised and happy country? Whence came the bears and hyenas of the caves of Yorkshire, whose gambols had polished the sedilia upon which they amused themselves with disporting? On that point geologists differed wide as the antipodes. But, looking at the extremely insignificant depth of the Channel which divided us from the Continent—the greatest depth between Dover and Calais being only the height of the tower of Magdalen College, Oxford—the slightest disruption might have made that difference in depth. In that slight trough of the sea there might have been dry sands. At all events, the animals in question must have lived and died here. Mr. Lyell remarked that, not only was this planet inhabited for ages by a succession of plants and animals, now extinct, before man came upon the stage; but that, even of those species now contemporary with man, a great number existed for ages before the era when we had reason to suppose that the human race began. Mr. Bullar suggested that a part of the audience might find it wise to apply to this subject Paley's counsel, not to suffer what we do know to be disturbed by what we do not. Sir R. Murchison observed that Professor Forchammer had promised the Society a paper on sea-water currents, and perhaps he would open the Straits of Dover question. What he would pronounce upon it could at present only be conjectured; "but," added Sir Roderick, "I have heard say there is a tradition, that there was a Prince of his country with whom a Queen of England fell in love, and that this Danish Prince being refused to her in marriage, she cut a trench which separated this country from the Continent." (Laughter.)

SATURDAY.

The Sectional proceedings of this day appear to have been rather "a divided duty," owing to the out-door attractions for the members. For example, the Botanical Section, accompanied by several of the foreign visitors attending the meeting, visited the gardens of the Dean of Winchester, at Bishopstoke, in the morning, and enjoyed the Very Reverend Doctor's hospitality.

We may here refer to the number of speculations broached in this Section, on the Potato Murrain. Some attributed the disease to the rupture of the vessel, occasioned by frost or sudden growth; and, after a long discussion between Dr. Buckland, Dr. Daubeny, Professor Playfair, and others, on the question whether atmospheric influence or a peculiar miasma could be the cause, Dr. Buckland said, the only remedy he knew was the following: The instant the extremity of the leaf is attacked, mow down the whole to the ground, and burn it, to give the tuber a chance of escape. Leave the tubers in the ground till the first dry days of August, then take them up, pick out the infected, and pack the rest in dry straw, not touching one another. A member suggested that the stalk should be pulled up, and not merely mowed; the disease existed very low down. So much doubt had been thrown upon every theory by the time Mr. Solly spoke, that his remark was very generally cheered.

In the Statistical Section, this day, a paper was read by Mr. Wriggleworth, on the mortality of children, in which the principal facts elicited were, that of 10,076 children born, 2397 died under the age of 21, nearly one-half of the deaths occurring under the age of one year. Contagious, epidemic, endemic, and diseases of the nervous system and respiratory organs, were the most fatal to children. The paper also stated that, in 1206 cases of which returns had been obtained, in 618 the first child was a son, and in 588 it was a daughter

The next paper was a table by Mr. Howard on the extent of the plate glass manufacture, in which it was stated that the great demand for the article had hitherto deprived the public of the benefit of the reduction of the duty. At present, the home manufacture could not keep pace with the demand, but, it was probable that it would soon be enabled to do so, and that, instead of importers, we should become exporters.

Some returns were then read by Lieutenant-Colonel Sykes, F.R.S., in reference to the administration of civil and criminal justice in India, the purpose of which was so show the result of the change by which, fifteen years ago, natives were first allowed to sit as judges. About 98 per cent. of the judicial duty was now performed by natives. The pleaders were also natives, and the pleadings were carried on in the native language. There were fewer appeals from the decisions of the native than of the English judges. The cause of the advancement was the improved state of education and knowledge in the country. The proceedings concluded with the reading of a report of the Committee on the statistics of sickness and mortality in Yorkshire, in which it was shown that in ten per cent. of the deaths in that county, the parties had no medical attendance.

THE GEOLOGICAL EXCURSION.

The great event of Saturday, however, was the Geological Excursion round the Isle of Wight. A large party embarked on board the Lady de Saumarez steam-packet: amongst the first on board were Sir Roderick Murchison; Sir John Herschel; Sir Henry J. De la Beche; Dr. Robinson, of Armagh; Captain Ibbotson; Dr. Hoyle; and Mr. Prestwich; and, by the time of starting (half-past seven), there were present between 200 and 300 geologists, professors and amateurs, most of them armed with hammers and chisels, and provided with huge wallets. The course steered was, after leaving the Southampton water, to the eastward, by Spithead, and so past Ryde, Bonchurch, St. Catherine's Point, and the Needles, returning through the Solent. As the vessel neared Sandown Bay, and afterwards proceeded along to Yarmouth, Sir R. Murchison, Mr. Prestwich, and Captain Ibbotson alternately explained the various strata and peculiar formation of this romantic coast. The substance of these explanations, which were rendered, if possible, still more clear by the exhibition of a geological map by Mr. Knipe, the correctness of which was generally admitted, is as follows

> Spithead forms the trough of the basin between the Isle of Wight and Hampshire; the chalk forming the base on which is deposited the plastic sands and clays, the London clay; and, on the north side of the island, a still more recent deposit, viz., the fresh water, on which is situated the house and grounds of her Majesty at Osborne. The chalk of the Foreland, with the clays and sands, are well defined, and from beneath them appear, towards Sandown Bay, the upper green sand, the gault, and the lower green sand, but thinning off towards the centre of the bay, where the wealden formation is laid bare, and forms the axes of the island These various strata are again repeated further along the coast. The undercliff or terraces are formed of rock, which has been broken away from the parent rock by the undermining of the base hence arise the wild, romantic aspect and irregularity of the district on which the new town of Ventnor is built The whole of this part of the southern coast is strewed with the debris of all the formations superior to the wealden, in large and rugged masses. Beyond this there are excellent sections of the beds of green sand, gault, &c., until the wealden again presents itself in Brixton Bay. The superior strata again succeed each other, until the [illegible] stone re-appears, continuing onward to the Needles, and rising perpendicular to six or seven hundred feet. At Alum Bay, from a mighty convulsion of nature, the strata assume a complete vertical position—the chalk, with all the variegated beds of sand and clays of the tertiary formation. This convulsion is very local, the strata again assuming their proper position beneath Meadow-hill.

At Black Gang Chine, the geologists, headed by the President, debarked, and, scattering themselves in various directions, commenced their searches. The main body soon espied Dr. Buckland, who was found in the Chine, walking with a couple of ladies, and who was unconsciously seized upon, with his fair companions, and brought off in triumph to the steamer, amidst the cheers of the whole company. The rev. Doctor good-humouredly, in compliance with what appeared to be a general wish, proceeded to open the large blue bag which he carried, and displayed to the curious a travelling spirit-flask, and a fresh boiled crab, which led the Doctor to give a most humorous account of the natural history of crabs. In the Doctor's depository were, also, some draining-tiles, such as are used in "the Island."

At Alum Bay there was a second debarkation, and a second onslaught with hammers and chisels innumerable upon the devoted cliffs; and here, under the able direction of the President, who went about from spot to spot, explaining the geology of this remarkable locality, where the various strata, upheaved by some great natural convulsion, appear vertical, side by side with the horizontal formations, the wallets were soon filled with specimens. The party was safely embarked again, a matter of no slight difficulty, seeing that the space between the steamer and the shore had to be traversed in small boats.

Our Artist has depicted the Floating Lecture-room—the Deck of the De Saumarez packet; the Scene at Black Gang Chine; and the Debarkation at Allum Bay

Mr. Drew, a member of the Local Committee, then moved a vote of thanks to the distinguished geologists who had accompanied the excursionists; the compliment was acknowledged by Sir R. Murchison, by Sir J. Herschel, and by the Dean of Westminster, who, also alluded to Mr. Webster, the geologist, having first shown to the world that the strata described by Cuvier and Broguiart as extending over a large area in France, existed also in the Isle of Wight.

The company returned to Southampton at about half-past nine o'clock in the evening, highly gratified; the only subject of complaint being the somewhat excessive charges for provisions on board the steamer; 3s. 6d being considered, in these economic days, too much for a dinner of cold meat, bread, and cheese.

MONDAY

PRINCE ALBERT'S VISIT.

This was a great day for the Association; Prince Albert taking, for the first time, a part in the proceedings of the several Sections. The preparations for the reception of his Royal Highness were well arranged. The landing steps, from the water's edge to the pier-head, were laid with crimson cloth, and the building at the extremity of the pier was fitted up as a reception-room. The Royal standard was hoisted at the pier-head, and at the top of the Mayor's house. The numberless yachts and vessels in the Southampton Water were gaily dressed; the Yacht Club House, the various hotels and public buildings, and even the shops and private houses, were adorned with flags, and their balconies and windows were crowded with elegantly-dressed ladies. Indeed, the whole town of Southampton was on the qui vive. At a few minutes before eleven, the roar of artillery from the platform announced the approach of the Fairy at the pier-head; and almost immediately, his Royal Highness, who was received on landing by the Mayor, Alderman, and Council of the town, Sir R. Murchison, the President of the Association, and Captain Ellice, made his appearance on the pier, amidst the almost deafening shouts of the spectators. The Prince, who was attended by Colonel Bouverie and the Hon G. E. Anson, having entered the reception room, accompanied by the Mayor and Council, and Sir R. Murchison, an Address was presented to him by the Mayor, and his Royal Highness briefly replied.

On leaving the Pier, the Prince, accompanied as hitherto, proceeded in a carriage to the Mathematical Section, in the Long Room. On the entrance of the Prince, Sir John Herschel, who was presiding, immediately rose, and the President's chair was offered to, and accepted by, his Royal Highness. Professor Phillips then read a long Report on Anemometry, and the various instruments, and improvements in them, which had been devised for registering the pressure of the atmosphere, which, together with the discussion which followed, was listened to with great attention by the Royal Associate.

From Section A, the Prince was conducted to the Bugle Hall, where the sub-Section of Ethnology was sitting; and his Royal Highness heard some very detailed Ethnological notes of Siberia, by Professor Von Middenhorf, read by Dr. Latham, followed by an explanation in the German language by the Professor himself. By this time, Lord Palmerston had arrived, and joined with those who were in attendance on his Royal Highness.

The party then proceeded to the Section for Mechanics, where his Royal Highness appeared particularly gratified with Mr. Fairbairn's paper, illustrated by models and drawings of the results as obtained from the experiments in connexion with the proposed tubular bridges across the Conway and Menai Straits, in which the lecturer shows the superiority of the rectangular hollow bridge, as adopted by Mr. Stephenson on the Chester and Holyhead Railway over the chain bridge, or a circular or elliptical iron tunnel bridge.

The Chemical Section was next visited, where his Royal Highness bestowed considerable attention to a paper by Professor Oërsted on the changes which mercury sometimes suffers in glass vessels hermetically sealed the general impression of the savans appearing to be, that those changes were occasioned either by the quality of the mercury or of the glass

Lastly, the Prince proceeded to the Victoria Rooms, where a paper was being read by the Secretary of the Geological Section on the Arctic currents, as exhibited in the distribution of the northern drift, by Dr. Forchammer. This paper adduced evidence to show that the separation of England from the Continent of Europe had taken place some time previous to the sixth century before Christ, or from 2500 to 3000 years ago; and that the German Ocean was once a bay, in the innermost parts of which were the shores of Denmark. Another paper, by Professor E. Forbes, on some natural history phenomena bearing on geology, observed since the last meeting, and having some reference to Dr. Forchammer's lecture, followed. Leaving this room, the Prince entered for a moment another apartment, in which the Zoological and Botanical Section was engaged; but here it was announced by Sir R. Murchison that his Royal Highness' time had expired, and that her Majesty was waiting for him on board the Royal yacht, which, after the debarkation of Prince Albert, had made the voyage to Cowes and back. His Royal Highness accordingly proceeded at once to re-embark, having taken leave of the civic authorities at the pier-head; but Lord Palmerston and Sir R. Murchison accompanied his Royal Highness and suite, in the barge, to the Fairy. The Queen was waiting on the deck, on reaching which the Prince presented her with a bouquet of choice flowers he had brought from the Victoria Rooms. Sir R. Murchison had the honour of being presented to her Majesty by his Royal Highness, and was received with marked attention; Viscount Palmerston was afterwards honoured by the Queen with a conversation of some duration. The noble Lord and Sir R. Murchison having left the Fairy, at half-past one o'clock she got under way, and, amidst the salute of the guns on the platform and the cheers of the people, proceeded on her return to Osborne

Several other papers were read in the various Sections, during the afternoon; amongst which was one by Dr. Buckland, on the applicability of M. Fauvelle's mode of boring Artesian wells to the well at Southampton, and to other wells and sinkings for coal, salt, and other mineral beds. Mr. Vignolles suggested the propriety of sinking a shaft for the Southampton well, on the principle explained by him on a previous day, as invented by M. Fauvelle, but the opinion of Dr. Buckland appeared to be that by the present boring they might get through the chalk into the lower green sand for water, and probably succeed in their object. This formation would be equivalent to that from which the Parisian well obtained its supply; and he illustrated the positions of the strata, by references to Mr. Knipe's geological map.

A GENERAL COMMITTEE MEETING

was held, at 3 o'clock, in the Town Hall, Sir R. Murchison took the Chair, and announced that her Majesty had desired him to express the great interest she felt in the Association, and the satisfaction with which she had received the report of its progress. (Cheers). Her Majesty had also desired to be furnished with periodical reports of the proceedings and progress of the Association. (Cheers). A more practical proof of membership on the part of Royalty than he had mentioned perhaps Mr. Taylor would communicate to them.

Mr. Taylor then stated that Colonel Anson had announced that his Royal Highness Prince Albert desired to present to the Association £100—(cheers)—and that without in any way directing the purpose to which it should be applied, as it was his wish to convey to them his entire approbation of their proceedings. (Much cheering.)

An invitation from the Ashmolean Society of Oxford, for the Association to hold their next annual meeting at that town, was read and advocated by Professor Walker. Mr. Grove advanced the claims of Swansea, for the year 1848, and Dr Robinson those of Belfast, for some future year. After some conversation, the invitation to Oxford was accepted; and Sir R. H. Inglis, Bart., M.P., was unanimously voted President for the next year.

THE EVENING MEETING

was well attended by members, to hear Mr. Lyell's discourse on the Geology of the United States, from observations made in 1845 and 1846. Mr. Lyell confined himself to the Delta and Alluvial valley of the Mississippi River, explaining that the "delta" of a great river was that which was below the first arm or branch that the river sent forth to relieve itself, on approaching the sea. Endeavouring to make some approximation to the minimum of time which must have been occupied by the formation of the accumulations now found to characterise the delta and the alluvial plain above, Mr. Lyell warned his hearers that Playfair avowed his conviction fifty years ago that the reason might go much further than the imagination dare follow. The time required for the accumulation of matter found in the delta and valley of the Mississippi, must have been 67,000 years, and another 33,000 years must have been required for bringing down to its present position the great deposit above. It was melancholy to think that there should still be so great a discord in the opinions of scientific men upon subjects of this kind, it would not have been so, if there had been, from the time of Playfair, an association like that; and if a body of scientific men, entitled, by having devoted their lives to pursuits like these, to speak with authority, had joined in inquiries into these matters, it would have been impossible then that such an unsound state of things could exist,—one creed for the philosopher and another for the multitude. But ere long the earth's antiquity, and the early history of its organic beings, would be as cheerfully and universally admitted, as the earth's motion, or the number of the heavenly bodies. His own conviction was, that the more we extended and enlarged our knowledge of the wonders of creation in time as well as in space, we should more elevate, and refine, and exalt our conceptions of the Divine Artificer of the universe. This paper was characterised by the President as "a magnificent discourse."

TUESDAY.

The Sectional Meetings were, this day, but thinly attended; although the Papers read were numerous and interesting. Rather, however, than subjoin a dry enumeration of their titles and authors, we shall quote the objects of such as our limits will allow.

Considerable interest was taken by the Zoological and Botanical Section, in the reading of a paper "On the Production of Silk in England," by Mrs. Whitby, a lady residing at Newlands, near Lymington. It was stated from the chair that this subject was to have been brought before the Section during Prince Albert's visit; it being known that her Majesty and the Prince take a deep interest in the prospect of the production of raw silk in England. Mrs. Whitby, in 1836, brought from Turin mulberry plants of the sort called "of the Philippine Islands" (Morus multicaulis), a sort which produces much larger leaves than the Italian wild white mulberry, or that which, in England, is cultivated for its fruit. The growth of the plant in question is rapid, and it is easily cultivated by cuttings, which strike as readily as the willow. Mrs. Whitby treated her importation (at Truro and Lymington,) according to the directions given in M. Berdon's book, and did not lose one. She had fed silkworms on these, and the silk produced had been pronounced by the first manufacturers in England to be equal to the best Italian silk. She now felt convinced that the silkworm might be reared in England with as little cost as in the most favoured foreign countries. A high temperature was not essential, and only advantageous as it lessened the time required for attaining maturity. Her greatest difficulty had been in preventing the silkworm hatching before the leaves had come out in sufficient abundance in our cold springs; but in autumn she now fills a cucumber-frame with cuttings to meet this difficulty. Her account of the result per acre showed an annual profit of £94 8s. 5

In the Statistical Section, Mr. Nelson read a long paper on the Statistics of Crime in England and Wales during the years 1842, 1843, and 1844. His object was to show the necessity of viewing age as an element in all inquiries into the nature and progress of crime; and he pointed out that, at some ages or periods of life, the tendency to crime was more than quadruple that at other periods of life. The results thus obtained showed that invariably where the greatest degree of education existed, the least amount of crime prevailed; and, vice versâ, that when the people possessed the least degree of education, then crime always greatly exceeded the average for the whole kingdom, sometimes showing a difference in a single group of about 40 per cent.

In the Mechanical Section, a long discussion arose respecting the Conway and Menai iron railway bridges, and the experiments made for determining the best shape and thickness to be adopted; but no satisfactory conclusions were arrived at.

Mr. Vignolles read a paper "On the Chinese Method of Boring, as Practised on the Continent, for the Ventilation of Mines;" and in conjunction with Fauvelle's System for the Boring of Artesian Wells. The method here alluded to was explained to be a heavy bar of cast-iron, six to ten feet long, and from four to six inches diameter; the lower end furnished with a boring tool combined with a motion pipe, and which is suspended by a rope passing over a large pulley fixed over the bore hole. This rope is wound round a windlass, and the whole is so contrived that the weight may fall from any required height. The tension given to the rope produces a circular motion sufficient to change the place of the cutting tool at each descent.

At the "General Ordinary," which was very fully attended, Sir R. Murchison proposed the healths of Prince Albert, the Mayor and Corporation, and the foreign guests; the latter being replied to by M. Oërsted. In the course of his address, the learned President nobly advocated the importance of the Association, as standing forward on a great principle; adding his "wish that those who criticised the Association could look upon that assembly." The meeting had been attended by an unprecedented number of distinguished foreigners, and that number would have been increased but for circumstances which could not have been prevented. Among others his distinguished friend, M. Dumas, was kept away solely by a severe attack of gout. The Association had also received an impulse from the Royal patronage bestowed on it, which could not fail to prove of eminent advantage in its future progress.

EVENING MEETING.

After dinner, the company adjourned to the Victoria Rooms, where the first attraction was an account of the "Gun Cotton," just invented by Professor Schonbein Professor Grove stated this to be the first time this invention had been publicly exhibited; and it was only at the earnest solicitation of the British Association, that Professor Schoenbein had consented to its exhibition, because, in consequence of not having concluded his arrangements for securing the invention by patents, he was not able to describe the composition of the substance. Mr. Grove prefaced the exhibition by giving a short outline of the history of the invention of gunpowder, and the rationale of its composition; observing that there was a considerable residue after the explosion of even the best gunpowder, which showed that the combustion was not perfect; and the residue proved greatly inconvenient by soiling fire-arms. In the invention of Professor Schoenbein, this inconvenience was entirely remedied, and the explosive force was said to be double that of gunpowder. The substance was, in fact, cotton, which was was prepared in some manner not yet made known, and was not to be distinguished in its appearance from ordinary cotton. There were two qualities of the preparation, one of which was intended for common purposes, and evolved a small quantity of smoke on explosion; the other, which was more expensive in its preparation, emitted no perceptible smoke, and left no residue whatever. The gun cotton, he said, explodes at the temperature of 400 degrees the explosive point of gunpowder being about 600 degrees; and it might be exploded on gunpowder without igniting the latter. Mr. Grove then exhibited the experiments He first exploded a small quantity of gunpowder for the purpose of showing the large quantity of smoke evolved. He then exploded a small lock of the gun-cotton, of the second quality. It flashed off as rapidly as gunpowder, and but a very small quantity of smoke was perceptible. The paper on which it was exploded was slightly stained. The better kind of the gun cotton exploded still more rapidly, without any smoke whatever, and it gave out an orange-coloured flame. The exhibition of the experiment was received with loud applause. Mr. Grove next exhibited that peculiar property of the cotton not being injured by water. He steeped a piece of the cotton in a glass of water, and then pressed it between blotting paper to dry. Though it could not have been thoroughly dry in the time, the cotton flashed off when the heated wire was applied to it, and without any perceptible smoke. The flash, however, was not in this case so instantaneous as that of the perfectly dry cotton. The last and most curious experiment was the explosion of a piece of the gun-cotton when placed upon loose gunpowder, without igniting the latter. The experiment succeeded perfectly, though it requires the cotton to be quite dry to insure its success, for if the combustion be less rapid the gunpowder explodes. When these experiments were concluded, there was a call for Professor Schoenbein. The President very significantly said, Professor Schoenbein was with us just now at the dinner, he partook of the repast, and—he is not here. He then complimented Professor Schoenbein on the discovery of so powerful an agent, which he designated as one of the most practically important discoveries of the present age. What might be its results no one could foresee. With power greater than that of gunpowder, it would produce little noise, no recoil, and no dirt; therefore, the alarm of timid minds at fire-arms would be removed, and even ladies might become partridge shooters. Dr. Robinson made some eloquent remarks on the influence of gunpowder and of other destructive agents on the progress of civilisation, and observed that the further scientific inventions placed civilised man in physical power above the savage, the better guarantee it afforded against the destruction of the works of civilisation and of a retrogradation to barbarism.

Professor Grove then explained the process by which he had succeeded in decomposing water by heat.

WEDNESDAY.

This morning, four Sections assembled; but the attendance was thin. In the Zoological and Botanical Section, Mr. Morris Stirling read a paper on Substitutes for the potato. Amongst others, he mentioned the artichoke, scorzonera, and many plants which yield starch, &c., in their roots; but the Secretary (Dr. Lankester) pointed out the necessity of a chemical analysis of all foods offered as a substitute for the potato. Many plants contained a larger quantity of nutritious matter than the potato that would not be liked as a substitute. An Irish peasant could eat 14 pounds of potatoes in a day; few other kinds of food could be consumed in the same quantity.—Mr. Webster stated his conviction that every effort should be made to enable the Irish labourer to procure other food, as the potato was not adapted to the development of the powers of mind and body.

In the Mechanical Section appeared the following notice:—"Bevan, W., M.D., on a New Plan of Applying Atmospheric Air to the Purposes of Locomotion." Dr. Bevan made his statement accordingly to the Section. He proposed to make the atmosphere simulate steam, and to move a train by means of heated compressed air in large copper vessels. Being pressed, in the discussion which followed his discourse, to explain how he would force the air into his vessel, and keep up the supply, he avowed that he had not fully disclosed his plan, and intended to alter some things shown in the drawings he had exhibited; he had been advised not to mention those points; but if any gentleman or company would take the project up, he would explain the whole to those parties. (A laugh.) This non-explanation was fatal to the subject; and, after the exchange of some pleasantries, it was withdrawn.

In the Chemical Section, Dr. Daubeny mentioned some new facts bearing on the chemical theory of volcanoes. The chemists and geologists are at variance as to the causes of the eruption of volcanoes; the latter attributing them to the action of central fire; the chemists, on the contrary, attributing the eruptions to chemical action of substances at no great distance from the surface. On the discovery of the new metals by Sir Humphry Davy, he applied the inflammability of those metals in explanation of the effects of volcanoes, and conceived that there might be large masses of potassium in the earth, which inflamed when water came into contact with the mass. Dr. Daubeny supported the chemical views of the causes of earthquakes, and contended that the geological hypothesis failed to explain the phenomena. In the course of the discussion which followed, Mr. Hunt mentioned the remarkable fact, which had been often noticed by miners in Cornwall, that over the lodes of a mine there is apparent at night a lambent flame in the direction of the lodes.

A short communication on the mode of making and on the properties of the substance termed Vulcanised India-rubber was made by Mr. Brockedon. The process of Vulcanisation consists in submitting caoutchouc at a high temperature to the action of sulphur, with which it combines, and becomes harder and more elastic. The proportions of sulphur vary according to the degree of hardness required, but about seven per cent. of sulphur is the quantity combined for general purposes. The quality of the India-rubber is much more elastic after being thus treated, and it is of this substance that the small India-rubber rings now so generally used is made. It was stated by Mr. Brockedon, that two tons weight of these India-rubber rings are sold in a week.

In the Mechanical Section, Mr. Scott Russell explained the nature of the wave system, gave a brief abstract of the communication he made on the subject at the Cork meeting, when he presented the report of the result of his experiment. The chief peculiarities of the system may be stated to be placing the greatest midship section much further aft than in other ships, making the fore-part very fine, and giving it a concave instead of a convex curve, and making the after-part more full in proportion to her bows. This form was altogether opposed to the previously received forms for ship-building, but he had arrived at that form after numerous experiments, and by consideration of the conditions requisite to produce the least resistance in passing through water. By giving the water-line a cycloidal form, he had followed the directions of nature, by adopting the curve of waves, and the effect was that, instead of waves breaking against the sides of such a vessel, they passed by it, as the surface of the vessel was of the same shape, and fitted with them. In practice it was found that such a vessel raised no wave in front as it passed through water, but the resisting wave was thrown on each side to the bows, and by this means the ship was much more effectually steadied than it could be when there was any opposing wave in front, and a corresponding hollow at the bows, where the ship required the most support.

THE ARTESIAN WELL ON SOUTHAMPTON COMMON

A joint deputation of the Geological and Mechanical Sections, headed by the President, proceeded at one o'clock to the boring on Southampton Common. After hearing the report of the engineer, and examining the evidence of the strata, the President observed that there was every probability, on their reaching the upper green sand below the chalk strata, that a sufficient supply of water would be obtained. Whether or not it would rise to the required level, would depend, however, upon the level at which the upper green sand entered. He advised, however, the continuance of the work. It appears the well already gives 15,000 cubic feet of water, the supply required for the town being 30,000 to 35,000.

GENERAL COMMITTEE MEETING.

At three o'clock, the General Committee assembled in the Town Hall, when the Treasurer stated the tickets issued at this meeting to be 843; the amount received (including Prince Albert's donation of £100) £827 4s. 8d. Grants of money (£410) were agreed to.

It was also resolved that the second and third parts of Dr. Carpenter's Report on the Microscopic Structure of Shells, &c., in the forthcoming volume of the Transactions, be illustrated by lithographic plates not exceeding twenty. The price of the plates was not known.

Among the recommendations of the Committee, not involving grants of money, were:—That Mr. Hopkins be requested to furnish a report on the theory of such movements and displacements of the earth's crust as may be connected with earthquakes; and Mr. Mallett to furnish a report of the static and dynamic facts which have been observed to be the results of earthquakes, or connected with them. Mr. J. S. Russell, to prepare a report on the present condition of the science of naval construction, including steam navigation. Mr. Whewell and Sir J. Ross, to draw up a plan for a naval expedition for the purpose of completing our knowledge of the progress of the tides.

That her Majesty's Government be requested to have published the meteorological observations which have been made by the officers of the Irish trigonometrical survey at Mountjoy, and the Pigeon-house, near Dublin, since 1834, and also to direct that, during the progress of the Ordnance trigonometrical survey in the north of Scotland, the so-called parallel roads of Glenloy and the adjacent country be accurately surveyed

The officers of the Association were then re-elected, and

The President, in closing the business of the Meeting, congratulated the Association on the harmony that had prevailed during the whole of the Southampton Meeting. Not a single point of dissent had arisen, nor had anything occurred to interrupt for a moment the pursuit of science. He had now to declare that the business of the Meeting was adjourned to Oxford, where they would assemble on the 25th of June next.

A vote of thanks was passed to the President, and the Meeting broke up.

THE MODEL ROOM.

At this Room, (Mechanical Section,) were exhibited some clever models by Mr. Wilde, one of which, a model of Aden, formed of common rough clay, is curious, as showing, from the position of that town, and its fortifications, natural and artificial, that the report which appeared recently in some of the London papers, that the Arabs had approached to the very gates of Aden, must necessarily be incorrect. There were, also, in this room, working models of Ainslie's tile-cutting machines, and some specimens of poplins, embroidered with gold, silver, and coloured silks, into the most novel and beautiful patterns. Those which are manufactured in Ireland, it is said, have been extensively patronised by her Majesty; and Prince Albert wore a waistcoat of this beautiful fabric, on Monday.

THE PORTRAITS.

Each of the annexed Portraits has been sketched by our Artist, during the recent Meeting at Southampton; so that we have spared no pains to insure their characteristic fidelity,

In the emblematic title-design is introduced the Portrait of his Royal Highness PRINCE ALBERT, F R.S., and the only Honorary Member of the British Association. To the left is the Portrait of Sir Roderick Impey Murchison, G. C. St. S, F. R. S.; and President of the Association, pre-eminently distinguished by his Researches on the Geology of Russia.

SECTION.—MATHEMATICAL AND PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

DR. STEVELLY, one of the Secretaries to the Section, and known for his labours in Meteorological Science

The REV. DR. SCORESBY, magnetician, illustrator of the natural science of the Arctic Regions, &c.

PROF. SUANBERG (from Sweden); "a successful young experimenter in Physics, who represents his great master, Berzelius"

PROF. WHEATSTONE, F.R.S., Vice-President of the Section; electrician; inventor of the Electric Telegraph, and distinguished by his Researches on Sound.

The REV. DR. WHEWELL, F.R.S., Master of Trinity College, Cambridge: a Vice-President of the Section.

SIR JOHN F. W. HERSCHEL, Bart., F.R.S.; ex-President of the Association: the celebrated Astronomer.

Prof OERSTED, "to whom we owe the first great link between electric and magnetic phenomena, by showing the magnetic properties of the galvanic current."

Colonel SABINE, R.A., distinguished for his Researches in Terrestrial Magnetism.

RICHARD LANING, Esq., Electrician.

Prof. WARTMANN, Founder of the Vaudois Society.

SECTION.—CHEMICAL SCIENCE

Dr. LYON PLAYFAIR, honourably referred to in the President's Address, for his Report on the Conditions and Products of Iron Furnaces.

Prof. W. H. GROVE, F R.S., who experimented with the "Gun Cotton."

Prof. HENRICH ROSE, from the Royal Academy of Berlin, whose work on Chemical Analysis is an universal text-book.

Prof. MICHAEL FARADAY, D.C.L., F R S, President of the Section.

Dr. DAUBENY, F.R.S., Aldrich's Professor of Chemistry, and Regius Professor of Botany, Oxford.

Prof. SCHONBEIN, from Switzerland, the investigator of Ozone, and the discoverer of "Gun Cotton."

J. PRIDEAUX, Esq.

SECTION.—GEOLOGY

The Marquis of NORTHAMPTON, President of the Royal Society, F.S.A., F G S., &c.

WILLIAM HOPKINS, Esq., F R.S.

G. B. GREENOUGH, Esq., F.R.S. (Physical Geography.)

LEONARD HORNER, Esq., F.R.S., President of the Section, and of the Geological Society.

D. W. H. FILTON, F.R.S., the able illustrator of the Geology of the Isle of Wight.

Prof. E. FORBES, F.R.S., Palæontologist to the Geological Survey of Great Britain.

Prof. ANSTED, F.R.S., King's College, London.

Sir HENRY DE LA BECHE, F.R.S., Director of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom.

VISITORS, PHYSIOLOGISTS, &c.

The LORD BISHOP of NORWICH, President of the Linnæan Society.

SIR HERCULES PAKENHAM, Governor of Portsmouth.

JOHN TAYLOR, Esq., F.RS., Treasurer of the Association.

VISCOUNT PALMERSTON, her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

DR. FOWLER, a Vice-President of the Association.

PROFESSOR OWEN, F.R S., President of the Section of Physiology: the distinguished Geologist

D. W. B. CARPENTER, F.R.S., an able writer on Physiology.

SECTION.—STATISTICS AND VISITORS.

The MAYOR of SOUTHAMPTON.

JAMES HEYWOOD, Esq, F.R.S, a Vice-President of the Section.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL SYKES, F.R.S. (Statistics of India.)

G. R. PORTER, Esq., F.R.S. (Board of Trade)

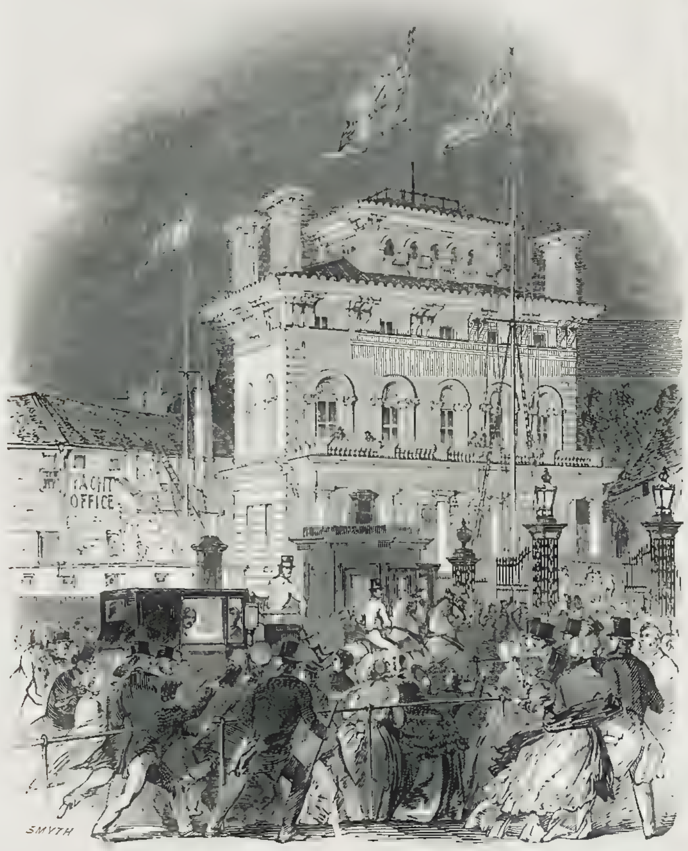
DR. W. COOKE TAYLOR, an acute Statistical writer.

ELTON, Esq., from the United States.

NEW STEAM-YARD, AT MORICE-TOWN, DEVONPORT.

THE Lords of the Admiralty have, since their accession to office, been engaged in various inspections and other duties of national importance; not the least interesting of which was the ceremony, on Saturday last, of laying the foundation-stone of some extensive works at Morice-Town, for the better accommodation of her Majesty's Steam Navy, "the one thing wanting to complete the great naval arsenal of Devonport."

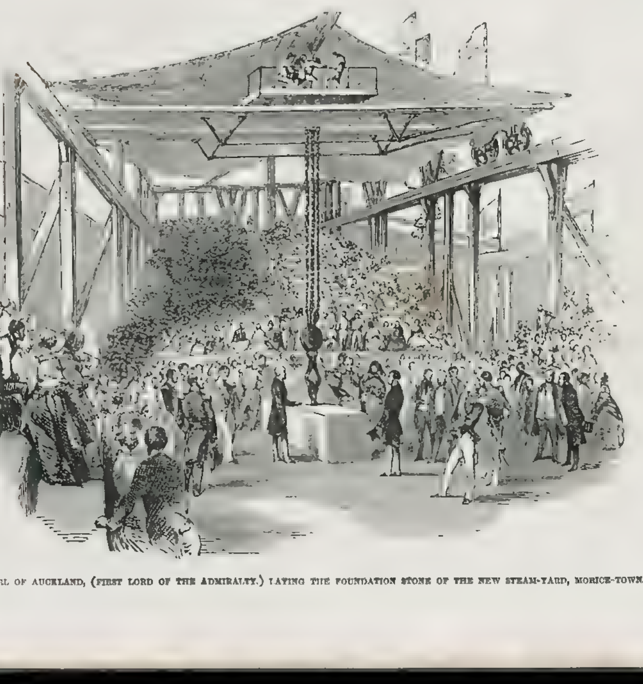
The new Steam-yard is at Keyham, inclosed from "old Hamoaze." It was begun in January, 1845, when the first pile was driven. This was the commencement of the great preliminary labour—the formation of the coffer-dam. Nasmyth's tilt hammer was then used; and, on the 5th of February, the first engine was set in action, to the astonishment of all who witnessed its powers of performance, especially those who took the opportunity to contrast them with those of the old monkeys. Within a few months, the great coffer-dam was effectually completed, and the water-washed foundation quite dry, although the dam is of 1600 feet, and 8000 loads of timber have been used in its construction. The saving of money, not less than time occasioned by the employment of the tilt-hammer, must have been extraordinary; yet it is said that the cost has exceeded £130,000 in all. Over the works is a complete net of railways, there being as many as nearly thirteen miles laid. The rapidity with which heavy weights are transported is consequently very great; and it is exceedingly interesting to notice the way in which things are managed, especially the traversing of the piles by "the traveller." The excavations have been astonishingly rapid, the ground being of a soft clayey nature, for the most part of the character of a marine deposit. Up to the present time, about 200,000 cubic yards have been excavated. Between 200, and 300,000 cubic feet of granite, and more than 400,000 cubic feet of limestone have been delivered at the works. The excavated earth, instead of being thrown, as originally intended, outside the breakwater, is now taken along at the foot of the works abutting Hamoaze, underneath the Keyham bridge, on the Saltash road, and deposited with a view of filling up Keyham lake, which will form a piece of ground for agricultural purposes, or, most probably, in the course of some time, the seat of a manufactory.



MEETING OF THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.—ARRIVAL OF HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT.—(SEE PAGE 186.)

"A few months since," says the Devonport Independent, "and Keyham was a noiseless spot; art or science had scarcely visited it. People seemed to slumber over over its very capabilities. What is it now? Full of life, exhibiting momentary alteration, the scene above all others for noble evidences of the triumphs of intelligence, and the wonderful appliances of mechanical skill; the seat of stupendous works, the site of a national establishment, the requirements even for which are novel, and which, in no small degree, will enhance our greatness, and may eminently be identified with our prowess in maintaining our claim to the homage of the world as Mistress of the Seas."

The ceremony o. Saturday was performed by the Right Honourable the Earl of Auckland, the First Lord of the Admiralty. The foundation stone, which is a rectanqular block of granite from the Par quarries, near Fowey, 12 feet 10 inches long, 3 feet 6 inches deep, and 2 feet 7 inches wide, weighing 9 tons, forms the corner of the western entrance to the lock of the south basin, part of the flooring of which is already laid. To prepare for this dock, an excavation has been made 43 feet deep, which will, when completed, form a lock or dock of 360 feet in length, and 80 feet in width, within which a further excavation will be made for a basin, 600 feet by 500 feet.



THE EARL OF AUCKLAND, (FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY.) LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF THE NEW STEAM-YARD, MORICE-TOWN.

The morning was bright and beautiful, and the company began to arrive at twelve o'clock, and were accommodated under a spacious awning, where the band of the Royal Marines was in attendance, and played several popular airs. On a railway, 100 feet above the heads of the spectators, carried along upon wooden piers, was placed "the traveller," from which the foundation stone was lifted by chain tackle into its place.

At a quarter-past one their Lordships arrived, and having been received by Mr. Baker, the contractor for the works, proceeded to the site of the Dock. The Earl of Auckland, with Miss West, the daughter of the gallant Port Admiral, first entered the inclosure, followed by Admiral Sir John West, K C B., and Lady West; Admiral Sir C. Adam, Sir Samuel Pym, and Mrs. Drake; Captain Berkeley, M P.; Hon. W. Cowper, M.P.; H. G. Ward, Esq., M.P., Principal Secretary; Sir William Symonds, Surveyor of the Navy; Captain Brandreth, R.E, Director o.. Works; Captain Burgmann, R.E., Resident Director of the Works; Captain Ee n, R.N. Private Secretary to the First Lord; Henry Woolley, Esq., Chief Clerk; Captain Dixon, H.M.S. Caledonia; Commander Potbury, &c. &c.

Precisely at twenty-five minutes past one, the stone was lifted, and the Earl of Auckland spread the cement with a silver trowel, when the order was given to "lower." The stone was then firmly fixed, and the noble Earl having used the mallet in accordance with the usual custom, and tried the level, was satisfied that all was right, and the stone was declared to have been laid, the band playing "God save the Queen." A round of cheers was then given.

Underneath the foundation-stone, a cavity was prepared for the deposit of numerous current coins of the realm, the covering being a brass plate with the following inscription engraved thereon:—

This Stone was laid by the Right Honourable
The Earl of AUCKLAND, G.C B., First Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty,
On the 12th September, 1846
Being the Foundation Stone of a new Establishment for the Manufacture and Repair of Machinery for her Majesty's Steam Ships of War,
Designed and commenced in the year 1844 under the orders of the Right Honourable
The Earl of HADDINGTON, K.T., First Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty.
Captain Brandreth, R.E., F.R.S., Director in Chief of the Works.
Captain Burgmann, R.E., Resident Director of the Works.
George Baker and Son, Contractors.

The Earl of Auckland then addressed the company, and complimented Captain Brandreth and Captain Burgmann; Mr. Corry, the late Secretary of the Admiralty, who brought forward the plan; and Mr. Baker, the contractor. His Lordship added: "This work has now been commenced but a little more than one year, and yet, within this short space of time, the ground has been inclosed, no less than 630,000 cubic feet of stone have been accumulated around us, and upwards of twelve miles of railway have been laid. In less than three years, we may hope to see one of her Majesty's steamers sailing into this basin, and lying here for the purpose of undergoing repairs. In less than three years from that time, we may hope to see the factories constructed for the purpose of completing all the engines that may be requisite. I am confident it is by such preparations as these that we can best secure the honour of this country, should war ever unfortunately arise; and, at the same time, it is by these means that we have the best guarantee for the happy continuance of peace.',

The assembled multitued then loudly cheered his Lordship, and the band struck up "Rule Britannia." Their Lordships and those of the spectators (about 200) who had received invitations, next proceeded to the model room, to partake of an elegant déjeuner, provided by Mr. Moorshead, of the Royal Hotel. After the repast, Lord Auckland proposed "The Health of Mr. Baker," which was drunk with enthusiasm.

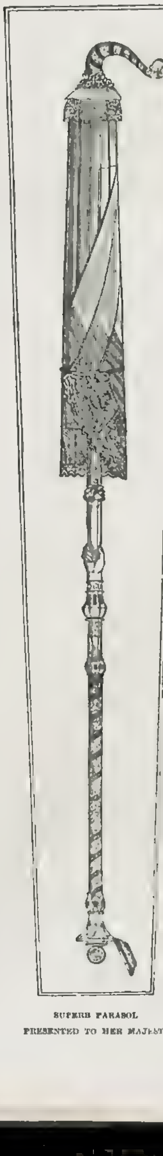
In a tent erected for the purpose, the Messrs. Baker regaled the men employed on their works, to the number of 750; two pounds of beef, one pound of plum-pudding, and half a gallon of beer being allotted to each man; and the liberal masters p omised to repeatthe entertainment when thelast stone of the establishment was laid.

The plan of the Works originated with Mr. Townsend who has superintended the whole.

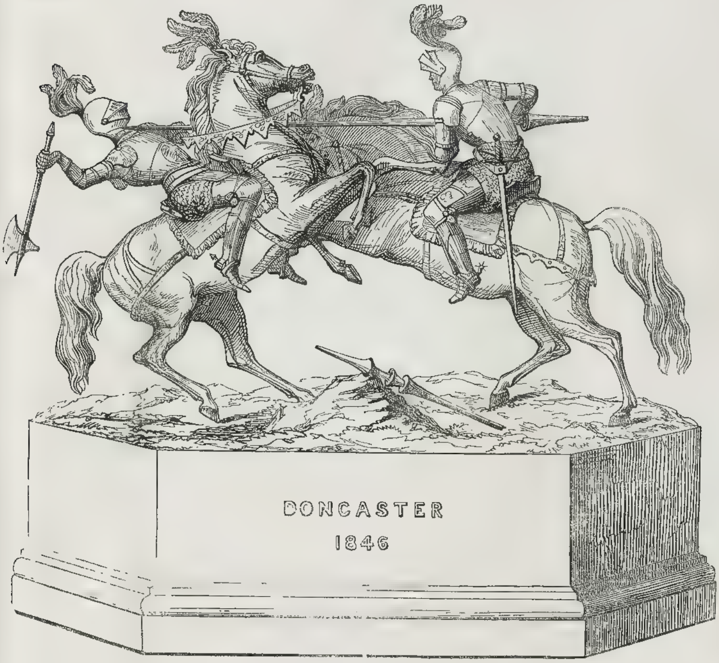
NEWLY INVENTED PARASOL.

This superb and costly Parasol has lately been invented by Mr. Boss, of Bury-street, in the City; and, besides its highly ornamental character, is noticeable for the simple process by which it opens and closes. It is mounted on an engraved and engine-turned gold stick, richly chased; at the upper part of the stick is an enamelled laurel-leaf circle, under which is a fac-simile of the regal Crown, jewelled in diamonds, pearls, rubies, and emeralds; from this Crown radiates a web of Elizabethan golden stems, sustaining a delicate and elegantly watered silk of cerise and white, with satin fall, relieved with elaborately worked Honiton lace. Below the tulip points of the ribs, or about the centre of the stick, are the rose, shamrock, and thistle, encircled, and tastefully jewelled. Immediately under is an enamelled hand, with a tapered finger clasping the stick, and bearing around the wrist the words, "I govern," brilliantly set, in part jewelled; and under the hand is the cuff, or gauntlet, set with precious stones. The handle, ten inches in length, and composed of gold, is entwined with an enamelled spiral garter of eleven folds, mounted in brilliants, rising from a bulb, and concluding with the Royal motto ("Honi soit qui mal y pense"), which is inscribed upon it. The extremity of the handle, of sexagon form, is set with gems; and at the end of this is an Oriental transparent topaz, through which appear the Royal arms, engraved and pierced, surmounted by jewels. On touching a ruby secret spring, an ingeniously arranged scent-box or vinaigrette is disclosed. The exterior top mounting of the Parasol is a superbly worked gold Horn of Plenty, with a circlet of brilliants in blue enamel, gradually widening to the surface of the Parasol, and terminating with a rich device of fruits in gems, falling over a rosette of Honiton lace. The Parasol is deposited in an elegant case, lined throughout with white velvet and satin; the exterior being covered in Royal purple velvet, bearing a tasteful device, with the letters "V.R.," surmounted by the regal Crown, embossed in gold.

The advantage obtained



SUPERB PARASOL
PRESENTED TO HER MAJESTY.

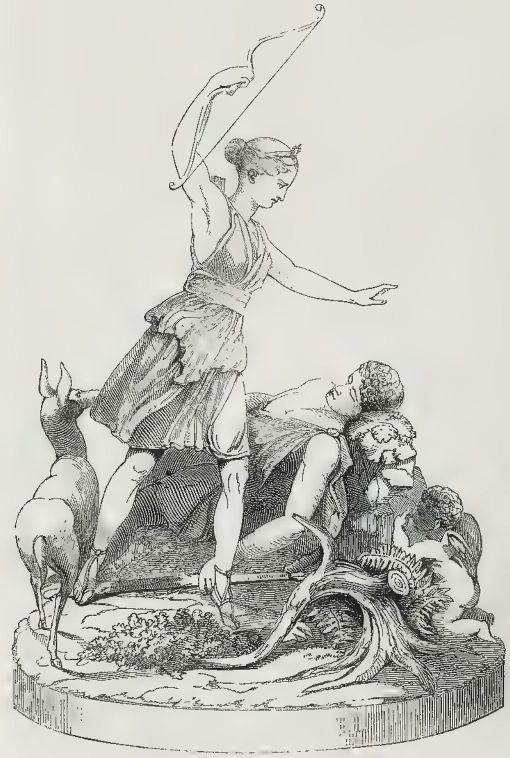


THE DONCASTER PRIZE PLATE.—1846.

by this unique invention is that it may be opened and closed suddenly, without lifting the hand to the summit of its elevation. This is insured by an ingenious though simple contrivance, without extending the hand beyond its grasp, preserving a handsome and unerring shape, with an almost total disappearance of the unsightly extended inside wires, and folding up to one-third the usual size of a Parasol. The Parasol has been designed and arranged by the patentee, Mr. J. A. Boss, who has had the honour of presenting the superb specimen here engraved to her Majesty; the jewelled part was executed by Mr. Samuel Starkey, jeweller, King Street, Clerkenwell; the silk expressly made in Spitalfields, and the lace at Honiton, solely for this occasion; the entire manufacture occupying nearly six months.

THE DONCASTER PLATE.

This very spirited group—the Great St. Leger "Cup"—has been modelled by Mr. Alfred Brown, under the direction of Mr. Baily, R.A. The subject is a passage in the battle of Wakefield· Lord Clifford, of Cumberland, overthrowing Richard Duke of York, of which an account is given by Sharon Turner, in his "History of the Reign of Henry VI." The lance of Lord Clifford has pierced the armour of the Duke, who is wounded in the throat, and falls from his horse grasping his battle-axe, with which he has in vain attempted to ward off the fatal thrust. The horses are full of fire the riders are in complete mail; and the aventules or beavers of their helmets being moveable, so that the features can be seen at pleasure. Mr. Brown is a rising artist, of great promise, as this work fully attests: there is a purity in the design which is comparatively rare in works of this class; whilst the character of the group is remarkably elegant and effective. It is, also, a fine specimen of the manufacturers' art—Messrs. Hunt and Roskell, of Bond-street.



THE TAGLIONI TESTIMONIAL.

THE TAGLIONI TESTIMONIAL

A few months ago, certain noblemen and gentlemen, frequenters of the Italian Opera House, and a section of the thousand-fold admirers of Mdlle. Taglioni, resolved to present to that distinguished artiste a testimonial to her pre-eminent merit. A fund was raised for this purpose; and the commission was given to Messrs. Garrard, of the Haymarket, who selected Mr.' Cotterell, for their artist; and he has, certainly, produced a work of truly chaste, beautiful, and appropriate character. It consists of a group of three mythological figures, and the figures of two animals, partly taken from the ballet of "Endymion," in which Taglioni appeared in the season of 1845. Diana is surveying Endymion, who sleeps on a bank, behind which Cupid, crouching, watches the Goddess. She is accompanied by a fawn; the dog of Endymion is, also, introduced. The whole is exquisitely designed: the figures are not portraits, but have the elegant Greek outline of features. The fawn and dog are fine accessories; and the group will, altogether, add even to Mr. Cotterell's high repute in designs of this class. It has been executed in frosted silver, at the cost of 300 guineas; and is a splendid mark of the high esteem which Mdlle. Taglioni enjoys in this country.

GOLD; OR, THE HALF-BROTHERS.

BY CAMILLA TOULMIN.

CHAPTER VIII.

Bravely as Trevor and Margaret had looked forward to the separation, as the time for the departure of the former drew near, a sensation of anguish crept into their hearts, and would make itself felt. And yet so thankful they both were for the means which presented themselves of Trevor pushing his way, that they would not have altered the arrangement if they could; and so completely did they keep up their spirits to the last, that lookers-on were even surprised at their composure. Many cares, however, and anxious thoughts pressed upon him, full as he was of hope—thoughts that might rather be guessed at than known, even by those to whom he was nearest and dearest.

"Margaret," exclaimed Trevor one day, when, after the fashion o lovers, they had been conversing about themselves, and in a manner quite uninteresting to any one else, "try to tell me truly, would you have been happier had I done as honour at first prompted, and left you free—unwooed—until I had worked my way to competence at least?"

"I thought you had established a code above the common false notions of honour," she replied, with a faint smile. "How strange it is that your sex should think it no dishonour to win a heart by every demonstration of sympathy and affection, and yet, because the want of the world's ruler, Gold, makes a gulf before the present completion of a marriage, to leave that heart tossed between hope and fear and by the most cruel doubts; wrestling with the very affection the lover has striven to create, and full of womanly shame at the belief that exists only in her own soul; and this is called leaving her free, because certain formal prosaic words have not been spoken."

"But, dear Margaret, all the world preach against long engagements; even my mother recommends that we marry so soon as I have a prospect of moderate competence."

"Is the terror against long engagements," said Margaret gaily, and evading his last remark, "lest people should change their minds? If so, it occurs to me they had better do so during the engagement, 'long' or 'short,' than when it is too late. But," she continued, after a moment's pause, "I have often been on the point of telling you poor Hester's story; and as it is somewhat apropos of our subject, I will do so now."

"Poor Hester!" interrupted Trevor; "I owe her much for advocating my cause so warmly as she did; and whatever her heart's history, that has wrecked its peace and warped her genius, I feel sure that she has been the sinned against and not the sinning."

"The kind world would perhaps see no sin anywhere, and only folly on her part. I was a mere child at the time of my father's death, but Hester was nineteen or twenty. It was for the months preceding, and for a little while following that event, that Geoffrey Smith visited constantly at our house. So far as I recollect, he was handsome and agreeable; but children have odd notions about people, I am aware. The chief bond of sympathy, however, between him and Hester was their love of painting, for he was studying art as a profession; and she, in those summer days of her life, was following it for love of itself, with all the enthusiasm of her nature; and little dreaming that, in darker times, it would form a precarious means of existence. Then the apparently wealthy merchant's daughter was a match far above the struggling artist; and I believe at that time Geoffrey Smith refrained from addressing my sister openly, because he dared not hope her family would accept him, and was not sure, of what I am afraid was the truth, that her attachment was blind enough to have tempted her to overstep the barrier of their opposition."

"Geoffrey Smith," exclaimed Trevor! "I wonder if he were any relation to the Mr. Smith with whom my lot is cast. His name, I think, is George—indeed I am sure it is."

"I never heard of his having any relative, George; but Smith is so common a name, we have long since given over enquiring about him. But to proceed. The destitute condition in which my father left his family was not known immediately on his death; indeed a fact that surprised all the world was only discovered on winding up his affairs. I need not tell you, dear Trevor, of the struggles which ensued; they would but make a common story, that is acting every day in a thousand quarters beneath the surface of society."

"In which," exclaimed Trevor, with much emotion, "women for the most part play the tragic parts; toiling their very lives away for a pittance that will scarcely support existence, and that is awarded them on the same principle that fuel is doled out for a steam-engine, to keep the machinery at work; not as what the recompense for labour should be—the means of independence, and a provision for the future."

"By degrees and without, as I have been told, anything like a leave-taking," said Margaret, "this Geoffrey Smith discontinued his visits; and then began the lingering torture, which has shaken a fine mind and withered a loving heart. Judging by her own faith and devotion, she sometimes thought he had left her side only to return when fortune was achieved; and it may be, that while this belief was strong, her energies were braced to exert her talents to advantage: for she is the eldest of the three, and on her devolved, in a great measure, the education of Susan and me. But years rolled on, no authentic tidings were received, though vague reports were wafted about, that he had left England; but his exceedingly common name increased the difficulty of ascertaining what had become of him. The hope of his return, the belief in his affection, have grown fainter and fainter, and in due proportion has her eccentricity increased. You know how she clings to every memorial of the past, thus feeding the sickness of her heart; but you cannot tell what it has been to watch the slow decay of her mind."

"Dreadful!" murmured Trevor, strongly affected; "they have much to answer for who trifle with the heart of another from idleness and vanity. You are right; better for Hester would have been an engagement made and avowedly broken, than years of lingering uncertainty, which have consumed the brightest period of her life."

And now, before this chapter is closed, there must be a brief mention of Catherine Joyce and Susan Clifford.

The former was recovering from her dangerous illness, but she was still weak and delicate. Change of air had been recommended; and, in company with a widow lady, an old friend of her family, she resorted to the sea-side. But it seemed as if an entire change had come over her nature. She was no longer selfish and self-willed; and no longer chary, from a sickly, morbid sentiment, of bestowing gifts or conferring those kindnesses which the rich can, if they try, shower so beneficently on the poor. Suffering had "cleansed her bosom" of the "perilous stuff" which had weighed down her better qualities, and her character shone out with much of real nobility.

True, bodily pain and mental suffering had sallowed her cheek, and attenuated her frame; true, that in a few weeks she looked years older: but, her youthful bloom was exchanged for an expression so spirituelle, that many there were who thought her more attractive than before. The strange link which had connected her destiny with that of Susan had bound them so much together, that the latter seemed now more Catherine's intimate friend and associate even than Margaret; and, when the trip to the sea-side was decided on, she insisted that the young actress should accompany her. Alike in their impulsive characters, alike in one accident of their lives, there must have been some difference in their natures, too. The ordeal to which they had been subjected had thrown one on a bed of mortal sickness, from which she had rallied, a nobler creature than before. The mind of the other, as has been seen, was stunned for awhile, but her bodily health had but slightly suffered. Susan's signal failure in the new character, from which so much had been expected, had destroyed the London Manager's confidence in her ability; she saw no prospect of a re-engagement with him, and looked only to find some employment in the country.

"Wait till the winter," said Catherine, when the subject was discussed; "till then you are my guest. We are going in search of health and spirits, and, till they are restored, we can lay no plans for the future."

"Do you remember," said Margaret, with a smile, one day, long after a much costlier present than the pearl locket had been forced upon her, and many kindnesses showered on the whole family—"do you remember, Catherine, the fear you used to entertain that people should love you only for the good you did them? If love be marketable in this way, you must have laid in a great stock lately."

"So that you do love me," she replied with a faint blush, and a half repressed smile, "it cannot signify why. It occurred to me, one day, that we look for the sunrise because it is to bring us light and warmth; and that we cherish most the flowers which give us odour, and so ——"

"You have discovered," exclaimed Margaret, carrying out the simile, "that you would rather be a rose than a japonica."

"Just that," returned Catherine; "though I am afraid I am a very poor sort of a rose at present. However, in those bygone times, I believe I was more like a nettle than anything else. If Mrs. Jo——if, Mamma, did hate me, I am sure I don't much wonder at it. But can you come with me to the Bazaar to-day, for you know I am going home for a week, to make preparations for Broadstairs, and I want to take with me some toys for the children?"

CHAPTER IX.

Small events on board a ship become subjects of note for the log-book or private diary, as every one must have remarked, on perusing either. And no wonder; the ennui of even a fortnight's voyage to an active mind, would be pitiable, did there not always seem to creep over the spirit a corresponding listlessness. It is very strange; but no one seems inclined to do anything beyond eating and sleeping, and sauntering with less exertion than is required for a walk, and talking with less animation than is required to converse (or, to use an untranslatable word, that ought to be Anglicised, causer). Nevertheless, the idleness indulged is not altogether of an unprofitable sort; it is the place, of all others, in which to dream—to plunge into reverie, and bring from its quarry the rich material with which to build in the future many a fabric of truth, and beauty, and grandeur; it is the place, too, in which to form intimate acquaintanceship and friendship, and to study character with the greatest accuracy.

Yes, for it must be the true metal of generosity and nobility of character which never displays petty selfishness under petty trials—which never takes "accidentally on purpose" the snuggest corner of the cabin on a chilly day, or seeks the shadiest nook on deck, if the heat be oppressive—who is never obstinately blind to the comparative smallness of some epicure's dish, nor obstinately deaf to any suggestions that might infringe on his individual comfort, and which, accordingly, he does not choose to hear; in short, who never yields to any of the thousand-and-one temptations which present themselves for the indulgence of petty selfishnesses to travellers either by sea or by land.

Mrs. Smith was not the only invalid on board; not the only one who, bowed by the scourge of our northern home, was lured by Hope's sweet promises to seek health in a softer clime: and Trevor Sefton had melancholy opportunities of observing the disease to which he intended to devote his talents and attention.

His own especial patient treated him with almost the kindness of an elder sister, mingled with the deference due to a superior mind, for she was one of those gentle beings in whom the venerative principle is strong, and whose fault is that of too often yielding its homage to false deities. With so much as there was deserving respect in Trevor Sefton, no wonder she esteemed him highly. For his part he felt every day an increasing regard made up of an appreciation of her many generous qualities, of pity for an evidently unhappy destiny, and of grateful emotion for many acts of delicate kindness he had received from her. It was a subject of deep distress to him to note, that, notwithstanding his skill and attention, her health did not improve, but rather that she gradually grew worse and worse.

One day Trevor had been greatly annoyed at discovering that the lock of a medicine chest which he kept in his own cabin had certainly been tampered with; and what was more he made the discovery in the presence of Mrs. Smith, for he happened to have brought out the chest before opening it, instead of, as he had sometimes done, only bringing the drug required from it. She became more excited than he had ever seen her, insisted on examining the key, and, on trying the lock herself, turned deathly pale, and trembled from head to foot, and finally declined taking the proposed medicine until he had analysed it, and ascertained that it was exactly what he expected. This was done to the satisfaction of both; and, indeed, every bottle and every packet was rigidly examined. Trevor, however, expressed his most unqualified belief, that though some intended pilferer had been at work, whoever it might be had been foiled in his attempt, and that the contents were undisturbed. But the circumstance was a source of exceeding vexation nevertheless.

The next day shone forth; a day of sunlight and glory, such as the voyager so often finds when he reaches ten or fifteen degrees south of the British seas. The white sails glistened in the sunshine, as, obedient to a light breeze, they bore forward the graceful vessel; and the deep purple waves heaved gently, as if with an emotion of gladness. Trevor Sefton was pacing the deck, thinking a thousand thoughts. Hoping almost against hope for the recovery of his patient; striving to pierce the misty future of his own career; and then, by a very natural transition, dwelling fondly on the beloved two—his dear mother and Margaret; and remembering how the night before, the northern stars drooping perceptibly towards the horizon, had told him most distinctly how far the lengthening chain of distance was already strained between them!

Suddenly Mrs. Smith appeared beside him; she touched his arm, for he had not at first observed her. It was early; she had but just risen, and had thrown a large shawl round her morning wrapper. She had put on a bonnet, it is true, but the strings were untied, and Trevor saw that her soft hair, which was usually arranged with great neatness, lay in loose tangled masses, this evidence of a restless night still unremoved. But it was her countenance that alarmed him. With all his watching, he had never seen such a hectic spot as that which now burned on each cheek.

A poet says, "Beware the passion of a quiet man!" And with equal truth may it be said, beware of rousing the latent indignation of a long-suffering and injured woman, be she by nature ever so gentle. Her voice was low, but stronger than Trevor had ever heard it, though it trembled with half-suppressed passion. She held a bunch of keys in her hand, and, pointing to one of them, she exclaimed "Here is the evidence of his guilt; the murderer that would be."

Appearances were certainly very suspicious. A small key, closely resembling that of the medicine chest, was slightly bent, and between the wards remained a minute particle of some injured lock, which had probably escaped the observation of the owner of the keys, and they belonged to the husband of the lady! For no honest purpose could the attempt have been made; and the reader may as well know at once the extent of injury meditated, by one, who, originally deficient in the conscientious principle, had sunk the condition of his mind lower and lower, till now, at five-and-thirty, crime had lost for him its hideous appearance, and there was scarcely an act he would have hesitated to commit under moderate temptation, provided he were safe from discovery; or, if discovered, secure from punishment.

Now to have substituted a pernicious drug for those his wife was in the habit of taking, would have been a dangerous experiment; but there was comparatively little risk in exchanging them for a preparation of coloured meal and coloured water, which, while they assuredly would not kill, would be equally powerless to cure. This was what he had intended; and what, from a long and intimate knowledge of the chemical attributes of a Painter's colours, he was well qualified to execute. But the suspicions of the injured wife once fairly roused they went much farther than the truth. While he was lounging over a luxurious breakfast, she ransacked all his possessions, for the accident of finding his keys gave her access to them; and though Trevor had endeavoured to turn her thoughts from the suspicions which yet he could not in his own heart discard, and had implored her for her health's sake to calm the excitement under which she was labouring, his words seemed to fall as if she did not hear them, or, hearing, did not understand. Her wrath, be sure, was not abated by discovering among other things the miniature of a beautiful girl. True that the date it bore was anterior to the period when she first knew Mr. Smith; but why had it been preserved so carefully and so secretly? Again she rushed to Trevor Sefton now with what she believed to be a new evidence of her husband's falsehood; and though he concealed the knowledge it imparted, it was with no common emotion that he gazed upon the miniature. He might not have recognised in that girlish blooming face the portrait of her whom he had only known as a faded sorrow-stricken woman, had not the peculiar dress—the fashion of the period—been that in which he had grown accustomed to recognise Hester Clifford. The fashion first recalled her to his mind, and then he saw that it was what she had been. Conjecture merged almost into certainty, even before he said—

"Think you this is Mr. Smith's own painting? Is he at all an artist?"

"Oh yes!" exclaimed the lady, and a spirit of irony and mean recrimination, which were very foreign to her character, had play for once; "oh yes, he has the aspirations of a Michael Angelo; but, as for talent or power, I believe he would have starved if I had not been idiot enough to marry him—that is, if he had attempted to live honestly."

"It is strange," interposed Trevor; "for even the loveof Art, or the mere aspiring, surely tends to elevate the character."

"Not at all. I remember reading the account of some ancient painter of great celebrity, who used to torture his slaves for the purpose of watching their throes of agony, and transferring them to his canvass. I do not see that the love of art elevated his character, do you? I rather think it tended to prevent the love of things higher even than itself; and ever since I read that story I have thought what great exceptions there are to the rules which the world takes up as matters of course. And as for an aspiring man being of necessity a good or a happy one, my young friend, you are equally wrong. If, with the aspiration, he lack the power of execution, he is likely, on the contrary, to be intensely selfish and envious, and exceedingly miserable."

Trevor was silent, for he felt the truth of her words: and certain it is that, under the influence of deep and strong passions, even commonplace people strike out truths, which at another time they would not have reached. She quickly, however, reverted to the miniature, which she would have dashed under her feet.

"Nay," said he, attempting to take it from her hand, "do not strive to injure this. But answer me one question; is not Mr. Smith's name George?"

"No," returned she, "not George, though every one fancies it is, because he always signs himself Geo. His name is Geoffrey."

"Do not trample on the miniature," pursued Trevor, not choosing to show how much he had been interested in her answer; "do not trample on the unoffending ivory. You will not, when I tell you that I chance to know the original, and that she is good, and gifted, and—unhappy."

"Take it, take it," she murmured; "but do not let me see it again." And as she put it into his hand, the tears came to her relief.

A curious scene was enacted that afternoon. The invalid lady had drawn up a brief, but perfectly legal, Will (women of property are generally good lawyers, so far as securing their money or transferring it goes), and requested the signatures of the Captain, two of the passengers, and of Trevor Sefton himself, as witnesses that she ratified the act. Except five hundred a year to her husband, and a few legacies to public charities, the whole of her fortune was bequeathed to a distant relative of her father's.

"You see, Mr. Sefton," she said, about an hour afterwards, "I have not left you any legacy. I wish to make it your interest to keep me alive." She looked at him as she spoke with an expression of strange meaning. It was a look that sought to pierce his very soul, and yet which revealed a degree of mental torture that seemed to have reached the barrier that separated it from madness.

"Do not think so meanly of me, as to imagine that I am a legacy-hunter," said Trevor, with much emotion; "and pray believe that your recovery, or the alleviation of your sufferings, through so humble an instrument in the hands of the Almighty as myself, would be a source of the purest happiness to me through life."

"I do not think meanly of you; I do believe you are sincere," she exclaimed; and added, pressing her hand to her brow, "but forgive my discourtesy—I have been, I am so sorely tried: I suspect every one, and have I not reason? But I will believe two are faithful—Victor and you. Don't be offended at the association; I mean to honour you by it." And she raised the dog which had been fawning at her feet, and loaded it with passionate caresses. "May you never know the desolation of heart," she continued, "which renders a faithful animal the best beloved creature on earth."

"I know this," said Trevor, with an emotion almost of tenderness, "that there is such an inscrutable mystery about the attachment and intelligence of the inferior animals, and of dogs beyond all others, that I do not envy the heart of the man who can make a jest, or think scorn of one of the species."

The weeping lady held out her hand, which Trevor raised to his lips, as a mute pledge of esteem and respect. But when it drooped to her side, the ring I once before mentioned slipped from her thin finger, and rolled on the deck. It was a large sapphire, encircled with brilliants, and, of course, of great value.

"How strange!" said Mrs. Smith; "I had nearly forgotten the very purpose for which I sought you. Though I have not named you in my Will, I do not wish you to be without a memorial of me. That ring is associated with many sacred memories of my parents and my childhood; and there is no other than yourself whom I should wish to own it. My shrunken hand is no longer fit for bright jewels," and she held it up to the light with a mournful smile; "therefore wear it henceforth in remembrance of me, instead of waiting for my death."

Trevor Sefton hesitated, and long demurred at receiving so costly a gift; but it was impossible, finally, to decline one tendered under such circumstances.

(To be continued.)

The Wellington Statue.—This statue is now completely finished. All the parts are put together, and the finishing touches of Mr. M. C. Wyatt have been given to the work. The tackles, pulleys, and apparatus are raised to lift the enormous figure from the floor of the studio of the artist, and to place it on the carriage on which it is to be drawn to the spot where it is to be, at all events in the first instance, elevated. Mr. Wyatt will be ready in a few days to have it at Hyde-park-corner. The horse and rider are at present of a pale gold colour, which tint they will not long retain, exposed to the smoky atmosphere of London. The whole is elaborately finished, the coat of the horse and portions of the drapery, &c., being worked up with great attention to minute details. This will be lost to the eye of the spectator, though creditable to the artist, who has laboured to make his work perfect. The weight of the group is between 30 and 40 tons, and the carriage on which it is to be drawn to its place of destination weighs nearly 20 tons. Mr. Goding, the well-known brewer, has volunteered the services of 40 dray horses, by the united strength of which the huge mass will be pulled along. As the statue now stands, it is impossible to judge of its merits as to grandeur of effect; it requires a great elevation to be seen properly, and the spectators must be at some distance for the eye to take in all the parts.

Military Inspection. The Duke of Wellington, Commander-in-Chief of the Forces, and the Marquis of Anglesey, Master General of the Ordnance, embarked on Tuesday morning at Woolwich, on board the Admiralty steam-yacht, the Black Eagle, and proceeded to Chatham and Sheerness on an official inspection of the fortifications.

THE THEATRES.

LYCEUM.

"To Parents and Guardians" is the name of an original one-act drama, successfully produced at this theatre, on Monday evening. The title, in a measure, suggests the idea on which the plot is founded, more especially when we see it followed in the bills by the announcement that "At Jubilee House, Clapham, Young Gentlemen are, &c. &c." This plot, however, lies in a nut-shell, and that more of the hazel than the cocoa; in fact, the action goes on a series of agreeably written incidents rather than a continuous whole, as several pleasing scenes, cleverly adapted to fall in with one another, form a diorama, in contradistinction to the panoramic painting, in which the slightest approach to a "solution of continuity" is unperceivable. Monsieur Tourbillon (Mr. A. Wigan) is the "resident Parisian" usher at Jubilee House, Clapham, under the direction of Mr. Swish (Mr. Meadows). He has a score of troublesome boys to keep in order; but the ringleader of all is Master Robert Nettles (Mrs Keeley). This terribly wild young gentleman, who makes love to Mary Swish (Miss Howard) his master's daughter, forces the coward of the school, Master William Waddilove (Mr. Keeley) to steal eggs, and buy pale ale in the village; puts devils in the usher's snuff-box: and commits every kind of offence against propriety; has a good heart, and finds out through a newspaper advertisement that Monsieur Tourbillon is a French nobleman, driven from Paris at the Revolution, where he left a beloved wife, of whom he has not since heard. Meantime a French girl Virginie (Mrs. Wigan) comes to the school with a tambourine, weary and poor: and the boys who have seen M. Tourbillon often gazing on a portrait, which they conceive to be that of his wife, plan a scheme of introducing Virginie to him as Madame Tourbillon, during the absence of their superior. They meet, and, in the wandering French tambourine player, the poor usher recognises his daughter. At the same time a letter comes to announce his restitution to his possessions, through the agency of the uncle of Master Nettles: and on this skeleton are the scenes of the drama imposed.

The piece is from the pen of the author of "A Trip to Kissengen;" and he has cleverly made the parts to measure, according to the calibre of the Lyceum company, and given them some smart and natural dialogue. To Mr. Wigan, as regards the acting, we must award the chief praise. His impersonation of the poor old usher—now broken down by a long feeling of dependence, now firing up at some insult, as the recollection of his former position came back to him—was most admirable. Hitherto we have only recognised Mr. Wigan's identification with young foreigners—the "chevalier d'industrie" of Young France; the flâneur of the present boulevards; the eccentric "foreign gentleman" of the "Quartier du Lester-Square," as we may meet him this very day, dining at Bertholini's or Girandier's. But, as Monsieur Tourbillon, he took us by surprise. His acting was, in a word, first-rate: we have seen no representation of the aged broken-hearted Frenchman so effective, since the Monsieur Jacques of Mr. Morris Barnett. Mrs. Keeley's Master Nettles was a real English gamin. Her warm-hearted "pluck" as the playground schoolboy; the way in which she challenged all the rest; and, in the language of the transpontine theatres, defended the oppressed, threw a little boy near us into an extacy of delight. He clapped his hands, and cried "Bravo!" with an enthusiasm that could scarcely be repressed; and this we hold to be the best compliment that could be paid her. Keeley's Waddilove was delicious; the fat, bullied, cowardly, idle boy of the school, never found a richer representative. It was a character cut out for him, and he did it ample justice. Mrs. Wigan played the little part of Virginie, with much feeling and propriety; and we must not omit to say a word or two in praise of Miss Howard, who, with her young fresh face and natural manner, was exactly what the schoolmaster's daughter of sixteen—the idol of all the boys—ought to have been. The piece was greeted throughout with loud applause; and Mr. and Mrs. Keeley, with Mr. and Mrs. Wigan, were generally called for at the conclusion, but nobody came forward. Nor was the drama given out for repetition in consequence—a breach of respect, both to the author and the public, which none of the audience appeared to understand

We witnessed the piece again on Wednesday evening, after one or two judicious alterations had been made. It went with loud applause from beginning to end.

SADLER'S WELLS.

We were happy once more to find this theatre crowded in every available corner, to a degree closely approximating to suffocation, on Wednesday evening, when "Romeo and Juliet" was performed, for the first time under its present management—the feature of the evening, however, being the appearance of Miss Laura Addison as the heroine. In the Illustrated News of the week before last we expressed the high opinion we entertained of this young lady's abilities, after witnessing her acting in the "Lady of Lyons;" and we are rejoiced to find that, after seeing her in another character, she has even still further claims to our praise, and bids fair, with a little care and study, in a good school, to become one of the most brilliant stars in the dramatic hemisphere. Nothing could surpass her performance on Wednesday, more especially in those situations calling for the representation of the more impassioned feelings, in depicting which Miss Laura Addison's forte chiefly lies. Her scene with the Nurse, in the second act, was deliciously played full of girlish petulance and winning tenderness; and the soliloquy, in the fourth act, was given with such marvellous power and effect that a storm of applause greeted its conclusion, the audience appearing perfectly frantic in their enthusiasm. We were not quite so well pleased with the Mercutio of Mr. Phelps. He played it as well as—perhaps much better than—any other actor in his line could have done, and his reading was, as may be conceived, careful and judicious: but he lacked, in a measure, the buoyancy of the light-hearted gentleman. He was warmly applauded in the "Queen Mab" speech; but, to our thinking, his last bits were the most effective. Mr. Creswick was the Romeo; he appeared to be labouring too much after his points throughout, and more especially in the earlier scenes. Mr. G. Bennett was an able representative of Friar Lawrence; and Mr. Scharfe was, as usual, quaint and droll without buffoonery, in Peter. The other characters do not call for any notice beyond the general commendation we are always enabled to bestow conscientiously upon this excellent working company.

The tragedy was admirably mounted; the dresses were in good taste, and the scenery, by Messrs Finley and Fenton, of a very superior kind—especially the different night views. At its conclusion the cheering was universal. Mr. Creswick led Miss Addison before the curtain, who gracefully smiled her acknowledgments to the audience; and then Mr. Phelps was loudly called for, and, on appearing, was greeted with renewed acclamations; indeed, for some minutes after the curtain fell, the hats of the pit, and the handkerchiefs of the boxes, had a busy time of it. The tragedy was put up in the bills for four consecutive nights in the week; and bids fair to have a long run.

ADELPHI

If the drama of "Eugenia Claircille; or, the New Found Home" is, as the bills state, "new and original," it is an excellent imitation of a French translation. It was played for the first time on Thursday evening, and was decidedly successful; although we must plead guilty to having been dreadfully wearied by some of the scenes of the serious interest, which were confused, and overladen with moral dialogue. Of the plot we cannot give a very clear description. There was a feeble-minded old man, played by Mr. Cullenford; and a deep young man, wanting to inherit his property, personated by Mr. Boyce. Then there was Madame Celeste, as an unknown niece, dressed in a suit of man's clothes; and Mr. Lambert as a villanous lawyer; and Mr. O. Smith as an Adelphi agricultural ruffian; and Mr. Worrell as a walking lover of high principles; and all these characters plotted, and tried to poison, and made false wills, and insulted unprotected orphans, until at last proper justice was done to everybody, and the unknown niece came into a great deal of money. Far more entertaining was the comic business with Mr. Paul Bedford as Mr. Toffey, a lollipop-maker in the Borough; clever Mrs. Frank Mathews, as his bustling wife; Mr. Howe as a medical student, and Mr. Munyard as Pegg, a lawyer's clerk; who, amongst them, made such fun, that the audience were kept in roars of laughter whenever they were on the stage.

The piece was too long, and somewhat faulty in construction; it played, too, nearly two hours and three quarters. The story had to be gathered from tedious dialogues and narratives rather than the action of the drama. It will bear considerable curtailment. It was capitally acted throughout; still we prefer Madame Celeste in striking melo-dramatic parts, such as Miami and Satan. In this piece her last scene was the best, and she was loudly applauded. Mr. Boyce was effective, but he should avoid a tendency to throw himself into conventional attitudes, which, at times, remind one of the "penny plain and twopence coloured" style. Mr. O. Smith's acting was, as it always is, that of a great artist; and Mr. Lambert was very natural as the rascally lawyer. We were chiefly amused, however, with Mr. Howe, whose medical student was amazingly comical, and Mr. Munyard, who had one rich scene as the clerk, and played it admirably. The applause at the end was very general, and the curtain drew up again to allow the principal dramatis personæ to receive the renewed approbation of the audience. The house was crowded. Mr. Webster was to appear afterwards in the comic drama of "Used Up."

Mr. Macready continues to draw great houses at the Surrey, and has been playing King Lear during the week. It is stated, however, in theatrical circles, that the actual profits to the management are not so great as they were during the engagements of the Misses Cushman; but we do not give this upon any certain authority

Vauxhall was announced to close last evening, after the most prosperous season ever known. The proprietors have not only made up all the losses of former years, but must have cleared a large sum besides. The arrangements generally have reflected great credit on the directors; and the old-established connection between the illumination lamps and umbrellas appears to have been thoroughly broken up.

We believe the piece of "Love's Telegraph," produced last week at the Princess' Theatre, is a translation of a French comedietta, "Le Gant et l'Eventail," in which Madame Albert and Madame Doche played in Paris.

A Whale Caught in the Thames.—On Wednesday afternoon, considerable curiosity was excited at Deptford-green, by the appearance of a large whale, which Thomas Wetherfield and some other Deptford watermen had caught in the Thames, between Blackwall and Greenwich. The creature was ultimately placed in a shed at the rear of the Sir John Falstaff Tavern, Deptford-green. It measured twelve feet in length, the width of the tail being three feet

Death of the Earl of Yarborough. The Queen steamer, which arrived on Thursday at Southampton, with the [illegible] mails, brings intelligence of the decease of the Earl of Yarborough. The noble Lord was found dead in his bed at Vigo, on the 10th inst., after having retired to rest on the previous evening in his usual health. His remains are now being conveyed to England in the Kestrel Royal Yacht Squadron yacht, which sailed from Vigo two days before the Queen. His Lordship had been in declining health for some time, but it is reported that the immediate cause of death was in consequence of his Lordship having partaken rather freely of some grapes in an unripe state, of which he was known to be very fond. Lord Yarborough was Commodore of the Royal Yacht Squadron at Cowes.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

The New Bishop.—We hear that the Hon. and Rev. Mr. Villiers, the Rector of St. George's, Bloomsbury, is mentioned as likely to be the new Bishop.

Church Extension.—A new church is in course of erection opposite Vaughan-terrace, Hoxton. It is a spacious and elegant structure, and is expected to be ready for consecration before the close of the present year.

New Church of St. Matthias.—On Wednesday, the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor performed the ceremony of laying the first stone of a new Protestant church in Hare-street, Brick-lane, Spitalfields, to be dedicated to St. Matthias.

Appointment.—The Rev. William Cadman, M.A., of Catharine Hall, Cambridge, Curate of St. George's Bloomsbury, to be Minister of Park Chapel, Chelsea, vacant by the preferment of the Rev. John C. Miller, M.A., to the rectory of St. Martin's, Birmingham. Patron, John Dean Paul, Esq.

Vacancies.—The Rectory of St. Bride's, Fleet-street, vacant by the promotion of the Rev. Thomas Dale to the vicarage of St. Pancras, has not yet been filled up. The nomination rests with the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. A prebendal stall in St. Paul's Cathedral, also vacant by Mr. Dale's promotion, still remains to be filled up. It is in the gift of the Bishop of London.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

Fatal Accident at the Whitebarn Colliery, near Newcastle.—A frightful accident occurred at this colliery, on Friday morning (last week), to Joseph Lovatt, an old man, 65 years of age. It appears that he was employed to attend to the engine fire from six o'clock at night till six in the morning; and, on the morning in question, he was seen, about half-past three o'clock, sitting in the engine-house, within a yard of the fly-wheel. On Mr. Platt and two or three of his men going to work, at half-past five, they found the engine stopped; and, on proceeding into the engine-house, deceased was discovered forced between the wall and the fly-wheel, a space of about four inches, hanging head downwards, and dreadfully crushed and mutilated. It is supposed that the deceased had fallen asleep, and neglected the fire, and that, on awakening, and finding the engine almost stopped, he got up in a hurry, and, stumbling, fell on the wheel, which appeared to have carried him about three parts round, and must have killed him instantly. When Mr. Platt arrived, at half-past five, the fire was quite out.

Three Lives Lost on the River.—On Sunday evening, a pleasure-boat, called the Miriam, went down the river to Erith, on an excursion. She was managed by Joseph Leonard, a waterman, of Blackwall, and another man conversant with the management of pleasure yachts. There were three gentlemen on board, whose names have not transpired. The wind freshened in the evening, and, while the boat was coming up the reach, one of the men went up aloft to reef the gaff topsail halyard, and, while he was doing so, a squall of wind caught the sail, and the top weight of the man caused the frail bark to capsize. Two of the party almost immediately disappeared. Leonard clung to the hatches for some time, but ultimately sank before assistance could reach him, and also met a watery grave. The other waterman and one of the gentlemen were saved.—Soon afterwards, a boat, containing seven persons, which had been down on a pleasure trip, was capsized by a squall near the same spot: six of the party clung to the boat, while Robert Hamilton, a waterman, swam towards a sailing barge at anchor, and made known the danger of his companions. The bargemen immediately put off in their boat, and saved the whole of the party, who were sent up to London in a steamer.

Robbery at the London and Joint-Stock Bank.—On Saturday afternoon, between two and three o'clock, a most barefaced robbery to the amount of nearly £350, was committed at the London and Joint-Stock Bank upon a gentleman named Goslin, of the firm of Clarke and Goslin, Northend Maltings, Fulham, maltsters. Mr. Edward Goslin, about the time mentioned, attended at the counter of the above bank, for the purpose of paying in money on account of the firm. While standing there he felt a slight tug at his coat, and, turning round, he observed a gentlemanly-looking man, attired in a shooting-jacket, going rapidly out of the bank, but he unfortunately took no notice of the circumstance, and gave no alarm; though, when he came to pay in the money, he found that his pocket-book had been adroitly abstracted, with its contents, which consisted of notes and gold, &c., amounting to £324 2s. 11d., besides overdue bills, and sundry letters and memoranda. The pocket-book was of Russian leather, with a steel clasp, and the notes were one Bank of England £300, No. 37,541, dated May 11, 1846; a £20, No. 70,564, dated May 5, 1846; four sovereigns, and 2s. 11d.

Collision on the Eastern Counties Railway.—On Monday, as an excursion train, consisting of thirty carriages, impelled by two engines, was on its way to town from Ipswich, it came into collision with a truck which had been left on the rail, and caused serious injury to three persons. Mr. Taylor, the chief of the locomotive department, was on one of the engines, the train being unusually large. On reaching the Brentwood incline, the gradient of which is 1 in 90, the drivers, on account of the immense weight of the train, shut off the steam, but had got only a short distance, when they observed a truck standing upon the up line. The breaks were applied and the engines reversed, but the weight of the train was so great that it could not be stopped and the collision prevented. The men upon the engines having done all in their power, thought of their own safety, and jumped off the engines, which almost immediately after came in violent contact with the truck, which was smashed to pieces. By the shock many of the passengers were thrown from their seats, but none of them were seriously injured. The men who jumped off the engine were not so fortunate. Mr. Taylor, and two of the engine-drivers, were seriously injured; Mr. Taylor's thigh being fractured. They were conveyed to town, and it is hoped may recover. The parties who left the truck upon the line were given into custody.

The Fatal Accident on the Nottingham and Lincoln Railway.—The adjourned Inquest upon the body of Henry Glover, who was killed by the unfortunate accident which occurred at Gonalstone, on the Nottingham and Lincoln line of railway, was resumed in the Committee-room of the General Hospital (Nottingham), on Monday morning. Evidence confirmatory of the account which appeared in our last paper was given, and the Jury returned as their verdict, "That the deceased was accidentally killed by an engine being thrown off the line, caused by the breaking of a spring attached to the fore-wheel, such spring being apparently in a defective state."

Loss of Four Lives from the Falling of a Railway Tunnel.—A most fearful accident, involving the loss of four lives, happened on Saturday evening, by the falling of a portion of the Marley tunnel, now in course of construction near Ashburton, for the South Devon Railway. During the day a part of the frame-work on which the arch had been built was removed, and the brick work being supposed to be perfectly sound, the labourers were directed to displace other portions. The poor fellows were so engaged all the evening, when at about ten o'clock a heavy crack was heard, and more than fifty yards of the arch fell in, burying many of the miners and labourers. With sundry bruises all escaped, with the exception of four poor creatures, named Henry Bigwood, William Parnell, John Polhill, and John Setcher. Immediately on their being missed, active measures were taken to remove the earth, and in the course of three or four hours they were recovered. Their bodies presented a shocking sight. Notwithstanding their appalling injuries, the unfortunate men were found to be alive; they survived but a few minutes. At the Coroner's Inquest the verdict was "Accidental death."

Steam Boat Collision.—On Monday the Gnome Woolwich steamer was returning to London with three hundred passengers on board, and when in Northfleet Hope, a short distance from Gravesend, the Ruby, a Gravesend steamer, belonging to the Diamond Company, was seen approaching. By some mistake, the two vessels met, and a fearful collision took place. The Ruby, which is a steamer of large dimensions, struck the Gnome close to the larboard paddle-box, which she carried away. A scene of indescribable confusion took place on board the Gnome. A great many passengers were knocked down and bruised by the shock. The two steamers were locked in each other for some time, and the passengers in the smaller vessel rushed on board the Ruby as fast as possible. The two captains endeavoured to allay the excitement, and ultimately all the passengers on board the Gnome were transferred to the Ruby, which conveyed them to Gravesend, and took the disabled vessel in tow to the same place.

Fire and Loss of Life.—On Sunday morning, shortly before four o'clock, a fire, by which an aged female lost her life, broke out on the premises numbered 3b, Little Bartholomew-lane, West Smithfield, a very narrow and densely populated neighbourhood. It appears that the house in question is occupied by numerous families, and the deceased, a person named Jane Gould, tenanted the back room, first floor. The police, with the aid of the inmates, succeeded in getting the deceased removed, but she was so dreadfully burnt that she died almost immediately afterwards. The whole of the other inmates fortunately succeeded in leaving the premises, and the fire was soon extinguished. At the inquest, held on Tuesday, it was stated that on the table there were two jugs which contained beer, and the general supposition is, that the deceased must have gone to bed intoxicated, leaving the candle on the table, which ultimately set fire to the bed clothes, and thus caused her death. A verdict of "Accidental death" was returned.

Accident on the York and Newcastle Railway.—A serious railway accident occurred near Sunderland on Monday morning, on the York and Newcastle line. The cause of the mischief appears to have been the breaking of one of the crank pins, while the train was going at the usual rate of about twenty-five miles an hour. When the pin broke, the connecting rod of the engine dropped, and came in contact with a cross-sleeper. The engine and tender were then jerked off the rails, and turned completely over; the carriages went over an embankment on the opposite side, ran into a field, and turned upside down. The tender was smashed to pieces, and the engine very much damaged. The engineman, Hall, and the fireman, are very seriously injured, the latter especially so. Happily there were very few passengers, and they most surprisingly escaped uninjured.

Fatal Accident whilst Shooting.—On Friday (last week), a disastrous accident occurred at Horndon-on-the-Hill, Essex, by which Mr. Greenaway, son of Mr. Greenaway, farmer at Orsett, lost his life, his gun accidentally going off, and lodging the contents in his body. On Saturday, an inquest was held on the body at Orsett, before Mr. C. C. Lewis, when Mr. R. B. Jordison, surgeon, said the deceased, who was nineteen years old, was out with him shooting at Horndon-on-the-Hill; he was in the act of getting over a hedge, and had climbed up the bank, witness following him, when he found there was a ditch two feet or two feet and a half wide; at this time he saw his gun, which was a double-barrelled one, sticking in the hedge, and the deceased drawing it after him; both the hammers were at that time down, but one of them having caught in a bough was raised up, and the gun immediately exploded; witness got on the bank immediately and found him standing on his feet, and he exclaimed, drawing the cap off with one hand, "Oh, Mr. Jordison, I have shot myself dead." He then fell, and was dead in two minutes. The Jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

POLICE.

The Revolting Desecration of a Churchyard.—Two men, named John Ruffey and Samuel Wright, carters in the service of Mr. John Gould, dust contractor for the district, have appeared before Mr. Broughton, at Worship-street, to answer the charge of having unlawfully and indecently exposed certain portions of human dead bodies, and also certain coffins and portions thereof, in and near a certain highway, in the parish of Shoreditch, on the 5th inst. A great deal of evidence was given in support of the facts, which were stated in our paper last week. Mr. Grueber, on the part of the churchwardens, said the facts of the case were, that in consequence of the accidental sinking of the vicar's vault, during the construction of a new sewer about eighteen months since, such an intolerable effluvium had arisen from the displacement of the coffins as to cause the greatest annoyance to the parishioners. An order had, therefore, been issued by the vestry for the clearance of the vault, which the churchwardens had not only given strict injunctions to carry out with the utmost decorum and propriety, but had personally inspected the sifting of the refuse for nearly a week, and caused every bone that could be discovered to be re-interred in the vault. They had several witnesses in attendance to prove that their orders had been literally obeyed, and that the bones which were afterwards found in the field must necessarily have been brought from some other place. The most positive directions had also been given to Mr. Gould, who had been employed by other parishes, on similar occasions, to provide a proper receptacle for the remains, which he had engaged to do, and the first intimation the churchwardens had received of his non-compliance with their directions was conveyed to them through the public journals. Mr. Broughton expressed himself of opinion that a most improper course had been adopted in employing a common dust-contractor to fulfil such a duty, which ought to have been performed under the superintendence of the churchwardens, and with the direct sanction of the ordinary of the diocese, in a ground selected by themselves. The whole transaction was a gross outrage on public decency, which had no parallel within his recollection; and, as it was clearly an indictable offence, he should require the defendants to put in bail to answer the charge at the sessions, themselves in £30, and two sureties in £25, and leave it for the parish authorities of Shoreditch to carry out the prosecution.

An Expert Practitioner.—John Edwin, who looked like a simple country lad, was on Monday charged, at the Mansion House, with having stolen several silk handkerchiefs in the course of his rambles on Saturday. The prisoner turned out to be a perfect "Filch," and a philosopher. Haydon, a policeman, stated that, on Saturday evening, as he was coming ashore from a steam-boat at Swan Pier, he saw the prisoner close behind a gentleman, and observed, from certain movements, that "something was about to be done." The prisoner walked deliberately out of the vessel, and the officer went round, met him in Swan-lane, and took him into custody, having given notice to the gentleman to follow. Upon the person of the prisoner were found five silk handkerchiefs, one of which was at once identified. One was tied neatly round the calf of each leg, another was added in like manner to the size of each arm, while the fifth was ingeniously disposed about his waist. He had made each of the handkerchiefs change its master on board the steamer, in the short voyage from Hungerford-market to London-bridge. As the prisoner was going to the station-house, with a crowd behind, he said, "Well, it is a bad job, and no mistake; but it was to be, and how could such as me stop it?" The Lord Mayor: Well, prisoner, you had a good day's work, I perceive. The prisoner: I have been dreadful hard up, your Lordship, I do assure you; why, I have been obliged to beg. I tried everything before I tried this, but it wouldn't do.—The Lord Mayor: You are an expert hand, and I shall send you for trial.—The prisoner: Don't send me for trial. There will be no merit in convicting me. It's too plain a case (Laughter.) Consider my poverty, this once, please you, my Lord, and give me a "summary."—The Lord Mayor: No, you won't do for London.—The prisoner: Well, my Lord, if you can't be persuaded to do a kind thing, why then I must do as you wish.—He was committed for trial.

A Country Post-Master Charged with Stealing Money from a Letter.—George Norris Kernot, postmaster of Nockley, near Rayleigh, in Essex, was charged at Bow-street on Tuesday, before Mr. Jardine, with stealing a £5 Bank of England note from a letter passing through his office, the property of the Postmaster-General. Mr. Peacock, solicitor to the Post-office, conducted the prosecution; and Mr. Parry appeared as counsel for the prisoner. Mr. Robert Nash, 23, Aldgate High-street, draper, identified the £5 note produced, No. 94,497, dated 13th October, 1845, as having passed through his hands. In the afternoon of Friday, previous to the 4th of September, he received it from the prisoner, who called at his shop and made a purchase to the amount of £1 6s. 6d., for which he gave him the note produced. Witness asked him his address, and he said "Brown, Billericay," which witness endorsed on the note. Matthew Peak, a constable employed in the General Post-office, proved that he apprehended the prisoner on Monday morning. He had been sent to inquire about a £5 note, inclosed in a letter posted on the 22d March, on board of the Queen of the French steamer, at Folkstone, and directed "Mr. Chambers, at Nockley, near Rayleigh, in Essex," which was not in the letter when it was delivered. The prisoner stated that he recollected the circumstance, having been applied to about it; upon which witness told him that the note had been changed at the shop of Mr. Nash, and the prisoner admitted having purchased dresses there, at which time he offered the shopkeeper either of two notes, and he preferred that of the Bank of England. Witness asked him if he recollected from whom he had received it, and he replied that he might have taken it over the counter. Witness inquired how he came to give the name of Brown of Billericay, and his reply was that such must have been the name and address he had received, but he could not refer him to any such person. Mrs. Chambers, wife of a Captain in the navy, said that in the month of March she was residing with her brother, at Nockley, in Essex, and recollected a letter having reached her, in consequence of which she went to the post-office, where she saw the prisoner, and showing him the letter she told him it had been opened, and that it should have contained money. He replied that she should write to her husband and make more inquiries. Witness told him that it was a five-pound note, and that about an hour previously she had received information from her husband of the number and date. In answer to the learned counsel, witness said that she had known the prisoner for about twenty years as a chemist and druggist, and she always understood that he bore a very high character in the village, and she had frequently dealt with him for goods. Mr. Parry applied for bail to be accepted, which could be procured to any amount, on the grounds that a considerable time had elapsed between the loss of the note and the apprehension of the prisoner, who had borne an irreproachable character for very many years. Mr. Jardine said that he could not entertain the question of bail, and the prisoner was ordered to be remanded.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange (Friday).—The arrivals of English wheat for our market during the present week have been very moderate, yet the show of samples of that article to-day was tolerably good. The attendance of buyers being small the demand was very heavy, and, in some instances, the quotations were not supported. The sale for foreign wheat was very dull, yet, as the holders were firm, we can notice no alteration in value. The supply of barley was small, yet the demand was in a sluggish state, and the inferior parcels were 1s per quarter lower. Superfine season-made malt was in good request, at full prices; otherwise the demand was in a sluggish state. Oats, beans, and peas—the supplies of which were small—moved off slowly, at late rates.

Arrivals.—English: wheat, 2730; barley, 990; oats, 1150. Irish: Wheat, ——; barley, ——; oats, 2270. Foreign: wheat, 6620; barley, 2270; oats, 4040. Flour, 2340 sacks; malt, 2680 quarters. Of foreign flour we have received 11,810 barrels.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 47s to 57s; ditto white, 52s to 61s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 47s to 54s; ditto white, 52s to 59s; rye, 33s to 35s; grinding barley, 29s to 31s; distilling, 32s to 34s; malting ditto, 36s to 40s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 63s; brown ditto, 53s to 55s; Kingston and Ware, 64s to 65s; Chevalier, 65s to 66s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 26s to 27s; potato ditto, 29s to 33s; Youghal and Cork, black, 24s to 28s; ditto, white, 24s to 30s; tick beans, new, 35s to 37s; ditto old, 38s to 39s; grey peas, 37s to 39s; maple, 38s to 42s; white, 48s to 55s; boilers, 55s to 60s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 48s to 50s; Suffolk, 40s to 44s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 40s to 42s, per 280 lbs. Foreign—Free wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, —s to —s; ditto white, 54s to 64s per quarter.

The Seed Market.—A good business has been doing in the best English linseed cakes, at [illegible] in the quotations. In all other kinds of seeds the transactions have been on a limited scale, at late rates.

Linseed, English, sowing, 55s to 60s; Baltic, crushing, 38s 9d to 41s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 41s to 42s; Hempseed, 36s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 14s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 11s to 15s; white ditto, 10s to 13s. Tares, 5s 6d to 7s 0d per bushel. English Rapeseed, new, £21 to £22 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 10s to £12 0s; ditto, foreign, £7 10s to £8 12s per 1000; Rapeseed cakes, £5 0s to £5 2s per ton. Canary, 46s to 52s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, 45s to 60s; extra, 25s to 55s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign, red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis, are from 8d to 8½d; of household ditto, 6½d to 7½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 50s 0d; barley, 33s 7d; oats, 23s 5d; rye, 32s 4d; beans, 40s 11d; peas, 38s 10d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 47s 3d; barley, 29s 3d; oats, 23s 4d; rye, 31s 4d; beans, 40s 0d; peas, 37s 1d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 10s 0d; barley, 3s 0d; oats, 1s 6d; rye, 3s 0d; beans, 3s 0d; peas, 3s 0d.

Tea.—This article continues in a very inactive state; yet we can notice no alteration in value. The quantity on offer is not to say extensive.

Sugar.—Rather an extensive business has been transacted this week in most kinds of raw sugar, the prices of which are well supported. Refined goods, 1s lighter; brown lumps, selling at 62s to 62s 6d, and standard do., 63s to 63s 6d per cwt.

Coffee.—This market rules somewhat inactive, yet we have no material alteration to notice in the general quotations.

Rice.—Owing to the increased value of corn all kinds of rice command a ready sale, at very high prices; good white Bengal producing 21s 6d [illegible]

Provisions.—The supply of Irish butter [illegible] case the demand for [illegible] article is heavy, at a dec[illegible] Carlow, landed, 94s to [illegible], Clonmel 92s to 96s, Carrick, 92s to 95s; Cork, 90s to 97s; Waterford, 88s to 90s, and [illegible]rick, 88s to 90s per cwt. On board, or for future delivery, next to nothing doing, although the rates from Ireland come high. Dutch butter is heavy, and 2s per cwt. cheaper. The best quality may be quoted at 96s to 100s per cwt. A good business is doing in English butter, on easier terms. Fine Dorset, 98s to 102s; middling ditto, 92s to 96s; Devon 94s to 98s per cwt, and fresh, 10s to 12s per dozen. Bacon is a dull sale, and somewhat cheaper. A few transactions have been concluded, for forward delivery, at 56s to 60s per cwt. Prime small Irish hams are in brisk request, at 86s to 90s per cwt. Barrelled beef and pork 2s 6d per tierce higher.

Tallow.—A good business has been doing in tallow, at very full prices, viz., from 42s to 42s 9d per cwt. For delivery a few contracts have been made, at 42s to 42s 6d. Town tallow, 41s 6d net cash.

Oils.—We have a steady sale for all descriptions of oil, the prices of which are fully supported.

Hay and Straw.—Old meadow hay, £3 0s to £4 0s; new ditto, £2 5s to £3 10s, old clover, £4 10s to £5 10s; new ditto, £3 10s to £4 14s; oat straw, £1 8s to £1 10s; wheat straw, £1 10s to £1 12s per load.

Wool.—The public sales are progressing steadily, and previous rates are well supported.

Potatoes.—The best samples of potatoes are in good request, at 100s per ton; but the diseased parcels command very little attention.

Hops (Friday).—An immense quantity of new hops has reached us this week, principally from Kent and Sussex, hence, as the general quality is very fine, very little difficulty is experienced on the part of the dealers in making selections. The demand is in a very inactive state, and prices rule miserably low. Yearling and old hops are a mere drug, and nominal in value. The duty is called £200,000. New Sussex pockets, £4 0s to £4 10s; Weald of Kent ditto, £4 2s to £4 12; Mid Kent ditto, £4 16s to £5 10s per cwt.

Coals (Friday).—Original Tanfield, 12s 6d; West Wylam, 15s 9d; Killingworth, 15s; Riddell's, 15s 9d; East Hetton 16s; Wearmouth, 16s 9d; and Caradoc, 16s 9d per ton.

Smithfield (Friday).—The supply of beasts on sale here to-day was seasonably extensive as to numbers, but deficient in quality. Comparatively speaking, the beef trade was heavy, and Monday's prices were with difficulty supported. We had on offer 300 oxen and cows, [illegible] sheep and lambs, 21 calves from Holland. With sheep we were scantily supplied, owing to which the mutton trade was active, at fully previous currencies. In lambs a fair amount of business was doing, at late rates. Prime small calves moved off readily, other kinds of veal slowly, at unaltered quotations. Pigs were in steady request, and prices were well supported. Milch cows were a slow sale, at from £16 to £19 each, including their small calf.

Per 8lb. to sink the offals.—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 1d to 3s 0d; se[illegible] [illegible]d to 3s 6d; prime large oxen, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime Scots, &c., 4s [illegible] inferior sh[illegible] [illegible] calves, 3s 10d to [illegible] hogs, 3s 8d to 4s 6d; neat small porkers, [illegible] 10d; lambs, 4s 8d t[illegible] calves, 18s [illegible] 30s; and quarter old store pigs, [illegible] Beasts, 94[illegible] sheep and lambs, 6660; calves, 383; pigs, 450.

Newgate and Leadenhall [illegible]).—We had a steady demand this morning, at full prices. Per 8 lb. by the carcase.—Inferior beef, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; middling ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; prime large ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; ditto small ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; large pork, 3s 6d to 4s 2d; inferior mutton, 3s 6d to 3s 10d; middling ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; prime ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; veal, 3s 10d to 4s 10d; small pork, 4s 4d to 4s 10d; lamb, 4s 8d to 5s 8d.

Robert Herbert.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Money continues plentiful in the Discount Market, and its current value exhibits a tendency to decline still further. No disposition, however, appears on the part of the Directors of the Bank of England to again reduce the rate of discount. The Half-Yearly Meeting on Thursday passed off with great unanimity, the rest having increased by £250,866 within the year.

At this period of the year, dulness and absence of business are customary in all the Stock Markets, the leading dealers usually absenting themselves until the October dividends are payable. The present month has certainly offered no exception to the general rule, transactions for the last week having been of the most limited character. Consols have varied about one quarter per cent., and close flatly at 95⅞ ¾ for money, and 96 for account. Bank Stock improved to 211½, upon the result of the meeting; and Exchequer Bills are a point better than the previous day's quotations, closing at 10 to 13 pm. The remaining English Securities are closed until after the October dividends.

There has been some little animation in the Foreign Market, arising from the half monthly Settlement, which, however, passed off without difficulty. Portuguese has not recovered any portion of the previous week's depression, closing at the same price, 43. Spanish Stock has been dealt in; but towards the close of the week prices declined, from the business decreasing. In Mexican but few dealings have taken place, but prices were tolerably maintained at the close of the week. Dutch and Belgian have been dealt in at the following prices:—Equador Bonds, 3⅞; Mexican Five per Cent. 1846, Account, 25⅝; Spanish Five per Cent. 1840, 27½; Ditto, Account, 27¾; Ditto, Three per Cent., 38⅝; Ditto, Account, 38⅞; Belgian Four-and-a-Half per Cent., 97⅝; Dutch Four per Cent. Certificates, 95½; Ditto Bonds, 94½.

The Share Market continues dull, and the absence of business alone, in itself creates depression. Prices, at the close of the week, were barely maintained, as the subjoined list will show:—Birmingham and Gloucester, 130; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 5⅝; Caledonian, 15⅞; Ditto Half Shares, 1¼; Cambridge and Oxford, 1⅝; Chester and Holyhead, 24⅝; Direct Northern, 1¾; Eastern Counties, 22½; Ditto New, 7 pm.; Ditto York Extension, 2⅛; East Lincolnshire, ½; Edinburgh and Perth, 2½; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), 30; Great Western, 139 x n; Ditto Half Shares, 80 x n; Ditto Fifths, 31½ x n; Hull and Selby, 105½; Ditto Half Shares, 50⅞; Leeds and Bradford, 70½; London and Brighton, 60 x n; London and Croydon, 22 x n; London and North Western, 200½; Do., Quarters, 23½; Do. do, New Shares, 14⅞ pm.; Do. Fifths, 20½; London and South Western, 71; Lynn and Ely, 15½; Manchester and Leeds, Fifths, 9½ ex. d.; Manchester and Birmingham, 76; Do. Quarters (B), 12⅝; Do. Quarters (C), 9; Midland, 137½; Do. New, 3⅞; Newcastle and Berwick, 27⅝; North British, 36½; Ditto Half Shares, 15⅞; Ditto Carlisle Extension, 4; North Staffordshire, 3⅝ premium; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 7⅞; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 1½ dis; Rugby, Leamington, and Warwick, 3 pm; Scottish Central, 19⅝; Shropshire Union, ½ dis; South Eastern and Dover, 40½ x d; Ditto, No. 1, 23½ x d; Vale of Neath, ⅝; Waterford and Kilkenny, 5¾; West Riding Union, 2⅝ pm; Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth, 5; York and Newcastle, New, 11; York and Selby, 71½; Boulogne and Amiens, 11⅝; Italian and Austrian, 1¾; Northern of France Constituted, 14⅝; Orleans and Vierzon, 15; Paris and Lyons Constituted, 6 x Int; Rouen and Havre, 28⅛; London and Westminster, 20⅛; Union of London, 11½.

Saturday Morning.—The Consol Market did not vary yesterday, but Spanish was depressed on the arrival of the information that Don Carlos had escaped from Bourges. The Five per Cents closed at 26½, Three per Cents, 38⅛. The Share Market was steady; London and North Westerns closed better.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 15.

CROWN OFFICE, SEPT. 14.

MEMBER RETURNED TO SERVE IN THIS PRESENT PARLIAMENT.

[illegible]—Edward Strutt, Esq.

BANKRUPTS.—H. DRYSDALE, Lamb's Conduit-street, auctioneer. J. HARDY, Castle Donington, Leicestershire, cattle-dealer. H. DEVERILL, Stoke-upon-Trent, Staffordshire, corn-factor. J. MILNES, J. LANG, J. WILBY, and T. BROOK, Littletown, Yorkshire, scribbling-millers. W. M. HIGGINS, Birmingham, laceman. P. M'SHANE, Dundalk, Ireland, cattle-dealer. W. WARBURTON, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, grocer.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—J. RICHMOND, Glasgow, share-broker. [illegible] STEWART, Edinburgh, coach-proprietor. E. STEVEN, Glasgow, manufacturer. G. LAWRIE, Glasgow, commission agent. T. GEMMILL, Greenock, commission-agent. H. M'DONALD, Glasgow, chemist.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 18.

DOWNING-STREET, SEPT. 16.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint the Earl of Elgin and Kincardine to be Captain-General and Governor-in Chief of [illegible] provinces of Canada, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia, and of the Island of Prin[illegible] General of all her Majesty's provinces on the Continent of North Am[illegible] Island of Prince Edward.

DOWNING-STREET, SEPT. 18.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Francis Partridge, Esq., to be Deputy Commissary of Police for the Island of Mauritius.

WHITEHALL, SEPT. 16.—The Queen has been pleased to nominate, constitute, and appoint the Right Honourable Sir James Robert George Graham, Bart., to be one of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, in the room of the Right Hon. Sir George Grey, Bart., resigned. The Queen has also been pleased to nominate the Right Hon. Sir George Grey, Bart., being one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, an Ecclesiastical Commissioner for England.

WAR-OFFICE, SEPT. 18.

9th Light Dragoons.—R. Houghton, to be Cornet, vice French.

Coldstream Regiment of Foot Guards.—Ensign E. H. Dering, to be Ensign and Lieutenant, vice Verner.

4th Foot. Lieut. W. Douglas to be Captain, vi[illegible] M. [illegible] Lynch. 29th: Brevet Major E. Lugard to be Captain, vice L'Estrang[illegible] 31st: Capt. H. P. [illegible] strange to be Captain, vice Lugard. 34th: Lieut. M. G. Best to be Adjutant, vice Bourke. [illegible]: Assist. Surgeon E. Robertson, M.D., to be Surgeon, vice Murray. 47th: Captain G. T[illegible] vice Patton. 54th: E. J. Mathias to be Ensign, vi[illegible] 81st: Lieut. C. R. Richardson to be Lieutenant, vice Maunsell. 62nd: Lieut. R. Maunsell [illegible] Lieutenant, vice Richardson. 68th: C. U. Shuttleworth to be Ensign, vice Dering. 60th: To be Captains without purchase—Lieut. G. Losack, Lieut. W. J. B. M. Moore. To be Lieutenants—Lieut. F. G. W. Fearon, Ensign G. B. Evans, Ensign D. Dunne, vice Losack. To be Ensigns—J. H. Belton, C. Gilborne, R. Fitzgerald, vice Evans; O. Coathupe, vice Dunne. To be Assistant-Surgeon—Assist.-Surg. R. V. George, M.D., vice Robertson. 74th: Capt. W. L. P. Patton to be Captain, vice Evans. 80th: Ensign R. C. Gordon to be Lieutenant, vice Brodie; Quartermaster Sergt. R. Crawford to be Ensign, vice Gordon; Lieut. G. Bodle to be Quartermaster, vice Hayes. 84th: Ensign D. O'Brien to be Lieutenant, vice M'Cann.

[illegible] West India Regiment: Ensign T. P. Wright to be Lieutenant, vice Potts. To be Ensigns without purchase: Sergeant Ma[illegible] P. M'Loughlin, vice Dagg, W. H. P. Strachan, vice [illegible]

3d West India Regiment: A. Concannon, M.D., to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice George.

Staff.—Brevet Lieut.-Col. H. Havelock to be Deputy Adjutant General to her Majesty's forces serving at Bombay, vice Lieut.-Col. Martin; Veterinary Surgeon C. Brett to [illegible] Depot at Maidstone, vice Black. [illegible] D. Murray, M.D., to be Staff Surgeon of the First Class, vice C. Q. Palmer.

WAR-OFFICE, SEPT. 18.

List of Non-Commissioned Officers and Private Soldiers of her Majesty's 10th Regiment of Foot, killed or died of wounds, received in Action with the Enemy on the Sutlej. W. Anderson, A. Betts, R. Blaxter, G. Bradley, J. Brady, T. Cleary, J. Connors, E. Evans, [illegible] Fitzgibbon, J. Gleeson (corporal), W. H. Graham (sergeant), H. Hartley, G. Hickson, [illegible] Kealy, M. K[illegible], P. Kirby, J. M'Coy, S. Mick, W. Moore, F. Norman, T. O'Connors, J. Oldnow, M. Piggott, [illegible] Pilkington, R. Robinson, J. Shepherd, W. Smith, H. Starkie, J. Thompson, H. Thornton, Turner (corporal), J. Tyrer.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, SEPT. 16.

Royal Artillery.—Second Lieut. E. E. R. Dyneley to be First Lieutenant, vice Mackie.

BANKRUPTS.—J. J. FRYER, Birchin-lane, Cornhill, City, stock and share-broker. J. [illegible]NDEN, Basingstoke, grocer. J. HATCHER, Poole, butcher. J. E. C. KOCH, Great Winchester-street, City, merchant. L. A. V. RUDOLPHI, Sunderland, general merchant. T. BARROW, Manchester, shirt and [illegible]

SCOTCH SEQUEST[illegible] Edinburgh, farrier. T. LORIMER, Glasgow, [illegible] Fraserburgh, draper. A. DEWAR, Dingwall, accountant.

BIRTHS

In Cumberland-place, the Lady Georgiana Gurdon Rebow, of a son.——The wife of J. Walter, jun., Esq., of a son.——At Vicarage-place, Kensington, Mrs. [illegible], of a daughter.——At Crowe Hall, near Downham, Norfolk, the lady of J. R. Fryer, Esq., of [illegible]——At Wadenhoe, Northamptonshire, the wife of Bulkley J. M. Praed, Esq., of a son.——At Beech Lodge, Great Marlow, Bucks, Mrs. Frederick Parker, of a son.——At Portsmouth, the wife of the Rev. E. W. Milner, of a son.——At No. 28, Brunswick-square, Mrs. Roberts, of a son.——On the 16th, at Lavender-terrace, Lavender-hill, Mrs. James Vizetelly, of a son.

MARRIAGES

At Turnham-green, William Harman, Esq., to Catherine, only daughter of the late Lieut.-Colonel Dan[illegible]——At St. Mary's, Bryanstone-square, the Rev. Joseph Thackeray, M.A., to [illegible] Ellen, youngest daughter of the late John Robinson, Esq.——At St. George's, [illegible]bury, Octavian Blewitt, Esq., to Anne Roper, second daughter of the late D. E. Williams, Esq.——At St. Pancras Church, John A. Russell, Esq., to Martha, younger daughter of P. H. Bower, Esq.——At the Abbey Church, Malvern, Lieut.-Col. Eyre J. Crabbe, K.H., to Harriet Louisa, widow of the late Vice-Admiral Hollis.——[illegible] Liverpool, on the 16th instant, Mr. Charles Dyce, of London, to Eve, third daughter of the late Mr. P. Nathan, of Castle-s[illegible], Liverpool.——On August 20th, [illegible] Church, Bradford, W[illegible], by the Rev. H. Harvey, Vicar, F. Walters, Esq., of London, to Miss Emma Phillis S[illegible] Alford, youngest daughter of Mr. B[illegible]——At Beckenham, Kent, the Rev. Francis Bourdillon, [illegible] Su[illegible], fourth daughter of Launcelot Holland, Esq.——At St. George's Church, Hanover-square, George Chapman, Esq., to Lucy, o[illegible] daughter of the late Weston Barwise, Esq.——On the 10th inst., at Havant, by the Rev. Edmund Lyon, Adolphus Frederick Carey, Esq., B.A., Wadham College, Oxford, son of Thomas Carey, Esq., of Royal Guernsey, and Grandson of the late George Jackson, Esq., of Enniscoe, County Mayo, Ireland, and M.P. for that County, to Harriet Mary, younger daughter of the late Vice-Admiral Sir Jahleel Brenton, Bart., K.C.B., K.S.F.

DEATHS

At Rome, Jane Victoire Duch[illegible]sse de Fleury, relict of the late Duke de Fleury, [illegible] the Bedchamber of Louis XVIII.——In Eaton-square, Ann, th[illegible]——At Cambridge-terrace, Hyde-park, Ellen, the wife of George Vernon Fankes, Esq.——At the Rectory, Minchinhampton, Charlotte, the wife of the Rev. Charles Whately.——At Blackheath, in the 83rd year of her age, Lucy, relict of Richard Bouzer, Esq.——Richard Robinson Merritt, Esq., in the 44th [illegible] Brompton, Mrs. Richardson, relict of the late [illegible] Brompton, Miss Emma Bromley, daughter of the late W. Bromley, [illegible]——William Tickler, Esq., late of Chilworth House, near Guildford.——At Dover, Charlotte, the relict of the late Lieut.-Col. William Kennedy.——At Bridgewater-square, Henry Verinder, Esq., of St. Paul's Churchyard.——Sept. 12, at Dundalk, county Louth, of convulsions, while teething, the only daughter of Major Burnett, aged twenty-five weeks.——At Cowes, Isle of Wight, the Hon. Albert Duncombe, eldest [illegible] Lord and Lady Feversham, aged twenty.——At Kingstown, near Dublin, Arthur Williamson, Esq., of Rathmines.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. B. P." — "Rapid." — "S. C." — "Omega." — The new Indian Problem just published this month in the "Chess-Player's Chronicle," is printed correctly: the difficulty you find in solving it arises from its construction, which is masterly. We never remember to have seen a more beautiful piece of Chess strategy, in the same number of moves.

"D. N. T." — If you wish to see the Problem named, you should purchase the Number of the work in which it appears.

"C. R. L." — Problems received, with thanks.

"C. O." — The scale of charges for advertisements can be got at the Office, but you surely cannot meditate calling publicly for a competitor to play Chess for the ridiculous stakes mentioned. You will find the whole of the games in question given in the "Chess-Player's Chronicle" for next month.

"Sopraccita." — We have no means of referring to the six-move Problem just now; when we have, the solution shall be given. In the meanwhile, you may exert your ingenuity upon it in full assurance that it is perfectly correct as we printed it.

"Marazion." — "Heydebrant's Handbook" is written in German; the price, 12s. Jaenisch's work on the Openings is in French, and sells here for 18s.

"E. M.," The Hazels. — A Knight and Bishop can effect checkmate in about thirty moves, commencing with the adverse King, in any part of the Chess-board.

"J. R. R." — The position you send as original is as old as Damiano, and known to every tyro in our days as "Philidor's Legacy."

"S. Sphinx." — We cannot look at Problems which come unaccompanied by solutions.

"W. H. C." — The Problems you enumerate are all of the highest class. The best two-move position we are acquainted with is that by Mr. Kling, which recently appeared in this Journal.

Solutions by "B. M.," "C. O.," "L. S. D.," "Miranda," "Amateur No. 1," "Park," "Sancho," "W. P.," "Sopraccita," "J. J. B.," "Valley-field," "G. A. H.," Leeds; "F. C.," Paisley; "T. B.," Bradford; "J. W. D.," Seacombe; "W. H. C.," "G. A. H.," Leeds; "F. P.," and "W. W. N.," are correct.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM, No. 139.

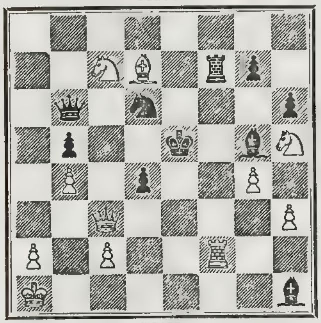
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. B to K B 7th (ch)	R takes B (best)	5. Kt to Kt 6th (ch)	K to Kt sq
2. Q takes K R P (ch)	K takes Q	6. R to K 8th (ch)	R to B sq
3. R to K R 3rd (ch)	K to Kt sq	7. R takes R (ch)	K to R 2nd
4. R to B 8th (ch)	K takes R	8. R to R 8th—mate

PROBLEM No. 140.

By Mr. H. P., of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

White to play and mate in five moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

CHESS MATCH BETWEEN MM. STAUNTON AND HARRWITZ.

The following is the result of the play in this encounter, up to the present time:—

Pawn and Two-Move Games	.. ..	Staunton 3	.. ..	Harrwitz 2
Pawn and Move Games	.. ..	Staunton 0	.. ..	Harrwitz 5
Games without Odds	.. ..	Staunton 5	.. ..	Harrwitz 0
		Total 8		Total 7

CONTINUATION OF MESSRS. HORWITZ'S AND KIESERITZKIJ'S GAMES.

Game the Tenth.

White (Mr. H.)	Black. (Mr. K.)	White. (Mr. H.)	Black. (Mr. K.)
1. K P two	K P two	11. K B P two	Q takes K P
2. K Kt to B 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	12. Q takes Q	Kt takes Q
3. K B to Q B 4th	K B to Q B 4th	13. K R to K sq	K B P two
4. Q Kt P two	B takes P	14. Q Kt to Q 2d	Q Kt to K 3d
5. Q B P one	B to Q 3d (a)	15. Kt takes Kt	P takes Kt
6. Castles	Q to K 2d	16. R takes P	K Kt P one
7. Q P two	Q Kt to Q sq	17. Q B to R 3d	K to B 2d
8. P takes P	B takes P	18. Q R to K B sq	Q P one
9. Kt takes B	Q takes Kt	19. K Kt P two	K R to Kt sq
10. Q to Q 3d	K Kt to B 3d	20. Q R to K sq (b)

(a) This is, without exception, the worst defence to the Evans' gambit we know of.
(b) A lively, well-played game, on the part of Mr. Horwitz.

Game the Eleventh.

White (Mr. K.)	Black (Mr. H.)	White (Mr. K.)	Black (Mr. H.)
1. Q P two	K B P two	35. K R to K R sq	Q Kt P one
2. Q B P two	K P one	36. Q R to Q B sq	Q B P one
3. Q Kt to B 3rd	K Kt to B 3rd	37. K R to Q sq	Q R P two
4. K Kt to B 3rd	K B to K 2nd	38. K R to Q 4th	Q Kt P one
5. K P one	Q Kt P one	39 K to K 2nd	Q R P one
6. K B to Q 3rd	Q B to Q Kt 2nd	40. K to Q 2nd (c)	Q R P takes P
7. Q Kt P one	K Kt P one	41. Q R P takes P	R to Q R sq
8. Q B to Kt 2nd	Q B P two	42 Q R to B 2nd	R to Q R 6th
9. Q P one	K P takes P	43. P takes P	P takes P
10. Q Kt takes P	Castles	44. R to Q 8th	P one (ch)
11. K B to K 2nd	K Kt takes Kt	45. K to Q 3rd	B to Q Kt 6th
12. P takes Kt	Q P one	46. R to Q B sq	R to Q R 7th
13. K R P two	K B to K B 3d	47. R to K 8th (ch)	B to K 3rd
14. B takes B	Q takes B	48. R to Q B's 2nd	R to Q R 2nd
15. K Kt to Kt 5th	K R P one	49 R to Q Kt 8th	R to Q R 5th
16. Kt to K 6th	K R to B 2nd	50. R to Q B sq	R to Q R 7th
17. Q R to B sq	Q Kt to R 3rd	51. R takes Q Kt P	R to Q 7th (ch)
18. B takes Kt	B takes B	52. K takes P	R takes K Kt P
19. K R to K R 3rd	R to K sq	53. R to Q R sq	R to K Kt 6th (d)
20. Q to her 2nd	Q B to Kt 2nd	54. R to Q R 5th (ch)	K to B 3rd
21. K R to Kt 3rd	K R to K 2nd	55. K to Q 3rd	K Kt P one
22. Q to her B 3rd	K to B 2nd	56. K to his 2nd	R to K R 6th
23. K to B sq	Q R to K Kt sq	57. R to Q R 6th	R to K R 7th (ch)
24. Q takes Q (ch)	K takes Q	58. K to B 3rd	R to K R 6th (ch)
Q R to Q sq	K to K 4th (a)	59 K to B 2nd	R takes P
26. K B P one	B takes P	60. R takes R	P takes R
27. Kt to B 4th	B to K B 2nd	61. K to B 3rd	P to R 6th
28. K to B 2nd	Q P one	62. K to Kt 3rd	P to R 4th
29. Kt to Q 3rd (ch)	K to Q 3rd	63. R to Q Kt 6th	P to R 5th (ch)
30 K B P one	R to K 5th	64 K to R 2nd	K to his 4th
31 Kt to K 5th	R takes Kt (b)	65. R to Q Kt 4th	B to Q 4th
32. P takes R (ch)	K takes P	66. R takes P	B to K Kt 7th
33 R to K B 3rd	B to K 3rd	67. K to Kt 3rd	B to K B 8th
34 K R to K R 3rd	R to Q B sq

Drawn Game.

(a) An excellent and quite an unexpected move.
(b) Relying on the strength of his Pawns. This portion of the game is well played by Black.
(c) Had he taken this offered Pawn, Black might have played R to Q R sq, secure of regaining a Pawn and acquiring a fine opening for his Rook
(d) A few moves back Black had an obviously easy winning game, but he has contrived to throw away all his advantage, and the position at this stage, if there is any choice, is rather in favour of his opponent.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 52.—By M. D'Orville. White.	Black.	No. 53.—By the Same. White.	Black.
K at Q R sq	K at his 5th	K at Q Kt 2nd	K at Q 4th
Q at K B 2nd	Q at K R 3rd	Q at her B 7th	Q at K 3rd
Kt at Q 7th	B at Q B sq	R at Q 3rd	B at Q R 4th
Kt at Q R 4th		Kt at Q 4th
White plays first, and mates in 3 moves.		White plays first, and mates in 3 moves.

No. 54.—By the Same.

White.	Black.	White.	Black.
K at Q B 6th	K at Q R 4th	Kt at Q R 4th	P's at Q Kt 5th and Q R 2nd
R at Q Kt 6th	Kt at K 5th	P at Q B 3rd

White to play, and mate in three moves.

Draughts.—A gentleman amateur, who has left his address at this office, is desirous of playing a match at Draughts, of twenty-one games, at one guinea each game, and ten guineas the main; on condition that he be allowed to score drawn games.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W. BATTY.—Patronised by her Most Gracious Majesty, Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Royal.—Immense success of the present magnificent attractions. Most positively the LAST TWO WEEKS of the SUMMER SEASON MONDAY, September 21 and During the Week, will be presented the Grand Historical Spectacle of THE MERCHANT STEED; or, The Flight of Damon, in which the whole strength of the Company, Double Stud and Rare Quadrupeds will appear. Popular SCENES of the CIRCLE, by the British and Foreign Professors. Clowns to the Arena, Messrs. Wallet and Rochez. The whole concluding with a POPULAR AFTERPIECE.—Commence each evening at Seven. Box-office open from Eleven to Five.—Stage Director, Mr. T. Thompson.

COLOSSEUM.—ALTERATION OF TIME.—THE DAY EXHIBITION consists of the Panorama of London, Museum of Sculpture, Arabesque Conservatories, Gorgeous Gothic Aviary, Classic Ruins, Swiss Cottage and Mont Blanc, with Mountain Torrent, &c.—From Ten till Five.

EVENING EXHIBITION.—The new and extraordinary Panorama of London by Night, with additional atmospheric effects every half hour, Museum of Sculpture, Conservatories and Gorgeous Gothic Aviary, &c., brilliantly illuminated; Swiss Cottage, Mont Blanc, and Mountain Torrent, represented by Moonlight.—Open from Seven till Half-past Ten. The whole projected and designed by Mr. W. Bradwell.—The Grand Mexican Aloe still in Bloom, no Extra Charge.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A CHEMICAL LECTURE, by Dr. RYAN, Daily; and on the Evenings of Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. A LECTURE on the ELECTRO-MAGNETIC TELEGRAPH, by Professor BACHHOFFNER, Daily. MACINTOSH'S REVOLVING ENGINE, COLEMAN'S PATENT LOCOMOTIVE ENGINE for ascending and descending Inclined Planes, FARRELL'S ARCHIMEDEAN RAILWAY, the ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, all in action HALLETTE'S ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY VALVE The OPAQUE MICROSCOPE. The OXY-HYDROGEN MICROSCOPE, exhibiting a fine Collection of Living Objects. A beautiful Picture of the CHAPEL in the CONVENT of St. CATHERINE, near Jerusalem, by Mr. Charles Smith, is one of the New Series of DISSOLVING VIEWS. Admission, 1s. Schools Half-price.

LES MODES PARISIENNES is the Journal patronised by elegant society, and the guide for really fashionable toilettes It is the Journal of the Fashions which has the largest circulation among the best society of Paris and St. Petersburgh. It arrives in London every Tuesday. Subscriptions for LES MODES PARISIENNES are received by M. FREDERICK, 40, Albemarle-street. Price, for six months, 12s.

PRICE EIGHTEEN PENCE.
A COMIC PANORAMA.
By "LEECH."
ACKERMANN and Co., Strand, and all Booksellers.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s 6d.,
WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, AND AVOID, addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic.
By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c.
SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row, CARVALHO, 147 Fleet street, HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street MANN, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 10 Argyll-place, Regent-street

CHEMISTRY APPLIED to the ARTS, AGRICULTURES, and MANUFACTURES.—THE PHARMACEUTICAL TIMES of to-day (No. 3, Price FIVEPENCE, 72 quarto columns) contains, Dumas on Chemistry Applied to Manufactures; Soubeiran on Pharmaceutical Operations; with Original Articles by Sir Robert Kane, Dr Ure, F.R.S., Mr. R. Hunt, Dr. Ayres, Mr. West, F.R.S., Dr. Scoffern, &c., &c., Original Articles by the Editor on the Use and Abuse of the British Association of Science, &c. &c.
Price Fivepence, Stamped Sixpence; Office, 49, Essex-street, Strand.

TO THE MUSICAL PUBLIC.—FOREIGN MUSIC.—This Day is published, to be had gratis and postage free, a CATALOGUE of the latest MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS for the Voice, and for all Instruments. Every amateur and professor of music should not fail to procure a copy of this list of invaluable compositions for the voice, piano, organ, violin, flute, cornet, &c., as well as theoretical works.—London: published only by her Majesty's musicsellers, Messrs. R. COCKS and Co., 6, New Burlington-street.

Now Ready, Gratis and post free
BULL'S LIBRARY CIRCULAR FOR SEPTEMBER, Containing all the New and Popular Works, with full particulars of Bull's New Library System, which is affording such universal satisfaction in every part of the Kingdom. Books furnished for Perusal without the delay and inconvenience of a previous correspondence Orders for Bull's Library Circular (sent gratis and post free) to be addressed to Mr. Bull, Library, 19, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, London.

EDUCATION.—The Sons of the Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Professional Gentlemen, are prepared by Mr. E. POCOCKE for the Universities, East India Colleges, and Professional Life in general. Ready access is granted to a well selected Library; and the Oriental Students have the additional advantage of numerous MSS., especially in the Persic and Arabic. A prospectus and view of the house may be had on application to the Principal, Mr. E. POCOCKE, Arno's Court, Brislington, between Bath and Bristol.

EDUCATION, on KING'S COLLEGE PLAN.—Terms, 26 to 30 Guineas per Annum.—The Principal of a Private Grammar School, who has had great success in preparing Youth for the above Institution, has VACANCIES. His plan, based upon mild, gentlemanly treatment, but strict discipline, tends to make sound, efficient scholars his chief aim is to induce a love of learning: this he endeavours to effect by familiarly explaining away every difficulty, and assisting his Pupils in their studies; being more anxious to inform their judgment than to burden their memories.—Address, paid, to O. Z. O., at Wilde's Post Office, Clapham.

BOARD and RESIDENCE, at BAYNARD CASTLE, GRAVESEND.—Mrs. RICHARDSON informs her numerous friends and visitors, that the East Tower of this delightfully situated residence is arranged and handsomely furnished for the reception of ladies and gentlemen who can appreciate the advantages of a liberal table, the elegances and comforts of a cheerful and select circle, and every domestic enjoyment. The sleeping rooms are lofty and airy, bedding all fresh and new; the dining, drawing, and music rooms (each 30 feet in length) are supplied with books, splendid harp, piano, drafts, chess, telescopes, and other sources of amusement. Terms, from one guinea per week, or, if for a term, according to agreement. Apply at the Castle, top of Windmill-street, Gravesend; or in London, of Mr. EDWARD LACEY, 76, St. Paul's Churchyard.

CANDLE LAMPS FOR THE ENSUING SEASON.—GEORGE and JOHN DEANE respectfully invite their friends to favour them immediately with a call at their Lamp Show Rooms, 46, King William-street, London Bridge They have just received a most splendid stock of Candle Lamps, the very first that have issued from the artist's hands. They comprise a costly variety, some with porcelain pedestals, adorned with delicate and elaborate painting, mounted on rich or-molu bases, others of tastefully cut glass, or papier mache, gorgeously emblazoned These, with a most various stock of cheaper and less ornamented Lamps are all of the latest designs and at the lowest possible prices. Deane's carts are delivering Camphine, Candles, and Lamp Oil, and Lamps on hire, in all parts of the metropolis daily. DEANE'S, opening to the Monument, 46, King William-street, London Bridge

TO LADIES KNITTERS.—The Cornucopia Gauge for Knitting-Pins and Netting-Meshes, mentioned in the last editions of Mrs. HOPE'S Knitting Books, and correct to the numbers used in the works of Mrs. Gaugain, Mrs. Mee, Mrs Veall, Mrs. Jackson, Miss Watts, and Mrs. Hope, is Now Ready. The price is unavoidably altered from 6d. to 8d., in the plain metal; the silvered quality, at 1s., remains as advertised—Sold by every Dealer in Berlin Wool; or will be sent free, on enclosing 10 or 13 penny stamps to I. HOPE, 58, Queen-street, Ramsgate, Kent

Mrs. HOPE'S BOOKS on LADIES' FANCY WORK. 1s. each; or by Post for 18 stamps The Knitter's Friend; The Knitter's Casket; The Art of Crochet; and, My Working Friend Also, 6d., or by Post for 8 stamps, The Book of the Baby's Wardrobe in Knitting and Netting. This series of Works is unrivalled for correctness and distinctness of the descriptions. As some guarantee of this, we may mention that 57,000 have issued from the press in less than three years.—Every Dealer in Berlin Wool keeps them in stock.

RECOVERY OF HAIR.
TO MESSRS. ROWLAND AND SON, 20, HATTON-GARDEN, LONDON.

Gentlemen,—Having been bald for many years, and having been induced by a friend to try your invaluable MACASSAR OIL, I am now happy to state that I have succeeded in establishing a perfect growth of hair. I feel it due to you to render this acknowledgment, and also to give you liberty to make what public use of this you choose.

I am, Gentlemen, your obliged servant,
Portora House, Enniskillen, July 23rd, 1846. JOHN GREHAM, D.D.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL is the only article that really possesses nutritious virtues for promoting a luxuriant growth of the human Hair, preventing it from falling off, or turning grey, and for cleansing it of scurf and all impurity

CAUTION. The words "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" are on the wrapper of each genuine bottle.

* * * All others are FRAUDULENT IMITATIONS!!!

THE NEW PARTNERSHIP. GREAT SALE OF LINEN DRAPERY, &c. &c.
BAILEY and RITCHIE, late BAILEY and MILNER,
ALBION HOUSE, 77 and 78, ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD.

Mr. D. RITCHIE, formerly partner with Hall and Allan, and late of the firm of Allan, Son, and Ritchie, having become a partner in this Establishment (now Bailey and Ritchie), has rendered an immediate Sale of the whole of the present Stock imperative.

They beg to call your attention to the lists of Goods enumerated below, which will convince Ladies that the unprecedented reduction of prices will effect an immediate clearance.

The Sale will commence on Monday, the 21st inst., and your early call will be esteemed a favour

MANCHESTER DEPARTMENT.
970 pieces Irish Linens, commencing at 7¾d.
Long Cloths (best make) usually sold at 6½d. now 3¾d.
A large Lot of Damask Cloths, much soiled, at considerably less than half price.
Strong Linen Sheetings, worth 11½d. now 5½d.
Above 700 dozens French Cambric Handkerchiefs, 4s. 9d. a dozen.
Welsh Flannels, worth 1s. now 7¾d.
450 pieces French Lawns, at 4s. 9d. the piece of 10 squares.

DRESS DEPARTMENT
The principal part of the Print Dresses are now 1s. 9½d. per dress.
570 Cashmere Dresses, worth 9s. 6d. are now 4s. 9d
780 do. „ 14s. 6d. „ 6s. 11d
430 do. „ 16s. 9d. „ 8s 9d
About 700 of the richest Oregon Dresses will be sold at 7s. 9d.
230 pieces of rich Cashmeres, at 6¾d. per yard.
530 pieces of Coburg Cloths, at 8¾d. „
And a large lot of Orleans do. at 6¾d. „
The Summer Stock of Muslin and Barege Dresses will be cleared out at one-third of their value.

SILK DEPARTMENT
3600 yards Black Satinetts, lately marked 2s. 9d., now 1s. 11½d.
2200 do. do. 3s 3d., now 2s. 6d.
2050 do do. 3s 9d., now 2s. 8d.
4640 yards Fancy Check, new styles, lately marked 2s. 8d., now 1s. 6½d
The remainder of the Silks are marked at a proportionate reduction to the above.

SHAWL AND MANTLE DEPARTMENT
The Shawls and Cloaks are reduced to merely nominal prices, for example.—
Above 800 Shetland Shawls, formerly sold at 6s. 9d., now 1s. 6½d
500 Rich Cashmeres do. 11s. 9d., now 3s 11d
650 French do. very rich and new, do. 16s. 9d., now 5s. 9d.
A lot of rich Paisley Shawls, usual price 18s 9d., now 4s. 11d.
370 9-4 do. never less than 2 guineas, now 18s. 9d.
All the richer class are reduced in proportion.
260 Travelling Merino Cloaks, 4s. 9d., worth a guinea.
Plaid Wool do., 10s. 6d., sold last year at 24s 6d.
Rich Moire Mantles 8s. 9d., formerly sold at 21s
The entire stock of Moire, Ducape, and Velvet Mantles at an equal sacrifice.

RIBBONS, LACES, &c. &c.
12,000 yards of Bonnet Ribbons, at half the cost, commencing rich goods, 3¾d.
17,000 yards of Cap do., 1½d. to 2½d.
The Lace Stock will be sold at 45 per Cent under its cost.
Three Cases of French and English Bonnets, trimmed, at any price offered.

NOTE.—The Sale of the whole of the above will commence on MONDAY, the 21st, and continue until cleared out

OBSERVE!——BAILEY and RITCHIE, Albion House, 77 and 78, St. Paul's Churchyard.

A LADY, Pupil of Signor Crivelli, and a Student of the Royal Academy of Music, wishes to give LESSONS in SINGING.—Direct to B. C., care of Mr. Hopkinson, 70, Mortimer-street, Cavendish-square.

BLACK! BLACK!! BLACK!!—MESSRS. S. OSMOND and CO., Dyers, 8, Ivy-lane, Newgate-street, London, have made arrangements for Dyeing Black every article of Ladies Dress on Wednesday in each week, and finishing the same in a few days afterwards.—Established above a Century.

TONIC ALE.—This splendid new description of Bottled Beer is now in high perfection. It is strongly recommended by the Faculty as possessing peculiar stomachic qualities, promoting appetite, &c. Sold in quart and pint bottles, secured by Betts's Patent Capsule. JOSEPH STOCKTON, Sole Agent, 51, Lamb's Conduit-street.

GLAZIERS WHO WANT WINDOW-GLASS can be Supplied with any quantity, at Manufacturers' Prices, for Ready Money. A Crate, containing 18 tables, £2 10s. All the better qualities proportionably low, and every substance of Sheet Glass in stock. Squares cut to size.—R. COGAN, 48, Leicester-square, London.

BONA FIDE SALE.—EXPIRATION of LEASE.—The DOUDNEYS are relinquishing their City Trade, and, to effect a speedy clearance, are SELLING OFF their Fashionable and Excellent STOCK at HALF PRICES. The Saving of Pounds on a Single Suit will repay an effort to call, and early comers will have the best choice. Observe, at 97, FLEET-STREET only

DANCING TAUGHT, in the most fashionable style, by Mr. WILLIS, 41, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private Lessons in the Polka, Cellarius Valse, and Valse a Deux Temps, at all hours, to Ladies and Gentlemen of any age wishing privacy and expedition. An Evening Class on Monday and Friday. A Juvenile Class on Wednesday and Saturday. Terms may be had on application as above.

ITALIAN ALABASTER, MARBLE, BRONZE, DERBYSHIRE SPAR, and other ORNAMENTS for the Drawing-room, Library, and Dining-room, consisting of a new and elegant assortment of Vases, Figures, Groups, Candlesticks, Inkstands, beautiful inlaid Tables, Paperweights, Watchstands, &c.
Imported and manufactured by J. TENNANT, late Mawe, 149, Strand, London.

MERCHANT and TRADESMAN MUTUAL LIFE OFFICE, No. 5, Chatham-place, Blackfriars.—Security Fund, £100,000, in £5 Shares. Assurances on Lives, Annuities, and Endowments, are granted on terms lower than in most other established Offices. Prospectuses and every information may be obtained at the Office. THOS. MUSGRAVE, Secretary

CHILDREN'S AND INVALIDS' CARRIAGES.—Invalids Wheel Chairs, from £3 to £35, with hoods, second-hand as well as new; Spinal and Self-Acting Chairs, Children's Chaises, vis-à-vis Waggons, Phaetons, Barouches, &c., from 10s. to 20 guineas. Immense and varied collection on sale or hire, at INGRAM'S Manufactory, 29, City-road, Finsbury-square.—N.B. Illustrated Catalogues.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house. On receipt of a Post-office Order payable to John Jones for £4 5s., one will be sent free—Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a Twopenny Stamp.

CHUBB'S LOCKS, Fire-proof Safes, and Cash Boxes.—Chubb's New Patent Detector Locks give perfect security from false keys and picklocks, and also give immediate notice of any attempt to open them. Chubb's Patent Fire-proof Safes Book-cases, Chests, &c.; strong Japan Cash Boxes, and Deed Boxes, of all sizes, fitted with the Detector Locks.—C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard.

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS AND GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM for STOVE GRATES, kitchen ranges, iron bedsteads, fenders, fire-irons, general furnishing ironmongery, tinned copper, iron and best tin cooking vessels, best Sheffield plate, and table cutlery, japanned trays, tea urns, ornamental iron and wire work for verandahs, lawns, &c.; flower-stands. Every article is warranted, and marked at the lowest prices, in plain figures, for cash.—Adjoining the Royal Bazaar, 58, Baker-street, Portman-sq.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, Sole Inventress of Teaching the Art of Dress-making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most finished Style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers Wanted.—Millinery Rooms.

DAMASK TABLE LINENS, most Elegant and Durable, at very Low Prices for Cash, by JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linen-Drapers to the Queen, at their Family Linen Wareroom, 26, Regent-street, two doors below Piccadilly Circus. Parcels above £5 sent throughout England carriage paid

John Capper and Son's General Linen-Drapery Business, established for nearly Seventy Years, is continued in Gracechurch-street, without change.

HOT WEATHER.—TRAVELLING.—SEA-SIDE.—The REGISTERED PALETOT in London, only at 22, Cornhill, opposite the Royal Exchange, and the chief Llama Cloth Warehouse, 114, Regent-street. Do not be deceived by a similarity of name placed in the windows of a few petty shops in the neighbourhood of the Patentees. Each Paletot is stamped H. J. and D. NICOLL, 114, Regent-street.

BERDOE'S WATERPROOF OVER COATS, and SHOOTING JACKETS.—The reputation of these well-known garments has been so long established that they now need no other recommendation; they are guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever, and distinguished for their lightness and truly gentlemanly appearance. Made only by W. BERDOE, Tailor and Over-coat Maker, 69, Cornhill (north side), and, in a few days, at 96, New Bond-street

BABY LINEN.—Ladies unacquainted with the Juvenile Depôt, are respectfully informed that the stock of Baby Linen will be found greater in variety, and lower in price, than any other house—make and material being taken into consideration. Infants' Long Robes from 6s. to £10; caps, hoods and cloaks, in great variety; bassinets, baskets, &c. In the Show Rooms, Children's Dress, &c., in every conceivable variety of style Lists of prices gratis. Baby Linen forwarded to the country for approval on receiving either a town reference or a remittance. Wedding orders executed. The Juvenile Depôt, 259, Regent-street, is noted for Ladies pretty-shaped French Nightcaps

THE SUMMER RIDE or PROMENADE.—The peculiar virtues of C. and A. OLDRIDGE'S BALM of COLUMBIA completely removes the difficulty experienced by ladies in preserving their ringlets after exercise. Its use so invigorates the hair, that tresses, previously the straightest and most destitute of curl, rapidly acquire a vigour which maintains in permanent ringlets the head-dress of the most persevering votary of the ball-room, the ride, or the promenade. Its efficacy in preserving, strengthening, and renewing the hair has become a matter of notoriety among all civilised nations.—3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle. No other prices. Oldridge's Balm, 1, Wellington-street, the second house from the Strand.

GIBBINS' CREAM of ROSES and ROSEMARY.—This esteemed and elegant article is most respectfully offered to the Public, by GIBBINS, Court Hairdresser and Perfumer (from Paris), 7, King-street, St. James's-square, as the most delicate and effectual Preservative of the Hair. Being a pomade, it will be successfully applied in promoting its growth and luxuriance.

GIBBINS' EXTRACT of ROSES and ROSEMARY is a Liquid made from the above-named plants, and when applied in Washing the Hair, renders it soft and glossy; or, after illness, its astringent properties prevent the Hair from falling off.
No. 7, King-street, St. James's-square, London.

TO LADIES.
ROWLAND'S KALYDOR.—This preparation, eminently balsamic, restorative, and invigorating, is equally celebrated for safety in application, as for unfailing efficacy in thoroughly purifying the Skin of all Pimples, Spots, Blotches, Freckles, Tan, and Discolorations, producing a healthy freshness and transparency of Complexion, and an admired softness and delicacy of the Hands, Arms, and Neck. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its exclusive selection by the Court, and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and those of the Continent of Europe, together with the "élite" of the Aristocracy and "Haut Volée."

Beware of SPURIOUS "KALYDORS" containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the Complexion, and which, by their repellant action, endanger health. The GENUINE article has the words "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR" on the Wrapper Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d per bottle.

* * * All other "KALYDORS" are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS.!!

The genuine is sold by the Proprietors at 20, HATTON-GARDEN, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

THE NEW HOUSES OF E. MOSES AND SON

First, reader, your attention let us fix
On Nos. Eighty-five and Eighty-six;
Right facing Aldgate church are these display'd,
To furnish you with clothing ready made
Neat, strong, and matchless goods are purchas'd here
And not a single article is dear
Next your attention we would beg to call
To No. Eighty-four, the "Private Hall."
Here you ascend the stairs of solid oak
To gain the Room where orders are bespoke!
This show-room with its giant chandelier,
Eclipses all that's witness'd far and near.
Here a secluded Habit-room you view,
And here there is a room for Vestings, too:
Other apartments follow in rotation,
To answer one design, ACCOMMODATION.
The next compartment we survey, must be
The Hat depot of MOSES—Eighty-three.
There's not another Hat-mart in the Town
Which casts such lustre on the human crown.
On turning round the corner, you behold
The Warehouse where the Hosiery goods are sold.
This House, whose trade is constantly alive,
Is in the Minories, No. One-four-five.
On passing to the right you'll find, next door,
The Establishment for Outfits—One-five-four.
And here, good reader, our description closes
Our brief description of the House of MOSES.
We trust you'll not omit to give a call—
Not to ONE Warehouse only—but to all.
We mark the prices on our goods in trade,
From which, of course, there's no abatement made.
If any thing that's sold is found to lack,
We change the goods or give the money back.
We do, to please you, all that CAN be done,
Do all "YOU" can for MOSES and his SON

For particulars of Self-Measurement, and other essential information, obtain the new book, entitled "Past, Present, and Future," which may be had gratis, and post-free, of the Proprietors, E. MOSES and SON, 154, 155, 156, 157, Minories, and 83, 84, 85, and 86, Aldgate, City London.

E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Woollen-drapers, Clothiers, Hatters, Hosiers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen, regret to be obliged to guard the public against imposition; but, having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood of "being connected with them," or it's the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and, for obvious reasons, they have no connection with any other house in or out of London; and those who desire genuine cheap clothing, should to prevent disappointment, call at or send to the Minories or Aldgate, opposite the Church, City, London.

NOTICE. The entrance to the Bespoke Department is at 84, Aldgate.—No business transacted at this Establishment from sunset Friday evening till sunset Saturday evening, when it is resumed till twelve o'clock.

This Establishment WILL BE CLOSED on MONDAY, 21st and TUESDAY, 22nd Inst. resuming business as usual on Wednesday Morning

WANTED.—Several young men in the Ready Made and Bespoke Department, and several youths, from the age of 14 to 16 years, as Cashiers. Apply on Wednesday next, the 23rd, at 85 and 86, Aldgate, at Nine o'Clock.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, September 19, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 230.—Vol. IX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1846. [Sixpence.

SPAIN AND THE CARLISTS.

LONDON keeps up its character as the refuge of all Royalties in misfortune and Rulers beneath a cloud. It is the America of Europe — the "Bush" to which flight is taken from all revolutionised capitals. In the strictest sense of the word it is a "City of Refuge," whose gates are day and night open to all, whether they are the victims of despotism, the many exiled by the one, or the sacrifice that despotism sometimes has to offer up to popular vengeance; in which case the refugee comes with a "discrowned head," and a few followers, who, being in many cases the authors and instruments of their master's tyranny, are justly made the partakers of his misfortunes. Below the rank of Royalty come ever and anon Regents and Ministers, who have outlived their party and their influence, and mingled with them those the most unfortunate of all, who, having "fetched their birth from men of Royal siege," have inherited nothing but their rights, and who wander about the world haunted by dreams of power, of which the age refuses, for the crimes or incapacity of their race, to permit the realisation. Their brows are circled by a shadowy crown, more galling to bear than the pressure of the real diadem, and a visionary sceptre hovers perpetually before them, awakening hopes of what may be, and giving to the reality a double humiliation.

What a host of Kings and Princes have made London their refuge on their way from a fallen throne, or a stage in their progress towards one re-established or to be regained! They have come from all corners of the earth; the Old World and the New have alike sent their contribution to the list of Royal exiles and aspirants. Sable Presidents from Hayti, an Emperor from Mexico, another from Brazil, and Kings, as numerous as the phantom monarchs in Banquo's glass, from France, Corsica, Portugal, Spain. Less than crowned heads we cannot condescend to count, but we give a passing mention to Miguel, to Donna Maria, to Henry of Bordeaux; we have this week to add to the list the name of Don Carlos Luis de Bourbon, Count de Montemolin, the eldest son of Don Carlos, and nephew of His Most Catholic Majesty Ferdinand the Seventh of Spain; he is about to make an attempt to overturn the Throne of Isabella Segunda, place the Crown on his own head, and convert his abstract "rights" into realities. He has been joined by the man who will be the chief instrument of his purpose if his plan is carried into action, General Cabrera, who stamped eternal disgrace on the cause of the father, and whose name is the worst possible omen for the success of that of the son. But still his chance of success is greater than, for the sake of Spain, we could wish it.

The first steps towards a movement have been taken; arms have been sent into the provinces of Spain; officers—of which for any cause or any tumult the soil is most prolific—are gathering; and a Proclamation has been issued to the people of the country, full of those maguiloquent and generous promises that aspirants to a Crown always make, and as invariably violate if they become Kings. If the Spanish people have still any faith in the words of a Bourbon, then have the events of the last fifty years passed over them in vain; but sterner teachings have often been lost when old hatreds are appealed to; and, whatever may be the issue, certain it is that the chance of a long and bloody conflict in Spain is most imminent. Let us glance at the causes that make it so.

Those who live in the midst of a settled order of society, surrounded by institutions that have become not only laws and statutes, but living portions of the national habit and feeling—who have open and free fields for the battle of opinion—who gaze daily on the wonders of the highest grade of civilisation—who travel, converse, and discuss, with the aid of science wrought to its utmost perfection, can but with extreme difficulty form an idea of what elements of civil war and violence exist in such a country as Spain. It is one monarchy, but has never been fused into one nation; each of its great divisions retains its national, or rather provincial spirit as strongly as when they formed independent kingdoms. Between the Andalusian and the Gallician there is the widest possible difference in everything except religion; and so of the rest. Nothing but a strong central Government can preserve order or fidelity; and, with a disputed title to the throne, and parties prepared to support each claimant, a strong Government is almost impossible. The only approach to it is a good military organisation, like that established by Narvaez. But the tenure of power of these statesmen of the sword seems precarious; and, when they quit the helm, all soon relapses into its former confusion. It only requires some peculiar conjunction of circumstances to rouse all the passions and rivalries that have never been extinguished.

In England we have outlived the enmities of the days when the expulsion of the Stuarts, and the accession of the House of Hanover, kindled civil war among us; but a century since, it was not impossible for an exiled Prince to claim the Throne of England, and to find thousands ready to hazard life and fortune in supporting that claim. From the Revolution of 1688 to the total extinction of the hopes of the Stuarts, in the Rebellion of 1745, was a space of nearly sixty years; during the whole of that time there existed a numerous party who never accepted the King de facto; and, though always decreasing, were formidable enough, at the very last, to endanger the Throne. Yet England was then a Constitutional and commercial country—its people averse to war, and not bigotted in their devotion to names and races. Let us judge from this what prospect for peace or order there is in Spain, where arms and violence are almost the recognised means of working political changes—where the people are bigotted and intense in their enmities, and, when excited, bloody, ferocious and ungovernable in their revenge? In what other country could such wretches as Cabrera and Nogueras be produced? And certainly no where but in Spain could they rise to influence and command: the estimation in which they are held, notwithstanding their brutality, is a sure sign there is a spirit among the people that, to some extent, sympathises with them; they could neither lead nor command, if thousands as bad as themselves were not ready to follow and obey. Among such a race, the materials of a civil conflict always exist; nor are names and persons wanting as the rallying points.

MADRID.—THE BUEN RETIRO.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

Ferdinand died in September, 1833, leaving the Crown to his daughter Isabella; but, in doing so, he abrogated the old right of succession, which was in the male line. Thus, Don Carlos was a "pretender," with a well-defined title. He has three sons, who may each in turn inherit the right of their father; uno avulso non deficit alter: as long as a legitimate party can be found in Spain, there will be no want of a claimant to the Crown, to disturb the repose of those who de facto possess it. It must now also be remembered that Don Carlos has formally abdicated, and made over to his eldest son all his rights. Don Carlos, immediately after the death of his brother, claimed from Christina, the Regency, the Army, and the Ministers, their recognition of him as King of Spain. He never consented to the change in the law of succession made by Ferdinand in favour of his infant daughter. All the attempts made to gain his consent to it, failed. But he was as unpopular in Spain as our James the Second was during the life of his brother Charles, and was excluded from the throne without difficulty. His claim was treated with contempt, and the Regency of Christina expelled him from the kingdom. Like James the Second, he found a part of the country ready to espouse his cause, and he excited a civil war: it was protracted for several years by a combination of incapacity, ferocity, and treachery unexampled in history; so equally divided as to leave it uncertain which army was most to be despised, but ending at last in the total defeat of the Carlist cause. The Pretender fled to France, where he remained a captive at Bourges, unheard of and unpitied, till he voluntarily relinquished all his rights and claims to his son, who is now, in fact, the "Young Pretender" of Spain, undertaking a task in which his father failed. This cession of a barren claim was not an impolitic step. Don Carlos himself had "played out the play:" he had tried his fortune with no success; and there was no happy prestige connected with him, either personal or political. With a young Prince there is always hope, but Don Carlos would have met but very little favour; he was thoroughly known, and, unfortunately, he was one of those characters that do not improve on intimacy.

In the position he held during the long civil war, he must have had many opportunities of distinguishing himself. Had he possessed only average abilities and courage, he could not but have acquired some reputation; but, throughout the struggle, no one was so obscure as Carlos himself. He began with a bad character, and never redeemed it by any act of courage or policy. He had no force of mind, no decision, no daring. He was a mere cipher, trusting all to his generals, of whom he most favoured those who would go to the greatest excess of atrocity—like Cabrera. A narrow intellect and a cold heart had not been improved by his education, which was that of a bigot. Long before the death of his brother, he was thoroughly hated by the bulk of the Spanish people. Those who fought for him did so rather in defence of their old privileges, which were endangered by the progress of Liberalism and Reform under Espartero; from the spirit of mutual hatred; and the chance of pillage and plunder, a love of which is as intense in Spanish generals as Spanish brigands—there is not, in fact, any very great difference between them. The cause of the Church was linked with that of Carlos; but, towards the close of the war, even his character for piety suffered a shock: some of his private letters to the Princess de Beira were intercepted by the Christinos, and their contents proved that the champion of the clergy was a licentious hypocrite!

But the son has no such "antecedents" against him; he is young, with a reputation to win, and though there is slender hope of anything good from so wretched a stock as the Spanish branch of the Bourbons, it is almost impossible for him to display less talent than his father; so if he can gain to his side a "Spanish party," of different factions, but agreeing in that national hatred of foreign influence which baffled even the genius and power of Napoleon, the policy of the Tuileries and the Escurial may receive a check but little anticipated; the conflict once begun, may be the pretext for marching a French army across the Pyrenees; and then the real difficulties of the "Spanish marriage" will commence. May England keep out of the unworthy conflict!

THE BUEN RETIRO, AT MADRID.

The Buen Retiro (Pleasant Retreat) is one of the Public Walks of the Spanish capital. It is a large extent of ruined buildings and pretty gardens, and was laid out by the Conde Duque de Olivarez, as a seclusion for Philip IV., and in order to divert his attention from politics and his country's decay. This rus within the walls of the city was devised in order to spare him the pain of quitting the "only court" and terrestrial paradise, even for a day. Here was erected a palace, and a theatre, in which the plays of Lope de Vega were acted; the former, however, was burnt by accident, when many fine pictures by Titian Velasquez perished: it was rebuilt by Ferdinand VI., and its present desolation is the work of the invaders, who selected this commanding position for a strong military post, from whence they could terrorise Madrid: then the theatre, palace, gardens, museo, observatory, were all "vandalised."

The gardens were, however, restored by Ferdinand VII., who replanted the trees, and cleared out the large pond, El Estanque, on which he manœuvred his swans and all the navy which French alliance and enmity had left to his country. He cleared the garden of thorns and brambles, and built aviaries and menageries of wild beasts; and raised Chinese pagodas, after the fashion of our George IV. At the upper end of the gardens is a mound, with a summer-house, called El Belvidere, and justly, as it commands a good panoramic view of Madrid. Part of the retreat is open to the public, as shown in our Illustration, wherein we see that in the costume of the company, the picturesque national dress is nearly superseded by the fashion of the North. The reservado, or more retired portion, is reserved for the Royal family; but the administrador readily grants an aquela, or permission to enter, to all respectable applicants.

We have selected these details from Mr. Ford's lively "Handbook of Spain." At this moment, it may be imagined that the Buen Retiro is a focus of fashionable gossip on the approaching Royal marriages.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

If you will remember, my data have not been confined to Paris. It has been my good fortune to discover here some events forthcoming in England, which, on their way, threw shadows before them, even at the Court of the Tuileries. My announcements having proved true, I shall not hesitate to tell you, although less confidently, what I heard yesterday from a lady of the highest rank here, and who has exalted correspondents both at Osborne House and at Windsor. She tells me that her Majesty Queen Victoria intends to begin her Royal hospitalities in London very early this year, and that, amongst other motives, there is a principal one the same as last year—in fact, that an augmentation of her Majesty's domestic circle is to be foreseen.

A report has been abroad that the Queen of England had written to Louis Philippe. My Court informant tells me that the fact is, that the King of the French wrote to the Queen of England as soon as the Spanish marriages were about to be declared, and that her Majesty answered with that displeasure which both the stateswoman as well as the friend must feel under the circumstances.

It is now palpably seen what prevented Louis Philippe visiting London as he had intended, and positively announced. What is considered in the higher and diplomatic circles as having greatly contributed, at least, to the sudden and surreptitious form in which the Spanish marriages have been settled, is the remembrance of certain past events, both by the Count de Bresson, Ambassador of France to Spain, as well as by M. Guizot, the quondam representative of France at the Court of St. James, at a most critical moment. In 1830–31 Count de Bresson was Envoy of France to Brussels, moving heaven and earth to get the Duke of Nemours made King of Belgium. His English colleague, and antagonist in the negotiation, was Mr. Bulwer, who carried the day, and Leopold ascended the throne of Belgium. On the other hand, in 1840, Lord Palmerston signed the celebrated treaty with Austria, Russia, and Prussia, without M. Guizot knowing a word of it before it was done. The present opportunity of political revenge for both parties formerly outwitted has very naturally been most eagerly seized. Of all parties in this affair, perhaps the most deeply concerned display the greatest equanimity: I allude to the Duke de Montpensier, in his handsome person, the chief article of political barter with Spain. I saw him but four nights since, enjoying the spectacle of one of the minor theatres, with all the poco curante spirit of his age. He was, however, in search after wisdom. The performance of the night which attracted, and attracts still, all Paris, was the new melodrama, "The Temple of Solomon"—a spectacle which has had no equal since the days of the mysteries and moralities of the middle ages, the freedom of manners exhibited, which its splendour of mise en scène only renders more glaring, may be taken as a criterion of our revolutionary Parisian taste in the middle of the nineteenth century of civilisation.

We are preparing for the enjoyment of another electioneering scene in Paris; and, considering that all eyes, and the leisure of waggery, will be concentrated upon it, since it is isolated, we promise ourselves all that fun and excitement in which we, the volatiles of the human species, so much delight. This election arises from M. Berger, one of the recently chosen deputies, having been elected in two places: he gives up his Paris election, and numberless Liberals aspire to his succession. The triumphant election of M. Berger is attributed to a very singular and amusing cause. Mr. S—— is a good looking and highly educated young gentleman, the only son of a worthy tailor, who will leave him £1500 per annum; and he now disposes of £1000 to live in a refined and recherché manner. Mr. S—— experienced great humiliation occasionally at College, from allusions of his comrades to his sartorial origin; and the antagonist of M. Berger in the election is said to have proved himself one of the most exclusive in his intercourse with him. The consequence is, that the young gentleman is a thorough-paced democrate, and, as soon as M. Berger and the rival candidate came into the field, Mr. S—— called upon all the tailors in Paris to exert themselves, and make common cause against those who would cast opprobium on their cloth. The tailors were, of course, nothing loth: their number in Paris is prodigious; and there is not an elector whose outward man does not depend upon them, or who does not owe them money. With one effort they crushed M. Berger's antagonist. I need not add that his successor must be a well dressed man.

We are about to lose one of our most distinguished and most talented visitors Prince Poniatowsky. In Tuscany are the Prince's estates; and there the only building which has not suffered from Earthquake appears to be the reclining tower of Pisa, whose osculations were, however, most formidable, but the deviation from the perpendicular being a part of its idiosyncrasy, it stood its trials without any palpable evil result. But the Prince's farm-houses and homesteads appear to have suffered severely, and he is obliged to leave Paris with two libretti in his portmanteau, upon which he is engaged by the managers, to write an opera for the Academie de Musique, and another for the Opera Comique. Excepting the great Israelite musician, Meyerbeer, the Prince is the only amateur composer whose operas have succeeded, on the stage, although many others have tried their fortunes there, like the Prince de la Moskwa, the Earl of Westmoreland, &c., &c. There will be, however, abundant compensation for the loss of this elegant Polish lion in Paris. The shortly expected arrival of Rossini will not be merely an object of musical curiosity; it will create an immense sensation in society, and lead, towards him, to that interminable display in which they delight, on the part of the authorities as well as of the artistic world. Whilst his new opera, "Robert Bruce," is fast advancing in its mise en scene at the Academie, the handsome Mdlle. Olympe Pelissier, Rossini's new wife, is most minutely and pathetically chronicling all the words, movements, and aspirations of the great Maestro. Her letters are either published, or pass daily from hand to hand in society. It is said that "the musical Hercules" of Italy, who after his many feats and immortal labours had wooed the muse of Silence in his Bolognese retreat, now led in the silken strings of his Omphale, endures a terrible struggle betwixt new love, and new glory, and old habits of quiet enjoyment, and il dolce niente far, to all Italians the perfection of sublunary happiness.

FRANCE.

Paris continues in a state of agitation upon the subject of the proposed marriage of the Duke de Montpensier with the Infanta of Spain. On the one hand it is asserted that there is no real difficulty in the way of the marriage; whilst, on the contrary, some journalists confidently predict that it will never take place. Various days for the departure of the Duke have been fixed. The latest report was that he would leave Paris on Wednesday or Thursday for Spain, proceeding by sea to Valencia, the country of Cabrera, which would imply no dread of the partisans of that remarkable man. The Duke de Nemours is to accompany his brother. Alexandre Dumas will, it is said, accompany the Duke de Montpensier to Madrid, and be present at all the ceremonies on the occasion of the Royal marriage.

In part of our impression last week we announced the escape of the Count de Montemolin, the eldest son of Don Carlos, from Bourges. It was at first supposed that it was Don Carlos himself. Cabrera had also escaped, and both these individuals have arrived in London.

It appears from the recital of the Presse that on the 14th instant, the Prince's carriage left Bourges, with two persons of his suite. An hour after, the Prince mounted his horse, accompanied by his escort. On getting outside the town he put his horse to a gallop, when his escort, who were accustomed to see him do so and then return, slowly followed, and soon lost sight of him. On their in[illegible] right and left, the gendarmes were told that he had been [illegible] taking the direction of a neighbouring château, which he was in the habit of visiting. [illegible] time having elapsed, the escort saw the carriage return with a third person. Persuaded that it was the Prince, they resumed with the carriage the road back to Bourges, and reported his due return to the Archbishop's palace, his residence. The Prefect went and paid him a visit next morning, but was told that he was unwell, and the Prefect did not insist on seeing him. On Wednesday, the 16th, the Prefect paid him another visit, at ten in the morning, insisted somewhat more on seeing him, and was assured that the Prince was asleep. The Prefect, who was rather displeased, but afraid of being wanting in attention to his prisoner, again left, saying that he should return at four, and insist on seeing the Prince. He was, however, spared this other mortification by the Chamberlain, who waited on the Prefect at half-past three, and informed him that his Royal master was off, that he had an advance of forty-eight hours, and that there was thus no chance of overtaking him. The Chamberlain, of course, declined mentioning the road the Prince had taken. Don Carlos's son is said to have dined, the day before he thus took French leave of his French gaol, at the Prefect's, when he expressed himself in strong language respecting the Queen of Spain's impending marriage, and declared that he should protest with all his might against it. The words he used would appear to have excited some suspicion in the Prefect's mind.

The Count de Montemolin has issued the following proclamation, which, however, is very similar to a document issued by him about a year ago:

"Spaniards, my dignity and my feelings made it a duty in me to wait the dénouement which I now see, without astonishment, taking place in Spain. I wished, besides, to hold to what I announced to you in my manifesto of the 23rd May, 1845. I then made known to you my principles; I told you that I had no other desire than to withdraw our country from the abyss into which she was plunged, to bring about a lasting reconciliation between all parties, and to give to the nation the peace and happiness of which it had so much need, and which it so well merits. The results have not coincided with my efforts, and your hopes have been disappointed.

"Your duty and my word impose upon us new efforts for the accomplishment of the mission which is confided to us.

"That moment is arrived, Spaniards, which I was so anxious to avoid at the expense of so many sacrifices on your side and on mine. It would be an injury to yourselves, and a source of regret to me, if your efforts on the present occasion were not to correspond with the expectation of Europe. I make no distinction of parties. I see in you only Spaniards, capable of contributing with me in a powerful degree to the grand object which Divine Providence has reserved for me. I make an appeal to all of you, I place my hopes in all, and I entertain no doubt of any of you. The cause which I represent is a just one; no obstacle should be allowed to stand in its way. The result is certain. I am confident, therefore, that, full of zeal, activity, and courage, you will hasten to respond to the appeal which I now make to you. I desire and charge you not to regard the past. The era which is about to commence must not resemble the present.

"Concord must be re-established between all parties in Spain. Let there be an end of hatred, outrage, and all evils. Institutions suitable to the times in which we live; the holy religion of our ancestors; the free course of justice; security for property; and a cordial fusion of parties, will guarantee to you the happiness which you so ardently sigh for.

"I will accomplish what I promise and offer to you, and at the moment of triumph nothing will be more agreeable to me than to find that there have been neither conquerors nor vanquished. I thank you for your sufferings in my cause, for your constancy, and for your affection. Admiring you for your courage and for your high deeds, I shall know how to reward them on the field of battle.

(Signed) "Carlos Luis."

The Presse devotes nearly three of its columns to an attempt to show that there is nothing in the treaty of Utrecht which can be construed into an impediment to the marriage of the Duke de Montpensier with the Infanta. It contends that the only object of the treaty of Utrecht was the separation of the two crowns, so that the King of France could not at the same time be King of Spain, but that there was nothing in it which could prevent other members of the Bourbon family from inheriting the Crown of Spain.

The Paris Correspondent of the Times states, on what he deemed excellent authority, that King Louis Philippe wrote from La Ferté Vidame, on Friday (last week), to her Majesty Queen Victoria, a deprecatory letter of twelve pages, in which he detailed the progress of the Montpensier marriage, and described it as a matter long resolved on. He, of course, prayed his august ally to acquiesce in the match, and concluded by expressing his intense anxiety to learn the views and the resolve of the British Cabinet. This letter produced very serious disapprobation among his Majesty's advisers.

The Journal des Débats publishes a letter dated Toulon, 17th inst., stating that the corvette store-ship Egerie is about to sail for Bourbon and Mayotte with a million of francs in specie, stores, and ammunition. It was concluded, from the sailing of the Egerie, that the expedition against Madagascar was about to be carried into effect. Joseph Henri, the regicide, had arrived at Toulon, but in so exhausted a state that it was found necessary to carry him to the boat which was to convey him to the gallies.

SPAIN.

We have already stated that the intended Royal marriages were announced to the Cortes on the 14th inst., by the President of the Council. Our readers, however, will no doubt like to be acquainted with the exact form of the announcement, and the manner in which it was received. The Message presented separately to both Chambers was as follows:—

"Her Majesty the Queen has ordered me to inform the Cortes, agreeably to the terms of the 47th Article of the Constitution, that, after a long and attentive examination of the measure most conducive to the welfare of the Monarchy and her own happiness, she had resolved to marry her august cousin, the Infante Don Francisco de Assis Maria de Bourbon. Her Majesty also ordered me to make known to the Cortes at the same time, that her Royal Highness the Infanta Luisa Fernanda de Bourbon, her august sister, and immediate heiress to the Crown, had, with the consent and sanction of her Majesty the Queen, resolved to marry his Royal Highness Prince Antoine Marie Philippe Louis d'Orleans, Duke de Montpensier. Her Majesty hopes that those unions will efficaciously contribute to the welfare and prosperity of the Monarchy, as also to her own happiness and that of her august sister, and she flatters herself that the Cortes of the kingdom, who have given so many proofs of their affection and adhesion to the Throne, and of the interest they feel in the glory and prosperity of the nation, and the consolidation of its institutions, will concur in such consoling hopes, and pray the Almighty to realise them promptly, by opening for Spain a new era of peace, concord, and happiness."

Shortly after the Ministers entered, Senor Isturiz approached the President's chair, said a few words, bowed, and ascended the tribune. He took from his portefeuille a paper, and, in a tremulous voice, though he tried to make his enunciation as imposing as possible, read the above decree relating to the Queen's contracting marriage with the Infante Don Francisco de Assis. It was read amidst the most profound silence; but people actually held their breath when he came to the second part, in which he announced that her Royal Highness the Infanta Dona Luisa Fernanda had also determined, with the approbation of the Queen, to contract marriage with his Royal Highness the Duke of Montpensier, youngest son of his Majesty the King of the French. As soon as the name of the French Prince was heard, either the hired applauders forgot their lesson and returned to their natural instinct, or they were overpowered by the adverse party, for a general hiss broke forth from all the public galleries, and a voice or two were heard. The movement was at once and effectually checked by the President. At the first [illegible] of his bell, silence was restored.

As soon as Isturiz, who trembled in the tribune like an aspen, returned to his place on the Ministerial bench, Senor Orense, the only Progresista Deputy in the Chamber, stood up and put the following question:—"Senor President, I ask permission to be allowed to put a question to the head of her Majesty's Cabinet." The President bowed assent. Senor Orense then said, "In consequence of the communication just made by the President of the Council, relative to the marriage of her Royal Highness, I beg to be informed whether it is the determination that the marriage of the Infanta, the immediate successor to the Crown, is to take place as soon as her Majesty shall have issue, or whether it is to take place at the same time?"

Senor Isturiz rose and said, "The marriage of her Royal Highness the Infanta, the immediate successor to the Crown, will take place simultaneously with that of her Majesty."

A suppressed groan, or rather a deep sigh, pervaded the assembly as soon as this announcement was made.

The diplomatic box was crowded. The Duke of Glucksberg, First Secretary, and one or two attachés of the French Embassy, were present. General Flores had also a seat in the box. Neither the English, Belgian, nor Danish Ministers were present.

The Madrid Gazette of the 16th contains the address of the Senate presented to the Queen at the Palace. M. Miraflores pronounced a discourse on the occasion, felicitating her Majesty on the double marriage. The Queen replied in the following terms:—

"Senators, I receive with deep emotion your felicitations on my marriage with my august cousin, and on that of my dear sister with the illustrious Duke de Montpensier. On this occasion, I have not consulted merely internal happiness and domestic felicity, but also the prosperity of the nation. Gentlemen, I am grateful for this new proof of your loyalty and attachment to my person."

The same number contains, in the following terms, the official announcement of the quotation of Spanish Bonds on the Paris Bourse:—"We are enabled to announce that the Judicial Chamber of Paris has received orders from the French Government to quote on the Bourse the Three per Cents."

A protest against the marriage of the Infanta with the Duke de Montpensier has been forwarded by Prince Enrique to the Presidents of the two Chambers. Don Enrique has submitted this document as a member of the Royal Family of Spain, and, as such, interested in the question of the eventual succession to the Throne, secured to his family by the Constitution, in case of the failure of direct issue from the daughters of Ferdinand VII. He protests against the rights about to be acquired, at the expense of the family of the Infante, his father, by the house of Orleans, in consequence of the marriage of the Infanta Maria Luisa with the Duke of Montpensier. The protest is, it appears, founded on the fundamental law of Philip V., by which the Princes of the House of Orleans, and their descendants, are excluded from the Throne of Spain; as well as on the 47th article of the Constitution.

The discussion respecting the proposed Royal marriages commenced on the 17th instant. At half-past one the Ministers took their seats, and soon after, the President stated that a document, bearing the signature of his Royal Highness the Infante Don Enrique de Bourbon, had just been handed to him, and that it was about to be read. Several Members wished to speak, but they were stopped by the Secretary, M. Nocedal, who read the Infante's protest. Immediately after, the President of the Council, M. Isturitz, exclaimed, with deep emotion, "I deplore that this document should have been read to this Chamber; but declare that I know of nobody, however exalted, who has a right to oppose the Queen's constitutional will. The Chamber will now proceed as it may think proper." M. Pacheco begged leave to put a question to the President of the Council, which was, whether, on the occasion of the Queen's and the Infanta's marriages, any diplomatic notes had been exchanged between her Government and any foreign agent accredited at her Court? M. Isturitz answered:

'I hesitate not to gratify the Honourable Member's curiosity. The British Minister at her Majesty's Court has addressed three notes to her Majesty's Government on the question, but he has written them without any formal instructions from his Government; and since her Royal Highness the Infanta's marriage has been officially announced, he has declared to the Spanish Government that he should cease his official communications with it until the arrival of further instructions from England."

The President then said that the projected address in reply to the Queen's message was under discussion, when M. Pastor Diaz dwelt for above an hour on the dangers Spain would be exposed to in consequence of the Infanta's marriage with the Duke de Montpensier, and above all on England's hostility to it. The President of the Council replied, declaring that the Spanish nation was a free and independent one; that in such momentous questions it illsuited it to care for the influence of France or England, and that it had acted freely and spontaneously.

On the 18th inst. the Chamber of Deputies adopted unanimously, with the exception of one vote 159 to 1—the Address in reply to the Message from the Queen.

The Gaceta notifies that the Pope has granted the licences demanded for the marriages of the Queen and her sister.

EGYPT.

The following interesting items of news are contained in a letter from Alexandria, dated Sept [illegible]

His Highness Ibrahim Pacha is living quietly at his palace on the Nile, near Cairo, pursuing his favourite occupation of the direction of his farms, selling the produce yielded by them, and thereby accumulating money. His Highness still talks about his travels in Europe, and, now that he has had time to ponder quietly over what he has seen, and compare the impressions made upon him by the different countries he has seen, it is very satisfactory to Englishmen to hear his Highness pass the warmest eulogiums on Great Britain, its institutions, and its industry. His Highness has said that England is far advanced of the other Powers, and is making rapid strides onwards, whilst the latter are very slow in their progress.

Researches are still being carried on in various parts of Egypt for fossil mines, and some small quantities of an inferior quality of coal have been discovered in the upper country, near to the town of Keneh. The reports of the English engineers employed in these researches are not favourable. However, since Ibrahim Pacha's return from England, he has taken great interest in them, and Mehemet Ali evinces great anxiety for success, so that the works are being pushed on with vigour. The opinion expressed by many geologists is, however, that the soil of Egypt, and the surrounding desert, is not adapted for the formation of coal, and that this fossil will never be found in sufficient quantity to defray the expenses of working it.

THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The ship Plover, which has just arrived from China, has brought us Cape of Good Hope papers of a fortnight later date than those last received. It appears from them that the marauding parties of Kaffirs who, for the last two or three months, have caused so much mischief in the frontier districts, were nearly, if not altogether, expelled, and that a sufficient number of men had arrived to prevent their return, if properly distributed and kept on the alert. Whatever operations may be undertaken beyond the boundary, the colonists must be made to feel secure against such inroads, as they not only consume the produce of industry, but stop the machine itself. Besides the ravages of the enemy, the frontier colonists were suffering greatly from drought, followed by diseases amongst the cattle, and much loss, at a critical season, among the sheep. Another evil of a wasting nature had also fallen upon them, arising from the war itself and partly from the weakness and death of draught cattle, namely, the excessive high price of provisions.

THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

New York Papers to the 2nd inst., have reached us by the packet James, which has arrived at Deal. They do not contain anything of consequence relative to the United States, but the advices from Mexico are important.

The steamer M'Kim arrived at New Orleans on the 23rd August, with dates from Point Isabel to the 17th, and from Camargo to the 13th. She brought one hundred volunteers on the sick list. General Wm. O. Butler was confined to his tent at Point Isabel, by sickness. The taking of China, 60 miles above Camargo, by M'Culloch and his 75 Rangers, on the 5th of August, is confirmed. Seguin, with 100 mounted Mexicans took flight from the town, which contains 700 inhabitants. There were 300 regulars at Camargo on the 9th, ready to start for Monterey.

The volunteers were pouring in. General Taylor arrived on the 9th with his staff. Baylie Peyton also arrived on the 9th. A grand review of the troops took place, and it is said Taylor expressed himself in terms of admiration of their discipline. Duncan's battery and M'Culloch, with a portion of his men, left Camargo on the 12th, in the direction of Monterey.

The steamer Arab arrived off Vera Cruz on the 15th of August, with Santa Anna on board. He immediately placed himself at the head of the movement in that department. The departments of Puebla and Mexico have declared for Santa Anna, and Paredes has been taken prisoner. The revolt at the capital was headed by General Salas. Before Santa Anna left Havannah, he took letters from General Campbell to Commander Connor, and avowed himself, in reply to some inquiries as to his intentions, as follows: "If the people of my country are for war, then I am with them, but I would prefer peace."

News had been received in Mexico that Monterey and California had been taken by one of the vessels of the United States squadron. Another account says that all California has yielded to the Americans!

A letter dated at Vera Cruz, August 16, says that advices have been received by express of the formal annexation of California to the United States; that is, the United States forces have taken possession of California. This news came to the British Consulate at Vera Cruz.

NEW ZEALAND.

The following is an extract of a letter received at Lloyds:—"Auckland, N Z, 25th April.—The Governor and the squadron are still in the south, and we have had no intelligence of their movements for nearly two months. Report says that the troops have been engaged with the natives in driving them off the disputed land on the Hutt. In the north, hostilities are confined to the native tribes at war with each other. Several engagements have taken place within thirty miles of Auckland, and it behoves Government to watch narrowly their movements. We have not by any means a sufficient force in the colony; from 2000 to 3000 men will be required before the Government can exercise authority over the aboriginal inhabitants. The colonists here are anxiously looking for reinforcements from England.

INDIA.—THE OVERLAND MAIL.

The fortnightly Calcutta mail has arrived, with letters and papers to the 7th ultimo.

A variety of reports were in circulation respecting the unsettled state of affairs on the north-west frontier. The Sikhs, it is said, are determined to re-organise their army, but several of the Hill tribes are already so dissatisfied, that it is expected they will refuse to submit. Under these circumstances, the Maharajah's Government has, it is said, already generally solicited that the British army may remain at Lahore for a longer period than that originally fixed by the Governor-General.

The intelligence from Hyderabad states that the Nizam has been compelled to solicit the advice and assistance of the Resident. The expulsion of the Rohillas had at length been determined upon, and the Resident having taken matters into his own hands, the refractory Zemindurs have submitted, with the exception of the tributary Zemindur of Gudwal, against whom the troops of the contingent will be employed.

The stoppage of the Mauritius Joint Stock Bank took place on the 17th of June. A call on the shareholders for the remainder of the unpaid capital would, it was believed, enable the Bank to resume business. The credit of the Mauritius Commercial Bank was not in the least affected.

The reports from the indigo districts have been, without exception, unfavourable.

CHINA.

The most important event that has occurred, has been a riot at Canton, of a more than usually serious description. The slightness of its origin only shows the intractable spirit of the mob, and their ripe malignancy towards the English. Between five and six o'clock on the afternoon of Wednesday, the 8th July, an English merchant, an old resident in China, was passing along the street leading from the American factories to Chungwo, or Mingqua's Hong, when he was impeded by a crowd of idle Chinese, such as are generally to be found loitering about in that neighbourhood. One of them he pushed out of his way, upon which the Chinaman first struck him, then threw a stone at him, and afterwards ran away. He was pursued and caught near Mingqua's Hong; and, having been dragged inside, was bound to a post until information of what had occurred was sent to the British Consul. In the meantime, however, the man contrived to escape, but was a second time caught by another foreign resident, and brought back to the Hong. A crowd now began to gather outside, and, believing themselves sufficiently powerful to wreak their vengeance on the foreigners, they forced open the gates of the Hong, rescued the man, and stoned the foreigners who had taken refuge in the house. The mob, which had by this time greatly increased, now began to batter the doors and windows with stones, brickbats, &c., and attempted to fire the building by throwing in crackers and other lighted materials. This state of matters continued until about half-past seven, P.M., when it was decided to throw open the gates of the American Gardens, where the greater portion of the foreign residents had collected with fire-arms. They divided themselves into companies, with each a commander. One division faced towards Old China-street, while another marched round to the front of Mingqua's Hong. The mob, having previously over-mastered and driven off the Chinese police, stood their ground in China-street and beyond Mingqua's Hong, and sent a perfect storm of stones and brickbats at their opponents, who returned the compliment with a volley of balls. This had the effect of clearing the place, and the mob moved off, leaving, according to the most probable account, four dead, and ten or twelve wounded; though the numbers are variously given, the highest being thirteen killed, and twenty wounded. In the proclamation of the Chinese magistrate Sz', the casualties are stated to have been three killed, and six wounded. On the other side, three persons were hurt, one, a Parsee, rather severely. When the fray became serious, information was given to the Chinese authorities, by whom a body of soldiers and armed police was sent, and they were now very useful in clearing the streets; but their influence only began to be felt when the foreigners had proved themselves more than a match for the rabble. To guard against another attack, the foreign community patrolled the streets during the night. In the meantime, assistance had been sent for from Whampoa. Captain Steen Bille having fortunately chanced to be at Canton, dispatched an express for a party of the sailors and marines of the Danish frigate under his command, who arrived in boats, in tow of the Corsair steamer; messages were likewise sent to the English and American merchant vessels, so that, in the morning, the foreigners mustered in great force, sufficient at all events to keep their assailants in check. The mob, however, remained quiet, probably thinking they had had enough the previous evening, and that, with such reinforcements, they would fare still worse, were they to try a second encounter; for, though threats of vengeance were rife, and foreigners next day were hooted and insulted as they passed along the streets, there has not since been any further outbreak.

IRELAND.

DISTRESS AND IMPENDING FAMINE

There have been meetings in various parts of Ireland, at which lamentable accounts have been given of the scarcity of food and the prevalence of distress. The Dublin Correspondent of the Morning Chronicle says:—"The entire country is in motion. In all directions the gentry are assembling, in the hope of devising measures to avert the impending famine, and to save the country from the terrible evils by which we are threatened. It is no longer necessary to enter into details of distress. Universally is it admitted that, within a few weeks, millions of our population will be totally destitute of food; and the question everywhere for consideration is, how is employment to be provided with the least degree of positive loss to the owners of the soil.

"This day (Monday last) there are accounts of some very important meetings, including one at Cahirciveen, where Mr. O'Connell attended, and took part in the proceedings at the Extraordinary Presentment Sessions; and one in the county of Limerick, where Lord Monteagle stated his views upon the alarming condition of the country, expressing it as his opinion that the Labour Rate Act was quite inadequate to the exigency, and that Parliament ought to be called together. The necessity of a speedy assembling of Parliament is enforced in almost every meeting in the country.

"The proceedings of the various meetings exhibit in the most striking manner the awful position of the country, and of the landed proprietors."

A deputation from the county of Cork recently waited upon Lord John Russell, at his house in Chesham-place. The deputation were received by his Lordship and the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The interview lasted for an hour and a half. His Lordship and the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave a patient hearing to each member of the deputation, and appeared not only disposed and anxious to hear their statements respecting the condition of the county, but also to re- [illegible]nts they were prepared to offer respecting future and more permanent [illegible]. A memorial detailing the prevalence of distress in Cork, and suggesting the remedies applicable to its relief, was then read.

Lord J. Russell, in reply, read a paper before him, describing the nature of the measures which have just passed through Parliament, which he thought would be sufficient to meet the present emergency. He acknowledged they had no power of compelling Presentment Sessions to pass works, but he did not think, under the present state of the country, they would attempt to refuse them; for such sessions were not only responsible to the Government for the faithful discharge of their duty, but they were subject to a higher responsibility, that of the county demanding such works. His Lordship was deeply, very deeply, sensible to the permanently distressed social condition of the country: he acknowledged that the measures just passed were not calculated to meet it, and promised that the subject should receive the earliest and deepest consideration of the Government during the next session of Parliament. There were subjects of great difficulty to be encountered in legislating for a country circumstanced as Ireland was. Those lands in the hands of Government might be at once improved, but the case was different with respect to those that were the property of individuals. Still his Lordship did not shrink from the necessity or duty of Government interfering, even in such cases as these; neither did he deny, that while property had its owners and rights, that such ownership and rights should not be allowed to interfere with the operations intended to develop the resources of the soil and improve the social condition of the people.

The Rev. Mr. Gibson directed the attention of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the rule of the Lords of the Treasury, requiring that the wages in connexion with relief works shall be 2d. a day under the general wages of the district.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer defended the rule on the principles of political economy, and referred to cases where harvest work had been interfered with, and also to the case of men leaving work on the Shannon, where they were receiving 1s. 6d. a day, for 10d. a day on relief work.

Mr. Gibson replied, that if it were the opinion of English gentlemen that 10d. was a sufficient daily remuneration for an Irish labourer, God help the people!

The Chancellor: God forbid we should think so; I merely mention 10d. as a high rate of wages in the country. I think the wages should be improved; and the minute of the Lords of the Treasury requiring that the wages should be 2d under the standard of the country is not the law, and if necessary it may be modified.

The Repeal Association.—At the meeting of the Repeal Association on Monday, a letter was read from Mr. O'Connell, in which he speaks of the frightful prospect of famine and pestilence, and says that the plan of the Government for providing employment through the medium of public works, would not be sufficient to afford relief. After enumerating several plans of the Government, the letter thus concludes:—"How delighted I should be to be able with any prospect of success to propose that the gentry in each locality in Ireland should appoint a delegation of their number to meet together in Dublin, without delay, in order to organise the best plans for obtaining Government and local relief, during the impending calamities of famine and pestilence, and to embody in practical form their suggestions to Parliament for laws suited to the emergency. The first duty of such a meeting as I allude to would be to address the Ministry, and, if necessary, the Crown itself, to call together, without delay, the Parliament: such a demand, coming from such a body, would be irresistible. When the Parliament met, the influence of such a body as I describe would necessarily be all-powerful, and every hope would arise that an effectual plan for relief of the people of this magnificent island would be realised. I may be sneered at by some, and laughed at by others, for making such a proposal. It will be said that what I want is an Irish Parliament, and I confess that there would be some remote resemblance to an Irish Parliament in such an assemblage; but there would be none which a British statesman need apprehend, or the most timid anti-Repealer object to. There are other topics which I would wish to submit to the Association, but, for the present, I postpone them. Let me, however, conjure the gentry of Ireland seriously to reflect that, unless they adopt some plan to make their weight and importance felt by the Government, the English plan of out-door relief, in its worst form, will be almost insensibly communicated to Ireland, and their estates not only burdened, but actually confiscated. In the mean time, let the Repeal Association continue its exertions—let it accumulate documents for the discussion on the Repeal question in the next session of Parliament. No rational man can object to such a discussion in the British Parliament; neither can there be the slightest shadow of a doubt that the Union had worked badly for Ireland. Before the present distress, it was proved, on the ever-memorable Devon commission, that the agricultural population of Ireland, being seven-eighths of the entire, endured more misery than any other people in Europe. Perhaps, now that it is ascertained beyond any controversy that our plan for working out the restoration of the Irish Parliament is purely and undeviatingly peaceable, there may be such an accession to our strength as would render the Repeal inevitable."

Dreadful Accident. Colonel Westenra and Mr. Palmer Doolin, of Sharrow, left Scaravouge House at an early hour on Monday for the purpose of partridge shooting. About one o'clock, by some accident, Colonel Westenra's gun exploded, sending its contents through the lungs of Mr. Doolin, who happened to be standing close to him. Mr Doolin survived but one hour. The deceased gentleman was a magistrate of King's County, and very generally esteemed. Immediately after Mr. Doolin had expired, an inquest was held on his remains. When the inquiry had been concluded, the Jury, without a moment's hesitation, returned a verdict of "Accidental death," and exonerated Colonel Westenra from all blame in the deplorable transaction, by which he lost a valued and attached friend. The Coroner who held an inquest on the remains of the deceased had been speaking to him only three hours before. His afflicted wife and three little children, whom he left in the morning in happiness and peace, never saw his return.

Remedial Measures of the Government.—Several Government steamers are now employed in conveying Indian corn, biscuit, and other provisions, to divers Irish ports, to be placed under the charge of the Government Commissaries, for the relief of the people. In addition to this, her Majesty's steamer Comet, Captain Johnstone, has been sent to Ireland with money. She arrived at Cork, and, having delivered some of her specie to the Branch Bank of Ireland, proceeded from Cork to Tralee, Limerick, Galway, Westport, and Sligo, distributing the money at the various branch banks of Ireland, for the relief of the distressed inhabitants.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Poor monkey! how wilt thou do for a father?—Shakspeare.

In our last we spoke of the sport at the great Northern Olympic Games—at the least of so much of it as the occasion permitted us to deal withal. With the race for the St. Leger, indeed, the cream was skimmed: the Cup has sadly fallen off in flavour—from Imperial tokay, in fact, to the smallest of small swipes. They contemplate giving it a better zest next season; but our affair is with the present tense. Having disposed of Doncaster Races in their character of a great popular festival . . . . .

Next comes the reckoning; when the banquet's o'er.

Somebody somewhere says, it is not on account of their abstract worth that "Gil Blas," "Don Quixote," "Robinson Crusoe," "Gulliver's Travels," and such like works, are so especially and exclusively valued, but because they are the first of a class. This is, or should be, a great encouragement to the quill-driver to look out for new materiel. He may never hope to rival Swift or De Foe, mayhap; but to follow them at ever so respectful a distance, should satisfy the modern day-labourer in letters. Now, when Bunyan went to the figurative for characters for his great moral Epic, we may conclude he had better reasons for so doing than the want of actual persons in similar perplexities to furnish his machinery. But his subject would not allow of the admixture of anything familiar. Not so ours; for National Sports are necessarily of the people popular vernacular—vulgar. Thus are we justified in putting on the scene personages that, albeit not wanting in intrinsic raciness, would be the opprobrium of the philosopher, and scouted from the hexametres of the poet.

For this cause, we make no scruple about introducing the reader to a recently organised order of chivalry the Knights of the Ring. Not that legs are absolute novelties, but forasmuch as they are constantly getting up something new. Behold them, then, in solemn conclave, what time the St. Leger had counted some twelve hours after its catastrophe (scene, the Rooms, Doncaster)—a period when comes the reckoning.

Lo! here is the metamorphosis of Mammon. Thrift, Prudence, Discretion, Probity, Honour, Honesty, all pushed from their stools by the mocking Fiend of Gain—in whose hands is seen the gold she has but now gathered already turned to dross! You are, haply, a novice at these rites; we will be your guide and friend, too, if this our example be to you for a precept. In strong relief, in this Babel of the sacra fames, stand forth two striplings, they represent two insti[illegible] "The one is winning and the other losing." "I've got six monkeys to receive of you," says the one. "Oh no, only six ponies!" replies the other. Know ye the meaning of these "rascal counters?" Not you; how, indeed, should you? A "monkey," then, in the slang of the ring, is £500; a pony, £25. Three thousand pounds! there's a sum: you "wouldn't have given it for a wilderness of monkeys." Yet here is a passage in the life of a pleasure-seeker which we ourself witnessed within a little week. A fortune bartered and bargained away in a villainous vocabulary. . . . . . Seriously, why is the economy of human life literally made game of by our Legislature? We are the backbone advocates of all manly sports and exercises; the earnest friends of all that promotes good-fellowship and brotherly love. But to this incubus—the Ring—the heavy discouragement of our great national pastime, the Turf—we are the uncompromising foes. Why is legging the only species of gambling recognised by the tacit sanction of the law? Because of its comparative insignificance? The Home Secretary had never a favourite "nobbled," perhaps, or the legs would not be just now upon velvet. It is a pity—it is more than that, it is a shame, and a reproach, that no man can venture to keep a race-horse in these days without counting on certain robbery one way or other, and always from the same source. The moment a fine young English gentleman makes his appearance on the turf, the legs, as one man, are "up and at him." We never see such a victim going forth to the slaughter without sighing

Poor monkey! what wilt thou do for a father?

AQUATICS.

Lett and Coombes.—On Wednesday a sculler's match for £25 a side, came off between F. Lett, of Lambeth, and T. Coombes, of Vauxhall (brother to the Champion), the course being from Battersea to Hammersmith. This match, from the well-known merits of the men, excited much interest. This is the fourth time that these men have been pitted against each other. At four o'clock the men proceeded to their stations at Battersea-bridge. Lett having won the toss, took the sixth arch from the Surrey side, and Coombes the seventh. The word being given, a rapid and even start was effected, Lett soon drawing very slightly ahead, Coombes keeping very wide of his man, and taking the round of the bay at Cremorne. The water in this reach was rather "lumpy," the wind blowing from the southward, and both boats seemed to take a little water. Both men worked hard; and on Coombes coming over from the Middlesex shore, and putting on fresh steam when off the White Hart, he fairly breasted his man, and with another effort passed him, when the race appeared over, for Lett dropped rapidly astern, Coombes increasing his distance up to Hammersmith, and winning by 200 yards. Lett attributes his defeat to having shipped water in the early part of the race; but Coombes rowed gallantly, and earned his victory well and dearly.

TATTERSALL'S.

Monday.—Too much time was taken up by the Town Settling for the Doncaster Races to admit of any extensive transactions on coming events; enough business, however, was done to enable us to submit a short quotation of prices:—

[illegible]

30 to 1 agst Sir Tatton Sykes
40 to 1 agst Sorella (t)
2000 Even on the Field agst [illegible]
1000 to 20 laid agst Sir Tatton Sykes winning the Grand Duke Michael, Cambridgeshire, and Cesarewitch

DERBY

8 to 1 agst Van Trump (t afterwards offd)
18 to 1 —— Epirote
25 to 1 —— Sir to Cobweb (t)
30 to 1 agst Cassandra colt
33 to 1 —— Old Port
35 to 1 —— Bingham (t)
40 to 1 —— Gabbler
40 to 1 agst Mathematician (taken)
40 to 1 —— Crozier
50 to 1 —— Allertonian (t)

OAKS

16 to 1 agst Miami (t)

Thursday.—If what was done this afternoon be a sample of the business to be transacted on the Cesarewitch, the books will be on a very small scale: layers and backers were equally scarce; and the investments were barely sufficient to admit of the following quotation:—

CESAREWITCH

15 to 1 agst Sir Tatton Sykes (t)
20 to 1 —— Sting
25 to 1 agst The Hero
25 to 1 —— Sorella
40 to 1 agst Montreal colt
50 to 1 —— Terrier (t)
1000 to 40 each agst Sting and Sorella.

DERBY

9 to 1 agst Van Tromp
18 to 1 —— Epirote
6000 to 200 agst Cassandra colt (t)
2000 to 30 —— Wild Boy (t)

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO JERSEY.

[The following verses, beautifully printed upon white satin, were presented to her Majesty on her recent visit to Jersey, and were most graciously received.]

Bring hither a garland all freshly green,
Meet for the brow of our British Queen,
Throw flowers abroad and scatter them round,
'Till the earth round her footsteps seem fairy ground;
And the young the lovely—the pure the fair,
Whose hearts are unstained by a breath of care,
Let them circle round to hail, to bless,
Our Queen in matron loveliness!

And the aged, they of the silvery hair,
Make room for them, for they come with prayer,
They have learnt that shadows may darkly fall,
On the very gems of a Coronal,
They know in the heart's unfathomed cell,
There are thoughts unseen by the world, that dwell;
Therefore they ask, that our God may be
As a Rock of Refuge O Queen to thee!

And the mourners who bring but a broken heart,
Let them bear in the joy of this day a part;
What, though but tears they may give to thee,
Dew drops cling ever round fragrancy!
And for every joy to see thee stand
On the sea girt shore of our little land,
Our eyes grow dim—our hearts beat high,
As we welcome thee all faithfully!

We greet thee thus a rejoicing throng,
We greet thee all, with a choral song,
Feeble and strong young men and old,
Maidens and matrons—the weak, the bold;
All in one heart, to day we stand,
Thy island subjects, a faithful band;
To ask that the pearl of price may gem,
With God's own peace thy diadem!

Personne—(Author of "The Lays of the Sea")

St. Helier's, Jersey.

DEATH OF THE EARL OF YARBOROUGH, COMMODORE OF THE ROYAL YACHT SQUADRON.

(From our own Correspondent.)

It is this week our painful duty to record the death of this much respected nobleman; and we are enabled to append a faithful likeness of the noble Earl in the costume of the R.Y.S.; copied from the Portrait painted by Mr. Charles Gregory, for the inhabitants of Cowes, and which, some few months back, was placed in the Town Hall, as a testimony of the universal respect and esteem in which his Lordship was held by the inhabitants. The melancholy event took place on board his Lordship's brigantine yacht, the Kestrel, at thirty-seven minutes past four o'clock of the 5th inst., in the Bay of Vigo. The intelligence was brought to Southampton by the Peninsula and Oriental Company's steamer, The Queen, Captain Thomas Russell, jun., which arrived on the 16th, and, in the course of the following day, the melancholy tidings were conveyed to his Lordship's afflicted family. The event has cast a gloom over the whole island, in which his Lordship's benevolent feelings and beneficial example have been for a long number of years most sensibly felt and appreciated; and when the melancholy tidings reached Cowes, many of the shops were closed. All the yachts at rendezvous have since displayed their flags half mast high, as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased nobleman. This has been followed by the various steam-packets between the opposite coast and the Isle of Wight, as also from the flag-poles of the various Consulates and private individuals along both shores of the Medina, and by the yachts of the neighbouring Clubs of Southampton and Ryde.

The late Earl was a man of unbounded charity, accessible to all; and a general peace-maker, whether on the Magisterial bench, in the Royal Yacht Squadron, or among his neighbours.

Charles Anderson Pelham, Earl of Yarborough, Baron Yarborough, of Yarborough, in the county of Lincoln, and Baron Worsley, of Appuldurcombe, in the Isle of Wight, D.C.L., F.R.S., and F.S.A., was born the 8th of August, 1781; and was, consequently, in the 66th year of his age. His Lordship was the son of the first Baron Yarborough, by Sophia, only daughter and heiress of George [illegible], Esq.; and he succeeded to the Barony, on the death of his father, in September, 1823. On the 24th of January, 1837, he was raised to the Earldom by Viscount Melbourne's Administration. On the 11th of August, 1806, his Lordship, then the Hon. Charles Anderson Pelham, was married to Henrietta Anna Maria Charlotte, second daughter of the Hon. John Bridgeman Simpson (second son of Henry, first Baron Bradford), and the niece and co-heiress of the late Right Hon. Sir Richard Worsley, Bart., of Appuldurcombe, Comptroller of the Royal Household, a Privy Councillor, and formely Governor of the Isle of Wight, and the Founder of the Worsleyan Museum, at Appuldurcombe. By the above lady (who died June 30, 1813) the deceased Earl had issue four children (three of whom survive):

1. Henrietta Lucy. Born August 13, 1807, and died Jan. 28, 1814.
2. Charles Anderson Worsley, better known as Lord Worsley (the present Earl). Born April 12, 1809; married, December 16, 1831, the Hon Maria Adelaide Maude, second daughter of Viscount Hawarden, by whom he has issue two children the Hon. Charles, born Jan. 14, 1835, and the Hon. Sophia, born July 26, 1840.
3. Lady Charlotte. Born October 22, 1810; and married, November 19, 1831, Sir Joseph William Copley, Bart., brother-in-law to Earl Grey. This lady is one of the Bed-chamber Women to the Queen.
4. The Hon. Dudley Worsley, a Captain, R.N. Born 20th April, 1812; married, October 15, 1839, Madelin, daughter of Captain Sir John Gordon Sinclair, R.N.

In politics, his Lordship was an ardent supporter of the Melbourne and Grey Administrations on all questions of a liberal tendency, save those which related to corn, being as far as that was concerned a stanch Protectionist. To the world he was better known as the noble Commodore of the Royal Yacht Squadron, which honour he had enjoyed since the 1st July, 1822. He was an ardent admirer of yachting; and his loss will be severely felt by every member of a Yacht Club, to whom he was looked upon as their arbitrator, and his decision was final. He was one of the first founders of the Royal Yacht Club, now the Royal Yacht Squadron; and its distinguished members have had frequent opportunities of witnessing the interest he always had in promoting the welfare of that influential aquatic Club, as well as of partaking of his princely hospitality.

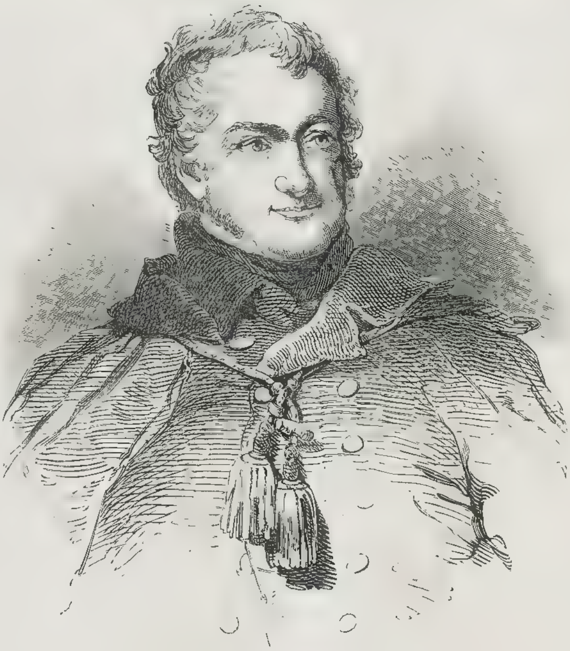
The late noble Earl was a Doctor of the Civil Law, a Fellow of the Royal Society, a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries; he also filled the office of Vice-Admiral of the Isle of Wight and County of Southampton, and was nominally Recorder of Grimsby and Newport; also a Deputy-Lieutenant for Lincoln, Provincial Grand-Master of the Isle of Wight, &c., and had the patronage of seventeen livings. The family is descended from an eminent military commander of the reign of Elizabeth. He is succeeded in the family honours by his eldest son, Lord Worsley, M.P., who has sat in the House of Commons since 1830, when he was returned for Newtown, Isle of Wight, one of the close boroughs disfranchised by the Reform Bill. In the following year, he was elected for Lincolnshire, which he has continued to represent to this period.—(See the Portrait of his Lordship, in No. 2.6 of The Illustrated London News.)

During the past twelvemonths a visible inroad had been made in the constitution of the late Earl; his original complaint, an affection of the liver, was followed by successive attacks of the gout and erysipelas; he, however, partially recovered. On the 30th of April last he returned to the Island from Lincolnshire, and in a few days the genial air of Appuldurcombe had a surprising effect in rendering him convalescent. Orders were then given to have his Lordship's yacht fitted out for his marine excursions, intending to accompany the Experimental Squadron in their cruise. On the 12th May, his Lordship was once more on board his yacht, and, after taking a short cruise in the neighbouring waters, he returned to Cowes on the 26th, in much better health. In a few days he again sailed westward, intending at once to join the Squadron of H.M. ships. On the 2nd June, he sailed from Plymouth, and shortly afterwards fell in with the Squadron, and continued cruising with them until their return to the Cove of Cork. On the 11th July, he left Cork in his yacht, and returned to Cowes, where he remained some little time, continuing to improve in health and spirits. In his former cruise, he had been accompanied by his son, the Hon. Capt. Pelham, R.N., and, as his Lordship's health was now considered sufficiently restored, he again joined the Squadron, then in rendezvous at Cork; he left Cowes on the 21st July, and, on the 26th, put into Plymouth, and, after touching at Falmouth, proceeded to Lisbon, where he arrived on the 7th August, after a boisterous passage. The mild climate of the Tagus had also a great effect on his Lordship's health and spirits, which were still good, as we learn by a letter from the Kestrel. After remaining about a week, he left the Tagus in search of H.M. Squadron, and, falling in with them outside, the Kestrel returned to the Tagus. Some few days after his Lordship again put to sea in his favourite yacht, intending to proceed as far as Gibraltar, touching at the intermediate ports, thinking that a more southerly clime would ultimately re-establish his health; but, on reaching the coast of Spain, the great heat of the days, and the coldness of the nights, had a very serious effect on his Lordship's already weakened constitution. He pursued his voyage, however, as far as Gibraltar, when, finding his health getting worse, and a change altogether taking place, though his spirits still remained good, he left, on his return to Cowes.

On the 29th August, alarming symptoms made their appearance, and his Lordship took to his bed. The yacht made the best of her way for the Channel; but, owing to adverse gales, her progress was greatly retarded; and while standing into the Bay of Vigo, in order to get into smooth water, his Lordship, about 23 minutes before five of the evening of the 5th September, expired without a struggle, in the presence of Dr. Queade, the Surgeon; Mr. Johnson, R N., the Commander of the Kestrel; and his Lordship's faithful valet, Mr. Murray. Every aid which human skill could render was administered, but was of no avail.

The Kestrel sailed from Vigo on the 9th inst., with the remains of the deceased nobleman on board; but, owing to the prevalence of strong easterly and north-easterly gales, the yacht put into Falmouth on the 19th, on her passage to Cowes.

The present Earl of Yarborough arrived in the Island on Wednesday afternoon, by the way of Ryde, to be in waiting to receive the remains of his deceased parent.



THE LATE EARL OF YARBOROUGH.—FROM A RECENT PORTRAIT.

PROTESTANT CHURCH AT ALEXANDRIA IN EGYPT.

The British community at Alexandria, having long felt the want of an English Church, and being desirous to provide for the performance, in a suitable manner, of divine worship, according to the rites of the Church of England, in the year 1838, a subscription was opened for the purpose of raising a fund for the erection of a Protestant Church in that city, on the same basis as other Christian establishments existing in Egypt.

Upon the wishes of the British residents being made known, through her Majesty's agent and Consul-General, to his Highness Mohammed Ali, Viceroy of Egypt, he, in the most liberal and tolerant spirit, gave his sanction to the measure, and munificently granted for the purpose, as a free gift, a plot of ground in the Great Square of Alexandria, in the Frank quarter, one of the most prominent positions in the city.

A subscription was immediately commenced by the residents, and with the aid of H. M. Government, an endowment of £300 per annum was guaranteed for a Chaplain; upon which the Right Rev. the Bishop of London appointed a Clergyman of the Established Church, and divine service has ever since been performed in a temporary building, though little adapted for the sacred offices.

It having been intimated from the Viceroy that the proposed edifice should be made to harmonise with the surrounding buildings, it was deemed proper, in compliance therewith, to adopt a style of architecture creditable to the national taste, and not repugnant to the feelings of the native population. These various requirements have been happily blended by the architect, Mr. J. W. Wild, from whose designs the Church is being erected, under his own personal superintendence. But this deference, which was due to the local authority, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, will make the building rather more costly than was originally contemplated.

The frontage of the ground conceded is 326 feet, by 112 feet in depth, which admits of the edifice being perfectly isolated, and surrounded by a parapet wall for its protection. In solidity of construction, it surpasses most of the adjacent buildings. It is already raised to a considerable height from the ground, and it was expected to be roofed in by the month of August, and finished by the end of the year, according to the accompanying Engraving; but, by the last information from Alexandria, we regret to find the good work is likely to be stopped for want of funds.

Egypt has now become the chief highway between Europe, India, and China; and the numberof travellers, and of civil and military officers, has so greatly increased of late years, that the total, in 1845, who visited Alexandria, including the crews of merchant vessels and steam-packets, exceeded 6000 British subjects. This has made it expedient to build the Church larger than was required for the accommodation merely of the British residents of the place; and it constitutes a strong claim to the support of the Indian community, and of our fellow subjects in Great Britain.

It cannot be doubted that all pious persons of the Protestant communion must wish to see their religion honoured in foreign lands, and that its spiritual blessings should be imparted to such of their relatives as may be called abroad, in the course of their several avocations. Nor can any be insensible to the value of the concession granted by the Pacha, or to the privilege of worshipping God in their own Church, when a similar privilege is still withheld by some States boasting a higher degree of civilisation.

The British residents at Alexandria appeal, therefore, with confidence to the good feeling and patriotic spirit of their Christian brethren and fellow countrymen, and especially to the more wealthy classes, for their generous assistance towards the completion of the First Protestant Church planted in Egypt. It will be appropriately dedicated to St. Mark, founder of the Primitive Church in Egypt.

A Committee in London has been formed, in communication with the Church Committee at Alexandria; and donations will be received by the Treasurer.

It will be seen by our Illustration, which represents the south front of the beautiful design, that it has been wished to conciliate the opinion and tastes of the Arab inhabitants, by a modified adherence to architectural forms with which they are familiar. These forms are beautiful in themselves, and they meet the comprehension of the artificers who must be employed. They, besides, accord with a style of art, naturalised long ago in Southern Europe, by the early school of Church architects, fostered by the Venetian Republic, and by the Norman Princes of Sicily, in the eleventh and twelfth centuries. Such motives led to its adoption by the judicious architect, Mr. Wild.

We quote the following additional details from The Builder:—

"The size of the building is considerable. A reference to the plan shows a nave 76 feet long and 30 feet wide, and a chancel 23 feet long; a western porch 20 feet by 16 feet, a southern porch 20 feet by 16 feet also, and a vestry on the other side of the same size. The whole height of the church will be about 50 feet, and the height of the campanile 100 feet. The latter, however, is not considered by the architect a strictly necessary feature in the design, and will not be carried up until the rest of the building is entirely completed.

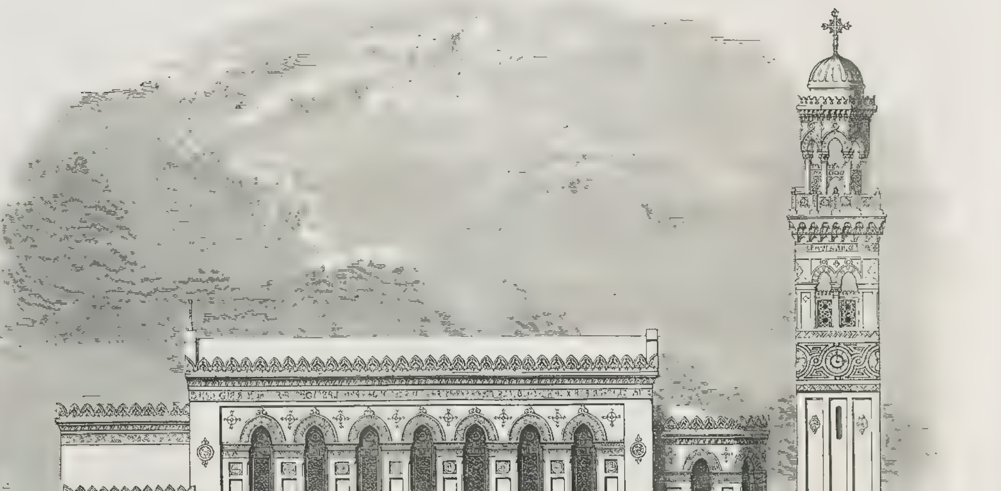
"The foundations have been massively laid for the whole structure, including the tower and the enclosure walls, and the main building has advanced to the springing of the windows. It is proposed to roof in this portion, then to add the porches and vestry, and to form the enclosure walls

"When the design was first made, it was intended to build the walls of rubble stone; but the entire failure of a large and handsome church, nearly completed by the Roman Catholics in Alexandria, and which has now to be pulled down and rebuilt with other materials, at a great expense, determined the Committee to adopt the architect's advice, and use squared masonry, although, of course, at a much greater cost.

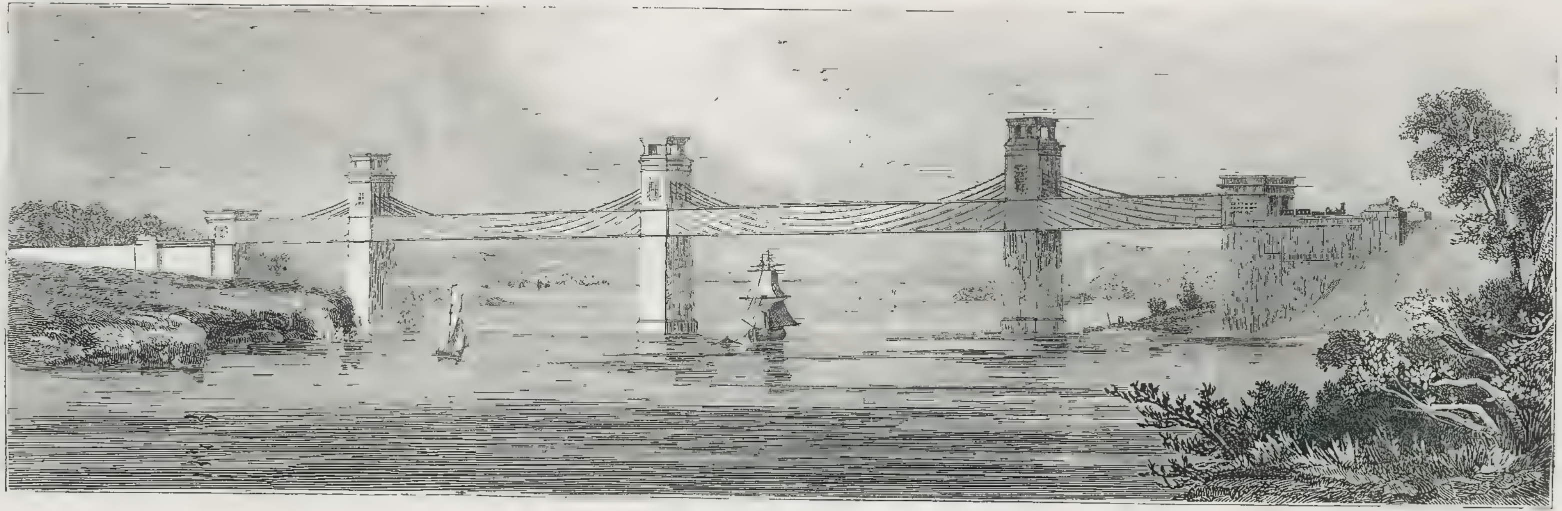
"This cost was further increased by the failure of what has heretofore been the Alexandrian quarry, namely, the ruins of the ancient city. The new fortifications have nearly dried up this source, and have raised so much the price of the stone so procured, that it has been found cheaper to import the material from Malta than to buy it on the spot. The walls are four feet in thickness, and without plastering inside. The ceiling is to be flat, formed into very deep panels by beams of larch wood. Over it, there will be a solid construction to prevent the admission of heat from the sun. The west front is handsomely ornamented, and has a large central arch.

"The cost of the church is estimated at £6,000, of which only half has yet been raised, so that assistance is indispensably necessary. The architect says in a recent communication to the committee, that 'its main expense arises from the quantity of materials used, its height and bulk. The ornamental details are easily executed, and not expensive; the constructive forms are simple and economical, compared either with the columns and entablatures required in the classical, or if to the vaulting and tracery required in the Gothic architecture.'

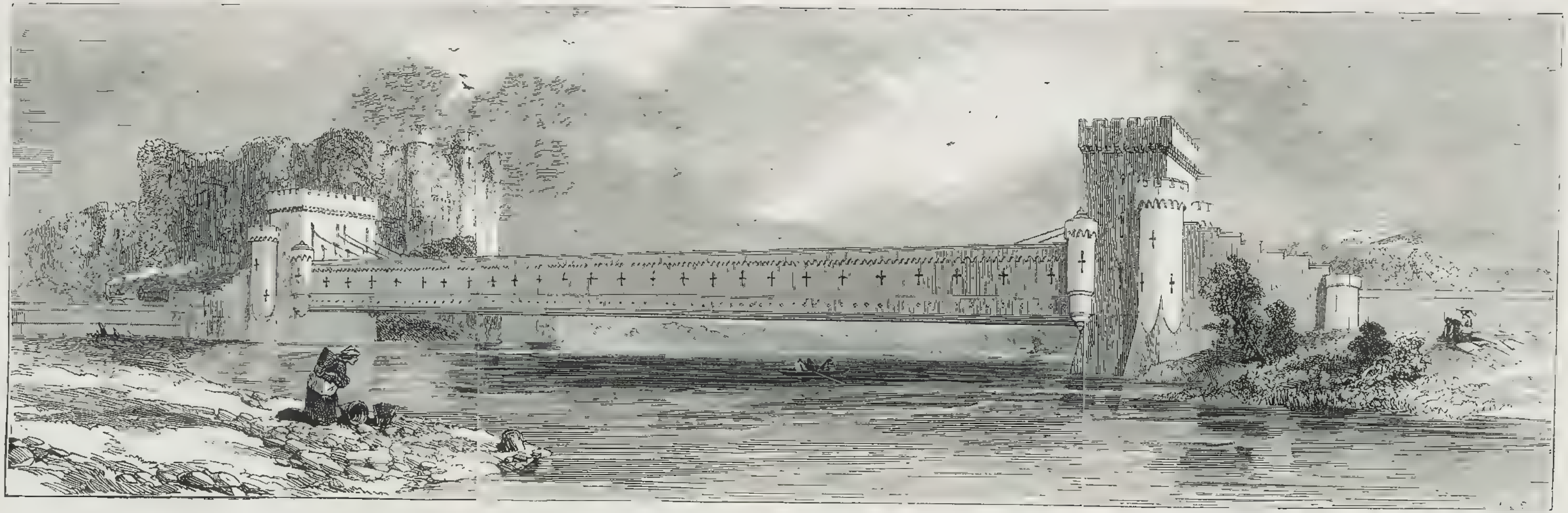
"Should the building now be stopped for want of funds, the loss will be serious. After great pains and many struggles with the authorities, a body of good workmen has been organised, and the work is going on steadily though slowly, under an able clerk of the works, who has not merely to superintend, but to teach the men; and if the workmen so taught were to be discharged, it would be almost impossible to re-assemble them."



ST. MARK'S CHURCH, ALEXANDRIA.



STEPHENSON'S IRON TUNNEL RAILWAY BRIDGE BRITANNIA, OVER THE MENAI STRAITS.



STEPHENSON'S IRON TUNNEL RAILWAY BRIDGE, CONWAY.

STEPHENSON'S IRON TUNNEL RAILWAY BRIDGES.

The idea of carrying a Railway through a vast tube, or suspended tunnel, which was characterised, a few days since, by the President of the British Association, as "a bold proposal," originated with Mr. Robert Stephenson, the celebrated engineer.

The first of these vast Bridges, "the Britannia," is to be constructed on the Holyhead line of Railway, about half a mile below Telford's famed Chain Bridge which crosses the Menai Straits.

"The Britannia Bridge" takes its name from a rock which rises about the middle of the stream, and which is bare at low water. Without this advantage, the erection of a pier would have been impossible, in consequence of the strength of the current, and other local difficulties; even with this assistance from nature, the span from each of the principal piers will be 463 feet: the entire length of the Bridge, 1560 feet; and the headway at high water upwards of 100 feet, which will leave sufficient room for ships to pass under.

It having been found extremely difficult to construct an arch of the immense span required; and as Chain Bridges are not sufficiently firm for the purposes of railway traffic, Mr. Robert Stephenson, the engineer, suggested the application of iron tubes to pass from pier to pier. These tubes may be described as the double barrel of a gun on an immense scale, through which the trains pass and repass. This brief description will serve to show the construction of these Bridges, which at present so much occupy the attention of Civil Engineers; the details, however, are not sufficiently decided upon to enable us to give the cross sections and other minute particulars.

The Conway Bridge is of the same construction as the Britannia; and will cross at Conway Castle within about 20 feet of the present Chain Bridge, the span 400 feet, and the headway not more than 18 feet. These views are copied from large etchings, made under the direction of Mr. Robert Stephenson, by Mr. John Brown, 23, Red Lion-square.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, Sept. 27.—Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity.
Monday, 28.—Sheriffs sworn—Length of Day, 11h. 48m.
Tuesday, 29.—St. Michael—Michaelmas Day
Wednesday, 30.—George Whitfield died, 1770.
Thursday, Oct. 1.—Pheasant Shooting begins.
Friday, 2.—London University opened, 1828.
Saturday, 3.—King's College opened, 1831.

High Water at London-bridge for the Week ending October 3

Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday.		Saturday
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
6 32	6 59	7 32	8 10	8 54	9 38	10 21	11 2	11 37	0 0	0 6	0 35

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Distressed Young Man" should apply to the Australian Agricultural Company 12 King's Arms yard, Coleman-street

"A Subscriber" is thanked for reminding us that, on Saturday morning last, the Rival Cheltenham coach left the Belle Sauvage Inn, Ludgate-hill, for the last time. If our Correspondent mistakes not, this was the last but one of the four-horse coaches between London and the provinces.

"H. A. F." -The age is forty-nine

"L. G."—A "Wine and Spirit Merchant's Guide," and "Pope on the Excise Laws," may be had of Sherwood and Co., Paternoster-row.

"Paul John," Romford. -See the little work, "A Guide to Government Situations." If a Clerk enter the Bank of England at an earlier age than twenty years, his salary will be less than £80, by about £10 for every year that he wants to complete that age; viz., at nineteen, it is about £70; at eighteen, £60, &c

"A British Tar."—We cannot give information as to lotteries of any description.

"A Constant Reader," Coventry Apply to Edgington's, Tooley-street, Southwark.

"W. D.," Stoke-upon-Trent, has not enclosed the artist's "note."

"T. R. S. L.," Leamington, is thanked, but we have not room.

"A Constant Reader," Glenarm. -Declined.

"Felix" should apply at the office of Robins's Filters, in the Strand.

"Y. R." must register his scrip according to the Act of Parliament.

"J. F. O."—We will see.

"Nugator." -The Charade in question may not be constructed according to the cyclopædian definition. What then?

"H. R. E.," Ely.—"The Library of Anecdote," 2 vols., is by Mr. Charles Bucke, the author of "The Harmonies and Sublimities of Nature." He died a few weeks since.

"A Constant Subscriber."—The Hanseatic League was a commercial union formed by a number of port towns in Germany, in support of each other against the piracies of the Swedes and Danes. This Association began in 1164, and the League was signed in 1241. In 1630, the only towns of note of this once-powerful League retaining the name were Lubeck, Hamburg, and Bremen.

"A Subscriber," Lincolnshire.—The musical parties have terminated their tours this week

"I. F. M. S." -It is pronounced Geut-er.

"Rosina." -Mario has played Pollio, in "Norma." The singing lesson is known by the title of "Rode's Variations" Ask any publisher for the "Preghiera" in "Anna Bolena," and there can be no mistake: we have not the score by us at this moment to refer to the words.

"A. B. C." Mr. Macaulay is styled "Right Honourable" from being a Privy Councillor. He is son of Zachary Macaulay, Esq.

"Quæstor."—Trinity College. King's, or Emmanuel. The 6th Dragoon Guards.

"A Parishioner"—We do not think the Patron or Patroness has any right to exercise the power in question.

"A Norman." -The initial of a name to which the prefix De is attached, should refer to the surname itself, and not to the adjunct De.

"P. E. G.," Lynton.—The Victoria and Albert yacht is a steamer of 450 horse power.

"A Constant Reader." —"Mingaud's Treatise on Billiards," published by Thurston, is a first-rate work: a smaller Treatise may be had of Sherwin, Great Queen-street, price about 1s. "Ruff's Guide to the Turf"

"W. P.," Northamptonshire. -We have not room for the Lines.

"S. V.," Northiam.—We do not see, in our Correspondent's letter, any reason to alter our opinion

"A Subscriber," Preston is thanked; but the Sketch is too slight.

"Q." The Janissaries were an order of infantry in the Turkish army, formerly reputed to be the Grand Seignor's Guards. They were first raised by Amurath I., in 1361. Owing to an insurrection among these troops, June 14, 1826 when 3000 of them were killed upon the spot, the Ottoman army was reorganised, and the Janissaries were abolished two days afterwards.

"Lapis" is thanked for his pleasing Sketch.

"R. M. M." The Isle of Portland is about four miles long, and, in the widest part, nearly one and a half broad.

"An Admirer," Dublin.—"Hints on Etiquette," (Longmans)—the best book of its class

"An Old Subscriber" is thanked for reminding us that Plâs is the Welch word for Palace; consequently, Plâs should not be also called Place, as stated in our Number of last week

"P. R. S." -No. 114 of the Illustrated London News contains the practical details of Wood Engraving. Our Correspondent should advertise.

"Brightoniensis"—Lord Palmerston is not attached to the Royal Household.

"Lincoln."—"Nisi Prius" is a phrase in English law derived from an ancient writ continued in practice to the present day, in which the words occur. The phrase is well explained in the "Penny Cyclopædia"; but we have not room to quote it entire

"J. R.," Guernsey, should consult a file of The League newspaper.

"Leonard Gustave Tobler." -The Bookseller who forwards the paper should have sent the Panorama gratis. The price is 1s.: it will not pass post free.

"Numismata," York, should apply to Mr. Webster, Coin Dealer, 17, Great Russell-street, Covent Garden

"[illegible]pomontanus," Manchester.—We have not room, at present.

"Marazion's" account of the Regatta did not reach us in time.

"Tim." -1. The creditors of the grandchild can claim his interest in the property. 2. The share of the deceased grandchild to his eldest brother or sister.

"A Subscriber," Loughborough.—"Aird's Self-instructing English Grammar."

"R. [illegible]," Wimbledon.—The system of giving douceurs for obtaining situations under the Crown is altogether illegal.

"N. B. [illegible]"—"T. W.," Oxted "A. D.," &c. We cannot enter into any further correspondence respecting the Boulogne Column.

"Freelove." The wife of a Knight is entitled to be styled "Lady."

"W. P. L."—We are not sufficiently versed in bridal lore to divine why orange-flowers are worn at weddings in preference to other flowers, unless it be for their superior purity of colour and delicious fragrance.

"A Correspondent."—"Gilbart's History of Banking."

"Endymion's" castle-building notion about the lake at Oatlands we have not room for.

"[illegible]" The agreement will be of no avail unless it be stamped.

"Inquisitor," Sheffield.—Meerschaum is a fine sort of Turkish clay, a magnesian mineral, of which pipes for smoking are made in Turkey, Germany, &c.

"Alpha" is thanked for his letter of hints

"A Well-Wisher," Manchester, should appeal to the Commissioners of Taxes: the charge is absurd. "Inglis's Channel Islands" gives the best account of those economic spots Address to the Premier, Downing-street.

"M. F.," Guernsey. -Declined.

"A Subscriber," Stockport. Apply to the Heir-at-Law Society, 14, Chatham-place, Blackfriars

"G. W. A.," Barnsley.—The address of Mr. Hunt, Lecturer on Stammering, is [illegible], Regent-street

"A Constant Subscriber."—Godfrey, Duke of Bouillon, is the hero of Tasso's "Gerusalemme Liberata," or "Il Goffredo," as it is sometimes called—one of the two great epic poems of which the world can boast.

Erratum. In page 18[illegible], column 3, (last line of extract) "Meadow Hill" should be "Headon Hill."

The Great Wellington Statue.—It is confidently stated that Mr. Wyatt's Colossal Equestrian Statue of the Duke of Wellington will be conveyed in procession to the Green Park Arch, and raised thereon, upon Tuesday next; in which case, we shall next week present to our readers Magnificent Engravings of the very interesting Ceremonial.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1846

Nothing moves so rapidly as a body exceedingly difficult to put in motion; when it does begin to go, its pace is frightful, the first step beyond the declivity is all that is required; it will effect all the rest itself. This is a truth apparently about to be exemplified by the "Country party," if the last exposition of its policy is to be accepted as authentic. It is astonishing how quickly men become reconciled to what they most abhorred, when the change is made and irrevocable. Thus those who denounced in the strongest terms, the slightest modification of our Tariff, who protested against the abolition of taxes that produced an average, to the Treasury, of five pounds, thirteen and ninepence per annum, are now prepared to go beyond the most enthusiastic of the Free Traders, and revolutionize our whole system of taxation, root and branch; they will deal with millions more fearlessly than, three years ago, they would do with tens; those who trembled to adventure across the mere shoals and shallows in a financial trip of experiment, close under the windows of the Exchequer, are now prepared to embark, like so many Columbuses, on an unexplored ocean, far beyond soundings. But, as in the first case, there was an unresonable fear of consequences, that showed a want of judgment and a disposition to exaggerate dangers, so now in their bolder plunge we can recognise little but the audacity of ignorance, which is proverbially courageous. Even the chief organ of the party seems startled, and does not "coincide" with the plan; and no wonder; it is too extravagant; and but that it is so formally put forth, we should suspect that our contemporary the Post had been hoaxed. An Utopia may easily be imagined, and Constitutions, and systems of Finance, delightful in their exemptions of mankind from punishments or taxation; but they exist on paper only; and the Protectionists were the last body of men in the world we should have expected to find indulging in such visions.

The League is now eclipsed; it is immeasurably outbidden by the Bond-street Society. The League only asked for the abolition of duties that did not raise revenue, but went into the pockets of other parties than the State, in the shape of "Protection." The League were fully aware of the fact that great improvements could be made in our system of Taxation for Revenue; but that was a matter of practice and detail, not of principle. In this respect there is no difference between levying a duty of one shilling per pound on Tobacco, or nine shillings; the only question is, which will realise the greatest revenue. Agreeing with the doctrines laid down by the Import Duties Committee, and by most writers on the subject, the Free-Traders state that a great reduction in the rate of a duty will often produce a much greater sum than a heavy per centage on the value of the article. But they left this as a question for Governments and Chancellors of the Exchequer to work out as times, circumstances, and the nature of things allowed. Now the Protectionists adopt the whole doctrine, without qualification, and are prepared, as the Americans say, to "go for" "the abolition of all Excise duties on domestic productions and manufactures, and the consequent consolidation of the Customs and Excise, together with the reduction of the Coast Guard.—The admission of colonial wheat, pulse, and flour, at a statistical duty of 6d. per quarter, and 6d. per barrel.—The reduction of duty on tea to 1s. per lb.—The reduction of duty on tobacco to 1s per lb.—The reduction of duty on colonial sugar to 5s. per cwt.—Ditto on foreign ditto to 10s. per cwt."

We only wish we may live to see the plan at work! But the transition is too great, the jump from one extreme to the other too sudden. Let the Protectionists, after this, renounce their favourite claim to be considered "practical men." Their scheme for "compensating" the revenue is still weaker; it is to be done by a "fixed duty on foreign wheat of 5s. per quarter. Fixed duty on other foreign grain and pulse, 2s. 6d. per quarter. Fixed duty on foreign flour, 2s. 6d. per barrel. Restoration of the duty on foreign cotton wool to 3s. per cwt., as an equivalent for the excise on soap. The charge for postage to commence at one penny for a quarter of an ounce, instead of half an ounce, to make up for the loss of excise on paper, which has always been a tax on education and literature."

For the incredible number of millions raised by the Excise, and the Customs duties on tobacco and tea, could a duty on corn and flour be a compensation? It would not make up a twentieth of what would be lost; the tax on cotton wool would damage the manufacturers, which seems the purpose of it. But the plan cannot be seriously stated. If it is, the party is lost; let Lord George Bentinck look to it, and disown the absurdity as soon as possible.

State prisoners in France seem very loosely guarded. They evade their keepers apparently whenever they feel disposed. Just at the moment when it was most important that no fresh ingredient should be thrown into the cauldron of Spanish politics, in which charms

> Of powerful trouble,
> Like a hell-broth boil and bubble,

Lo! the son of Don Carlos escapes to raise a civil war, if he can find men, and, what is more doubtful, money to back him. Louis Napoleon walked out of the Castle of Ham one day so coolly that it is impossible not to believe the Government gave him a hint that his absence would be acceptable. The Carlos family has been safely kept for years, but its most important member has got loose exactly at what is called "a crisis." What is more extraordinary, the man of all work, Cabrera, has escaped at the same time! When it is absolutely necessary to chain up men to keep them from setting the world on fire, the safer they are kept the better; and, from their failure in two instances, we hope the French people will better appreciate than they have been accustomed to do, the conduct of a former English Government in confining the great captive of that day to a distant island, little less inaccessible than Monte Christo. The prefect of the Loir et Cher is already dismissed for his carelessness; but he had had his revenge; he had circulated personal descriptions of the Prince and the General, sketched with all the fidelity, of a memory goaded into unwonted activity. Everyone must remember Charles Lamb's paper on the exaggeration that anger leads us to make of the defects of those who have tricked us; he gives a master's description of a runaway apprentice, in which the lad is made so atrociously ugly that he probably escaped caption in consequence of the misrepresentation. The French Prefect seems to us to have fallen into a similar error; it would be difficult to put into so few lines a more Old Baileyish personel; the official describes the escaped Prince thus:—

> Age, 28 years; height 1 mètre 65 centimètres (5 feet 4⅘ inches, English), black hair and eyebrows, narrow and round forehead, brown eyes, large and long nose, a little bent on one side, middle-sized mouth, black beard worn en collier, round chin, oval face, and dark complexion. The upper lip and the teeth slightly project, and which is more visible when talking; speaks French with facility, but with a strong foreign accent; the knees turned in, which is more particularly apparent when walking; holds himself very erect; a turn in the left eyeball, showing at times the whole of the white; wears his hat inclined to the right side, and over the eyes.

Squinting, knock kneed, a crooked nose, bad teeth, undersized, and a narrow forehead! The most devoted loyalty could not accept it as the ideal of a Prince. General Cabrera is not much better:—

> Born at Tortosa (Catalonia); age, 38 years; height, 1 mètre, 63 centimètres; black hair and eyebrows, ordinary forehead, greyish brown eyes, middle-sized nose, mouth rather large, beard black and rather thin, round chin, oval face, dark complexion. His eyebrows are bushy, and come close to each other; has a small scar on the forehead, over the left eye; legs slightly bent; never looks a person in the face when addressing him.

The last item is expressive; how well it describes the cowardly savage, conscious that he must read detestation in every eye that rests on him!

Accident to the Steam-Ship "Great Britain."—We regret to announce the occurrence of a disaster to the steam-ship Great Britain of a most serious and lamentable character. The Great Britain ran ashore at half-past nine o'clock on Tuesday night, in the Bay of Dundrum, on the east coast of Ireland. The wind was blowing fresh, the sea broke over her incessantly, and the ship beat heavily upon the soft sands upon which she had struck. Deep alarm was naturally excited amongst the numerous passengers. Captain Hosken, however, succeeded in maintaining order; and, towards daylight on Wednesday morning, the passengers were landed in safety, with their luggage, and conveyed to the houses in the vicinity of the bay. Several of them have since returned to town. The ship remains on shore, having apparently sustained but little damage; and, while in the meantime measures are being taken to insure her preservation uninjured, it is anticipated that on the next spring-tides she will be brought off.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE ANNUAL ORATIONS AT CHRIST'S HOSPITAL.

The annual orations of the senior scholars of this institution were delivered on Monday in the great hall, in the presence of the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor and the civic authorities, the Rev. Head Master (Dr. Rice), and numerous clergymen and other gentlemen who feel interested in the prosperity of this regal foundation. The hall in every part was crowded to excess, and every one appeared to take a deep interest in the proceedings, which for a time were graced by the presence of the Princess of Prussia. The scholars of the foundation occupied the seats below the organ, and after the arrival of her Royal Highness, the entire number, consisting of five or six hundred boys, sang the National Anthem.

The orations commenced immediately after, as follows

Latin Oration, on the Benefits of the Royal Hospitals—Malcolm Laing, First Grecian, who is proceeding to Trinity College, Cambridge
English Oration, on the same subject—Thomas Stedman Polehampton, Second Grecian, who is proceeding to Pembroke College, Oxford, as Thompson Scholar
Greek Oration, on the same subject—Thomas Johnson Potter, Third Grecian, Mathematical Medallist 1845, and Pitt Scholar, who is proceeding to Trinity College, Cambridge.
French Oration, on the same subject—Edward Algernon Newton, Fourth Grecian, who is proceeding to St John's College, Cambridge.
Latin Alcaics—On "Godfrey, Leader of the Crusaders, addressing Jerusalem"—Edward Hayman, Sixth Grecian.
Greek Iambics—Translation of Prince Henry's Apology, and the King's Reply, from Shakspeare's Henry IV. John Daniel Williams, Fifth Grecian and Classical Medallist, 1846.
English Poem—On Egypt—D'Arcy Charles Wentworth Thompson, Eleventh Grecian
Latin Hexameters.—Translation of Adam and Eve's Morning Hymn, from Milton—Charles Dacre Craven, Tenth Grecian
Original Greek Iambics—On "The Farewell Address of Charles I. to his Children"—Charles Edward Searle, Seventh Grecian, and Mathematical Medallist, 1846.
Latin Elegiacs—On the Punjaub, Assailed by Alexander, Conquered by the Britons—Robert Black, Twelfth Grecian
Greek Sapphics—Translation of Gray's Hymn to Adversity—James Lempriere Hammond, Ninth Grecian
English Ode—On the Pictures of her Majesty and Prince Albert, painted by Royal permission, for the Governors of Christ's Hospital, to commemorate the visit of her Majesty and his Royal Highness to the Hospital, on the 9th March, 1845—William Allan Russell, Eighth Grecian.

The young gentlemen whose names appear in the above list distinguished themselves during the orations delivered by them, for their clear and correct enunciation, emphasis, and self-possession. The Latin oration "On the Benefits of the Royal Hospitals," was in every way a highly creditable production. The other three orations on the same subject, in English, Greek, and French, were delivered in a becoming manner, and were characterised by an aptness and purity of diction which is often absent in more mature scholars. The other compositions were received with loud applause.

On the termination of the business of the day, the Lord Mayor addressed a few words of congratulation to the students, and the National Anthem having been again sung, his Lordship quitted the hall amid the deafening shouts of the young scholars.

Since the Feast of St. Matthew of last year, two handsome pictures of her Majesty and Prince Albert, painted by Royal permission, for the Governors of Christ's Hospital, to commemorate the visit of her Majesty and his Royal Highness to the hospital on the 9th of March, 1845, have been hung on the north side of the hall. They are placed in richly gilt frames, and are in every way worthy of the place they are henceforth destined to occupy.

Arrival of Cabrera and the Count de Montemolin in London.—The Count de Montemolin and General Cabrera arrived in London on Saturday last, vid Dover. His Royal Highness is residing for the present at the Brunswick Hotel, Hanover-square, and leads a very retired life, though he is supposed to be concerting measures for carrying out the declaration contained in his address to the Spanish people.

The Lord Mayor and Christ's Hospital.—At a Court of Common Council, held on Wednesday, the Town Clerk stated that he attended at Christ's Hospital on St. Matthew's Day, and found that the list of Governors had not been made out in the proper form, but he would direct that a proper list should be made out and presented at the next Court.—Some members of the Court having expressed a wish to be informed whether any misunderstanding existed between the Governors and the Corporation, the Lord Mayor said that, in the list which had been exhibited, the name of the Lord Mayor appeared under those of the President and the Treasurer; and that, as he considered that such a position was an insult to the Chief Magistrate and the Corporation of London, he had refused to sit down to the dinner provided at the Hospital.—Mr. Anderton said that, if all Lord Mayors acted in so spirited a manner, there would be no insult offered to the office.

